MANHATTAN STRATEGY FOR LEVINE'S 'WOMEN'

Joe Levine thinks big even with an artie, per his Gotham ad budget for Carlo Ponti's "Two Women." He's planning to splurge at least double the sum normally spent promoting the New York date of an import, with heftiest splash slated for the N. Y. Times and Herald Trib. Schedule calls for at least one double-page layout in the Times—call it insurance against a possibly tepid critique by "make or break" Bosley Crowther.

Since Levine has a $300,000 investment in the Sophia Loren starrer, and since key Manhattan reviews usually shape the boxoffice, Levine's ad outlays actually seem rather modest insurance.

Pic is due at the Sutton.

Saranac Pilgrimage June 22-23

Film company reps, exhibitors and the press will take off June 22 on the annual pilgrimage to the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital, Saranac Lake, N. Y. Group will travel on chartered buses from Manhattan, with the first stop being National Screen Service chairman Herman Robbins' Edgewater Motel, Schroon Lake. Robbins and his sons, Allan, Burton and Norman, have been hosting the junketeers for some years.

Party goes to the hospital June 23 (a Friday) for a onceover of the hospital and talks with patients, then back to the Robbins' place. Abe Montague, president of the Rogers institution, conveys that the annual board meeting will take place the immediately following Saturday.

LESLIE STEVENS' SUIT VS. 20TH AND SKOURAS

Los Angeles, April 18.

Leslie Stevens and his Daystar Productions demand a total of $5,877,500 in damages in a breach of contract and libel suit brought against 20th-Fox and Spyros Skouras personally, in action filed last week (12) in Superior Court.

Producer at a press conference stated this move was taken after he had been fired by Skouras and his firm's three-year partnership contract with studio terminated, after he missed a luncheon with Skouras and 50 other people at studio last March 22, when personal biz took him east.

Specifically, Daystar, under whose banner Stevens functioned at studio, asked $4,000,000 compensatory and $1,000,000 exemplary damages from 20th-Fox. Stevens personally asked $627,500 compensatory and $250,000 exemplary damages from Skouras personally.

Nastiest Nazi In Rush-to-Market

Allied Artists' "Operation Eichmann," first of the newest batch of Nazi-era pictures to play domestically, went before the cameras in mid-January and was completed in less than a month. Not only that, but prints were in AA's domestic exchanges in plenty of time to day-date — approximately, at least —with the Eichmann trial kickoff in Israel, which at that time was still slated for March.

Subsequently, co-producer David Diamond disclosed in New York recently, efforts were made to postpone a hefty number of March playdates until the trial got underway (last week), but in only a few cases was Allied successful in delaying bookings.

'LADIES MAN' STUNTS FOR COLLEGE CROWD

Many of the country's leading colleges and universities are being recruited by Paramount Studios this month to participate in promotional activities for the early July release of "The Ladies Man."

Schools joining the promotional campaign will conduct a "Ladies Man" contest, winner of which will compete for grand prizes including a free trip to Hollywood and a date with one of the performers in the film, according to Jack Moss, college market consultant.

Approximately 350 colleges are entered in the contest, Moss said, and entrees must state in 25 words or less "Why I'd like to date one of the girls in 'The Ladies Man'."

17 Seek 11 Spots With Extras Guild's Board

Hollywood, April 18.

Total of 17 candidates are competing for 11 three-year terms on board of directors of the Screen Extras Guild. Fourteen were nomination through channels and three entered race by filing indie nominating petitions.

Those nominated by SEG committee include Russell Ash, Everett Creach, Lili Crellin, Roy Damron, Roberta Fieldhouse, Ralph Grosh, Carol Henry, Vi Ingraham, Buddy C. Mason, Carmen Nisbet, Jeffrey Sayre, Norman Stevans, Roy Thomas and Evelyn Underwood. Self-filed: John R. Albright, Phil Kaufman and Ed Kerr.

Voting deadline is April 30.

Morton A. Spring, president of Metro International, back in New York from London and Paris talks with company overseas execs anent upcoming production.

Joe Levine Tells Hollywood About The Years Ahead

Hollywood, April 18.

Joe Levine hereafter will turn out a six-pix-a-year production program, to be made both here and places still undecided, he divulged after an exhib luncheon last week at Beverly Hills Hotel.

Three of the films discussed before 150 theatremen from local area, Portland and Seattle, are included in this year's half dozen. These were all made in foreign countries.

Next pic will be his maiden American label, "Boys Night Out," to cost $2,000,000 with Martin Ransohoff, 33-year-old Vidpix-producing Gothamite, to produce, which will start in late September. Michael Gordon will direct script by Henry and Phoebe Ephron.

Other two to be started before year end Levine wouldn't bruit about, taking position he may lose out on someting hot if deals in negotiation leased at this time.

Although Metro financed completed trio for $2,750,000, the Boston Barnum declared he hadn't made financing arrangements on forthcoming three. However, he likes Joe Vogel and wouldn't mind if Metro prexy would come through and Fort Knox "Boys Night Out" and brace to follow.

Metro's financial investment in "Morgan the Pirate" and "Thief of Baghdad" is $1,000,000 each, and $1,750,000 for "Wonders of Aladdin," according to Levine. He is spending $4,000,000 to ballyhoo trio in all avenues of communication. Details were revealed by Ed Feldman, publicity and promotion director, and Robert Weston, ad manager for Embassy Pictures.

Discussing production costs on trio completed, Levine said he boosted each budget because formerly features had been made in Italian and dubbed in England. "Now they have been made in English and dubbed in language of country being shown."

Where original "Aladdin" budget was set at $600,000, it wound up at $1,500,000. Luther Davis had to be called in on polish job for screen play. "Morgan" limit had been placed at $400,000 and finished at $1,000,0000; "Baghdad" came in for $1,300,000, although it was estimated at least $300,000 less.

As for "Sodom and Gomorrah," Embassy topper bewailed fast bad break in weather costs him $100,000 weekly. Budget already has $4,000,000 accounted for. He plans to spend $3,000,000 on advertising and promo and he doesn't intend to back down on any of his figures, he emphasized.

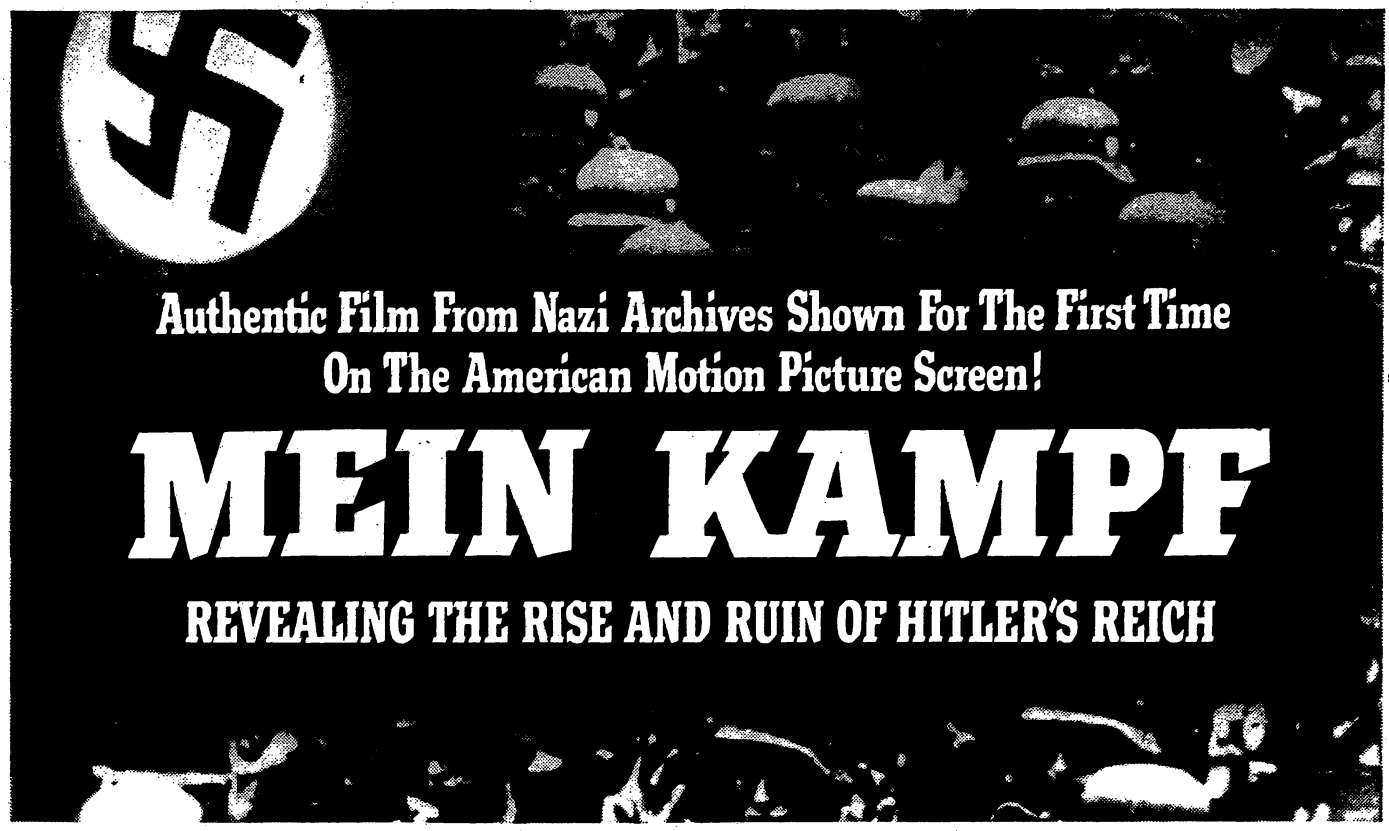
Levine and his entourage returned to N.Y. via Frisco. He's skedded to wing to Morocco this week to check into the "Sodom" status.

NT&T Sublets Footage

Los Angeles, April 18.

National Theatres & Television, with an extra 10,000 square feet on its hands in its Beverly Hills building, following exit of National Telefilm Associates, has leased space to two outside tenants.

Time Inc., moves its Time and Life mag editorial departments into 7,000 square feet on May 1, due to demands for greater movement than permitted in its present Bevhills headquarters. Republic Trans-Con. Industries Inc., is already occupying fifth floor penthouse, comprising around 2,900 square feet. NT&T board chairman B. Gerald Cantor, who formerly maintained offices in penthouse, has moved to fourth floor executive area.



Authentic Film From Nazi Archives Shown For The First Time On The American Motion Picture Screen!

MEIN KAMPF

REVEALING THE RISE AND RUIN OF HITLER'S REICH

This is the real thing! Every foot of film is authentic—uncovered in the secret archives of the SS Elite Guard and suppressed by Goebbels himself as too strong even for his own savage propaganda. They have never before been shown on any motion picture screen in America. "Mein Kampf" has created a sensational impact and has been hailed overseas as a tremendous historical document. It has kicked up a storm wherever it has been shown throughout the world, reaping enthusiastic reviews and acclaim.

"Mein Kampf" is a brilliant achievement in motion picture documentation. It probes deep into the whole rise and ruin of the Third Reich and the evil genius whose creation it was. Through brilliant utilization of never-before-seen footage, it mercilessly asks and answers the one question that has haunted the mind and heart of the world: "How was such a thing allowed to happen?"

Of this motion picture, when it was shown in West Germany, Time Magazine said: "A film that froze its packed audiences to stiff attention and sent them from the theatre with eyes averted... At first, German audiences watch with embarrassed distaste, now snickering at the wild gesticulations of the early Hitler, now clearing throats in unison as Rudolf Hess shouts: 'My Führer, you are Germany.' The shock comes with 1942, as the film moves on to footage shot by SS cameramen in the Warsaw Ghetto."

Of this motion picture, when it was shown in Israel, The New York Sunday Times Magazine had this to say: "Most of the audience that crammed the theatre night after night went in chattering, as people go to see a movie about 'Custer's Last Stand' or 'The Hordes of Genghis Khan.' But they came out quietly, for they had seen neither sets nor actors, but a grisly family album."

In a bullet-proof glass cage, in a courtroom in Jerusalem, Adolf Hitler's Reich is on trial for these mammoth, monstrous crimes against humanity. It's all in "Mein Kampf" for all to see, a shattering experience!

Allied States' Three Main Frets All Impinge Upon Boxoffice

National Allied spring board powwow in New York last week (1) evinced new agitation over 16m "school" competition, (2) reaffirmed its no-classification stand, and (3) urged general release for hard-ticket pix as "expeditiously" as possible.

Exhib body hopes to win support from distribution in the 16m fight, but will probably have to wage its campaign on the q.t. lest it invite interest from the Dept. of Justice. Reason is the chance of running afoul of antitrust laws.

According to Allied, the 16m commercial market is a growing threat to theatres. What especially agitates the exhibs, they say, is that in numerous instances current production has been getting 16m play while being unavailable to theatres. One specified case occurred recently in Detroit at Wayne Univ., which announced a feature film series. It advertised a program for one day of "Pillow Talk" (U) and "Diary of Anne Frank" (20th), which brought the wrath of Detroit exhibs who pointed out that "Pillow" at the time wasn't available to them. Michigan Allied subsequently talked the school into dropping the Hollywood product for non-commercial films.

Narrow Gauges

The Allied chaps make the doubled-point that 16m prints not only rent cheap ($35 average) but that buyers furthermore aren't subject to all the terms that attach to theatrical exhibition. Rentals, in short, aren't conditioned on admissions or other factors.

Worth bearing in mind is that the exhibs haven't been too successful in solving the competition from military installations. If distribution reacts to form, it doesn't seem likely they'll oblige any more readily on the 16m question. As far as the companies are concerned, as per film biz annals, any market that can bring a buck is worth cultivating. May seem shortsighted to some, but that's showbiz.

On classification, Allied board adopted earlier statement by Marshall Fine, prez, asserting his "unalterable" opposition to "either voluntary or mandatory classification of films," which formality splits exhibition's posture on the issue, since Theatre Owners of America is on record in support of classification.

'Adults Only'

What's further interesting is that the Allied dog doesn't always wag the tail—meaning scattered elements of the organization have been ignoring Fine & Co. and going for self-classification on their own. Two or three in the New Jersey unit, for instance, blurb "adults only" on trailers for pix they believe adult-themed, such as Metro's "Butterfield 8." Some theatres, come Saturday matinee, omit the feature if it's sexy stuff and instead feed the kiddies a solid program of cartoons and suitable shorts.

While nixing any form of classification, Allied does exhort "self-regulation" by production, exhibition, and parents, and also calls for complete support for the Code seal. It doesn't say so, of course, but Allied obviously thinks it's tough enough rounding up customers without additional "hindrances"—of which classification presumably qualifies as one. And if urging parents to police moppets as to film attendance is unrealistic, no more so, surely, than politely asking producers and exhibs also to exert caution.

On the matter of roadshows, distribution practices relating to the "big ones" have long rankled less fortunate theatremen, but this time Allied is expressing itself with a softer pedal. Whereas past protests tended to be strident, association now calls on the companies to make the hard-ticketers generally available "as expeditiously as possible." And further, that playing time and rentals should be "realistic" (that moot word again).

Related point—not made in this context, but previously and repeatedly aired—is distribution's increased public-be-damned attitude in the abrupt switching of a roadshow film to popscale policy. Recent Broadway examples—both 20th-Fox product—were the "King and I" and "Pepe" switchovers, and in Chicago not long ago the "Alamo" moveover. There are criss-cross viewpoints on this, of course, and either side of the argument can marshal plenty of reasoning for their case. But the issue that won't go away is the cheapening of the hard-ticket policy as a longrange attendance gimmick.

'Open-End Interviews' For 'Nuremberg' Players Aim At More Global Publicity

Hollywood, April 18.

Routine of "open end" interviews with stars has been taken one step further on "Judgment at Nuremberg" to give the Stanley Kramer production an unprecedented exploitation adjunct in the television field. United Artists release, which stars Spencer Tracy, Burt Lancaster, Richard Widmark, Marlene Dietrich, Maximilian Schell, Judy Garland and Montgomery Clift, currently is before the cameras at Revue Studios here.

Kramer publicity department under Al Horwitz and Mike Kaplan has corralled specific requests for interviews and special features from television stations around the globe and they are being shot daily, at the conclusion of the regular day's shooting on the film. Before finishing her "pace-setting" stint in the film and departing for New York last week, Judy Garland filmed a pair of interviews for BBC and ITV, the television outlets in Britain, as well as one straight interview on film which will be serviced around the globe. Interview's voice is being cut from the track by the Kramer editing department and prints shipped, together with a transcript, so that local stations can utilize members of their own staffs for what appears to be personalized interviews made for the individual station. Similar footage will be shot with other cast toppers.

More than 40 specific tv requests already have been received and are being processed. In areas where language may be a problem, track contains extra gaps permitting local announcers to supply translations of both questions and answers.

In addition, Kramer organization filmed interviews in German with Burt Lancaster and Maximilian Schell with vet foreign correspondent Bert Reisfeld plying the questions (in Lancaster's case he also translates) and similar footage will be shot when Marlene Dietrich arrives on the set next month.

Special coverage is in addition to the regular weekly tv service which has been launched on "Judgment at Nuremberg." Interview footage on film is paralled by the conventional "open end" radio interviews which will be distributed by UA on a world wide basis.

General theme of the coverage is the importance of "Judgment at Nuremberg" and the preparations for the world premiere which will be held Dec. 14 at the Kongress Halle in Berlin.

Warner Bros.:—Charles Allen Jr., through Allen & Co., sold 10.000 shares, holding onto 40.000. Wolfe Cohen sold his last 5.000 shares. James B. Conkling did the same. Benjamin Kalmenson sold his total holdings of 20,000 shares. William T. Orr discarded 5.000 shares, leaving him with 15.800. Serge Semenenko, through a trust, sold 800, leaving him with 2.000. Herman Starr sold all his 7.500 shares. Stephen B. Trilling got rid of his total holdings of 5,000 shares.

Due To Scarcity of Money Pictures: Terms Swallowed, Less Retching?

The new order of things in the picture business is seeing exhibitors paying more and more—willingly—for film product. The screams from theatremen about the high cost of merchandise aren't heard so much any more.

Theatremen are adhering to tradition with their expressed bellyaches concerning the alleged lack of money-making features. But they don't seem to be saying that the top-ranking features are being overly priced.

Significantly, this has taken place: Theatremen don't seem to care that a "Psycho" or an "Absent Minded Professor" was brought in at a negative price of less than $2.000.000. They're still willing to go for the 50-50 and-over deals.

This is shown in the booking terms they're accepting as well as the bids they're offering.

The 90-10 and four-wall arrangements for the blockbusters are another indication.

Theatremen are screaming for more and more features but when they see something they like—usually the type of product the public wants to buy, they're willing to shell out. Either that or they recognize that they have got to over-bid competitors in order to ensnare the profit-taking pix.

On the other hand, according to distribution reps, the exhibitors won't pay a dime for the material that dies in the first-run theatres. They have become acquainted with the fact that the boxoffice clicks at the outset, with rare exceptions, are ditto in the subsequents.

One of those rare occasions is "The Alamo." This was one of those cases where the hard-ticket sell didn't go too strongly but where the continuous run at "popular" prices clicked. The aura of "bargain" has been gotten across to the public.

Gov. Halts State Police Screenings

But Republican Legislature Likely to Slap Democrat Down on 'Abolition'

Lansing, Mich., April 18.

Following an order from Gov. John B. Swainson for the State Police to stop its showings of two films to the public because they are "propaganda," the State Legislature voted to view the films in question at a joint session of the House and Senate tonight (11) to determine whether the ban should be continued. Involved is whether the films are "factual" or doctored. Political overtones are implied since Swainson is a Democrat and the Legislature is predominantly Republican.

"Operation Abolition," sponsored by Fulton Lewis 3d and based on newsreels subpoened in San Francisco by the Un-American Activities Committee, has drawn the most fire. It has been shown at public gatherings under Michigan State Police auspices along with "Communism on the Map," which Swainson also has banned but which was not mentioned in the Legislative resolution.

Swainson banned the films after receiving complaints from the Michigan Council of Churches and other state and national groups which object to the films saying they are "inaccurate and distorted." After privately screening the films, governor observed they were "obviously propaganda matter" which the State Police "should not be showing."

Rep. Frederic J. Marshall, a Republican from Allen, introduced the successful resolution for a joint Legislative screening of "Operation Abolition." He called "Swainson's ban "ill-advised" and a "reflection upon the sincerity of the majority of the Congressmen who are members of the House Un-American Committee."

The Detroit Free Press, independent politically, backed Swainson's stand in an editorial which said, in part: "Many people competent to judge, and whose own patriotism is sincere beyond question, have found the films to be, at least in part, not factual. Since they are offered as valid documents, this is an extremely good reason why a public agency should not be circulating them or appearing to sponsor them until the authenticity question can be conclusively answered in their favor.

"That individuals and private groups have a perfect right to find audiences for them goes without saying. But anything savoring of official participation is another thing."

'TALENT SEARCHING' AGAIN

Warners and Fairchild Camera Reviewing Old Stint

Warners and Fairchild Camera are in high via full-page ads in past weekend's newspapers with the most elaborate talent search seen around the industry in many a day. This is a commercial tieup between the film company and Fairchild but ought to prove the possibilities inherent in finding new faces in a direct pitch to the public plus the public's interest in, or wariness of, such an approach.

In any event the Hollywood aspirants are instructed to make their own screen tests on a Fairchild 8m sound camera which dealers are making available via rental. Winner receives a 10-week WB contract with options and a guaranteed appearance in a WB feature or telefilm.

Couple of other prizes call for similar pic appearances (unstated as to how extensive) and then there's a batch of Fairchild merchandise.

Ads carry a big plug for "Parrish," WB entry featuring several newcomers.

Leg Room Built In

Toronto, April 18.

Cutting down its seating capacity from 2,748 to 1,641—with more legroom—and installing new seats in last month after midnight not to interfere with performance policy, Loew's has completed interior changes including new drapes, paint job and new treatment of lobby.

No increase in admission prices contemplated.

To Raze Frisco State But Move On To Save the Fox

San Francisco, April 18.

One of Frisco's big, old downtown theatres—dark six years now—will be razed this summer, but hope to save the biggest house west of the Mississippi, the 4,651-seat Fox, grew last week.

Scheduled for demolition in August is AB-PT's 2,000-seat State, a 46-year-old structure on a key downtown corner of Market Street, Frisco's main drag.

Paul P. Levin, head of AB-PT's realestate division, notified the building's chief current tenant, a jewelry store, that "we are planning to demolish the building as soon as your lease runs out." It expires July 31.

The theatre, originally known as the California and a first-run until the early '40s, has been on the block for years and deals several times were nearly closed for it. AB-PT officials would not confirm a rumor that Texas interests have bought the property to convert it into a high-rise parking facility, but previous negotiations centered on a similar plan, with ground floor used for shops.

Meantime, the city's property director, Philip L. Rezos, reported to Mayor George Christopher that purchase of the 32-year-old Fox for $1,050,000 probably would be a good deal for the city. Fox-West Coast has said it wants to sell or raze the structure, which backs onto the city's Civic Auditorium.

Rezos said he didn't know if Fox-West Coast would sell for $1,050,000, but noted the city could use not only the theatre for convention business, but also the adjacent 10-story office building and 114-car parking lot.

He said the city would lose $75,500 a year in taxes, but added demolition would lower this figure considerably, anyway. Rezos estimated $100,000 a year would be needed to renovate the building, said $73,000 a year would be needed for maintenance, but forecast income of $59,500 from rentals. A bond issue would be needed to buy the place, he said. Christopher so far has opposed purchase but a campaign is underway to "save" the big theatre.

'Son of Robin Hood' Tag; Sanforth Vs. 20th to Trial

Los Angeles, April 18.

Superior Judge Jesse J. Frampton set July 18 as trial date for $300,000 suit filed by Clifford Sanforth against 20th-Fox, following a pre-trial hearing Friday (14).

Sanforth contended in complaint that he is entitled to exclusive use of the title, "Son of Robin Hood," for all dramatic purposes, including motion pictures and television. This claim is based, he said, on copyrights to book under title in question which were assigned to him Jan. 18, 1945.

Plaintiff stated that 20th-Fox produced a motion picture under tab of "Son of Robin Hood" at a cost of $299,755 and started distribution in June, 1959. Defendants thereby deliberately invaded his property rights, he claimed.

At pre-trial, 20th-Fox contended Sanforth didn't own exclusive rights to title, and studio had not invaded his rights.

MARYLAND EXCLUDING BARE-FLESH STUFF

Baltimore, April 18.

For first time in six years, the Maryland state Board of Motion Picture Censors has banned, completely, two films. They also recommended five cuts in a third film before it could be shown in the State.

Banned in entirety are "The Immoral Mr. Teas" and "Shangri La." Cuts were suggested for "Career Girls" on a Naked Holiday."

Notification of board's action was sent distributors in letter signed by Norman C. Mason, vice chairman of board who becomes chairman May 1.

Bannings could spell trouble ahead for distributors and exhibs in the state. Under the chairmanship of C. Morton Goldstein, for past six years, the board caused little trouble. Suggested cuts were made here and there but these were complied with, with little or no fanfare.

Goldstein, who kept a close eye on court decisions bearing on censorship, is one of the more liberal chairmen the board has had. With his departure, increased friction is almost a sure thing.

Goldstein let it be known that he disagreed with banning of "Shangri-La" saying that film treated subject in comic vein and that "While there may be nudity awareness there is no sexual awareness."

He concurred, though, with banning of "Teas" saying it showed nudity as much as possible "in a lewd way."

Board members are appointed to for three year terms by the Governor.

N.W. Variety Club Plans Helping Foreign Kids

Minneapolis, April 18.

Women's auxiliary of the Northwest Variety club has decided to use its Marty Chalfen Children's Memorial fund to help pay for heart operations of children from outside the U.S. who come to the Variety Club Heart hospital at Minnesota U for surgery.

Fund was established in memory of Mrs. Morris Chalfen who was president of the Variety club auxiliary when she and her three children died in a Northwest Airlines plane crash near Tell City, Ind. last year. Mrs. Chalfen was the wife of the producer of the Holiday on Ice show.

Welfare Dept. Employes' 'Judgment' Decried in Supporting Picketers

Durham, N.C., April 18.

In a polite but "meaningful" resolution the Durham County welfare board has censured Welfare Dept. employes who participate in picket lines at Chapel Hill theatres.

The resolution followed a special meeting of the Board at which two white women caseworkers appeared to champion their picket line endeavors for the sake of integration.

Nan Pattie of Scotland, who has not yet been naturalized as an American citizen, and Mrs. Edith Back, wife of a Duke University professor, presented a typed and signed statement to the Board.

The statement in effect held that the two women are not violating the spirit of the state merit system, the Hatch Act, or any other law, by walking the picket lines during their off hours.

Both women are residents of Chapel Hill.

State Atty. Gen. Wade Bruton said last week that in his opinion the participation by Welfare Department employes in such picket lines "is strictly a matter between employer and employe." In this case the employer would be Durham County. Bruton said there is no law to prohibit a county employe working under the State Merit System from joining such demonstrations.

The Board's resolution in part stated that "exercise of every individual right not always consistent with good judgment"; and that "participation in controversial matters by department personnel may be reasonably expected to adversely affect the Welfare Department and its program"; and that "all employes, as long as they remain employes of the Durham Welfare Department, place the good of the welfare program foremost and refrain from the exercise of any right which can reasonably be expected to reflect adversely upon the department or the program."

Absent-Minded

Typo or mental block—at any rate, Welden Theatre at St. Albans, Vt., advertised it "Go Naked in the Woods."

But further complication is that blurb had Gina Lollobrigida doing it in a $5,000 gown.

Iowa-Neb.-Dakota Unit of Allied: Is It In or Out?

Allied States Assn. now counts 14 affiliates—or does it?

Situation is fuzzy since there are two versions on status of the exhibitor body's Iowa-Nebraska-S. Dakota unit, headed by Neal Houtze, with Al Myrick (ex-National Allied prexy) as board chairman.

Allied spring board meeting in Manhattan last week first heard from Myrick that the Iowa affil had pulled out, but a check with Houtze elicited assurance no such action had been taken. He said unit's exec committee, which would have to set a vote on whether to stay, hadn't even met recently.

The "mystery," however, intimates a tug within the unit over power and tied to the issue of whether to stick with National or not. Appears that two camps are forming behind Myrick and Houtze. Former is identified with the firebrand, or "get tough" proponents within National Allied, versus the more conciliate eastern elements. The toughies prevailed two years ago when the internecine struggle flared at the Miami Beach convention where Myrick defeated Ed Lider, topper of the New England unit, for the presidency.

Last year, in an effort to patch the split, the two factions compromised on Chicago's Jack Kirsch for prexy, but he resigned soon after for health reasons. Short time later he died.

At VARIETY presstime, Myrick was beating the Mississippi bushes on business and couldn't be reached for explanations.

TV Acad's Int'l Assembly in Nov. Shapes Up as All-Nation Lure, Even Soviet; P&G, Revlon Sponsor Coin?

Procter & Gamble and Revlon are both interested in buying the 60-minute variety stanza, to be produced with acts from all over the world, that is being backed by the First International Assembly of the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences. Taped program, which Bob Saudek will handle, will be sold to the web and sponsor, however, which comes up with the highest bid (a la the Emmys and Oscar shows) and the money will go toward defraying the cost of putting on the Assembly, to which telecasters of some 40 countries have been invited.

Seven-day affair, at which idea exchange will play the primary role, is expected to cost somewhere in the vicinity of $475,000. Basic sessions will be held at the Waldrof-Astoria, in New York.

Seems that some foreign tv reps were initially a little mistrustful of the Assembly idea, because they recalled that they've been unable to sell their product to the U.S. while, conversely, this country has made the foreign market a big one for the sale of its own product. Nonetheless, the Academy has been making headway in getting foreign acceptances, and one of the reasons appears to be the promulgation of the theory that, in addition to the basic of idea exchanges at the conference proper, foreign tv'ers will also be able to "get right to the men here who make program decisions and perhaps thus be able to sell them some properties produced abroad."

Both ATV and Associated-Rediffusion of England have accepted, and some 15 Canadian outfits have made it known they'll be here for the confabs. Argentinian, Japanese, Colombian, Venezuelan, Panamanian, Australian, Belgian, Puerto Rican and German tv'ers will also be on hand for the weeklong affair (Nov. 4-11).

Assembly spokesmen feel that the Communist-bloc countries, including Russia, will also come. Only Red China has not been invited; the Assembly is following the pattern of opening the doors to the same nations (those that have tv or expect it) that are acceptable to the United Nations.

Adlai Stevenson, U.S. Ambassador to the UN, will address the opening meeting of the First International Assembly. And President John F. Kennedy has promised to work out arrangements whereby he can tape a speech for the affair.

The Assembly has gone beyond involvement of only tv people, with Marietta Tree, a veteran political figure (she got Stevenson to

Children Not Admitted

Practice of showing pilots only to interested parties and excluding all others has become standard operating procedure this selling season.

Gone are the days when a whole advertising agency was invited in on a screening. Reflecting on days gone by, a vidfilm sales exec remembered with a shudder how an office boy sitting in on a pilot screening ruined a show. It wasn't what he said, it was the face he made when the lights went up. That vox pox sample was averred to have ruined the sale.

Directors Strike Still Iffy Issue

The Directors Guild of America is reportedly calling a general membership meeting for Thursday (20) night to consider the strike situation vis-a-vis the networks. No negotiations on live and tape contracts have been held since last Friday, but since then the union's leaders have been huddling among themselves.

Basic issue is a demand by DGA to raise rates for directors, associate directors, et al in taped programming to the level of payment for directors and associate directors who make film shows for network consumption. Webs have strongly resisted the rise in tape, because ABC, NBC and CBS figure the hikes not only will cost them a bundle but might establish a precedent in tape for other unions. (Presently, there is a great disparity between tape and film rates for DGA members.)

Frank Capra, DGA prexy, was instrumental in the negotiations of last week. But Capra and George Stevens, both film-oriented men, returned to the Coast at about the time the dickers ceased on Friday.

EXPLOITATION UNIT FOR CBS ON COAST

CBS-TV is setting up a new exploitation operation on the Coast and has signed Murray Weissman to head it as manager of special services, press information department, Hollywood. Weissman will report to Ernie Stern, director of press info on the Coast.

Weissman is currently a staff scripter on the ABC-TV "Day in Court." Previous to that, he worked under Stern at ABC's publicity mill on the Coast when Stern was head of the press operation before shifting to the CBS spot. He's also been with TV Guide and Fairchild Publications in L.A.

Special services operation, according to CBS-TV press info v.p. Charles Steinberg, will consist of exploitation and special projects activity within the web's Coast press dep't. Some phases of exploitation will be limited because of the confinements of CBS' program practices rules, such as junkets, giveaways, etc.

Oscar's Whopping Trendex

ABC-TV's Academy Awards telecast from Santa Monica was a runaway in the overnight Trendex ratings with more than an 80 audience share all the way.

In the opening half hour (from 10:30 p.m., EST) the Oscar sweepstakes tallied a 51 for an 82.5 share of aud in a 29-city check. In the 11 to 12 p.m. seg., with Trendex checking 14 Central and Pacific zone cities, ABC moved up to a 62.5 for an 89 aud share. The rating service doesn't call viewers after 11 p.m., thus the dropout of eastern cities in the final hour.

Ratings indicate that some 500,000 more viewers were watching this year's Oscar Derby than last year.

Merle Jones in Hosp

Merle Jones, prexy of CBS Television Stations, is in Columbia Presbyterian Hospital, N.Y. with a severe intestinal ailment. He was reported improving after having been in serious condition in the middle of last week.

Jones was rushed to the hospital with what appeared to be a perforated ulcer, but diognosis revealed the ailment to be an intestinal attack.

Flock of Banner Projects on Tap; Extend to '62-'63

Three new pilots, including one starring comic Alan King and another constituting a weekly musical revue with a permanent company, are in development at Bob Banner Associates. Also in the works is a unique plan to put a tv version of "Once Upon a Mattress" into a two-week summer stock stint immediately prior to taping it as a video special.

The King pilot will be shown on the-air Sept. 18 on CBS-TV in an unusual arrangement with General Foods and Lorillard, sponsors of "Hennessey." Pilot will go into the "Hennessey" timeslot prior to the resumption of the show for fall, with sponsors picking up part of the pilot's tab as their program charge (in return for first refusal on the series) and CBS-TV picking up the balance of the cost in return for a piece of the King show.

The King pilot, to be filmed or taped in August and September, features the comedian playing himself, but as a husband and suburbanite rather than emphasizing his professional life. Arnie Rosen & Coleman Jacoby have written the pilot script. King has starred in one other pilot, incidentally, produced by Phil Silvers' production company. That proved unsuccessful.

Musical revue, tentatively titled "TV Tonight," would have a permanent cast and a permanent creative staff which would come up with sketches, new lyrics to standard tunes, and occasionally new scores as well. Banner plans to tape a pilot by January. Third pilot is an anthology series with continuing cast members, which Paul Stanley will produce sometime next spring.

Banner has tied up rights to the off-Broadway "Mattress" and has set Carol Burnett and Garry Moore in the leads. But what he'd like to do—and that will depend on how quickly he can come up with a sponsor or network commitment—is put the tv cast into the Paper Mill Playhouse at Millburn, N. J., for two weeks and immediately thereafter transfer it to the studio for taping before a live audience. This would be the first time such a procedure has been followed.

Apart from "Mattress" and the Carnegie Hall tribute to Jack Benny, which the Banner organization has already taped, Banner plans no other specials for next season, but has a backlog of several projects for the following year, including an original musical, a straight-play with music added, and rights to several established

Robert Taylor Sells, But at Reduced Price

With Kaiser not having looked too keenly upon "Captain of Detectives" as a 60-minute series next season, NBC-TV decided to open up the Friday 8:30 hour to other advertisers, and various clients from the Ted Bates agency jumped at the bait—at relatively low prices ranging downward (depending on discounts) from $28,000 per weekly minute.

Brown & Williamson Tobacco, a large Bates client, jumped in for an alternate-week half-hour or, at least, the equivalent of same in minutes. With the show able to carry six minutes of commercials a week, Colgate, a second Bates client, has an option on one-minute a week. Other Bates clients are said mulling a buy-in to "Detectives," which is now seen on ABC-TV as a Friday half-hour.

Peabody Awards

Coveted Peabody Awards were handed out yesterday (Tues.) in N.Y. to CBS-TV and NBC-TV, with a special nod going to the former's topper, Dr. Frank Stanton. NBC-TV copped three, CBS-TV four program prizes.

Stanton won a special Peabody for his part in establishing the debates between the Presidential candidates last fall. Award was labeled an "outstanding public service."

NBC-TV's Huntley-Brinkley stanza won in the tv news category. Web's Shari Lewis weekend half-hour won the tv juvenile program prize, and the Irving Gitlin-produced "White Paper" series won for tv education.

"CBS Reports" won for public service in tv (with particular emphasis laid on "Harvest of Shame"). And with the "Reports" nod went one for CBS chairman Bill Paley for encouraging it. The CBS-TV summer and winter Olympic coverage won for producing greater "international understanding." CBS-TV "G-E College Bowl" won for the best program for "youth." And Leland Hayward's "Fabulous 50s" special of last season won the tv entertainment won the tv entertainment prize.

In radio, Ireene Wicker, "The Singing Lady" now on the Municipally-owned WNYC, N.Y., won a moppet show award from Peabody.

Besides the award to Miss Wicker, other radio awards were: WQXR, N.Y., for "total programming of music . . . of a high order"; Broadcasting & Film Commission of the National Council of Churches, for its religioso programs on the four radio webs. Texaco Network won a public service award for its Metopera coverage.

Other Peabody Awards went to WOOD-AM-TV, Grand Rapids; KPFK, the Los Angeles FM station controlled by the Pacifica Foundation; WCCO, Minneapolis, and WCKT, the Miami tv'er. These were public service awards.

In accepting the award, Stanton said:

"I cannot agree with the distinguished Advisory Board that I played a sufficient part in bringing about the debates to deserve its generous citation. I do agree that the debates did indeed constitute 'conceivably the most important service performed by broadcasting.' He paid particular tribute to the late Senator Blair Moody, of Michigan, who urged as early as 1952 that broadcasting could best serve the electorate by presenting the major candidates in face-to-face debates.'"

At the Awards luncheon, Stanton received a wire of congratulations from President Kennedy. Later, ABC prez Leonard Goldenson and Mutual prexy Robert Hurleigh also wired Stanton congrats and hailed him for his Sec. 315 and debates role.

Radio Press International has wired the Peabody group an offer to act as sponsor of next year's Peabody luncheon if RTES goes ahead with its plan to withdraw its auspices.

Salant's 'Nothing But Hard News' Formula Cues New Policy Decisions

Number of quietly made but far-reaching policy decisions have been made over the past few weeks by CBS News prexy Dick Salant, all designed to strip his news operation to fighting trim and minimize its activities in non-essential areas.

Basic premise behind Salant's decisions has been that the function of a network news department is to handle news and not get involved with sports, entertainment, non-news special events and some non-fiction areas without news content but loosely defined as tv public affairs. As a consequence, virtually all his policy decisions have been made with the purpose of limiting his department and personnel activities to the hard-news field. Some examples:

Decision to yank Doug Edwards off "Armstrong Circle Theatre" on grounds it is an entertainment program. Also, its "actuality" technique has inherent dangers in that the presence of a CBS News commentator might be construed as CBS endorsement as the viewpoint of the program, over which it has no control.

Decision to turn such special events as the Miss America, Miss Universe and Mrs. America pageants over to the CBS-TV program department, since they are not, in Salant's view, "news" per se. Not only will production duties transfer to the program dept., but no CBS commentators will be allowed on the programs, as they have in the past.

A ruling that "outside" pack-

Harvest of Beefs

Washington, April 18.

"Harvest of Shame" may be setting some kind of record for stirring the longest-lived Congressional beef over a television program.

Telecast Nov. 25, the CBS-TV documentary is still the target of speeches and insertions in the Congressional Record.

Latest outcry is being raised by Rep. Paul G. Rogers (D-Fla.) in a series of editorials attacking the show placed in the Record. In his own comments, Rogers echoed the usual criticism—alleged omissions did a "great injustice" to Floridians trying to solve the migratory worker problem.

RKO's $4,620,234 Oklahoma Buy

Washington, April 18.

RKO General will pay $4,620,234 for 90%-plus control of Video Independent Theatres, theatre, community antenna, broadcast chain operator.

Purchase, by a wholly-owned subsid Triarko, would give RKO 128 theatres in the Southwest, 15 community antenna systems, two FM stations, and 12.5 interest in KYW-TV, Oklahoma City.

RKO attorneys said that Triarko would dispose of its interest in KYW-TV (channel 9) because it would put the company over the five vhf station limit if RKO's proposed buy of NBC's Washington outlet goes through.

Details of the deal were contained in Video Independent's application for FCC approval of the transfer of the two FM stations KIHI FM, Tulsa; and KVIT, Oklahoma City).

Lippmann's 2d CBS Comes Up In June

Walter Lippmann, currently in the Soviet Union, will film a "CBS Reports" upon his return in May, with the program airing in June. It will mark Lippmann's second appearance on the program in as many years, and will reflect his views on the new Kennedy Administration as well as his meetings with Soviet Premier Khrushchev. Howard K. Smith will again interview Lippmann.

Another upcoming "CBS Reports" will deal with film censorship, particularly as reflected in the censor troubles of "Never on Sunday." (See separate story.)

Paar, Garroway Pull $4,750,000

In the last several days, NBC-TV has collected about $4,750,000 in participating business for the morning Dave Garroway strip and the nighttime Jack Paar cross-the-boarder. In all, there are some 600 spots in new and renewed biz for the stanzas.

Big lump of the coin comes via S&H Green Stamps for "Today," the Garroway outing. Miles comes in for another 80 in the same show. Among the other biz is P. Lorillard for 49 Paar spots, Gold Seal for 40 in Paar and Adolph's Ltd. for a spread of 34 over the two stanzas.

Cantor's Radio Sponsor

Eddie Cantor, who's doing a series of 260 five-minute radio shows via Lika Productions, has got a sponsor for a 100-market spread on the show via syndication. Copper-Glo and Alum-Glo have picked up the series, titled "Ask Eddie Cantor," his first radio stanza in seven years.

American Kosher Products had picked up the show earlier for exposure in N. Y., Los Angeles and Miami.

McArdle's Met Post

John McArdle is exiting as v.p.-general manager of Metropolitan Broadcasting's WTTG, Washington, to fill the new post of v.p. and director of sales for Metropolitan's tv stations. He'll move to N.Y. for the job.

Succeeding McArdle in D.C. will be Donn Colee, who's been v.p.-g.m. of Met's WTVH in Peoria.

TV PRACTICES & MALPRACTICES

NBC's V.P. Departures

Amid all the lower echelon axings going on at NBC-TV, the "shocker" to the current cutbacks is the fact that no less than six vice presidents have thus far exited through the 30 Rock revolving doors.

Over the past two weeks or so, the higher echelon scorecard includes:

V. P. Jerry Danzig, of the "Today"-"Tonight" unit;
V. P. Bert Hanft, one of the network's key talent negotiators;
V. P. George Matson, who was special assistant to prexy Bob Kintner;
V. P. Lowell Jacobson, out of the personnel division;
V. P. Bill Davidson, who was general manager of the New York WNBC o&o operation;
V. P. Gene Burr, of program development.

NBC-TV Moves Into Forefront On Hour Shows; '61-'62 Sked Finalized

This week, NBC-TV closed out the last vacancy in its primetime or near-primetime sked for '61-'62, when it decided to use "National Velvet" at 7-7:30 p.m. Sundays, despite it not having any sponsors yet. And the outcome of the upcoming NBC schedule is that, all at once, the network has become the No. 1 user of the 60-minute program, with only 11 half-hour programs on the sked and 19 full hours a week.

If "Bullwinkle" and "Velvet," which cover the Sunday 6:30-7:30 block, are ignored because they are not really prime-timers, then there are only nine stanzas that are not hours: Sunday—"Car 54, Where Are You?" at 8:30; Monday—"Price Is Right" at 8:30; Tuesday—Hitchcock at 8:30; Wednesday—Joey Bishop at 8:30, Bob Newhart at 10 and David Brinkley at 10:30; Thursday—"Hazel" at 9:30; Friday—Frank McGee (maybe) at 10:30, and on Saturday—"Tall Man" at 8:30.

Against NBC's 19, ABC has 15 and CBS 11. However, to even get ABC down to 15, "Maverick" has to be discounted (because like "Velvet" on NBC, it comes before 7:30 on Sundays), so does Alcoa (which is only an alternate week hour, with two half-hours the other week), plus the Saturday fights (which run slightly less than 60 minutes most of the time).

Total hours per week: 45.

Soaps Swap

Lever and Procter & Gamble are following that old bit about the "grass is greener . . ."

While the programs won't be the same, the time slots will—and the two rivals are exchanging places in them next season: Lever has given up Wednesdays at 8:30 on NBC and P&G has taken the time period. P&G has given up Tuesdays at 8:30 and its share of the 10 p.m. Friday time on ABC, and Lever moves in to that web where its competitor leaves off.

NBC Cuts Extend To Coast Setup

John West and Tom Sarnoff, of NBC, carried back the word on personnel reductions to their West Coast headquarters over the weekend. Cuts have got to be made out there, it was decided at 30 Rock headquarters, because Hollywood will have no Shirley Temple stanza next season, and when Dinah Shore returns (after a summer layoff) it'll be on a reduced basis and then, finally, there'll be fewer specials next season.

Lillie Messinger, talent relations exec whom the web says worked basically on the Temple show and specials, was let go but not before NBC praised her work. Jack Emanuel is being let go as Coast story editor. Russell Stoneham, because of the other cuts, was given extra duties and a new title—general program executive.

SULLIVAN PLANNING TO TAPE MEX SHOW

Mexico City, April 18.

Ed Sullivan's representatives in Mexico are dickering for local talent. Hard on heels of appearance of Manolo Fabregas on the Sullivan show, singer Tito Guizar has been pacted.

The producer is also planning to come here to do a special videotape show featuring such names as Dolores del Rio, Maria Felix, Arturo de Cordova, Cantinflas, etc.

Preliminary sounding out of talent reps for the all-Mexican stellar show is now going on.

Kaiser Pours It All Back on ABC In 2-Show Buy

Kaiser Industries gave it all back to ABC-TV for next season by buying into two back-to-back Sunday telefilm hours, "Maverick" at 6:30 and "Follow the Sun" at 7:30.

Kaiser, after mulling for several weeks what it was going to buy and where (NBC was in the competition for some of the coin right up to the time Kaiser closed with ABC last week), decided on partial sponsorship of "Maverick" and full sponsorship of 20th's new series "Sun."

The veteran Warner Bros. series, "Maverick," will consist of 13 new and 20 repeat programs at 6:30. Thirteen of the repeats will be shows of previous seasons and the other seven will be taken from the 13 new programs for '61-'62.

Kaiser has asked ABC to sell off half of the "Sun" series, however. Otherwise, the bankroller is committed for the full load of reportedly 26 first-runs plus repeats.

Until the ABC closing, NBC was pitching alternate half of the new David Brinkley news half-hour, slated for Wednesdays at 10:30 next season. Web was also pitching part of the Monday 7:30 slot where "Americans" now is. Future of "Americans" is still undecided as NBC awaits further Nielsen developments. Before the Brinkley pitch, Kaiser was somewhat involved in dickers to put "Hong Kong" (being dropped from the ABC Wednesday 7:30 time period after this season) into 8:30 Friday, but that died and NBC decided to use an hour verison of "Captain of Detectives" instead.

ABC Int'l: New Status

ABC's International tv division under Don Coyle was upped this week from the status of a mere division to that of a wholly owned subsidiary company. With Coyle becoming president, outfit assumes the name ABC International Television Inc.

Coyle has been veep in charge of the ABC international division, formed in 1959.

WEBS FLIRTING WITH TROUBLES

By GEORGE ROSEN

In their apparent anxiety to please everyone but the viewing public, the television networks could be asking for trouble. Having gotten off the hook for past delinquencies, they're now flirting with a "rebooking" of the most daring turn in show business—the Sherman Act.

Some strange behavior patterns (though hardly new to the business) are being taken in stride. Practices long held suspect are being reactivated. If, out of these assorted maneuvers which nobody talks about and would even deny, the public wound up getting a good show, there might at least be some explanation for going off the deep end. But by the very nature of the practices, it too frequently involves programming hardly worth the time and effort. In the end it's the viewer who gets it in the neck.

Take, for example, the growing practice of the networks in demanding an equity on outside film shows that are given a berth of the webs. (A detailed rundown can be found in the TV Film Section.) Where once the producers and the packagers abhored such practice as an invitation to antitrust probing, now that they're partnered in a crap game, it isn't likely they'll go squealing to the cops.

Unfortunately, it's the weaker shows among the new entries that lend themselves to such dickering. The self-respecting producer convinced that he's brought in a qualitative show won't lend himself to such entreaties and blandishments on the premise (or maybe it's just wishful thinking) that you can't keep a good entry down, and why should he share the profits with anyone else?

But aside from the webs' questionable equity in film properties, there are other disturbing practices which either individually or collectively are hardly calculated to heighten the effectiveness or stature of programming — as for example the slotting of shows to satisfy internal bookkeeping; currying favor with clients in accepting shows which serve no other purpose than to bolster the same client's adjacent weak entry (as the alternative to knocking off the weak show); the catering to stars with auxiliary program axes to grind, and lastly the evils stemming from a situation where program execs are more dedicated to self-perpetuation (in trying to justify previous commitments) than in seeing that the viewer is getting a fair shake.

Sources close to the scene of operation say that CBS-TV was obliged to alter its decision to lop "Checkmate" off next season's schedule because of MCA intervention. "Checkmate" is packaged by Jack Benny's J & M Productions. According to these reliable sources, the CBS change of heart came about through the simple expedient of MCA (Benny's agent) laying it on the line—take "Checkmate" if you still want Benny. CBS took it.

As long as there's a Perry Como in NBC's future, so, they're saying, will there continue to be a Roncom Productions (Como's packaging operation.) NBC has had some unfortunate experiences with Roncom's brace of vidfilm half-hours, "Happy" and "Tate." ("Happy is event now getting a reprise run.) And by

Hams, All

The upcoming Jackie Gleason special on CBS-TV, "The Million Dollar Incident" probably comes closer to achieving an "inside format" than any show put into tv orbit. A lot of the action takes place amid a simulated backgrounding of the 14th and 19th (programming-administrative) floors at 485 Madison hqs. of CBS, with fictitious counterparts of Bill Paley, Frank Stanton, Jim Aubrey, Oscar Katz, Mike Dann and money man Spence Harrison written prominently into the script.

The payoff is that the top echelon, having "sneaked" tapes of the show, are now engaged in daily arguments as to who's got the best lines.

Quinlan's Got A Serious Poser: Does AB or PT Run Show In Chi?

By LES BROWN

Chicago, April 28.

A schism between two AB-PT fraternity brothers has erupted as a byproduct of the brouhaha over the BBC-produced documentary on Chicago. The rift apparently amounts to a showdown over where the corporate authority really resides in the Windy City, with that jinx British telefilm at the core of it. It's a matter for the American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres parentage in New York to settle.

By an unfortunate quirk of circumstance, Sterling (Red) Quinlan, ABC viceprez in charge of WBKB, came down with a serious case of hepatitis at just the time the film was being televised in England. Naturally, he had to sit out the subsequent ruckus that took place on this side of the Atlantic. An inveterate scrapper who has met controversy before, Quinlan had answered from his hospital bed that the film was his baby (he had authorized the investment of $30-$40,000 for the U.S. rights) and that he'd make up his own mind, when he was ready to return to work, whether or not it would be shown on the station.

But well before Quinlan had left his bed, word was issued by the station that the documentary definitely, and once and for all, would not be shown here. Supposedly it was a panel decision, with general manager Matt Viecracker the spokesman. Last week, Sun-Times tv editor Paul Molloy broke a story that the decision had actually been made by David B. Wallerstein, prexy of Balaban & Katz, sister AB-PT company in the theatres division. Implication was that Wallerstein had stepped in, in the absence of Quinlan, to rule for the corporate good. Molloy pointed out that Wallerstein is also prexy of the State Street

Untrammelled

Irony of yesterday's (Tues.) Peabody award presentations was the public service kudo extended to Niles Trammell's WCKT in Miami.

By virtue of the fact that the Cox-Knight-Trammell ownership is threatened with the loss of its channel franchise (with a temporary transfer already authorized), Trammell and WCKT are in the hardly enviable position of flaunting a Peabody with no place to hang it.

NBC Gets Tough So Lever Scrams Joey and 'Price'

NBC-TV put its foot down and told Lever Bros. that Joey Bishop was going to be the web's entry on Wednesdays from 8:30 to 9 even if the sponsors didn't like it. So Lever up and pulled out of both Bishop and its old time favorite "Price Is Right," which NBC is moving over next season to Mondays at 8:30.

The Lever money immediately went to ABC-TV's Friday stanza, "The Corrupters," and over at CBS-TV, on the Saturday night "The Defenders" series, Lever confirmed its earlier order for an alternate half-hour of the 8:30 replacement for "Checkmate."

But the choice Wednesday period, which Bishop will hold next season behind "Wagon Train," was picked up by Lever's arch merchandising rival, Procter & Gamble. P&G, once the final papers with NBC are signed, will be joining American Tobacco, which stuck it out even though Lever didn't. As for "Price," when it moves to Mondays, the show is half sold to P. Lorillard.

Goodson-Todman Mating 'Rebel' and 'Yank,' What Comes Out Goes to ABC

"Rebel" and "Yank," two Goodson-Todman telefilm half-hours are going to join next season as a weekly hour stanza with both sides in the Civil War represented (a la NBC-TV's "The Americans"). ABC-TV is going to put the synthesized hour into its Wednesday 7:30 slot where "Hong Kong" is presently.

No title has been chosen for the hour, which Andrew Fenaday will produce. Instead of being immediately anti-bellum, as "Rebel" is supposed to be now, the year of the joint adventures of North and South will be 1869, four years after the end of hostilities. Nick Adams will continue as "Rebel" and Jim Drury, who did the unused pilot of the other G-T half-hour, "Yank," will be his co-star. It appears that Adams and Drury, while they may appear together briefly in some of the shows, will by and large alternate the work chores, as do the fonters of "Maverick" and "Americans."

There are no sponsors yet.

BBC Film To Theatres

Chicago, April 18.

WBKB, which has elected not to show the locally controversial BBC film, "Chicago—Four Impressions of a Great American City," is understood to be willing now to peddle the U.S. rights for theatre exhibition. Not for television, however. Station is supposed to have between $30,000 to $40,000 tied up in the Denis Mitchell-produced documentary.

While the ABC o&o is not actively seeking customers for the rights, there are indications that it would probably be receptive to offers.

10% Tax Bite On British Com'l TV

London, April 18.

The Government is to take a 10% tax bite of commercial television revenues in a new duty announced Monday (17) night by Chancellor of the Exchequer Selwyn Lloyd in his House of Commons budget statement.

From May 1, the Government is levying a 10% duty on all program contractors on charges for inserting advertisements.

NAB Cha Cha

Washington, April 18.

Recorded jingles distributed by National Assn. of Broadcasters for Radio Month this May for the first time will have a shuffle beat.

Faillace Productions Inc., of New York, applied what NAB called "an entirely different treatment of music and lyrics" in recording the jingles whose title tune is Radio Month's theme—"Radio . . . the Best Sound Around."

FCC's Ford Sets Record Straight On New Programming Form's Intent

Washington, April 18.

Federal Communications Commissioner Frederick W. Ford has warned broadcasters to beware of attempts "to obfuscate and confuse" FCC's proposed new programming form.

Ford declared that "all types of disastrous eventualities" are being imagined about the proposed revision—all without foundation.

The rulemaking, he noted is based on FCC's policy statement last summer, the gist of which was that programming should be based on the needs of the community. Ford said in a speech released here and slated for delivery to the Kansas Assn. of Radio Broadcasters in Topeka.

"I am convinced that from my discussion with broadcasters the policy statement embodies sound broadcast business practice, as well as a guaranty of as complete freedom as possible for a broadcaster to serve the public interest as he, not the Commission, finds it in his service area.

"The policy statement of July 29, 1960, is a new charter of freedom for broadcasters, but like all freedom, it must be exercised judiciously and with self-discipline.

"If this is done and the industry cooperates fully in this major effort of the Commission to bring about it climate for improved programming, I am sure that it will result in the satisfaction of knowing that you have served the public interest to the best of your ability and in higher profits for yourself."

Ford also called for industry support of FCC's rulemaking proposal to curb trafficking in licenses. He said:

"Dedicated broadcasters who know the public interest of their areas should support the efforts of those who would eliminate the fly-by-night from your number. How many of your broadcaster friends have told you of their experiences with competitors who literally bought an audience with prices and giveaways only to unload on the inexperienced newcomer?...I am hopeful that in your own self-interest you will not listen to the blandisments of those who tell you that the Commission wants to force you to remain a broadcaster and that you should be as free to buy and sell stations as cans of tomatoes."

On another topic, Ford urged a speedy termination of the 16-year-old clear channel hassle. He said he hoped it could be resolved in such a way that those channels providing the "most needed" night service will not be duplicated. Rather, Ford said, they should be reserved for future use for rural and remote areas.

A rare combo of commercial and public service interests got together at WPIX, N.Y., Monday (17) and agreed to play ball with science.

N.Y. Board of Regents, which has a schedule of daytime educational shows on the station, had scheduled "Science for Teachers" at 3 p.m. Monday. Sunday doubleheader of the N.Y. Yankees had been washed out and the Yanks moved one game in the vacant Monday period. That posed the question of what to do with the science show, which was supposed to be watched by some 8,800 metropolitan teachers.

Sponsors Ballantine, R. J. Reynolds and Yanks, in a meeting with station and Regents execs, agreed to interrupt the Yankees vs. Kansas City ball game for a half an hour. The half-hour was vidtaped and shown after the game. Station got 120 phone calls in the middle of the afternoon from fans asking "wha happened?"

NAB Convention To Hear Kennedy

Washington, April 18.

President Kennedy will speak to the opening assembly of the National Assn. of Broadcasters annual convention here May 8.

NAB president LeRoy Collins will introduce Kennedy to an expected 2,000 delegates in the Sheraton Park's Sheraton Hall. The President is scheduled to speak sometime from 10:30 A.M. and noon during the assembly.

Other speakers lined up for the NAB meet include: Federal Communications Chairman Newton N. Minow; Abraham Ribicoff, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare; Henry Loomis, director of Voice of America; Maj. Gen. J. B. Medaris, former Army missile chief; and Dr. Edward Teller, so-called "father of the H-bomb."

A special "labor clinic" will be held May 10 in conjunction with the convention to brief broadcasters on contract negotiations and language. Ward L. Quaal, chairman of the NAB Labor Advisory Committee is slated to report on efforts to bring about an improved system of contract negotiations between networks and advertisers as well as between networks and AFTRA and the Screen Actors Guild. James H. Hulbert, NAB manager of broadcast personnel and economics, will lecture on secondary boycotts in broadcasting and laws affecting the practice.

Set Station Probe On Barry-Enright

Washington, April 18.

License renewal of the Jack Barry-Dan Enright radio station in Hollywood, Fla., has been set for a formal hearing by Federal Communications Commission as result of Enright's implication in the tv quiz scandals.

The station, WGMA, is the only outlet whose license has been jeopardized because of the quiz-fix expose before the House Harris Subcommittee in the fall of 1959. Hundreds of license renewals have been held up following the payola probe, however.

FCC said the WGMA hearing will try to determine how deeply Enright was involved in quiz rigging and, accordingly, whether renewal of the license would be in the public interest. Barry and Enright coproduced "Twenty-One"—the most celebrated of the fixed shows. There was no testimony linking Barry, the program's m.c., to any rigging.

Barry and Enright own WGMA on a 50-50 basis through Melody Music Inc., the operating company.

WCBS Taps Ned Cramer For Clancy Worden Job

Ned Cramer has been named director of public affairs for WCBS-TV, CBS-TVs Gotham flagship, succeeding the late Clancy Worden. Cramer has been assistant pubaffairs director since last September, the appointment a preliminary to Worden's retirement, which had been slated for next fall. He died two weeks ago.

Cramer has been with CBS for 16 year having been a radio director with the web and then switching over to WCBS-TV in 1950. Prior to his pubaffairs stint, he was assistant program director of the station.

CBS' PGA Golf Coin

Williamson-Dickey Co. is CBS-TV's first sponsor for the web's two-day telecast of the PGA golf tourney July 29 and 30. Company, which manufactures sports shirts, is picking up a quarter of the tourney.

This year's PGA originates from Chicago; last year's, which CBS also carried, came from Akron.

YELLOW PAGES SETS 52-WEEK SPREAD

One of the largest—if not the largest—single local order ever placed by the Yellow Pages in N.Y. graced WNBC-TV, the NBC flag this week. The owned & operated outlet grabbed a 52-week spot campaign at the rate of 14 blurbs per week.

Deal, beginning May 1, calls for announcements in prime time adjacencies (to web stanzas) as well as in local cut-ins on the latenight Jack Paar stanza.

Unusual feature of the Yellow Pages buy on WNBC-TV is that, instead of running a month or two, as most local spots deals do, it's a firm 52, according to the station.

CBS Radio Tours 'Expansion '60s'

CBS Radio prexy Arthur Hull Hayes will take to the road in the last lap of a nine-city tour slated for the network's new sales presentation, "Expansion for the Sixties." Presentation has been given in N. Y. a total of five times in the past two weeks.

Presentation hit St. Louis Monday (17), then moved to Chicago for two days (Tues. and Wed.), then Thursday (20) moves on to Minneapolis, all under the stewardship of sales v.p. George Arkedis. Following the midwest swing, it will return east and CBS sales presentations director Leon Luxenberg will take it to Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Philadelphia. Then, on May 15, Hayes and Arkedis will present it in Los Angeles and on May 18 in San Francisco.

It marks the firsttime in several years a network prexy has toured with a sales pitch. But the CBS presentation is pegged to the entire new CBS schedule and emphasizes its expanded news coverage, so that Hayes is pitching for the entire new concept.

The slide presentation, however, scripted by freelancer Gordon Auchincloss, emphasizes that it's not new at all, that the average listener has been conditioned since birth to expect to be "immediately informed" through radio and particularly CBS Radio. Soundtrack covers famous news broadcasts since the Harding Election of 1920 and projects right into the future with a simulated broadcast from the moon.

For the five showings at N.Y.'s "21" club, the web set up a miniature radio transmitter and placed a set on each table to which part of the presentation's soundtrack was transmitted. Sessions were well attended and brought a favorable reaction from the admen present.

Moral of Gertrude Berg Career: Let an Actress Write Her Own Lines

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Gertrude Berg, who literally had her childhood in a Borscht Belt hotel lobby, graduating to tumulting, may be described as a positive thinker. To put it another way, a likeable, successful, healthy egotist. That's not far off her own self evaluation in her just-published memoirs "Molly and Me" (McGraw-Hill; $4.95).

She includes a poem her son once wrote about her:

Committee on Molly
Headed by same,
Who's work shall consist
Of repeating her name.

Mrs. Berg grants that "it's close enough to the truth to make me a little annoyed." The poem leaves the reader wanting to know more about the son as the warm passages in the book about Louis Berg at the beginning of the marriage inspires a curiosity about the husband which is never satisfied. The truth is that out-going "Molly" of radio, television and commercial blurbs has a wide area of private reticence. There is an allusion to weight and age as secrets she intends to keep. But she keeps many more secrets, including the economics of her career. The family of immigrant days is described somewhat lengthily as is the Cat-

NBC-TV's Move-Up on New Nielsens

NBC-TV stepped past ABC in the National Neilsen ratings this week as CBS-TV extended its lead in the hot inter-network rivalry. Heretofore, it's been strictly a CBS-ABC battle, but the Nielsens for the two weeks ended April 2 (April 1 report) showed ABC dropping back and NBC moving into second place.

CBS held steady with a 20.2 average rating for the 6-11 p.m. period. NBC increased its showing 5% over the last report to wind up with an 18.1 average, while ABC's ratings dropped 6%, down to a 17.2 average. The ABC drop had been anticipated, since the earlier Nielsen multi-city reports covering the same two weeks had shown CBS overtaking ABC for the first time. ABC ordinarily tops CBS on the multi-city ratings, but loses out on the nationals. CBS lead in the nationals over ABC reached a season's high of 18%.

CBS sweep covered all measurment standards. It took four of the top five, seven of the top 10 and nine of the top 20. NBC took one out of five, two out of 10 and seven out of 20. ABC couldn't break into the top five, got one out of 10 and four out of 20. CBS swept five nights of the week—Monday, Tuesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday. NBC took Wednesday, ABC Thursday. In half-hour wins, CBS had 21, NBC 15 and ABC 17.

Top 10 follows:

Gunsmoke (CBS)	37.1
Wagon Train (NBC)	32.9
Danny Thomas (CBS)	30.1
Andy Griffith (CBS)	30.0
Have Gun, Will Travel (CBS)	29.3
Ingrid Bergman Special (CBS)	29.2
Candid Camera (CBS)	28.6
Rawhide (CBS)	28.5
Purex Special (NBC)	28.0
Real McCoys (ABC)	27.6

Mex Stations Cut to the Quick By Gillette Free-Show Free-Plug Policy

Mexico City, April 18.

In an unprecedented, unanimous resolution, Mexican broadcasting stations have signed a pact whereby they will no longer accept so-called "free" public service broadcasts from sponsors who then impose the right to have free commercial plugs in exchange.

Entire matter was brought to a head by radio executive dissatisfaction with the Gillette razor firm. This latter has been acquiring exclusive rights to sports and other events, and then transferring these to various stations on the condition that its announcements be broadcast for free.

Program chiefs have patiently gone along with this policy in the past, because there is great interest in sporting events (including the World Series) and individually or collectively stations would be hard pressed to put up cash needed to sew up rights to these.

But recently, it is alleged, Gillette not only asked that its own commercials be aired, but that of other non-competitive sponsors. When this policy was announced station managers quietly marshalled their forces and the decision not to accede to these demands was made at the recent meeting of Pacific coast broadcasters in Culiacan. Stations throughout the republic were quick in giving their support to the "no free plugs" decision.

Main plaint of station managements is that under this system they are being hurt economically for no money is received for plugging Gillette blades, and now this was expanding to other products as well.

Leading the revolt was the Radio Programas de Mexico chain headed up by Clemente Serna Martinez and Antonio E. Ontiveros, Enrique Enciso, president of the National

Miles-Mennen ABC Buys

Miles Labs and Mennen have bought extensive commercial schedules in ABC-TV spring-summer programming. Miles' buy is for an estimated $975,000 and the Mennen biz comes to roughly $220,000.

Miles has participations or thirds in "Hawaiian Eye," "Leave It to Beaver," "Silents Please," "Guestward Ho" and "Hong Kong." Short term deals were made in "Asphalt Jungle," "Hong Kong," "Cheyenne," "Stagecoach West," "Roaring 20s" and "Hawaiian Eye" by Mennen.

Miles biz came via Geoffrey Wade and Mennen via Warwick & Legler.

CBS Troubles On Title Clearances

CBS-TV is running into some title clearance problems of late. Newest hassle involves the Four Star Gertrude Berg-Sir Cedric Hardwicke "The Freshman" series. Conflict, naturally, relates to the Harold Lloyd classic of the same name.

There are others. Web wants to change its "Ichabod" title to "Plain and Fancy," but there was a hit musical of that name on Broadway only four years back. It's figuring on "Dodge City" as the rerun title for "Gunsmoke," but there's a Warner Bros. picture of that name that starred Errol Flynn.

Working title on the Wayne & Shuster summer comedy series was "High Time," but that was dropped because of the Bing Crosby pic of the same name for 20th-Fox. In the daytime area, web changed "Surprise Package" to "Your Surprise Package" because of a pic with the original title. And "Strategy" was changed to "Double Exposure" because of a copyright on the name.

ORANGE BOWL TV'ER IN CBS-TO-ABC SHIFT

After 10 years with CBS-TV, the Orange Bowl football game and the surrounding hoopla will be televised for the next three years, at least, by ABC-TV. CBS, which was paying around $200,000 per season for rights, reportedly pulled out when it was found that the Orange Bowl entrepreneurs had opened the classic to general bidding, and, now, ABC will be paying $256,000 annually for the rights.

Besides gaining rights to the game itself, there are the Orange Festival Regatta and Parade and the Junior Davis Cup Championship going to ABC. All are from Miami.

Heywood in Key Crosley V.P. Role

Cincinnati, April 18.

John J. Heywood, for the past 10 years a member of the NBC-TV network's top management team, is the new vice president and treasurer of the Crosley Broadcasting Corp. He succeeds Kieran T. Murphy, who died Feb. 2.

The appointment, effective Saturday (15), was announced by James D. Shouse, board chairman, and Robert E. Dunville, president, of Crosley operations, including tv stations in Cincy, Dayton, Columbus, Indianapolis and Atlanta, and clear channel WLW here.

Heywood joined NBC in 1950 as a tv network systems analyst. He became supervisor and later manager of operating budgets, director of business administration and in 1959 director of business affairs for the NBC-TV web.

LEVER TV STUDY: WHO'S RIGHT?

Agencies Dolly-In on Ollie

Most of the advertising business was up in arms last week over ABC's decision to expand its station breaks in prime time to 42 seconds with a flood of protests reaching the network.

Young & Rubicam boss George Gribbin, who fired off the first public blast, was joined by Jack Von Volkenburg, prexy of M-E Productions, who made public his corresondence with Treyz reminding him that an ABC plan a year ago to use 40-second breaks was dropped and expressing surprise at the new plan. Von Volkenburg warned that the longer break "will only lead to increased triple spotting on stations, which will in turn greatly decrease the value of the network advertisers' commercial announcements."

Many other agency execs sent letters to Treyz which, however they did not make public. All took the same tack—that the ABC move would encourage triple-spotting, that it would decrease the value of network commercials, and that it constituted a disservice to the public and the advertising and broadcasting industries. The only dissenting note was struck by one agency which depends largely on 10-second spots, which would be eradicated. This agency pleaded that if the webs were really serious about the 42-second breaks, would they please go all the way to 50 seconds so that there would be a place for 10-second ID's.

Key question raised by the storm of agency protest, however, was this: If they felt so strongly about the situation, why did they place some $200,000,000 worth of business on ABC-TV under the 42-second provision? Why didn't they insist they would place no orders on ABC until the web reversed its position? Agencies placed their orders with full knowledge of the plans to expand the breaks. Also, will these self-same agencies boycott the second 20-second spot opened up on ABC stations in an effort to kill the plan or will they rush into line for the choicest of the new availabilities, despite their reservations?

Among stations, now that CBS plans to go ahead and expand its breaks if the ABC plan pans out, there was serious doubt that they'd actually gain revenues by the move. Reasoning is that there is just so much spot money to go around, and that doubling the number of adjacencies isn't going to help. What will happen, they figure, is that advertisers will pick up the choice new adjacencies but will simply drop their adjacencies in weaker parts of the schedule, so that the total coin will remain the same but part of their structure will actually be downgraded. It won't be a question of advertisers in weak CBS timeslots shifting to choice new ABC slots, since CBS too will be opening prime availabilities by following the ABC lead.

Dave Lown Perplexed Over Yank TV's 'Rejection' of Global Vistas

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris April 18.

Dave Lown, one of the reps of the Intercontinental Television Co. here, says he is not an angry young video man but does not understand why Yank tele networks give constant lip service to future worldwide tv hookups and ignore possibilities under their very noses.

ITC, in operation abroad, headquartered here for over two years now with the first complete mobile videotape recording unit, has been used by NBC three times, CBS five times and by ABC only once.

Lown points out that Yank networks are making mighty efforts to expand overseas and have their feet in the doors of all countries on the verge of second channels, and offering money, technical knowhow, programs and management counsel to johnny-come-latelies in the tv world. He admits this is wise and helpful but that U.S. networks overlook the fact that it can be a two-way deal with a lot to gain and learn from the Europeans, Africans and Asians.

Lown thinks that if Yank attitudes toward worldwide communications are serious it behooves them to understand and take into consideration the tremendous possibilities which exist beyond present coaxial cables. He feels this is also true for the advertiser who

$2,200,000 Ayem Sales for CBS-TV

CBS-TV wrapped up some $2,200,000 in participating sales for its 10-12 morning block this week, putting the ayem period over the 50%-sold mark on a current basis. When the morning sales plan commenced a couple of months back, the sales level stood at about 25%.

The $2,200,000 represents 80 minutes purchased by four advertisers. Biggest is Scott Paper, which bought 32 minutes. Best Foods came in for 24 participations. Pillsbury, which also added extra billings in the afternoon, bought 20 spots, and Curtis Publishing took four.

Reynolds Changes Mind About 'Talent Scouts'

R. J. Reynolds decided that it needed summertime relief from its network tv ad expenditures, so the cig house backed off from buying "Celebrity Talent Scouts" as the hotspell replacement on NBC-TV for "Acapulco." Instead, NBC will turn Mondays at 9 over to 20 consecutive first-runs of the Audie Murphy stanza, "Whispering Smith."

"Smith" was supposed to get a summer airing Fridays at 8, but NBC, in accommodating the drop of the anticipated "Talent Scouts" by moving "Smith," decided to bring back "One Happy Family." There'll be six new and four old "Family" half-hours for Fridays.

FCC Hints Move To Eliminate All Web Option Time

Washington, April 18.

Federal Communications Commission has told the U.S. Court of Appeals here it may decide to withdraw its order of last year cutting one half-hour from network option time.

The move came in the form of a request to the Court for a delay until Friday (21) for filing its brief in opposition to network attempts to overturn the FCC order. In explanation, FCC said it wanted the extra time to consult with newly installed FCC general counsel Max Taglin on whether to withdraw the option time directive.

If it is withdrawn, odds would favor an outright end to option time. When the option time order was issued last year, the Commission was split 4 to 3 on the issue, with four Commissioners in favor of the half-hour reduction and three favoring an outright end to option time.

AUDIENCE DROP CLAIMS REFUTED

A special Nielsen study prepared for Lever Bros. indicates that television viewing as a whole has been declining over the past two seasons. The daytime drop is only slight, but the evening viewing level has dropped discernably.

Overall, the Lever study finds, total hours per day of viewing has dropped from a five hours and 10 minute peak in 1957-58 to five hours and three minutes in '59-'60, a decline of 2%. That's on a year-round basis, for the Nov.-April period the comparable figures are five hours and 55 minutes and five hours and 40 minutes, a larger decline.

In evening time, between 7:30 and 11 p.m., the decline is more acute; on a year-round basis, sets-in-use dropped from 58.8 in '57-'58 to 57.2 in '58-'59 to 55.8 in '59-'60, a drop of 5% over the two-years. Winter decline, though pegged to higher levels, is the same, 5% over the two years, and the summer drop, with lower levels, is 6%. Daytime drop on a year-round basis is 1%, but winter daytime viewing is down 7% while summer daytime viewing is up 12%.

Other findings in the report indicate that all nightime time periods between 7:30 and 11 are down on a year-round basis, and viewing for every night of the week except Friday likewise is down. "Light viewers" are spending less time at the tv set than two years ago, with that 20% segment of the tv population which does the lightest viewing watching 29% less than two years ago during the 6 p.m.-midnight period.

Findings, however, were poo-pooed by the networks, which found the alleged declines questionable on the basis of the measurements used and insignificant in terms of numbers and assumption. CBS evaluation, for example, questions the use of a "peak" period as the basis for comparison. More legitimate would be a "norm" against which to measure, not the '57-'58 peak. "Where can you go from a peak except down?"

Moreover, says the CBS evaluation, prepared by research director Jay Eliasberg, the Nielsen data could be evaluated in another manner, that a couple of years were "out of phase," including '57-'58, and the rest including '59-'60, represent normal viewing levels.

There are also factors which could make the findings "statistically insignificant," such as weather conditions, changes in the Nielsen sample over the years studied, and the measurement period, with its four "dark" weeks per year. Additionally it was pointed out that declines in viewing levels were expected as new setowners with "light viewing" habits purchased sets and brought down the overall average.

Finally, the CBS evaluation points out, assuming the decline is accurate, it "is so slight as to be neglibible. It amounts to an average of seven minutes a week or -2%, while the number of television homes has increased 9% over the three year period. Therefore, the CBS report concludes, there has actually been a 7% increase in the number of total home hours of viewing.

'CBS Reports' To Get Summer Sponsor Coin

"CBS Reports," which has been sustaining since the first of the year, will go commercial again starting in June, when it becomes two-third sold for a three-show run and half-sold for an additional four shows.

Big deal is with Lipton Tea, which is taking half-sponsorship on seven shows. Other client is Fedders' Airconditioning, which is buying a sixth sponsorship on three stanzas concurrent with the Lipton deal. Both are strictly summer clients; Lipton will pitch iced tea.

Fedders also bought a third of "Person to Person" and a third of "I Love Lucy" for summer rides.

ABC-TV Station Break Expansion An Explosive Issue, Forcing Other Webs to Follow Suit; Y&R's Blast

ABC-TV's newest gambit to win clearances and influence affiliates —an expansion of primetime station breaks to 42 seconds next fall —will probably set off an explosive new scramble of criticism of the industry for "overcommercialization" as the other networks follow suit

The criticism has already begun —albeit from an interested party —via a blast at the ABC move from Young & Rubicam prexy George H. Gribbin. But as the other networks go along with ABC, and CBS has already indicated it will do so, the hollering from other sources is going to be loud and clear.

ABC quietly informed advertisers and agencies of its intention to increase nighttime station breaks between programs (station breaks within shows won't be affected) in the fall from 30 to 42-seconds on Feb. 1. The move broke into the open last week when CBS-TV, via sales administration veep Bill Hylan, notified advertisers that it "may" be forced to adopt a similar expansion effective Oct. 1. At the time Hylan mailed his letter, he still wasn't sure ABC was serious; since then, ABC prexy Oliver Treyz has stated that ABC "is now firmly committed" to the revised station break pattern, and CBS will probably formalize its decision at the web's affiliates meeting in N. Y. May 4-5. NBC has refused comment but is almost certain to go along too.

Hylan's letter also made reference to 70-second breaks following participating programs, but Treyz indicated that ABC has no such plans and its changes will be confined to the 42-second break. CBS, which opposes any change at all but feels it must follow the ABC lead in order to compete, will also drop the 70-second idea.

'Uncalled For:' Gribbin

Gribbin wired Treyz, CBS prexy Frank Stanton and NBC prez Bob Kintner that "such a move is arbitrary, uncalled for and a disservice to the American public and the advertising and broadcasting industries." He also called the station break expansions "a direct infringement upon responsible use of the free air waves granted to the networks and the stations by all the people. It also appears to be in violation of the spirit, if not the letter, of the code of the NABC, subscribed to by the stations and the networks. If executed, it could be another step

Plesent Exiting Y&R To Join Ed Murrow

Stan Plesent has resigned the legal staff of Young & Rubicam to become deputy general counsel of the U. S. Information Agency under Ed Murrow. He'll be responsible, under general counsel Don Irwin, former Connecticut Congressman, for the agency's legal affairs and Congressional liaison.

Plesent's been with Y&R for over seven years as the No. 2 legal man at the agency under Dave Miller. He's specialized in labor relations and talent contracts.

Parting with Y&R isn't a leave of absence in view of the indeterminate length of his D.C. tour, but the agency has indicated it would like Plesent to return when his USIA hitch is over.

Pitt Postscript: NAB May Move In If WBC Steps Out

The National Assn. of Broadcasters apparently wants to absorb the public service conference concept, laid down these past four years by Westinghouse Broadcasting, into the regular annual industry meetings. Reportedly, if Westinghouse decides to go along and drop its unilateral sponsorship of the highly-feted pubservice powwows, the NAB will drop or shrink the size of its periodic regional meetings so that it can afford a bigger annual looksee into the whys and wherefores of better programming.

While Don McGannon, Westinghouse chieftain, hasn't fully made up his mind, the NAB is taking no chances and is vigorously romancing Westinghouse. No. 1, NAB has requested McGannon to restate for its upcoming Washington conclave the opening remarks he made last week at the WBC pubservice meetings in Pittsburgh. No. 2, industry org has asked the station chain to reproduce the dramatized "Berelson report" it did in Pittsburgh. No. 3, it has also requested that Westinghouse get Russell Lynes of Harpers, Pa. Gov. David Lawrence, and academicians Frank Baxter, James Norton and William Cole (along with WBC veep Frank Tooke as moderator) to repeat their Pittsburgh panel discourse on "community needs and what to do about them."

As a topper, NAB has also asked, in one sense, for WBC to supply some of the entertainment attendant upon the D.C. annual meet: Bob Bernstein, a playwright and also a staff publicist for WBC in N.Y., did a satirical review of tv, with music, for the Pittsburgh confrenciers, which NAB wants to reproduce in Washington in May.

The WBC conference may prove to be the hottest property in tv and radio, because, in addition to the NAB "romance," the new First International Assembly on tv (out of the Academy of TV Arts) wants to take it over—very much, according to the reaction some of its leading members left on VARIETY last week. In fact, they seemed to think they already have it in the bag, although from other quarters it was learned that McGannon had not made up his mind.

Withal, Westinghouse has not yet made up its mind to relinquish its "favorite child," the public service conference — except if McGannon is convinced the NAB or the Assembly can get it across to a larger trade group than a private company is able to reach.

Off-B'way 'Lincoln' Taped for Special

"Young Abe Lincoln," the young people's musical which moved from off-Broadway to the Main Stem's Eugene O'Neill Theatre this week, has been taped in its entirety by Metropolitan Broadcasting for use as a special after the Broadway run has been completed.

No date for the telecast—planned for all of Met's five stations including WNEW-TV in N.Y. and WTTG in Washington, has been set, since the run of the musical can't be determined. But the stations are planning 7-8 p.m. showings to get the maximum moppet audience.

Show is a Little Golden Theatre production presented by Arthur Shimkin, with book by Richard N. Bernstein and John Allen and score by Joan Javits and Victor Ziskin

Running time is just an hour, enabling Met to present it uncut. Met picked up tv rights for its own markets, with Shimkin reserving the right to sell the tv version elsewhere.

National Mags' Split-Runs Cutting Into Regional Syndie Sponsorship; $50,000,000 Goes Into Print Media

National magazines, via split-runs, have cut into regional syndie sponsor coin. List of magazines offering regional distribution encompasses about 60 mags now, with Life joining the parade which already includes Look. Reader's Digest, Newsweek, Satevepost, Parents, et al.

The split-run print dollar has grown considerably this year, as compared to last. It's estimated that about $50,000,000 has been spent in regional mag advertising during the first six months of this year, which is about a one-third increase of the regional mag monies spent in the comparable period last year. It's estimated that the print regional dollar in '61 will amount to $100,000,000. In '60 advertisers are reported to have spent $76,000,000 in split-run editions of national mags.

Advertisers using the split-run print medium choose it for the same reasons that they might want to use a syndie series on tv. The parallel reasons are to hit the market on a local level, in the region of the advertiser's distribution area. For the national advertiser, again the split-run point medium, can be chosen for the same reasons as riding a syndie entry—to zero in on certain markets and to avoid others for a variety of specific reasons.

According to those making the agency rounds, there's little question that the split-run mags have grown to some extent at the expense of the regional syndie biz. Another competitor to the regional sponsor coin is in the tv medium itself, the increase in spot buying by advertisers. The spot buying by regionals is similar in some respects to the growth of participation buys on the national level.

There are still regionals around. The pool of available regional dollars, though, has dwindled, according to those sounding out the ad agencies.

In this period of selective buying, with a close look at ad budgets due to the drop off in the economy, syndie houses out with a first-runner better have one which stands up commercially. Otherwise, red ink is promised.

Mike Wallace, WNTA In a Wrangle Over His New WBC Entry

Mike Wallace and WNTA-TV management are in a hassle over Wallace's upcoming hosting chores in the projected "PM East, PM West," series, to be produced by Westinghouse Broadcasting.

Wallace has a contract with NTA which runs out in June. From station management's view, the contract has a provision which bars the employment of Wallace in any interview show for a period of 26 weeks after the expiration of the contract. "Mike Wallace Interviews," telecast by WNTA-TV, Newark-N.Y., is syndicated in other markets.

Wallace, when queried, declined comment. Westinghouse, though, is going ahead with its late night vidtape 90 minute entry, an hour of which will be telecast from N.Y. and a half-hour from San Francisco. Wallace will host the N.Y. segment. Show, to be syndicated in non-Westinghouse markets, is slated for airing in early June.

FANCY RATINGS FOR WB POST-'50S

Warner Bros. post-'50's are chalking up some fancy rating capers, as they begin to unreel in various markets.

In San Diego, "Dial M for Murder" on KOGO, telecast Fridaya night (31) at 7 p.m., registered a big 26.0 ARB, beating all competition in the market. In St. Louis, KSD, showing "Films of the 50's" in its Saturday night "Gold Award Theatre" showcase, registered an ARB average rating of 22 for the January-February period. KSD, in the period measured, beat KMOX's "First Run Theatre," also slotted from 10 to 11:45 p.m.

UNITY GROUP ADDS 3 IN WGA BALLOTING

Hollywood, April 18.

Council For Guild Unity—self-styled "middle-of-the-road" faction within Writers Guild of America—is throwing its weight behind three candidates for office running in WGA annual election. Balloting deadline is May 18; ballots go out today (Tues.).

Unity group last week nominated five candidates by petition. To these now are added the three—thus giving the group a full slate to support in races for all offices. Support is given Charles Schnee in prexy contest; Barry Trivers, candidate for tv branch prez of union; Louis Pelletier, vying for secretary-treasurer of the tv branch.

Previously supported were Malvin Wald, running for veepee of tv branch, and exec board nominees Art Arthur, Dale Eunson, William Fay and E. Jack Neuman.

Wolper 'Race for Space' Red Hot Arbitron Item On Third Time Around

Third run telecast of David Wolper's "The Race for Space" on WPIX, N.Y., cashed in on the popular excitement engendered by the orbital flight of Russia's Major Gagarin. Hour telecast Thursday (13), starting at 8:30 p.m., drew an average ARB of 11.8, the rating almost equalling the previous two telecasts of the documentary on the station.

The rerun also topped special network space shows telecast during the week, with WCBS-TV registering a 10.1 for an hour special Wednesday (12) night starting at 7:30; WNBC-TV hitting a 10.9 for its "Men in Space" the same night; and WABC-TV in a half-hour show starting at 5 p.m. which drew a 9.7.

"The Race for Space" was turned down as a network entry, forcing sponsor Shulton to syndicate the show on a national spot basis last year. Current outing is sponsored by Tidewater which has also bought Wolper-Sterling's "Project: Man in Space." Latter documentary is due for telecasting on WPIX May 11.

Also hypoed in the rating meter on indie WPIX is its Ziv-UA entry "Men in Space," which drew a 6.2 ARB for its last outing Thursday, compared to the usual 4.0's.

Santa's Village Series

San Francisco, April 18.

Half-hour series located in Santa's Village, Santa Cruz, Calif., is being shot in color by Moulin Studios, headquartered here. Kiddie series, titled "Santa's Village," features Frank Darien, Angela Combs and Carl Hansen. Dan Norton is producing and George Richman directing.

This marks the entry of bay area talent and facilities into tv series production. It is also the first time that an amusement park has been used as an actual set, in this instance serving as a background and theme.

ITP's $1,800,000 Suit Vs. Ziv-UA

Cincinnati, April 18.

A suit filed by International Television Programs, Inc., of Cincinnati in U. S. District Court here against Ziv-Unted Artists, Inc., and United Artists Corp. of New York seeks $1,800,000 damages, charging that United Artists threatened to terminate ITP's exclusive contract for foreign distribution of Ziv-produced tv films.

ITP, headed by Edward J. Stern, has translated Ziv photofilms into 12 different languages and charges that its contract signed in June, 1959, runs to Aug. 31, 1968.

Ziv, former Cincy firm, was bought by UA in March of 1960 and became Ziv-United Artists, Inc.

The ITP petition charges that UA violated the Sherman Anti-Trust Act by acquiring all stock interests in Ziv when it was in foreign distribution itself through its United Artists Associated, Inc., subsidiary. This action allegedly attempted to monoplize interestate and foreign commerce and to eliminate ITP as a competiter.

The action asks $600,000 actual damages and treble the amount for asserted anti-trust violations. It petitioned the court to force UA to divest itself of Ziv stock and to grant an injunction halting spread of reports that Ziv is cancelling its ITP contract.

Charles Sawyer, local attorney for the defendant firms, stated that they have not violated anti-trust laws or provisions of the agreement.

Gilson's Atlanta Slot

Ferederck L. Gilson is shifting from CBS Films' Gotham sales staff to become manager of the company's Atlanta office. He's been covering N. Y., Connecticut and Toronto.

Gilson replaces James Thrash, who's becoming Atlanta manager for TVAR.

Universal Next to Dump Post-'48 Pix Into TV; No Word From Par

Next post-'48 stockpile to come down the tv pike looks like Universal Pictures. Universal, which released its pre-'48's via Screen Gems, currently is engaged in classifying its post-'48 stockpile which runs to 245 pix made between 1949 and 1956, the cutoff year for tv at this time.

Prexy Milton Rackmil informed stockholders that the post-'48's will be released in packages. Whether Universal will make another distribution deal for its post-'48's, or try to handle the distribution itself is being studied. On its pre-'48's Universal held foreign distribution rights other than Canada. Company now is prepping to handle overseas distribution of its pre-'48 features.

Way things shape up Paramount again looks like the major which will be last with its pix on the tv market. Paramount came in at the tail end of its pre-'48's, now being distributed by MCA-TV. National Telefilm Associates reportedly expressed some interest in acquiring Paramount post-'48's in connection with a possible sale of its station, WNTA-TV, Newark-N.Y., to David Susskind, who had been financed in his bid by Paramount Pictures. That report, though, has been the only word filtering down on the post-'48 situation for Paramount.

Metro tv is prepping a list of post-'48 titles to be unveiled at next month's Washington meeting of the National Assn. of Broadcasters. The list is said to comprise about 40 pix, in keeping with the reported Metro TV policy of releasing small groups of post-'48's at different intervals of time.

United Artists also should be out shortly with a fresh, small list of post-'48's.

Already in the post-'48 market are Columbia Pictures, via Screen Gems, and Warner Bros., latter pix being distributed by Seven Arts Associates. National Telefilm Associates has the first group of 20th-Fox post-'48's, with the second 20th-Fox post-'48 group going to Seven Arts Associated.

Another group of post-'48's, also from 20th-Fox, is slated for network airing next fall on NBC-TV, with Saturday nights set aside for pix night on the web.

FCC's Support of VHF for ETV Triggers a 'Who Me' B'casting Game; Focus Shifts to L. A.

In N. Y., Los Angeles, and in many cities in between, broadcasters can play a new game, titled "Who Me?" Origins of the game—and it's being played very seriously now by some broadcasters in N. Y. and Los Angeles—stems from the Federal Communications Commission's inquiry in how one of the vhf channels in each of the seven station markets can be shifted to noncommercial, educational use.

In N. Y., the inquiry now is taking on an academic aura—with the expected imminent sale of WNTA-TV to the educational groups. The FCC's probe, though, has wider ramifications and is far from academic to the industry.

The Commission's inquiry in N. Y., as in Los Angeles, was to have encompassed all the stations in the market. In N. Y., Channel 13, since the NTA takeover, to quite a degree has supplied the Newark-N. Y. area with an alternative programming service, originating an array of programming led by "The Play Of the Week."

If the FCC ever sets up a yardstick in attempting to pick and choose which vhf outlet should be converted for educational uses, how will an alternative programming service match up against stations unwinding pix after pix, vidfilm after vidfilm, many of the latter previously offered by a network station. Networks, as well as the indie stations, are encompassed in the FCC's inquiry. They, too, might be asked what makes them unique in the market, what programming services they supply which other stations wouldn't duplicate if their franchise was lifted for educational tv.

There are many intriguing legal questions revolving around the FCC inquiry, for which comments have been asked by May 1. Can the FCC even go into the area of matching one programming service against another, and declaring a preference on particular grounds?

There may be doubts and challenges on the FCC's legal powers, but there's great acceptance as to the commission's moral persuasive powers. There's been some hurried examination of programming schedules in N. Y. and Los Angeles among station execs since the announced inquiry. In Los Angeles, the "Who Me?" game is even more mystifying, for there, no commercial channel has been offered for sale and there isn't an educational tv group with announced sums of money willing to make a purchase. In light of the Los Angeles situation, how will the FCC choose

PLAN PILOT FILM ON COLE'S 'WITCH'S TALE'

Alonzo Deen Cole's "Witch's Tale" which had an 18-year run on WOR, New York, in the old radio days will be put on a pilot film in London during the last week of April. Mitch Hamilburg who has optioned the rights from the author will make the trip to Britain.

"Witch's Tale" was set to roll in Hollywood about a year ago but company went into a merger and project was not actualized.

Hollywood, April 18.

The team that sparked the success of Warners-TV spoof of the westerns and set a pattern that was widely copied has been reunited at 20th-Fov-TV. Roy Huggins, production veepee at 20th, has made good his promise to bring Marion Hargrove into the Westwood fold. Both took "Maverick" off the pad into orbit at Warners, Huggins as producer and Hargrove scripted. By jumping the competing network shows by a half-hour, it knocked Steve Allen out of the box and passed Ed Sullivan in the ratings.

Hargrove makes the move to 20th after completing the screenplay of "The Music Man" and an original for "The Boys' Night Out." He will be berthed as a producer but his writing talents, as those of Huggins, won't be bypassed on troublesome scripts. He will be assigned a series to produce in the next few weeks.

ITC OF CANADA IN 62% SALES HIKE

First quarter sales at ITC of Canada, Ltd., subsid of Independent Television Corp., increased 62% over the corresponding period of 1960.

Reporting on Canada, ITC v.p. Abe Mandell said that from January through March, ITC of Canada made 45 station sales of 20 properties. Multi-market deals were concluded on "Best of the Post," "Interpol Calling," "Cannonball," "Hawkeye" and "Tugboat Annie."

Also in the first quarter of '61, ITC has sold "The Parnell Spectaculars" (similar to the special, "Sunday Night at the Palladium," that will be seen on NBC-TV this fall) and "Deadline Midnight," a dramatic series. Both of these programs are being produced at Elstree Studios outside London.

Six-Market Sale On 'Adventure Theatre'

Sterling Television reports early sales in six markets for its Ray Forrest produced and narrated half-hour documentary series, "Adventure Theatre," a package of 78 stanzas off the Canadian Broadcasting web.

Stations pacted are KTUV, San Francisco; WLWT, Cincinnati; WBNS, Columbus; WSBT, South Bend; WMBS, Lansing; WHAS, Louisville. Thirty-nine of the half hours are in color. Concerning a variety of places and subjects, films were shot in various parts of the world.

'Waterfront' Rights

TV Marketeers has secured distribution rights to the "Waterfront" series from Roland Reed Productions. Series, consisting of 78 episodes, had been in syndication for years, first under the aegis of UTP and then MCA TV.

TV Marketeers also made a deal to represent the Bernie Sindell Agency of Beverly Hills in N.Y. and the first property under the deal is a new half-hour adult cartoon series called "Straight Talk Jackson." Color pilot has been filmed.

NT&T's Major Status In Community Antenna System; 3 New Buys

Los Angeles, April 18.

National Theatres & Television has acquired three new community antenna television systems, making company the third largest operator of this business in the nation, it was revealed bzy Eugene V. Klein, president, at the annual stockholders meeting here last week.

The combined systems, which include the Bluefield TV Cable Co., serving Bluefield, West Virginia, and Bluefield, Virginia; Durfee's Inc., representing six separate systems headquartered in Man and Logan, W. Virginia, and Perfect Video, Inc., representing two systems in Hattiesburg, Mississippi, and Ferriday, Louisiana, serve approximately 14,000 tv homes with a potential of 25,000 subscribers. Klein said the purchase price was approximately $2,000,000.

Samuel P. Norton, president of the National Amusement division and director of the company's Williamsport Cable Co., community antenna system with 13,000 subscribers in Williamsport, Pa., said the new acquisitions would be merged under his division and supervision would come from the company's Beverly Hills headquarters.

WEBS' EQUITY IN PIX SHOWS

Davis' WNTA-TV Monkeywrench

Hollywood, April 18.

Opposition to the imminent sale of WNTA-TV, Newark-N.Y., was stressed here today by Leonard Davis, dissident stockholder who is the center of a National Theatres & Television proxy fight. NT&T owns 38% of National Telefilm Associates, which controls the station.

Davis, here for the outcome of the proxy fight which is expected tomorrow (Wed.), said his position has not changed in the matter. He remains opposed. "We have met with Martin Leeds and other NT&T officers and intend to voice our continued opposition as members of the board," he said. He indicated assurance that he, his associate, Philip Handsman, would have NT&T board positions after the voting tally outcome. Seats would take effect on Thursday.

"NTA has the right to sell WNTA-TV at any time," Davis noted, but he also noted that it must be subject to the approval of the board and of stockholders. NT&T has two directors on NTA's board. Leeds also is an NTA board member. Davis said he intends to bring matter up before the NT&T board if sale continues to threaten. Davis has maintained that NTA requires two-thirds approval of its stockholders for the sale of station assets.

Those Network Vidpix Subsids Have a Tough Row to Hoe, As Witness the Plight of CBS Films

By BOB CHANDLER

This is the year to pity the poor independent producer. But his plight pales by comparison with that of the network vidpix subsid, which these days can't seem to get its foot into the network sales door, regardless of the quality of its production and the number of advertisers it can interest in its properties.

Take the case of CBS Films, which brought in four hot pilots this year and had conditional sales on three of them and "interest" on the other. Advertisers simply couldn't clear time for them; in those cases where the advertisers had locked in time periods, the networks involved had designated other shows for the slots.

Problem, in the context of today's buying and scheduling patterns, it simple—the vidpix subsid is caught betwixt and between. It simply can't make a network coproduction deal, an item that's indispensable in one-hour shows and nearly so in half-hours. Reasons are obvious—in the case of CBS-TV, network was unwilling to make a coproduction deal with its own subsid, since the money involved belonged in the same pool and because it was just as easy for the web to tie up talent as it was for the subsid. As for making a coproduction deal with NBC or ABC, it just ain't done.

So CBS Films had to proceed on its own, foregoing one-hour product and concentrating on the half-hours. It turned out "Mister Doc," a show styled after "I Remember Mama" starring Dean Jagger, produced and directed by Ralph Nelson and scripted by Frank Gabrielson (latter two held down the same spots on "Mama");

'Insider' on Shelf

"The Insider," the hour vidfilm entry of Screen Gems which came in as a freeball show, not having any tie to any one of the three networks, is being put on the shelf as a possible midseason entry.

Action-adventure 60-minuter, which stars David Jansen, represents about a $175,000 investment by Screen Gems. More than one hour vidfilm entry has served as a midseason replacement, the last being Metro's "Asphalt Jungle," now riding on ABC-TV. Recoupement money possibilities also lie in foreign distribution. Metro has released a number of hour vidfilm entries as features abroad.

Japan's Ease-Off On Restrictions; Budget Increased

A new Japanese agreement covering American tv imports which broadly liberalizes Japanese restrictions and looks toward complete freedom of exchange in two years has been signed. The agreement, negotiated by John G. McCarthy, prez of Television Programs Export Assn. (TPEA), represents the first major pact signed by the organization, now one year old.

Principal provisions of the agreement, which runs for the fiscal year started April 1, are as follows:

1. The numerical limitations on the import of American programs are eliminated. (There had been a quota of 10½ hours per week on all Japanese stations.)

2. The price ceiling of $500 per half-hour episode has been eliminated also.

3. For the '61 fiscal year, the Japanese government has made a substantial increase for dollar allocations governing the importation of American vidfilms. The increase is a minimum of 50% of what it was last year, when $1,867,000 was spent for half-hour American vidfilm series.

4. Barring some major economic

Julian Lesser Series

Julian Lesser has reactivated his vidpix production company and is in N.Y. with the pilot of his first series since "I Search for Adventure and "Bold Journey." New series is titled "Feature Story" and deals with offbeat people and occupations.

Lesser is meeting with agencies and clients on the pilot. Ralph Storey is narrator and William Beer associate producer.

Only 3 First-Run Syndies 'For Sure'

To date, three first-run half-hour syndie series for fall airing are out in the market. They are Ziv-UA's "King of Diamonds"; Screen Gems' "Shannon"; and Filmasters' "Beachcombers."

The above represents "actualities." Others, though, are in the possibilities hopper. Latter includes Ziv-UA's "Sky Divers" (working title), Independent Television Corp.'s "Whiplash," and a number of potentials from the syndie subsids of the networks, all keyed to sizable regionals unhooking them for the general market.

Last fall, there were eight new half-hour syndie properties, the number representing about a 50% drop from the previous year. A further dropoff in the number is expected for this fall—at least in the traditional half-hour syndie field.

HAVE STAKE IN 80% OF PRODUCT

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

About 80% of the vidfilm properties slated for prime time airing on the three webs next season carries a web-equity tag. Amount of proprietary interest secured by the webs is said to vary from about 10% to 50% in outside vidfilm series.

Those are the savvy estimates as the pilot selling season draws to a close.

Mushrooming the number of series in which webs secure equity rights this selling season were these developments: (1) Growth of the number of hour vidfilm shows: (2) Direct sales of properties to networks, as opposed to advertisers, with the webs getting in on the initial financing; (3) Disappearance of some old series, sold to the webs before the networks took a strong stand on program control and financial participation.

It was estimated during last year's Hollywood hearings by the Federal Communications Commission that about 50% of the new vidfilm properties sold to the webs contained some financial participation by the networks. The 80% estimate for next season's schedule is a dramatic indication of how much that trend has grown.

New wrinkle this selling season is this: Producing companies coming in with a number of shows for a particular web are being asked to grant rerun distribution rights on every second show, rerun distribution rights on one show going to the producing organization and the rights accruing to the syndication subsid of the webs on the second show. The alternate distribution formula is said to be stronger on CBS and NBC than on ABC.

In most cases (there have been a few pretty raw exceptions), the network equity stems from web financing of the pilot project. If the web underwriting is heavy, the web gets a 50% equity in the series. Some producers, if they're hot on a particular project, would rather not go for the 50-50 deal. By peddling the project among the three webs, such producers are able to scale down the amount of web financing and web participation.

Among the many other items, merchandising rights also are a negotiable item, as well as foreign distribution rights, etc. What is secured or given up by either party depends on the strength of the property and the skill of the negotiators. Complications are such in today's market that securing a slot on a web schedule and buttoning down a series for a season's push has, in many cases, become more dramatic than the series itself.

In this day of network equity tags, some advertisers are reported to have given up their equity in a show to a network in return for what the sponsor and agency feel is a good time slot. In those cases, it's reported that the web bought out the advertiser's interest

Dwindling Revenues For Metro on Pre-'48s

Metro TV, about to release a group of post-'48's, has a dwindling pool of monies coming in from the sale of pre-'48s, according to Loew's second quarter report.

The report, covering a 28-week period ended March 16, '61, said that pix contracts outstanding as of March 16 provide for a gross income of about $18,660,000, to be earned after that date. That's relatively small compared to previous years, when the pre-'48 pix had just been sold.

For the 28-week period, gross tv income was $6,381,000 for the licensing of pre-'48's and shorts to tv stations, and $3,743,000 for filmed series and commercials produced for tv.

Sale of WNTA-TV to Educ'l Group For $5,750,000 Reported Imminent; WNEW-TV's 630G Bid for 'Play'

Waiting for Nielsen?

Judging from the ARB rating meters, "Waiting for Godot" was a puzzlement to the public. The Becket drama on "The Play of the Week," telecast by WNTA-TV, Newark-N.Y., failed to hit a 10 ARB average for its seven telecasts. "Godot" was one of the weakest rating entries of "P and W" cycle the past two seasons.

A characteristic of the rating curve was that the rating meters would start okay at times, but fall off drastically at midpoint.

'Dangling' Status Of WNTA Affects Billings & Shows

The up-in-the-air sale status of WNTA-TV is causing a kingsized headache for that Newark-N.Y. indie owned by National Telefilm Association.

After finally going in the black by a small margin following heavy losses spent in building the image and audience reach, station now is faced with a situation of not being able either to sign orders for summer biz, or talent for summer shows. Deals either for talent or sponsor coin are slim indeed, if the station has to tag on the "if and when" proviso.

There's no chance of altering this unsettled status unless NTA management closes a deal with one of the contending bidders, or makes a clear statement taking the station off the market. Any protracted indecision will be costly to the station in terms of biz, talent, and personnel.

For the summer, the indie outlet has a real problem in programming. Its "Play of the Week" is slated for a summer hiatus, leaving two hours nightly from Monday through Saturday to fill. Station topper Ted Cott had planned a summer-long accent on music for the station, picking up jazz, folk music festivals and other summer musical fetes for vidtape programming. All these plans are academic while the station remains on the bloc.

Further complicating the picture for management is that their need for cash, the stated reason for the sale of the station, might not be immediately satisfied even with a station sale. If outlet is sold to one of the contending commercial interests, the educational interests bidding most probably would intervene with the Federal Communications Commission. If sold to etv or commercial interests, minority holder Leonard Davis has threatened a suit against management, if two-thirds stockholder approval is not secured. That threatened suit is brushed off by management, but it does raise possible complications for quick access to cash needed by NTA.

In the interim, station personnel on all levels form a restive body, each member wondering when the axe may fall, and many members trying to make new connections.

Ziv-UA's 'Superboy'

Hollywood, April 18.

Ziv-United Artists has just completed the pilot film for a projected "Superboy" vidpix series. Juve thesp John Rockwell stars as the title character delineating the comic strip fave, Superman, as a youth.

Projected series of half-hour duration is produced by Whitney Elisworth, primed for syndication. George Blair directed the pilot episode.

Agreement in principle on the sale of WNTA-TV, Newark-N.Y. indie, to a N.Y. educational citizens group for $5,750,000 has been reached.

Howard E. Stark, station broker negotiating for the educational group, described the deal as "pretty close." He said lawyers representing both sides were in "deep negotiations" over exact terms. It's estimated that the deal should be consummated within a week or 10 days, barring any last minute hitches.

The $5,750,000, the upped offer of the educational group, represents a cash deal for National Telefilm Associates, owner of the outlet. It embraces the physical studio facilities in Newark, all broadcasting equipment of the tv outlet, and the transmitting equipment atop N.Y. Empire State Building.

NTA, in light of the expected deal, has been trying to sell off a number of WNTA-TV shows to other commercial outlets in the seven station market. "The Play of The Week," WNTA-TV's widely-acclaimed series, has won a solid offer from Metropolitan Broadcasting's WNEW-TV. Indie WNEW-TV has offered about $630,000 for the two season cycle of "Play of The Week" dramas. Additionally, WNEW-TV has made an offer of an option to take on next season's cycle of "P of W" dramas, at $10,000 per drama, which would amount to $260,000, according to present plans to vidtape 26 "P of W" outings for '61-'62.

Metropolitan's offer embraces licensing rights for the N.Y. market. Before negotiations are concluded, the deal may embrace Metropolitan's outlet in Washington, WTTG.

Other WNTA-TV vidtaped shows put on the block in the N.Y. market include David Susskind's "Open End," "Mike Wallace Interviews" and the Clay Cole record show.

Possible thorns in the educational group's deal may be the position taken by New Jersey Governor Robert B. Meyner. The New Jersey Governor has been spearheading a move by state interests to maintain a New Jersey accent to the state's sole vhf channel. It's believed, though, that the educational group will finally placate Governor Meyner. Educational citizens group, which includes John D. Rockefeller 3d, chairman of the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, says it plans to service the N.Y., New Jersey, Connecticut tri-state area.

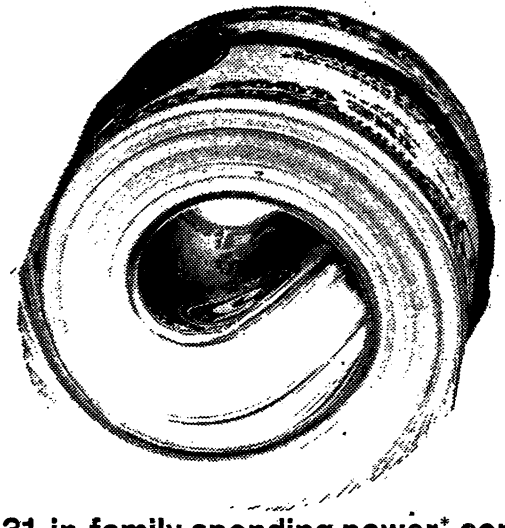
Sales Sparkle On 'King of Diamonds'

Brod Crawford starrer "King of Diamonds" is off to a flying start, coralling 63 markets in its first two weeks of open selling.

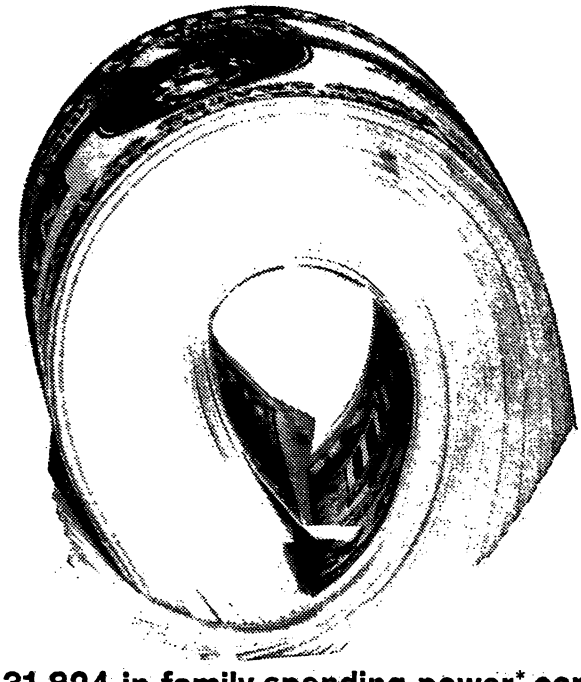
The 63-market roster includes 10 of the top 16 markets in the country, embracing N.Y., Los Angeles, Philadedphia, Detroit, Boston, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Buffalo and New Orleans.

In N.Y., Piel's Beer is sponsoring, with the same beer company picking up the new Ziv-UA entry throughout its marketing area.

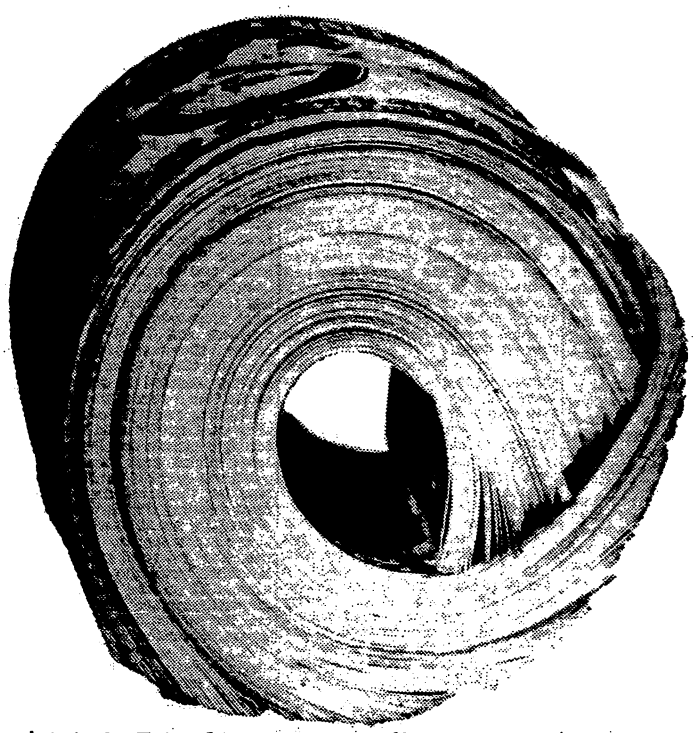
New station sales include: WHDH, Boston; KABC, Los Angeles; WJBK, Detroit; KTVK, Phoenix; KBOI, Boise, KOA, Denver, KERO, Bakersfield, Calif.; KLAS, Las Vegas; KVAL, Eugene, Ore.; KOGO,San Diego; WGR, Buffalo; WFGA, Jacksonville; WTVH, Peoria; WTVP, Decatur; WAVY, Norfolk-Portsmouth, and WCSH, Portland, Me.



$28,431 in family spending power* comes with every dollar you spend on Network Z.



$31,824 in family spending power* comes with every dollar you spend on Network Y.



$34,515 in family spending power* comes with every dollar you spend on ABC-TV.

Want more of that weekly U. S. spending money for your client? Then figure spending his television money according to these figures:

ABC's current CPM is $3.39. Net Y, $3.67. Net Z, $4.12. Meaning ABC delivers 295 homes per dollar per commercial minute. Net Y, 272 homes. Net Z, 243 homes.

Meaning $100,000 a week spent on ABC gets you 2,300,000 more sales demonstrations than you get on Net Y, 5,200,000 more than you get on Net Z. Meaning spend where the spending—and trending—is most profitable.

MAN IN SPACE
With Bill Grundy
Director: Max Morgan Witts
30 Mins., Wed., 7 p.m.
Granada TV, from Manchester

On the same day that Soviet airman Yuri Gagarin hurtled into space, Granada TV substituted this half-hour survey of the event for the advertised "Criss-Cross Quiz." Which proved that if tv isn't as fast as newsprint, it's only a few hours behind.

Lack of hard news from Moscow was effectively disguised as correspondent Ralph Parker sketched in the elation of the Reds by radiotelephone, and Alistair Cooke similarly reported on American reactions, a mixture of half-hearted congratulation and so-what. Then the program took off, under emcee Bill Grundy, to touch on the background, and the future, of space travel. Guided-missile expert John Allen explained cursorily the developments from the first three-pound projectiles to the four-ton transport provided for Gagarin, and models of Vanguard, Discoverer, and Atlas illustrated his tale.

There followed a filmed reconstruction of the kind of physical pressures likely to have been encountered by Gagarin, but this was too vague to leave much imprint. Scientist Peter Alexander made an incisive contribution, affirming that he couldn't see much military value in all this 18,000 m.p.h. hurtling but that it might be very intriguing when someone got to the moon or Mars. His views were countered, accidentally, by another expert, who thought that telescopic lenses, photographing from outer space, would make those U2 flights pretty old-hat. And the session was closed by some platitudinous words from Professor Lovell, boss of Jodrell Bank, the local headquarters for space-buyers.

In fact, Granada TV provided some adequate reportage. Whether they were wise to concentrate on topicality at the expense of a more searching interpretation of the event is a dubious point that needs to be threshed out in the higher executive echelons. The program, smoothly compiled by director Max Morgan Witts, didn't say much more than the news sheets had already screamed. Its most telling moments were those that set it in a context, rather than those that merely reiterated what had happened. Otta.

AN EVENING WITH ELLA FITZGERALD
With the Oscar Peterson Trio, Johnny Dankworth Orch, Prince Spencer, Lou Levy Quartet
Director: Mark Stuart
55 Mins., Wed., 8 p.m.
Granada TV, from Manchester

Jazz, which has a fairly sniffy reputation amongst the hoi polloi, rarely gets allotted a large slice of tv time on either British web. At least, not without some commercial trappings designed to attract the non-addict. This session with Ella Fitzgerald was thus a splendid victory over prejudice, and it should have provided a good measure of entertainment for those who listen without wiggling their ears.

Helped by cunning abstracts from designer Seamus Flannery, Mark Stuart's direction captured much of the star's heady verve and much, too, of the relaxed ambience of jazzmen jamming for their own pleasure as well as the listeners'. Maybe Miss Fitzgerald concentrated more on ballads, but this was no penance. Highspots, after a too-brief "Round Midnight," were her lingering version of "Lady Be Good," her ebullient "Mack the Knife" complete with Satchmo imitation, "Mr. Paganini," and "Just A-Sittin' and A-Rockin'." But she was throughout on her finest and most dulcet form, swinging with faultless intonation, and coming to a dazzling peak with her four-minute scat-improvisation in "Savoy."

Her appearance alone would have made the show memorable, but it was also laced with dazzling outbursts from Oscar Peterson at the piano, with Ray Brown on bass and Ed Thigpen on drums. Peterson pulled out most of his tricks, the rolling right hand, his delicate and unfamiliar blues, and some feverish fingerwork in the uptempos. He also accompanied the songstress in some items, and made way for the Lou Levy Quartet, strangely unacknowledged in the credits, for the last part of the Fitzgerald repertoire.

Chief disappointment of the show was that Johnny Dankworth's superb outfit scarcely got a look-in. This seemed a great waste of a supple and immaculate band that could have contributed much more to the proceedings. Dankworth's alto-sax was heard for a few bars in "Savoy," but, otherwise, he might just as well have stayed home. In any case, Miss Fitzgerald was far more at home with the small rhythm group, as previous waxings have indicated.

With this small blemish, "An Evening with Ella Fitzgerald" was highspot viewing, and its success might encourage Granada TV to take a chance on other upcoming U. S. visitors, such as Thelonius Monk and the Jazz Messengers. Otta.

HENRI IV
With Jean Vilar, Germaine Montero, Jean-Paul Moulinot, Christiane Minazzoli, Jean Topart
Director: Claude Berma
Writer: Luigi Pirandello
Adaptation: Benjamin Cremieux
120 Mins., Sat., 8:45 p.m.
Radiodiffusion - Television Francaise, from Paris

The Theatre National Populaire is one of three state subsidized theatrical groups in France. Headquartered in Paris for four months of the year, it spends the rest of its time in domestic and foreign travels.

For its initial television appearance the TNP presented the play that made its present director famous and which was responsible for his taking charge of the group. "Henri IV" has since become part of the TNP repertoire.

Jean Vilar played his now-famous role under the direction of tv stager, Claude Barma and the Luigi Pirandello vehicle made the transition to the broadcasting medium in fine style. The play is based on the themes of madness and reason against the background of the need for illusion by men threatened with great hurt or disillusionment.

The plot concerned a man who went mad after an injury at a masquerade party, taking on the identity of the character he was portraying, Henri IV of 11th century Germany. His well-to-do family kept the man in a castle for 20 years allowing him to indulge his delusion by having reconstructed court complete with authentic costumes. Into this group came some people who were involved in the original party plus a nephew with a psychiatrist who believed he could cure the unfortunate man.

Pirandello's play had a neat switch when it came out that the man had actually regained his senses some eight years previous, but could not bring himself to go back to life. It further developed that the original injury was not the result of an accident, but was deliberately maneuvered by another character who wanted the unfortunate's girl. Point was that even after his senses returned, the man could not go back because he felt that the world had passed him by.

Vilar had the dramatic presence and declamatory voice to keep his role alive and his segues from clarity to feigned madness were excellent. The other members of the cast were competent in this two hour show that had only a short break during a costume change.

Director Claude Barma used his cameras discreetly, though the drama sometimes lacked the scope to make sudden changes in mood acceptable. The necessity of coming in close on the principals prevented the full theatrical sweep that the play enjoyed in its stage production. But the show certainly proved the ability of tv to faithfully present a highly theatrical drama and this prestige offering was considerably aided by the 819 line screen which gave it brightness and fine definition.

Culture Minister Andre Malraux has said that tv should be used to air the nationalized theatre companies and this was a fine beginning for the TNP. Mosk.

CHARLES AZNAVOUR IN BERLIN
With Charles Aznavour, Margit Saad hostess, Annie Fratellini, Renee Gilbert, Ballet Bonafe, Trio Gerardi, Willi Hoffmann orch
Director: Sigmar Boerner
35 Mins.; Mon., 9:15 p.m.
West German TV, from Berlin

All-round French talent, Charles Aznavour, who has made a good name for himself via such pix as "Girl Hunters" and "Shoot the Pianist" was the guest on this special 35 minute revue on Berlin-TV. Although not on long enough, his appearance made it obvious why he has become such a favorite on the continent. His lung-power was not outstanding, but his delivery produced a unique charm and while the show featured Aznavour as a singer, it also touched on his other talents which include, acting, singing, writing, composing, and musicianship.

Asked by hostess, Margit Saad, what field he liked best, Aznavour replied that he liked composing and writing since they offered him the most freedom. There was some other routine talk about his career, but his four songs were the mainstays of the show, albeit a couple delivered in German didn't show off their Gallic charm to best advantage.

The show also featured Renee Gilbert and Annie Fratellini, a member of the famous Italian clown family, along with the Ballet Bonafe and the Gerardi Trio. Willi Hoffmann's orch supplied the musical backing.

It was an enjoyable show which would have been greatly improved by more of M. Aznavour. Hans.

THE ARTHUR HAYNES SHOW
With Teddy Johnson, Pearl Carr, Nicholas Parsons, Leslie Noyes; Jack Parnell Orch.
Producer: Dicky Leeman
Writer: Johnny Speight
30 Mins., Thurs., 8 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London

The Arthur Haynes' half-hour is back in the commercial tv schedules and the program will doubtless repeat its past popularity. It is not an ingenious show by any means and the format follows a wellworn convention, but, nevertheless, it serves as a useful outlet for the star's comedy talents.

Obviously and rightly, the star hogs most of the screen time and is featured in a few sketches with the in-between time filled up by Teddy Johnson and Pearl Carr in a vocal session and by the Jack Parnell Orch.

The one revue sketch that showed signs of coming to life featured Haynes as a coal delivery man who walked into a Savile Row tailors to order a new suit of clothes, much to the chagrin and embarrassment of Nicholas Parsons. Much of the humor was predictable but good for laughs, and Haynes' wide-eyed appearance added to the amusement. Parsons made an excellent foil, though could well be cast for a better role.

Initialer was slickly directed by Dickie Leeman and Henry Graveney's sets were okay. Johnny Speight's script was broad hokum but suited the comedy style of the program. It will need a brisker treatment to ensure a high position in the ratings. Myro.

PEOPLE OF NOWHERE
With Megs Jenkins, Patrick Godfrey, Alex Scott, Joan Hart, Frederic Schiller, Barry Foster, Frank Finlay, Ruth Meyers
Producer: John Crockett
Writer: James Brabazon
75 Mins., Mon., 8:45 p.m.

No complaints about lack of incident in this somber play about refugees. There was a murder in the first minute, but it hadn't much to do with the plot which was concerned with the vacillations of the Maczek family who could not be persuaded to leave a derelict West German church in which they had made a squalid home.

Reunited soon after the Allied victory in 1945, the Maczeks would have liked to return to their own Polish village, but it had been taken over by the Russians. Said Anna Maczek: "I was born a Pole. I'm not going to die a Russian."

Each of them—Anna, husband Stefan, sons Jan and Tadek, daughter Nina—dreamed of a new life in America, but Nina had a shadow on her lung and rather than leave her behind, the whole family stayed.

Fifteen years later they were still in the derelict church and the refugee camp still straggled outside its walls. Anna and Stefan had grown white-haired and listless. Jan and Tadek had developed into loutish hotheads. Nina had become the mother of a baby that died.

Originally commissioned by a Dominican Priory as a contribution to World Refugee Year, "People of Nowhere" turned a searchlight on the appalling waste of the refugee problem. The Mazceks symbolized the sad, hard-core of the camps, people who had been refugees for so long that they no longer wished to settle anywhere else, were no longer even people.

Only when son Jan killed a man in a fight and was himself fatally wounded did the Maczeks regain their status as human beings. Ironically, Jan's death was followed by one more chance of a new life—this time in Britain. But Anna and Stefan were too old and beaten to take it, although there was hope for Tadek and, perhaps, Nina.

Filmed for television in the Byzantine church of All Saints, Petersham, Surrey, "People of Nowhere" suffered from an over detached production in its early scenes. The mood was too remote; the dialogue too flat for tv.

But later it warmed into a moving plea for the forgotten flotsam of the refugee camps. Much of the power of the closing scenes was due to the acting of Megs Jenkins, who made Anna a broken Mother Courage, Barry Foster as the rebellious Tadek and Frederic Schiller, as the Maczeks' neighbor, an old Jew still dreaming of the Promised Land. Nash.

AROUND THE CORNER
With Harry Locke, Vanda Godsell, Leonard Cracknell, Keith Faulkner
Producer: Patrick Dromgoole
Writer: Barry Thomas
50 Mins., Thurs., 7:55 p.m.
BBC-TV, from Bristol

Scribe Barry Thomas has a knack for giving a competent workout to a humor situation, and he was up to form in this effort. A widowed clarinet-player (Harry Locke) brought back a showgirl (Vanda Godsell) as a prospective bride, and introduced her to his twenty-ish son and daughter. The boy (Leonard Cracknell) was somewhat disenchanted by his father's constant and baseless optimism, and was threatening to leave home. The girl (Karal Gardner) was unhealthy devoted to dad, and resented the newcomer's instrusion.

Nothing, as indicated, very startling here, but Thomas led the plot through its safe development with some charm and finesse. Chief crisis was over the daughter, whose love for the music-man stemmed from a feeling that he'd been much abused by his first wife, a smalltime nymphomaniac. Accordingly, she was concerned that he shouldn't make the same mistake again. When she interrupted an innocent embrace between the son and the woman, she sprung to the wrong conclusion.

All was resolved to smiles and clarinet-music, however, and left quite a touching residue. Vanda Godsell scored as the terper rising 40 and knowing that her face was showing signs of wear-and-tear. Harry Locke was endearingly chirpy, and Karal Gardner produced a somewhat meagre line in sullen resentment. Patrick Dromgoole's production was okay, but flat. Otta.

THE ENCYCLOPAEDIST
With Cy Grant, Elizabeth Shepherd
Producer: Hal Burton
Writer: John Mortimer
30 Mins.; Tues., 8:15 p.m.
BBC-TV from London

The clumsy title was the worst feature of this wry little cameo. It was the second of a series of five 30-minute plays written by different authors under the generic title of "They Met In a City," five differing ideas of brief encounters between a man and a woman in various parts of London.

John Mortimer's little yarn was set mainly in a room in Chelsea, authentically designed by Hal Burton. A young man from Trinidad peddling a set of encyclopaedias interested the feckless Bohemian young wife of an artist in the books and the two apparently found communication in the contents of the encyclopaedias. But the ironic twist was that with new found knowledge she found herself bored with her husband, and caught up with a lover. As a result when the salesman went back to deliver the full set he found that the sample books were being put to such debased purposes as drawing books for the kids, doorstops and so on. Disgusted and disappointed he walked out of the apartment, with yet another human contact gone haywire.

John Mortimer's dialog was always fresh, wryly humorous and yet provocative. There was crisp direction by Hal Burton of the duo who formed the cast. Cy Grant, better known on tv as a calypso singer, revealed himself as a personable actor and also fitted in a lively ditty on the guitar. Elizabeth Shepherd, as the girl, had to pack many differing moods into the limited compass of 30 minutes and she handled her chore excellently, even a brief but tricky scene of tipsiness.

This was only a fragment of a play but it again proved that the author has a subtle and offbeat insight into human nature, a passion for the problems of communication between people and a slick mastery of pithy, forceful dialog. Rich.

Foreign TV Followup

Armchair Theatre

Specially written for ABC-TV's Armchair Theatre series, Alun Owen's "The Ways of Love," was an interesting character study of a young Welsh poet ready for apparent corruption by the sweet smell of success.

The poet, astutely portrayed by Kenneth Haigh, had written a best-selling novel which was believed to be largely autobiographical and which described his torrid romance with an unknown girl. He wrote the novel he explained, so as to enable him to continue with his poetry and draw attention to his work and himself as a serious writer.

The young poet was brought to London for press and tv interviews and was also feted at cocktaileries where eager film producers competed for the screen rights. At first he gave the impression of being rather bewildered by it all but there was the gradual and subtle change in his demeanor. He not only enjoyed success but even more so the rewards that it might bring. This attitude was in striking contrast to that of his former army buddy and still close friend, Donald Houston, a bright young newspaper man who preferred to stick to his socialist principals rather than take a well paid columnist's job on a "capitalist" newspaper.

Alun Owen, recently voted tv's top playwright, is a sound and competent craftsman. He writes good, clear, pungent dialog and draws his characters clearly and firmly. Though these characteristics were in evidence in "The Ways of Love" there was hardly enough substance in the plot.

Under Sydney Newman's production banner, William T. Kotcheff did a fine concise job of directing, admirably aided by a firstrate cast which also included Zena Walker, Elvi Hale, Peter Halliday and Elwyn Brook-Jones. Myro.

Concentrate on Cuba, So 'Concentration' Delayed

"Concentration," the new nighttime version on NBC-TV, didn't get off as expected on Monday (17) night. The network decided to preempt the 9:30-10 preem to make room for a news special.

News stanza followed the invasion that morning of Cuba by revolutionary forces. Gulf, which has a running deal with NBC-TV to sponsor all specials on hard-breaking news stories, underwrote the Frank McGee-narrated Cuba show. "Concentration's" start was delayed a week.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Omnibus

As its closing program of the season, "Omnibus" on NBC-TV Sunday (13) played it "cute"—perhaps a bit overly-cute—in offering a Calypso-tempoed open-end gabfest pertaining to the Western Hemisphere's prospects for the next decade. There was nothing particularly innovating in the integration of entertainment segments (a Calypso intro for each of the pundits; Western Hemisphere dances; a study of kids at play spanning Argentine to Canada); they neither added nor detracted from the basic premise of the program—to provide a learned prognosis for the coming decade.

When it got down to the business at hand, this "Omnibus" installment proved eminently worthwhile in defining the guideposts and the blueprints for the next 10 years toward hemispheric advancement in the fields of government, economics, education, sociology and culture.

Of the five Latino-U. S.-Canadian spokesmen introduced by host Alistair Cooke and Calypso singer Ruppert Grant, it remained for Harvard's professor of government, Samuel Hutchinson Beer, and Colombia's Dr. German Arciniegasto to best pinpoint and summarize the needs, the hopes and the aspirations toward the creation by '71 of a United Americas in the preservation of historic cultures and the fullest development of material and natural resources.

Once again, as it goes off for its ninth summer hiatus, the question of "Omnibus" returning in the fall for another go-round is strictly conjectural, depending on sponsor support. It remains a sad commentary on American society that such a worthwhile enterprise, representing imaginative tv in full bloom, is continually left to the whims and uncertainties of Madison Ave.

The Play of The Week

"Wingless Victory," the current outing of "The Play of the Week," is both an interesting and a trying drama. The same descriptive qualities of interesting and trying prevails in the casting of Hugh O'Brian, of "Wyatt Earp" fame, as a Salem seafarer of the 19th Century. O'Brian's name may have coralled some viewers for WNTA-TV, the Newark-N.Y. indie, but his playing of the role lacked nuances and inner conviction.

The Maxwell Anderson drama, done on Broadway about 25 years ago, is a difficult piece in many respects. Eartha Kitt, however, in the other principal role, that of a Malayan princess, had a much better time of it. She caught the tragedy of the piece, rendered greater meaning to Anderson's free verse, and projected a wider range of feelings. For all its mannered accents, her role had conviction.

The central theme of the drama, although laid in the 1800's, had a very current ring. It dealt with the marriage of a white man and a colored girl, their ostracism by the community, their blind faith in love amid hate and prejudice and their final undoing. Some of the conceits in the drama bordered on the pretentious. Yet there were golden nuggets of poetry that, on occasion, made the lines soar.

Other members of the cast rendered their roles ably. They included Tim O'Connor, Cathleen Nesbitt, Michael Tolan and Barbara Lord.

Paul Nickell's direction was okay. Music used for the drama was much too obvious and obtrusive. Horo.

American Musical Theatre

Blossom Seeley projected her seasoned showmanship in a fleeting half-hour on Jim Morske invariably excellent Sunday midday WCBS-TVer. Himself a sympatico conferencier, he skillfully guided his guest in a recap of her evolution from San Francisco, where Sid Grauman dubbed her "little Blossom"—the name stuck—into the Winter Garden shows with Jolson, Brice & King, Clifton Webb, Vernon Castle et al, Ray Bloch, maestroing the CBS orchestra, got no cramp in the baton hand because Miss Seeley's spontaneous scat-chorus ad lib singing almost completely bypassed the AFMers although, for the finale, they gave out with "Teasin' Rag." This tune dates back perhaps 50 years to the old Tait's-on-the-Beach, Frisco, she explained, and she may well catapult it into revival because of Miss Seeley's dynamic interpretation. It paralleled her "Toddlin' The Todelo" when she was on a recent Ed Sullivan show.

Without talking down to the highschool students who constitute the audiences of this CBS series, done on videotape in conjunction with the N. Y. Board of Education, the kids are showwise. In turn, Miss Seeley utilized the timeless songs to bridge the gap of time. She almost threw away too much; the manner in which her spontaneous fingersnapping (an early-century "beat") was compensation for the "one-piece orchestra" (the piano player); how the Winter Garden first introduced the runway for the showgirl parades (later copied by burlesque) but, there again, she credited Grauman with a variation of the hard-plank "runway" when he gave tentshows following the San Francisco fire, as the earthquake is still euphemistically called by the locals.

There were references to Lew Fields, father of Dorothy, Herbert and Joe. Frances White, and eventually the focus was on Rube Marquard, the southpaw pitcher, and eventually her late husband, Benny Fields. She paid both fine tributes, notably Fields as a pioneer crooner "who had heart and who had hurt, because he had them both," but curiously omitted mentioning she had been married to both. Also, neither she or Morske keynoted the whyfore of "Somebody Loves Me," which was the title of the Paramount biopic of the career of Seeley & Fields, with Betty Hutton as Miss Seeley.

It was a fast 30 minutes and the kids out front knew they were facing a real professional. Morske did mention that his guest was working on her autobiography. She looked as fetching as her song stylings, of which there were many. Abel.

NBC White Paper (#5)

The "Anatomy of a Hospital" was explored on NBC-TV's "White Paper" Sunday night (16) with an impact that left the viewer disheartened and disconsolate—not because "White Paper" failed to accomplish its mission (which, in fact, it succeeded in doing all too well), but for its depressing revelations. It was a sad commentary on an otherwise affluent society and a civilized body politic that permits such intolerable conditions to exist in city hospitals.

Dissecting, in this instance, the Cambridge (Mass.) City Hospital as typical of conditions that prevail, "Anatomy" cut into heart of the continuing struggle that goes on for sufficient funds, space, facilities and other vital services to ease the burden of the intern and the resident doctor (of which there is always a shortage) subjected to 120-hour work weeks in trying to administer to ward cases (representing 60% of Cambridge City's total patients load). It's an endless battle against odds and a succession of crises in trying to properly train apprentices while "doing the best with what we've got." It means cutting corners, settling for a $2,500,000 city appropriation when $3,000,000 is the minimum requirement to do the job passably. As a study in frustration it was high drama. "White Paper" made no effort to soften the indictment; narrator Chet Huntley let the staff and patients tell the "editorial."

It was particularly revealing in detailing the plight of the aged in their total inability to cope with high medical expenses while existing on social security. Rose.

CBS Reports

"Carl Sandburg at Gettysburg" was a relatively unpretentious installment of "CBS Reports," amounting to little more than an interview with a Civil War historian on location. Not what transpired verbally, but rather the appropriateness of framing the well-known Lincoln scholar in the Gettysburg setting for the Civil War centennial, made the outing worthy of prime time slotting.

With Sandburg, colorful talker that he is, an interview is never commonplace, and Howard K. Smith had no trouble whatever drawing him out with an obviously prepared roster of questions.

TONY AWARD CEREMONIES
With Phil Silvers, emcee; Meyer Davis Orch, others Producer: Dan Gallagher
Director: Ray Abel .. ..
Writer: John Mosedale
60 Mins., Sun. (16), 11:15 p.m.
WCBS-TV, N. Y.

Phil Silvers didn't win a "Tony" Sunday night (16) but he did run away with the show. His humorous emceeing of the American Theatre Wing's annual Antoinette Perry ("Tony") Awards presentation, carried for the third consecutive year over WCBS-TV, elevated the affair from just a prize-giving session to one that was nicely spiced with laughs and consequently fairly entertaining.

The program, moving at a comfortable pace, covered the presentation of 21 legit awards during its running time of one hour. Some of the winners weren't on hand to personally accept their awards but, as usual, there were enough top theatre names on view to warrant celeb-ogler attention. This was insured, as in the past, by having each award presented by a different leading actor or actress.

There was little time lost in the generally brief acceptance speeches by the award-winners. The gabbing, wisely enough, was left mostly to Silvers, whose savvy handling of the proceedings ranged from tradey quips to others easily within the grasp of those not in the biz. As is standard in legit today, Broadway producer David Merrick was the subject of some ribbing, while one of Silvers' funniest bits involved his reference to the appearance of Zero Mostel, male dramatic star winner.

Silvers, incidentally, was a nominee in the male musical star category for his role in "Do Re Mi." He lost out to "Camelot" costar Richard Burton, who, in accepting the award, apologized to the losers (Silvers and Maurice Evans of "Tenderloin") and then made the obscure comment that this was his last chance to win whereas Evans, in particular, would have other opportunities.

Acceptance of some of the awards by substitutes was the source of occasional slipups, beginning with the failure of an off-camera commentator or any of the program's participants to identify Lillian Gish, who accepted Coleen Dewhurst's award in the feature or supporting actress division for her performance in "All the Way Home," in which Miss Gish also appears.

The costume designer (play) award to Motley, the professional tag used by Elizabeth Montgomery, had to be accepted by Silvers when nobody appeared on stage to claim the silver medallion. And, when Julie Andrews, costarring with Burton in "Camelot," trekked to the stage to accept the award for the musical's costume designs by Tony Duquette and Adrian, she was identified by the commentator as the star of "My Fair Lady," which she hasn't been for a few years.

Some of those accepting awards got in a few laugh lines and Fredric March, who made the last two presentations, objected to the award-winners rushing to the stage and requested those whose names he called to walk up to the platform slowly. This might have been a deliberate delaying tactic since the show was running a little ahead of the time allotted to it.

Oscarcast Itself Rates No Oscar; But Bob Hope a Barbed 'Critic'

By GENE ARNEEL

Conferring the Order of Oscar upon the Academy Awards television show itself must remain for the future; not now. Latest segment in the long-running series adhered to the same script that's been in use for too many years. Here are the virtues first: Monday's (17) exposure was well organized, focused on many top names of Hollywood show business, moved at a good clip despite the marathon running time, had lots of funnies by emcee Bob Hope, and other entertainment plus emotional values. Mere fact that the show, with all its complexities, was done with smoothness is a major credit for producer Arthur Freed, director Vincente Minelli and ABC-TV's Richard Dunlap.

But the constant (over the years) viewer and reviewer has become fidgety about the formula. With so much time, talent and sponsor money available, some departures from program concept would be most welcome. Newest version of the film colony's big night had an abundance of almost everything except imagination.

Armed with a nifty script and with the ability to make with the sharp ad libs, Hope proved himself the old master. He kept the outing lively all the way, frequently with surprisingly cutting comments on the modern era screen material and character portrayals. In referring to the cinema gals of late, using nice language but nonetheless meaning prosties, nymphos, etc., he cracked: "Put all these girls together—does that spell Sarah Lee cookies to you?" Baking outfit was co-sponsor.

Hope sized up the nominated pictures thus: "'Never On Sunday,' a Greek coffee break; 'The Apartment,' the story of Frank Sinatra; 'Exodus,' the Republican Party; 'Elmer Gantry,' fun in an organ loft, and 'Sons and Lovers,' the Crosby family."

When a statuette recipient became overly involved in an acceptance speech, Hope quipped, "He must have been my diction instructor."

Comedian wouldn't let the Acad sweepstakes escape his barbs and these seemed especially fitting this year. "The winners are those who have the best pressagents." he observed. Also said he noticed his maid wearing a Chill Wills button.

Airer was fine musically, starting off with a medley of hit tunes from past pictures with Andre Previn contributing with familiar competence. Backing throughout was top-notch. Best song, "Never on Sunday," was given a lusty, winning rendition by Connie Francis. Vic Damone scored with "Might As Well Be Spring" and a few others. Sarah Vaughan did "Far Away Part of Town" with genuine feeling, the Hi-Los got "Facts of Life" across well, Janet Morgan was fine with "Second Time Around." Juliet Prowse was in there pitching with savvy choreography in a "Fever" number.

Janet Leigh, Tony Curtis and Danny Kaye got together in a "Triplets" gag routine which didn't come off too well.

The Oscar winners performed admirably for the most part—that is, they were on and off pronto and with acceptance words that seemed devoid of phonyness. A sentimental journey for the crowd at the Santa Monica Auditorium was Elizabeth Taylor's trek to the stage aided by Eddie Fisher. She got the heftiest mitting, with Burt

NEW WEST SIDE STORY
(Expedition: N. Y.)
With Carol Lawrence, Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, others
Exec. Producer: A. L. Hollander Jr.
Producer: Larry Johnson
Director: Lou Volpicelli
Writer: Mary Dornheim
30 Mins., Tues., 7 p.m.
WABC-TV, N.Y.

In this local breakaway from ABC-TV's "Expedition" series, WABC-TV managed a graphic visualization of the Lincoln Centre for the Performing Arts, New York's $142,000,000 cultural project that's under construction on the West Side and is scheduled for completion in the mid-sixties.

Actress-dancer Carol Lawrence, who had star billing in the legit-musical, "West Side Story," was a bright and effusive stewardess on the tour of something to be, and gave the pubservice seg a particularly strong sendoff with a terp routine on the cement stage of the Philharmonic Hall now under construction. Solid direction by Lou Volpicelli and an effective script by Mary Dornheim provided good support for the terper's enthusiasm.

Show was additionally sparked by musical presentations from the Metropolitan Opera Guild Group and the Julliard Woodwind quint, which were performing in the interests of the Centre. Centre prexy, Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, was interviewed, and Miss Lawrence used an architect's model and an exhibit of the New York Library's theatre collection (which will be moved to the Centre) to sketch a clear picture of the project's scope. Bill.

PROCTER & GAMBLE

(Benton & Bowles)

Focus of this second NBC-TV report on President John F. Kennedy really was on his attractive wife. It may not have been planned that way, as she came on for a White House interview at the latter part of the hour show, but that's how it worked out.

Mrs. Kennedy, for about 15 minutes, spoke about her role as wife of the president, as a mother, as the First Lady of the land. It was an engaging, session, reflecting the tremors of a young lady in an awesome post, picturing some of her aspirations, and some of her delights. NBC's White House correspondent, Sander Vanocur, handled the interview gently.

First 30 minutes of the show were virtually a color story on how the President functions as the nation's chief executive. There was no hard news, but that didn't rob the half-hour of its intriguing moments. In a relaxed atmosphere, Kennedy went over a group of still pictures of his official government family. He told how he got to know the various men, what functions they performed and his own method of administration. The run-

Benny On Paar & Sullivan

An old pro, Jack Benny, quite evidently no fair-weather friend either to Jack Paar and/or Ed Sullivan, told off Paar on the latter's NBC-TVer last week in a savvy manner. To Paar's credit he took it courageously and even laughingly acquiesced to his guest's insistence that he "apologize right here and now." Thus should end l'affaire Paar-Sullivan.

Once again it revived an issue which should have remained largely an intratrade affair although, as an incidental, NBC spokesman had taken exception to a VARIETY editorial to that effect. The NBC stance was that VARIETY, of all media, with its accent on showmanship, should have endorsed this extra excitement for the video medium instead of castigating it.

Fact was, in truth, that Benny and Paar made capital of the "feud." Benny's kidding-on-the-square, while a laughing matter, was not to be lightly dismissed. He insisted a pork-on-the-barrel $5 payment from Paar so that he thus established another first—the "highest-priced guest on a Paar show," viz, $325 as against the AFTRA $320 minimum. Affectionately chiding Paar's sentimentality ("you even cry at card tricks") and exposing the fact that Paar had confessed personal regret to Benny off-camera, the comedian brought it all out into the open. He discarded Paar's elaborate salute as having been given his "first big chance" by Benny and, in turn, the latter paid tribute to Sullivan for having given him (Benny) his first big radio opportunity. Withal, it was a socko evening, not forgetting the poised and talented Jean Kerr's entr'acte interview. Abel.

Very Truly Yours

With "National Letter Writing Week" only six months off (don't be a last-minute stamp-buyer!), this may be as good a time as any to correct a couple of smart-alecky misconceptions about a broadcaster's attitude toward the mail it receives from viewers.

One of the theories holds that a network couldn't care less about any letter-writer's feelings about anything, and that we answer such mail either out of politeness or out of our conviction that a busy postman is a happy postman.

At the other extreme is the contention that even a single note of praise can zoom our psyche right into orbit, and an isolated message of disapproval plunge us into Stygian gloom.

Both views—like the Yankee Stadium infield in the wintertime—are baseless.

We think that just about anyone who takes the time and trouble to write to a network deserves a reply—whether the viewer's note is an inquiry on the color of an Arlene Francis gown; a compliment on one of our shows; or an "authoritative" blast at the quality of all TV from a man who's proud to say he's never owned a set.

The overwhelming majority of letters reaching our individual shows and mail center each year are intelligent and articulate — and that goes even for the occasional beef.

We don't get euphoric over a eulogy, and we don't cringe before a critique. We do learn things from many of the correspondents, and we like to think we are somewhat helpful in the messages sent out in reply.

Few outsiders realize, for example, that we get about 5,000 requests per year for technical information on the TV industry itself. Indeed, we sometimes get the feeling that if we didn't limit the length of our replies to such letters, we'd be writing term papers for half the students in the United States. Not long ago, one eager scholar asked us to send him as much information as possible "on the last 100 years of television" (and we'll bet you thought it all started with Berle).

Not all the mail we get is really meant for us in the first place. There are always a few letters panning shows that were carried by another network. We confess to forwarding these to their proper destinations with a very minimum of delay or melancholy.

but occasionally even a confirmed NBC follower will reach us with a complaint that should have been addressed to his local NBC affiliate rather than the network itself.

He may write, for example, that a certain TV drama — which we may have scheduled in the latter part of the evening — was much too adult for the early period when he saw it locally; or that the NBC documentary to which he'd been looking forward had unaccountably been replaced by a crime show in which he had no interest.

In these cases, we try to make it clear that a network cannot tell any of its affiliates what to program at any given time, and that it would be wise for the viewer to direct his remarks to the affiliate involved.

Among the most gratifying of messages — naturally — are the notes from viewers whose only aim is to hand us a compliment or a bit of constructive advice. When a busy housewife (excuse the redundancy) takes the initiative of explaining to Dave Garroway how to hold a stick of writing-chalk to prevent squeaking — man, that's solicitude!

Which reminds us that it was on the "Garroway Today Show"—just two months ago tomorrow—that singer-composer Oscar Brown, Jr.'s first appearance drew more than 4,000 letters of unbridled praise, a figure unprecedented for any performer in the program's nine-year history.

Another happy deluge of mail was that which greeted the debut of our "Sing Along with Mitch" clambake earlier this year. More than 11,500 letters poured in after the first two performances, a response figuring strongly in the decision to guarantee the show a weekly, full-hour slot on our forthcoming fall schedule.

Sometimes, however, the correspondence from viewers is a bit on the mystifying side. During our coverage of last year's political conventions and Presidential campaigns, for example, the letters charging us with favoring the Democrats were matched in number by those accusing us of leaning toward the Republicans. We even had a few complaints that we were too darned neutral.

Experience has taught us never to be too startled by the comments and requests coming to our attention. A few of the more unusual correspondents:

The Pennsylvania schoolgirl who objected to hearing a character in "The Outlaws" say, "I ain't goin'." She pointed out that even her fellow fourth-graders at school speak better English than that.

The woman from Texas who wrote, "Could more baby girls be born to the women on your stories? They always have boys, boys, boys!"

The chap from Indiana who wondered if he could get work on a TV program advertising razors or blades. "I have a ten-week-old beard," he said, "and I'm very proud of it. But I'm ready to shave it off any time, if the right offer comes along."

If the above excerpts don't represent the most vital letters in our files, they do have an ingenuous charm we can't help but admire.

Very few of the messages we get are not stimulating. In fact, communications from viewers can be one of many helpful guides in current and future programming. For if the TV screen is our way of visiting the public's living rooms, then the mail service is the public's way of joining us in the conference rooms.

Now, let's get back to that fellow from Indiana who's proud of his ten-week-old beard...

McCann's $100,000,000 TV Budget With $15,000,000 Going to Specials —On Other Madison Ave. Fronts

By BILL GREELEY

The 1961-'62 television season may well go down as the year of the hour and the scatter buy, but at least McCann-Erickson clients will be getting a fair shake in the way of specials.

Out of a total video budget in excess of $100,000,000, McCann will be spending between $13,000,000 and $15,000,000 on specials, according to C. Terrence Clyne, agency's broadcast topper. The total tv budget represents a new high for the agency, and the budget for specials is an increase of from two to $4,000,000 over this season.

Foremost of McCann's special clients is Westinghouse, which is mapping an $8,000,000 spread over the three networks with 18 shows covering a 52-week period.

Bell & Howell will be back this year with its backroll for ABC-TV's pubservice prime-timer, "Close Up." Sponsorship will cover 20 or 22 outings.

Also contemplated are a couple of specials for Buick and Coca-Cola, but these are in the early blueprint stage.

Otherwise, agency's clients are pretty much playing the standard-fare game, with possibly more attention to alternate than scatter buys in accord with the thinking of Clyne & Co. that sponsor identity still means something.

National Biscuit is pacted for an alternate hour of "Wagon Train" again, and an alternate half of "Rawhide." Besides the special notions, Polk is picking up an alternate half of the Mitch Miller singsong, and is still shopping for another alternate buy.

Helene Curtis, which dropped out of "Tell the Truth" and "Witness" this season, is looking around for two alternate halves. McCann's Colgate biz will bankroll an alternate half of "Twilight Zone." And there's a bag full of Derby Foods loot available for the web that comes up with a satisfactory alternate half hour.

Liggett & Myers, like the other cig firms, is the McCann client in for hour-show participations on NBC and CBS, as outlined in Variety last week.

Partipations — but daytime — also are in order for Corn Products, Nestle, Swift and U. S. Borax (latter continues with "Death Valley Days").

Esso is sticking with its local news buys for "Esso Reporter," and will be extending the markets as Humble Oil moves to national distribution.

Talk, Talk, Talk

From the podium beat:

Ewald Turner, prexy elect, National Education Assn., at "Expedition" awards luncheon in Washington, D. C.: "To the television people here today, I say only this: if you don't do your job of getting across the information and understanding we need today, all of your ratings and all of your extra profits won't mean a thing. Your shiny skyscrapers and your big transmittal towers will be crumbled in the nuclear dust along with the rest of civilization."

Dr. J. Cloyd Miller, prexy, New Mexico Western College and chairman of "Expedition" educational advisory council for the awards: "I want to give you one more statistic. You may not know it, but all three networks combined in the 39 weeks of the 1960-61 television season will produce about 320 hours of educational, correction and education programs in prime evening time—that includes newscasts. Your affiliated stations, in producing monthly local shows in conjunction with the ABC-TV network web series, "Expedition", will have produced 305 half-hours of network programs plus another 209 half-hours of educational film. You can be very, very proud of your station . . ."

John B. Boyd, veepee and creative director, Compton Advertising, at luncheon speech slated for session of the Paterson, N. J. Rotary Club: "As I say, we in advertising are not overly self-conscious about the attacks leveled at advertising itself. Medicine was once considered witchcraft. But it survived. Life insurance survived the jokes about "you've got to die to win." Both medicine and life insurance perform important functions. And so does advertising."

Up and down: Richard King, with the agency for four years in tv casting and production, has been named radio-tv director of Kastor, Hilton, Chesley, Clifford & Atherton. He succeeds Jules Bundgus, resigned.

Alan Baker, formerly with Rogers & Cowan, has been named public relations director for the first International Assembly of the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences.

Curtis Berrien, formerly with Wm. Esty, is now veepee and creative director of Lennen & Newell, a newly-created post.

James H. Cobb, formerly with Fletcher, Richards, Calkins & Holden, has been named veepee and manager of the McCann-Marschalk Miami office.

FTC Head Sez He Ain't Kidding About False Adv.

Washington, April 18.

"Heavier, faster guns" are being mounted by the Federal Trade Commission against false advertising over radio-television and other media.

This is the ominous word passed along by newly-installed FTC chairman Paul Rand Dixon, in one of his first major policy announcements.

Speaking to the Assn. of National Advertisers confab here, the former Senate anti-trust subcommittee counsel went out of his way to quash reports by "once-overlightly experts" that he regarded misleading blurbs as a minor evil.

"False advertising," he averred, "became a monopolistic weapon as vicious as any other."

The improved arsenal Dixon said would be brought to bear on wayward advertisers will consist of expedition of hearings and pinpointing of responsibility for each case on a single FTC staffer.

Also, Dixon said he wanted power to issue temporary restraining orders to stop false advertising practices immediately instead of at the end of the consent order process.

In obvious reference to the regime of his GOP predecessors, Dixon said he would not put up with past FTC tendencies to allow a misleading ad practice to "run its merry course until it dies of exhaustion and is buried by its sponsors."

Chi Ice Hockey Coin

Chicago, April 18.

Ice hockey, which hasn't been televised in Chi for several years, plucked a couple of fast sponsors in Hamm's Beer and Phillip Morris ciggies when the local Blackhawks qualified for the Stanley Cup playoffs. On short notice, WGN-TV arranged to do remote pickups of the away-from-home games, in Detroit.

The Trendex for last Wednesday's (12) game shows that there's quite an audience for hockey when you've got a championship contender. Occupying the prime time hours from 7-9:30 p.m., the game topped all network fare with a 21.1 average. NBC clocked 17.7, ABC 16.0 and CBS 9.7 for the period that evening.

With the Station Reps

Adam Young Inc. exec veepee James F. O'Grady has filed a semi-annual report with Young stations and branch offices on trends in radio and tv spot buying.

Some highlights: Summer advertisers are heavy buyers of weekend radio and Friday night driving times. Such advertiser categories as soft drinks, beers, lotions and automotive will be particularly active in weekend radio this summer, among them: Eno, Noxzema and Good Humor.

Beer and soft drinks, formerly principally summer promoters, are tending to spread schedules through the year, but not at the expense of strong summer pitches.

Regional advertisers — coffees, beers and breads — are using more radio. One reason is the diminishing of good tv availabilities.

General Mills' Cheerios is in radio for the first time, and there'll be more cereals on the air soon.

Fels is still the only major soap in radio. There's a virtual boycott by P&G, Lever and Colgate.

More advertisers are using radio to pitch teenagers with a number of commercials being designed to appeal to them. Another is coming out of mags. Categories include hair tonics and lotions and one of the big companies is Gillette.

Secondary markets for spot radio have virtually dried up. This spring it's a rare radio campaign that goes into more than 15 top markets.

In television, trend to minutes continues. All the big soaps, particularly, want minutes, as do cold tablets. Night times are preferred, and are in short supply.

Aside from oils, coffees, cigarets and beers, there's not much demand for IDs.

Cupcakes and novelty cake divisions of bread companies are now heavy in kidvideo.

There's a definite trend of spot campaigners to late-night shows because of increased audience stability in this time segment during the summertime.

Briefs: WOW-TV, Denver; another NBC Spot Sales client forced to move, is switching to Blair-TV, effective July 16 . . . Robert Eastman reppery has carded WSAI, Cincinnati . . . H. Victor Hollingshead, formerly media director of Grant Advertising's Detroit office, has joined Geyer, Morey, Madden & Ballard as associate media director of the Detroit office.

VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week five different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

(*) ARB's Nov.-Dec. 1960 survey covered a multi-week period. Syndicated shows sharing one of the weeks with an alternating or special program could not be properly judged for comparative performance. Therefore, Nov.-Dec. data will be limited to those syndicated shows which played in all weeks.

OUTSTANI TELEVIS

CBS 1960 OLYMPIC COVERAGE (WINTER AND SUMMER)

CBS REPORTS

G-E COLLEGE BOWL

DING SION

For more than twenty years the annual George Foster Peabody Awards have paid tribute to the conscience and ability of the nation's broadcasters in discharging their public responsibility. This year's Peabody jury has just singled out the CBS Television Network for five awards in network television. It thus confirms the judgment of millions of Americans that we are providing not only the programs they enjoy most, but those that are most essential to a greater understanding of the events and issues of our time.

CBS TELEVISION NETWORK

THE FABULOUS FIFTIES

KENNEDY-NIXON DEBATES

"OUTSTANDING CONTRIBUTION TO INTERNATIONAL UNDERSTANDING: CBS 1960 Olympic Coverage . . . was the outstanding presentation in all 35 years of broadcast time. Technical problems were surmounted with stunning ingenuity. For the Winter Games at Squaw Valley, equipment was brought in by toboggan and cameras were carried up icy slopes on the backs of cameramen. For the Summer Games at Rome, the events were brought to the American public (often on the same day they took place) through tape, split-second transatlantic jet schedules... As a result, the American audience participated Winter and Summer in a great international undertaking. Such a television achievement is clearly an outstanding contribution to international understanding . . ."

"OUTSTANDING TELEVISION ENTERTAINMENT: The Fabulous Fifties combined style, humor and imagination. It was rich in touches of quality showmanship and equally rich in the memories of a decade which it revived. In recognition, the Television Award for Entertainment is presented to The Fabulous Fifties with a special word of praise for producer Leland Hayward, and the top talent which appeared in this memorable entertainment special."

"OUTSTANDING TELEVISION PUBLIC SERVICE: CBS Reports. This Award cites, in particular, the "Harvest of Shame"; commends David Lowe as producer of this unflinching account of how the migrant worker lives in America, and Fred Friendly, executive producer; and carries a special Citation to William S. Paley, Chairman of the Board of the Columbia Broadcasting System, for his valor and vision in espousing the cause of public enlightenment by underwriting these documentary studies of the world of reality and airing them in the face of formidable opposition from the competing world of unreality."

"OUTSTANDING TELEVISION YOUTH PROGRAM: G-E College Bowl. Through contests between two teams of students, G-E College Bowl helps to focus the nation's attention on the intellectual abilities and achievements of college students. The competition emphasized quick recall of specific facts and therein lies its appeal which is illuminating, educational, entertaining and exciting. The program provides weekly scholarship grants to colleges and universities. Allen Ludden as moderator deserves special mention for his excellent work . . ."

"SPECIAL AWARD FOR OUTSTANDING PUBLIC SERVICE: Dr. Frank Stanton, CBS. 'The Great Debates' between the Presidential candidates are recognized as conceivably the most important service ever performed by Broadcasting and one that may become a permanent part of our political heritage. The Award goes to Dr. Frank Stanton for his initiative... and his courageous leadership in bringing about the Joint Resolution of Congress which made the debates possible."

VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top six syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week five different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

skill honed, but today's menage is unrevealed.

But her softly persuasive writing which made her a success in radio, with seeming ease, and carried her into the successor medium of tv, shows in the text. It breezes along with a chuckle. It is modest, too, to like Gertrude Berg and to admire above all the fundamental character and personality which underlies her makebelieve.

There is, of course, today's wonder at how remarkably simple it is now to "crash" broadcasting. With zero for experience, on single ad-lib, she vaulted both CBS and NBC, though CBS had second thoughts and NBC did not, no fools they.

The story (278 pp) terminates with Miss Berg achieving stardom in legit. Again there is an account of nerves and prayers but almost devine demonstration of success. A thousand miles from the beatniks and the Actors Studio, Mrs. Berg has the supreme gift of being herself, a good, sturdy commodity in a variety of media for 40-odd years. She conveys to the reader some of her future plans, including an air series with Sir Cedric Hardwicke. He is plainly a favorite of hers. She quotes his explanations of how he became Sir Cedric in his native Britain. They needed a theatrical knight that year who was hetrosexual!

The memoirs (no index) contain interesting reminders of some of the young actors and actresses who were part of radio's "Rise of the Goldbergs," including the Broadway actor-director Alfred Ryder. There are also samples of the kind of dialog. Mrs. Berg wrote for herself and her cast. Even over the span of decades these lines ring true as Bronx idiom, as readily recognizable characterization, and as the reason for the success. It takes nothing away from the actress to say that she was made by her alter ego, the author.

Wm. Firman's Exec Post In CBS Radio Sales

Series of shifts in the CBS Radio sales setup have resulted from the appointment of William S. Firman to the new post of assistant general sales manager under g.s.m. Ben Lochbridge. Firman has been the web's eastern sales manager.

Succeeding him in that post is Cornelius V. S. (Neil) Knox Jr., who's been sales manager of the web's Detroit office since '56. Succeeding Knox in Detroit is Wayne Wilcox, who has been an account exec there.

Craig Rogers, head of the web's Coast sales operation in Los Angeles, moves to N.Y. with the Gotham sales staff, while George H. Gallup, a Gotham account exec for the past three years, moves to the Coast to become the new Pacific Coast sales manager.

'Who, Me?'

which commercial vhf channel should be shifted to educational purposes?

In N. Y., the focus is on WNTA-TV, although the terms of reference for the broad inquiry involves all the stations. Whatever merits the alternative service programming approach may have — and even the pity of such a commercial tv operation fading—the FCC has before it a sale situation with a substantial educational tv money offer. The background of FCC chairman Newton N. Minow has been in educational tv, and reports from Washington leave little doubt where he leans in the tv-less N. Y. and Los Angeles situations.

In light of Minow's background, the "Who Me?" game also can be played by the current WNTA-TV owners and prospective commercial buyers. If the station is sold away from etv presumably at a higher price, what will be the position of Minow & Co., in light of the inquiry.

In the Kennedy-Minow era, the N. Y., Los Angeles etv situation may just be a curtain raiser for things to come in cities between the populous metropolitan coastal areas. Ergo, the growing popularity prospects oft he new "Who Me?" game.

New Orleans—Arthur D. Cloud Jr., Chicago advertising agency exec, who was recently named general manager of WYES-TV, the greater New Orleans educational tv station, will assume his new duties today (19), succeeding Duff Browne, who resigned last December. Cloud leaves the position of director of radio-tv for the Chicago office of Campbell-Mithun ad agency. He is a native of Chicago, but is no stranger here. Cloud was employed by the Fitzgerald advertising agency in New Orleans

TV Panacea—'30 Lashes At Sunrise'

Chicago, April 18.

The heroes in tv and the heroes of tv bear a striking resemblance under the skin, according to Daily News telecritic Terry Turner. Both have lost their sense of values and have the same singular goal—to make money. The private eye hero "will hire out to anyone who will pay the price," and the network exec hero sells airtime by the same principle.

What he deplores, he told the Chi chapter of American Women in Radio & TV last week, is that these are the values that television is handing down to our younger generations: "To drive expensive convertibles, to sip cocktails in fancy bars, to paw the buxom, vacuous-faced blondes."

Where, Turner wants to know, are the detective heroes of yesteryear who, like Sherlock Holmes, read books, knew art and music, and "solved crimes through the use of acute mental faculties, not through skill with a gun or fist?"

His belief is that broadcasting has been corrupted by power and that it is corrupting the audience. Turner expressed a hope that, "for the public good," the FCC will take a harder look at what is happening and establish some lesser sentence than the "death penalty" (revocation of license to check station and network flirtation with over-commercialism). Turner suggests "30 lashes at sunrise, or a week in the stockades," something akin.

Gordon's D.C. 'Clearing House' To Give Radio Indies Fairer Shake

Washington, April 18.

Recent rhubarbs over radio coverage of Presidential news coverages, pitting the webs against independents and audio news services, have spawned idea of a special indie radio news committee in Washington.

Brainchild of Herb Gordon, head of News Associates Inc., an audio news group here, the committee would not presume to speak for the nation's independent stations. Rather, it would serve as a point of contact and clearing house whereby the indies could be alerted when arrangements are being made for radio coverage of upcoming events of moment.

Gordon cites as typical the way National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the four radio networks began making arrangements early this year for coverage of the slated sub-orbital flight of a U. S. astronaut. Upshot was a network pool arrangement which will cost an independent $250 to tie into live audio coverage of the event. The group rate, according to Gordon, for two or more indies is $250 for the first and $75 for each additional link-up.

Gordon claims this deal doesn't represent the interests of audio news services or indies, and if latter had been brought into the negotiations, they would have achieved a fairer shake. If some group such as he conceives had been in existence, NASA would have had someone to contact, who, in turn, could have alerted other indies to fact arrangements were being undertaken for the suborbital flight coverage.

Gordon, who likes to think of himself as a thorn in the sides of the webs, has been active in fighting for rights of indie news outfits to set up their separate audio coverage of capital events.

He was one of three indie reps who sat down with White House News Secretary Pierre Salinger and the four radio nets several weeks ago and evolved a modus operendi for Presidential news conference coverage. The indies, represented by Westinghouse and WWDC here in addition to Gordon, won right to their own pool line from the State Dept. auditorium where the JFK q&a takes place.

U.S. Steel Swaps Harriman Plane Trip For No Preemption'

U.S. Steel saw its chance and took it. Westinghouse Broadcasting was expecting Ambassador-at-Large Averill Harriman to hop up to Pittsburgh to address the final meeting, Wednesday (12), of the WBC public service confab there. But bad weather out of Washington, and, finally a broken strut on the Westinghouse private plane, threatened confrenciers with having no guestspeaker.

It was learned, after a delay of several hours, that U. S. Steel (which is homebased in Pittsburgh) had a private plane in D. C. The big company was called, but before it promised to fly Harriman from Washington to Pittsburgh, it made Westinghouse promise that the speech he was to make would not be allowed to preempt showing of "U. S. Steel Hour," carried in the home market via WBC's KDKA-TV. Steel got its way, and Harriman got there.

British TV Producers Exit

London, April 18.

Two leading commercial tv producers ankled their posts last week. They are John Irwin of Associated Television and Peter Hunt of Associated Rediffusion.

Irwin has accepted a new appointment, but has so far declined to reveal details. Hunt is to freelance as a producer and writer.

BURR SHIFTING TO NBC-TV SOAPERS

Gene Burr, who recently exited as program development veep at the web, is going to produce the NBC-TV daytime soap, "From These Roots." Under a new deal, which has been in negotiation since he ceased being a staffer over two weeks ago, the ex-veep will also develop and produce a new daytime serial, just in case "Roots" or the other NBC-TV soap, "Dr. Malone" fail to keep up the Nielsen pace.

Third phase of the Burr-NBC-TV deal is that he is definitely to produce a minimum of two of the Du Pont Sunday night hours next season.

Paul Lammers, who was both producer and director of "Roots," stays on as the strip's director.

Has JFK Scuttled Landis Reforms? Others See It As A Delayed Action

By JAY LEWIS

Washington, April 18.

No one went so far as to characterize it as completely toothless, but a sizable body of the initial reaction leaned toward the view President Kennedy had the cutting fangs removed from his Congressional message on regulatory reform.

Except for the portion dealing with massive problem of the Federal Power Commission, the message was generally treated by the press as a much-diluted version of the pre-Inauguration regulatory report by White House assistant James M. Landis (former Harvard Law dean, member of three and chairman of two regulatory agencies in New and Fair Deal times).

The tack generally taken was to stress the message's omissions rather than it contents. After a few days for reflection, a second-round response is shaping which, generally speaking, holds that instead of being extracted the Presidential missive merely concealed its incisors; that the bite will come later.

Primarily responsible for the off-the-cuff view of the message as somewhat emasculated was its complete failure to mention—much less endorse—Landis' proposed Office for the Oversight of the Regulatory Agencies. Played up as the keystone of Landis' recommendations, the idea was to set up an overseer, with official White House status, who could crack a whip over the agencies, goad them to take up any slacks in procedures and evolve reorganization schemes where needed.

The proposed White House regulatory aide was immediately tagged a "czar," and keen Congressional resentment, arose, as it always does when the legislature fears encroachment from another branch of government. The message's silence on this score was taken to mean Kennedy had junked Landis' notion in order to placate this vestment.

Also, fact that Federal Power Commission was singled out for elaborate special treatment led to the belief Kennedy perhaps was not overly concerned over the remainder of the sprawling regulatory complex.

Additionally, Kennedy sidestepped any reference to Landis' proposals for coordinating offices, under the Presidential aegis, to shape cohesive, "national" policies in transportation, power and communications, now thwarted by conflicting programs of agencies with overlapping jurisdictions. Here again, Congressional jealousy was ascribed as the reason for what was taken for Kennedy's abandonment of Landis' idea.

But those taking the opposite view that Kennedy is still intent on more far-reaching reform of the agencies coupled with a iron-fisted White House supervision reason as follows:

—On the score of the White House oversight office, fact Kennedy didn't mention it doesn't mean necessarily he has dropped it. Besides, Landis is performing many of the functions envisioned in his earlier report for the so-called "czar."

—The same goes for Kennedy's failure to endorse establishment of what's been called "super-agencies" in communications, transportation and power. He can always carry these proposals out later.

—That he gave special treatment to Federal Power Commission can be attributed to fact this agency probably is in the greatest need for immediate reform.

Generally, it might be assumed the President adopted a go-slow approach, mindful of opposition stirred by the earlier Landis report. Kennedy is credited with an unusual finesse in his Congressional relations. There was no need for him to show his full hand at this juncture.

Also, the message made several references to the Chief Executive's intention to send up actual legislative recommendations at a later date.

Can Colgate, P&G Live Next Door to Each Other? CBS-TV Takes a Chance

CBS-TV will find itself confronted with a unique product protection dilemma next fall, thanks to its decision to okay Colgate as the new alternate-week sponsor of "Dobie Gillis." Colgate will be sandwiched directly between two shows sponsored by Procter & Gamble.

Colgate bought in on "Dobie" as the replacement for Pillsbury, which is dropping the show after two years in a reevaluation of its television planning. Philip Morris continues as alternate sponsor of the Tuesday at 8:30 showcase.

Problem lies in the fact that P&G will sponsor all of the Dick Van Dyke show at 8-8:30 and half of "Ichabod," immediately following "Dobie" at 9-9:30. Quaker Oats has the other half.

Solution will lie in some of the deftest juggling CBS can summon up. For one thing, the Colgate "major" week on "Dobie" will have to be arranged to occur during the P&G "minor" week on "Ichabod." For another, because P&G has full sponsorship on Van Dyke, noncompetitive brands will probably have to be scheduled for the closing Van Dyke commercial and the opening Colgate "Dobie" blurb.

CBS hasn't worked out a pattern, since it's just accepted the Colgate order, but the solution will probably lie along these lines. That may not be enough to keep both clients happy, but CBS evidently is prepared to take that risk. Meanwhile, the Colgate deal probably means the end of product protection as it's been known in tv.

Grady Cole Retiring

Charlotte, April 18.

Grady Cole, a drawling radio broadcaster whose early morning programs are known to thousands, will retire in June to become a roving goodwill ambassador for WBT radio and WBTV.

Cole, special assistant to the general manager of the Jefferson Standard Broadcasting Co., has presented a 5 to 9 a.m. program on WBT for the past 31 years.

The story of the grey-headed "Mr. Dixie" dates back 32 years when he left the Charlotte News as a "Harum-Searum, scatter-brained reporter," as News Editor Brodie Griffith described him.

San Antonio, April 18.

James M. Gaines, prez and general manager of Southland Industries Inc., owners and operators of WOAI and WOAI-TV, has been elected prez of the San Antonio Chamber of Commerce.

Illinois Proposes Slapping Tax on TV Pix Revenues

Chicago, April 18.

State of Illinois, hoping to fatten the exchequer without resorting to a personal income tax, appears to have drawn a bead on the tv industry.

Legislation was introduced in the Illinois House last week, and is now in committee, to impose a 3% tax on gross revenues deriving from the televising of motion pictures. Not defined as yet is whether half-hour vidpix would classify as motion pictures, or whether the proposed law pertains only to feature films, in which case there would be hairs to split. Incidentally, there is no state tax on films exhibited at theatres.

Trade reaction to the bill in this state is divided. Certain station operators feel it is such an outlandish bill that they refuse to experience any anxiety over it. Others, however, are very much concerned and are mapping a strategy to fight it. As of now, WBBM-TV and WBKB in Chicago are trying to enlist Illinois stations to team up against it. Attorneys are currently investigating the constitutionality of such a bill and will probably fight it on the grounds that it is grossly discriminatory.

Bill was introduced by Rep. Joseph Fanta, a Chicago Democrat, and Robert Coulson, a Waukegan Republican.

Some tradesters opine that the bill will not be passed in its present form in the current session of the state legislature but that probably some form of a television tax will be legislated by 1962. There have been hints in the state capital at Springfield that another highly potential pigeon for new revenues is the advertising industry.

Eichmann, Gagarin: 'Instant TV'

Between Eichmann and Gagarin, the American broadcasting industry has had quite a time of it these past few days. It has created an excitement of sorts, in "day-&-dating" global news coverage, reminiscent of tv's early pioneer days, and the results, for the most part, have been overwhelming in their impact and clarity.

A single event of international importance—whether it's Princess Margaret at the altar or Khrushchev yelling "U-2"—is enough to drive radio and tv wild, but catching a Russian cosmonaut and a German butcher doing their stuff on the same Tuesday (11) has been more than enough to throw networks and indies into the most fantastic and frenetic drive for news yet. The three network news chieftains, CBS' Dick Salant, NBC's Bill McAndrew and ABC's Jim Hagerty were at it overtime in trying to prove the value of "instant tv."

The Russians went a long way, too, in proving the values of "instant tv." Gagarin's triumphal arrival in Moscow were transmitted via Eurovision as far off, for the first time, as London.

As Adolf and Yuri made news, prepared tv programs were dumped to make room for new ones, cues were lost, jet planes skittered across the Atlantic so that one or another of the network news departments might luckily score a two-minute scoop on an arch rival, experts were dragged out of bed or out of left field for "exclusive stories" and, in the past seven days, a great deal of airtime was consumed keeping listeners and viewers abreast of the times.

For instance, who got a "beat" on the first tapes of the Eichmann trial? One is likely never to know unless he had two tv sets going in the same room, between 8 and 8:15, on the morning of Wednesday (12). CBS-TV says it won (by seven minutes). NBC-TV says CBS did not . . . CBS-TV said it got the first tapes of Eichmann hearing the charges by the Israeli court on the air at 8 a.m. sharp. Doubting that CBS could make it into the Richard Hottelet newscast that quickly (without any intro) and emphatically denying any seven-minute scoop by a rival, NBC said it got Eichmann on the air by 8:03. No comment from ABC-TV.

But there is no contest who got the scoop on Dr. Leonid Sedov; everybody did—ABC, CBS and NBC. Sedov, called "Father of the Sputnik" who is visiting here at a New England U. evidently believes in fair treatment of all tv networks, but he did have to take them one at a time.

It might serve, in illustrating the ingenuity, chaos and comprehension of the webs during the double-header—to provide a sketchy rundown of the more significant running events at each place on Wednesday alone:

Logging The Coverage

CBS: At 2:13 a.m., the network broke into the WCBS-TV, N. Y., "Late, Late Show" to say that the Russians had launched a man into space . . . Bulletin repeated 10 minutes later, but still no pictures . . . In vicinity of 8 a.m., on Dick Hottelet newscast, web shows Eichmann tape . . . Same program, moments later, had CBS' first look at Yuri (in flyer's helmet). CBS Moscow correspondent Marvin Kalb, who said a few words earlier on WCBS-TV's "Late, Late Show," gave some Cosmonaut filler, de-

All This & Cuba, Too

As the space man story began to wane on Monday (17) and the Eichmann yarn was beginning to settle into the groove of a running story that's going to be around for months, the invasion of Cuba by counter-revolutionary forces broke, giving the webs their third big story in one week and cueing a "remobilization" of news staffers.

The spot coverage was limited mainly to analyses on the webs, since there were no pix of the revolutionaries hitting the beaches or fighting their way inland yet. In just one instance, it gave NBC-TV reason Monday in the 9:30-10 p.m. slot to program a new special on Cuba, much of which pictorially was a recapitulation of the preparations the counter-rebels went through prior to the landing.

IF IT'S GOOD ENTERTAINMENT, IT'S GOOD ENTERTAINMENT ALL OVER THE WORLD!

"The recently completed ATV House (the Great Cumberland Place sanctuary of Associated TeleVision in London) and the soon-to-be opened ATV Elstree production center, representing an $11,000,000 outlay with its multiple studio complex, rivals, if not exceeds, anything in the world."

"ATV's net (profits) last year was $16,000,000. For the current fiscal year, which winds up April 30, Val Parnell and Lew Grade, the show biz-minded factotums of the operation, expect it will hit $17,000,000."

"ATV's television and auxiliary enterprises include: vested interest in eight Australian stations; in Halifax and Canada; its major vidfilm operation; its ownership of ITC (the biggest vidfilm distributor throughout the world with 67,300 half-hours sold in the past 11 months); 50% ownership of Pye Records (one of the four major diskeries in Britain); and sundry auxiliary businesses such as a British exclusivity on Muzak and Wired Wireless."

"Although American vidfilm product enjoys great popularity in England . . . tastes are not that much different here from those in the U.S. . . . British tv can hold its head higher in respect to live vs. film programming (live programming, totalling more than 60% of the schedules, in contrast to the 88% celluloid dedication on tap for next season in the U.S.). Live drama, mostly in hour-form, is a seven-nights-a-week attraction on the British channels, whether out of ATV or any other, and most of it constitutes original fare."

"The talent, for both live and film productions, is the finest, recruited mainly from the London stage or films, with no name too big. There's a respect for writers, and the writers, in turn, respect the medium (and that applies to the vidfilm creators, too, now that their fees have been upped to sums commensurate with U.S. scales)."

"It is the air of prevailing excitement and enthusiasm and a shooting-for-something-different and new that characterizes the entire television medium in England. The U.S. will see an example of this with "DANGER MAN" (which bows this week on CBS-TV)."

"With "DANGER MAN," "ADVENTURES OF SIR FRANCIS DRAKE," the on-location-in Australia "WHIPLASH" series and the upcoming "GHOST SQUAD" series, among others, Parnell & Grade have embarked on a major "shoot the works" undertaking involving, in all, 10 different series. They have given international vidfilm topper Les Harris the go-ahead for 26 installments of each, representing a multi-million outlay, on the strength that sooner or later the U.S. will have to sit up and take notice."

"On the basis of the initial three installments of "DRAKE" as viewed even in rough cut here, there's no denying the qualitative merits of the production. Brought in for some $35,000 per installment, a comparable Hollywood-produced segment of similar quality would represent a minimum tab of $60,000. It's a departure in costume production for tv, combining historical values (based on authentic episodes in the life and times of "the king of the seas"), with a format designed for both youth and adult appeal. Both the production and performance components are topgrade."

"And that's why Parnell and Grade, in a now-it-can-be-told story, were willing to gamble to the tune of some $20,000,000 to prove their point that with quality product, British accent should prove no U.S. deterrent. Just about a year ago, when Parnell and Grade were trying to sell "DANGER MAN" to either of the three U.S. tv networks they were rebuffed on all counts. So the ATV impressarios then and there expressed a willingness to buy a full hour weekly on all three webs as a showcase for "DANGER MAN" and other British product, with ATV taking responsibility for delivering the sponsors. But that wasn't necessary—blue-chip sponsors Brown & Williamson, through Ted Bates, and Kimberly-Clark, through Foote, Cone & Belding, bought "DANGER MAN" for the Wednesday, 8:30 PM time spot."

"If there are any doubts as to ATV's progress here, one has only to see how the Elstree Studios are being transformed into a wondrous razzmatazz of electronic wizardry to clinch any argument."

"And the P & G that spells out Parnell and Grade go together like Procter & Gamble."

VARIETY-ARB's weekly chart offers a day-by-day analysis of the top feature evening slots in a particular market. On Saturdays and Sundays, daytime feature slots compete with nighttime pix periods for designation as the top feature slot of the day. The analysis is confined to the top rated feature slots in the ARB measured period, broken down by days in the week. The ARB measured period usually covers three or four weeks. Other data such as the time slot and overage share of audience is furnished. Top competition and competitive ratings also are highlighted.

Council, a Loop chamber of commerce organization, letting that information speak for itself. (The film, reputedly, gives a not very chamber-of-commercey portrait of the city.)

Wallerstein told VARIETY that Molloy had quoted him out of context and jumped to conclusions, but he was reticent to discuss the matter further or contradict the implications. Although he would not comment on whether he had taken an actual part in the decision-making, he cited a release by the station's p.r. department (issued after Molloy's story broke) that Quinlan had authorized a certain group of persons to make the decision.

Reached for comment, Quinlan said he would abide by the no-show announcement so as not to embarrass his company. He grunted ambiguously to the query of whether he did actually "authorize" a group to decide for him but would not explain, if this were so, why he reversed his original plan to wait until he recovered from his illness. Quinlan said that so far as he knew, Wallerstein had no purview in television matters—"unless New York knows something I don't know."

It's been learned from other reliable sources that Quinlan recently dispatched a wire to AB-PT headquarters inquiring as to how much authority, if any, Wallerstein has in local tv operations.

To the local press corps, Wallerstein has always held the unofficial rank of an elder statesman of the station, chiefly through his silent presence at virtually all WBKB functions. His connection with the station dates back before the merger of American Broadcasting Co. and Paramount Theatres, when Balaban & Katz had owned the station. It's known that he was sometimes consulted by Quinlan.

Remains to be seen now whether Wallerstein will turn up at future WBKB functions.

the hearingroom as the arguments against the ban were heard.

Morse also interviewed at length Mrs. Christine Gilliam, Atlanta's chief censor, who expounded her views on the need for censorship. Representing the other extreme was attorney Ephraim London, who represented Times Films before the U.S. Supreme Court in the action against the Chicago Police Board ban on "Don Juan."

Program will also explore other views, with interviews of Production Code Administrator Geoffrey Shurlock, National Legion of Decency topper Msgr. Thomas F. Little, and Britain's chief censor, John Trevedyan. Morse and "CBS Reports" exec producer Fred Friendly had originally planned to use "La Dolce Vita" as their case history in censorship, but "Vita" was allowed into the U.S. (it opens tonight) without incident, and meanwhile the "Sunday" Atlanta hassle came up.

nel 13 situation, Gov. Meyner was asked whether he would oppose the sale to the educational group. He responded that the question would be explored along with the economic feasibility of New Jersey leaders putting in a bid.

In competition with commercial bidders, the educational group, represented by Stark in the negotiations, upped its offer from $4,000,000 to $5,000,000 and now $5,750,000. Pressures by the FCC and the increased ante of the educational group apparently have worked against the commercial bidders. Latter group included David Susskind, backed by Paramount, and Ely Landau, former board chairman of NTA.

FCC, in a surprise move recently, ordered an inquiry in the N.Y. and Los Angeles markets. Purpose of the inquiry is to explore how a vhf channel in the two largest cities in the country could be converted to an educational channel. In light of the inquiry, a selloff to a commercial group of WNTA-TV might invite prolonged hearings before FCC approval is won. NTA, in putting up the tv station for sale, had the announced intention of realizing needed cash on the deal.

Also up for sale, though not drawing the limelight, are the two sister radio properties, WNTA AM & FM. These properties are understood to have a standing offer of over $2,000,000.

CBS Films

"Baron Gus," comedy with Ricardo Montalban and Pippa Scott and directed by Dan Petrie; "Russell," western based on the life of painter Charles Russell, scriped by Borden Chase; and "Daddy-O," comedy with Don De Fore.

First three shows all got orders, from clients like Procter & Gamble, Lever Bros., Campbell Soups and Sealtest, but in terms of the high rejection rate this season by the webs of advertiser-purchased shows and the amount of time devoted to hours, they just couldn't find timeslots. It wasn't a case of coming in too late with the pilots for existing half-hour periods either, since all four of them were in the can by the end of February.

What to do? Would it have paid to do two hour pilots without a co-production commitment instead of four half-hours. CBS Films programming v.p. Bob Lewine thinks not. There's only been a single case on record where a non-network-committed hour show got sold, that being Bert Leonard's "Route 66," and Lewine still can't figure out how Leonard did it. He can't see a network buying an outside hour package in which it has no participation when it can't even schedule half of those it has already financed.

However great the risks in doing half-hours, they don't compare with that involved in prodcing uncommited hour pilots, Lewine feels. But the alternatives are slim; considering the reaction CBS Films got from advertisers and the final result, the network vidpixers have a tough row to hoe.

Webs' Pix Equity

in the series, starting with the pilot monies.

Privately, vidfilm production-distribution execs may howl about the state of affairs, talk darkly of "monopoly" with only three possible outlets, etc. It's readily acknowledged that a good deal of the pilot making gamble has been assumed by the webs, via coproduction deals. That's to the credit of the situation, from the viewpoint of the production-distribution execs. What brings on many of the howls is the hard bargaining by the webs to up their rights, to encompass greater financial interests in the possible success of a series. That's when the rubs set in, and, from the looks of things, it doesn't look as if things will get better—not in the immediate future anyhow.

claring that Gagarin was not Russia's first such gentleman; that the first went up a few days before and was too sick to be put on display. (This allegation brought counter-claims later from NBC's Moscow correspondent, John Chancellor, who said Yuri didn't have any secret challengers.) . . . By 1:05 p.m. (Ron Cochoran's newsstrip), Yuri's voice was played, and Eichmann news was updated . . . Doug Edwards at 7:15 the same night, used "animation on space travel" and told more of the Israeli trial . . . 7:30, CBS preempted the commercial hour, "Malibu Run," and presented "First Man Into Space," produced by Les Midgley and Don Hewitt on the news staff. They had film interviews with Werner Von Braun from Youngstown, O.; Dr. Albert Parry, the Russian expert at Colgate, and with the, by now, ubiquitous Dr. Sedov, who was at the moment in Providence. Charles Collingwood reigned.

NBC — Going back, briefly, to Tuesday, this network had producer Fred Freed tape, as they usually do, on the next morning's Dave Garroway stanza, but by 3 a.m. on Wednesday, Yuri made Freed decide to dump the show (at least for a day or two) and fronter Garroway was roused out of bed in order to make an unusual 5:30 a.m. visit to a network studio, where they began all over . . . Dr. Parry, whom NBC had lined up ("just in case the Russians were first"), was now standing by . . . Aeronautic expert James Webb was available too, but Sedov, who was yet to make his maiden trip that day via "Today," could not be located . . . Meantime, because the first Eichmann tapes had been delayed in London, they arrived at 6:30 in N. Y. instead of several hours sooner, and this gave "Today" what NBC hoped would be first crack at them. (The plane stood out at Idlewild for several minutes, upon landing, before the Eichmann tape could be located in its fuselage, but it was finally found in time for that near-8 exposure) . . . Shortly before 8 a.m., Sedov was found (in Boston), roused out of bed, while NBC had less than an hour to set up Boston-N. Y. cables . . . He got on by 8:40, talking to Dr. Parry . . . At about 8:55, Parry and Sedov discovered they came from the same Russian neighborhood and then ensued a duolog in Russian that reportedly prevented Garroway, at less than a minute to 9, from lucidly enunciating his usual signoff, "Peace."

ABC—at 10:30 a.m. that same Wednesday, web offered a 10-minute report by science editor Jules Bergman on how Yuri might have done it. Actual footage lacking, Bergman and Don Gardner showed Russian-made film on previous rocket launchings and also included a previously-made interview with American astronaut John Glenn, who, possibly anticipating a Russian space victory, noted that the U. S. would continue with its plans despite same; "This is not a race," said Glenn . . . 5 p.m. led to a half-hour in which the segments most pertaining to Yuri's feat were gleaned from the Presidential press confab of a short while earlier. Sedov appeared in that half-hour, too . . . at 6:30 WABC-TV, N. Y. carried its regular half-hour distillation of Eichmann trial coverage.

Eichmann trial footage, more words on Yuri scattered throughout day the next day, Thursday (13), and, by Friday, the networks had a chance at some live shots of Gagarin, who had soon before appeared at the official Moscow reception for the hero. In anticipation, CBS' Hewitt flew to Paris late Thursday and in four hours there edited enough from Moscow's Eurovision feed of the event to take a tape and fly it back to Idlewild. The tapes made Hottelet's Friday ayem show. NBC worked at it much the same way, and ABC, with its leased Telenews cameras in Moscow and a chance to take from Eurovision, too, if it wanted, also got into the celebration coverage. By Friday night CBS' "Eyewitness to History" had a lulu of an "instant tv" show.

Both the Eichmann and Gagarin stories are running events, and all weekend long the coverage continued almost as intensively as the first day, Wednesday. On Sunday, ABC-TV did the first of the weekly half-hours on Eichmann that it intends airing for the duration of the trial. Local WNTA-TV had started on Wednesday carrying the full available hour of the Eichmann affair twice a day.

Jim Burke to Buff

Jim Burke is exiting CBS News to become director of news and public affairs at WGR-TV-AM-FM in Buffalo, effective May 1. Burke, presently an editor at CBS, was at one time managing editor of the web's television news operation.

The Buffalo outfit, owned by Transcontinent Television Corp., plans to upbeat its news and public affairs programming. Burke has been with CBS for the past 15 years, serving as a writer, editor, producer, managing editor and assignment editor.

usually has large interests abroad anyway. A cherished Yank video dream, often voiced by RCA board chairman David Sarnoff, is a completely international tv hookup either by multi-billion dollar cables, beaming off satellites or using guided missiles. But the time differentials will still be in effect and recording will still be a necessity. It is early in the morn at one end of the globe when it is early afternoon in the other.

Lown states that many network reps tell ITC that they cannot give them anything that cannot be duplicated on Hollywood back lots, and the Yanks will not accept foreign accents. Lown just points to the many Yank films made overseas that have become great U.S. grossers and also that the American has become the great international tourist, plus the millions of GIs who were overseas, and can usually tell the difference between the Grand Central and the Gowanus canal, speaking anachronistically.

Says Lown, "the constant search for the lowest common denominator of public interest is the greatest crime perpetrated on humanity today. The human mind is not that simple a machine nor can it ever be simplified to the extent that its hungers, dreams and aspirations can ever be satisfied by formula. Otherwise man would soon be back to where he started, a single-celled blob of protoplasms."

Lown also opines Yank networks could gain a great deal by organizing and putting into the field an overseas creative tv production team, a la President Kennedy's Peace Corps, which could learn while they teach.

Next season he'll concentrate on his pilots and his two current shows, the Garry Moore hour and the "Candid Camera" stanza. No major changes are planned for the Moore show, but "Camera" will have several. One of course is the deal for Bill Cullen to serve as host, replacing Arthur Godfrey. Another is the increased use of a group of "regular" guests on the show with multiple commitments, a la Dorothy Collins. He has such people as Vivian Vance and Betty White in mind. And a third change is the use of a traveling camera crew, idea being to use more sequences done away from N. Y., to the extent of at least one every other show.

Apart from his tv operations, Banner is readying his first Broadway musical, an adaptation of Jean Giraudoux's one-acter, "Appollo of Bellac," for which he and his wife have done the book, Alan Scott the lyrics and Fred Textor and Marilyn Scott the score. He did the straight-one acter as an "Omnibus" segment several years ago, and has expanded the original play to full-length.

Lancaster a close second. Jimmy Stewart accepted Gary Cooper's special citation with commendable dignity. Billy Wilder, who stole the show as top producer, writer, director, and a gagster as ever, thanked "you lovely, discerning people."

Names were all over the place, as in past. The ladies' gowns were strikingly beautiful. The Hollywood elite was out in full force. The man from Price Waterhouse was probably the only one not held in suspense, this being the anxiety about who the accoladed people will be—this always being a major plus.

Running 132 minutes, the program was excessive and this particularly for viewers in the east. Embarrassing climax, which had better not be tried again, had Mitzi Gaynor and Wendell Corey in the press room to interview the stars. But nobody showed up.

As for the commercials, there sure were a lot of them and with not too much sparkle.

IDEA RADIO

A good idea is one that works well for everyone concerned.

That is why KMOX Radio in St. Louis (where it started) and other CBS Owned Radio Stations across America (which followed suit with their own local interpretations) are beaming about the provocative new programming idea called "At Your Service."

STEVE ROWAN COVERS THE NIGHT BEAT AT THE CORONER'S COURT

In San Francisco, listeners hear "At Your Service" on Station KCBS; in Philadelphia on WCAU; in New York on WCBS Radio. Up in Boston, the new program concept is known as "Listen!" over Station WEEI. In Los Angeles over Station KNX it is "Story Line." And now Station WBBM is planning its own show for Chicago. Wherever listeners hear it, they are reacting eagerly to a stimulating new kind of radio, more useful than ever in their lives.

Here's how "At Your Service" places radio in a more active role in its community. St. Louis, for instance. Top Midwest personality, Jack Buck, opens the program with a press conference with an unusual twist. The listening audience questions the guest of the day by phone. Answers are spontaneous—without rehearsal. The other important "regular" on the show is St. Louis educator, Professor Roy McCarthy, whose lively give and take with the audience has become a favorite local topic.

ST. LOUIS CARDINALS AT THE BALL FIELD

"AT YOUR SERVICE" IS PRESENT AS ANTIQUE VIOLIN IS APPRAISED BY J. F. HUNLETH OF HUNLETH MUSIC STORE IN ST. LOUIS

Next, "At Your Service" travels the main streets and the backrooms of St. Louis. Well-known KMOX personalities make the news come alive through the mobile microphone. The gymnasium where the Red Birds are training; the complaint department of the Better Business Bureau; the back of a snow-plow—nothing is off limits for this culture-with-showmanship program.

The final two hours are divided into lively 5-, 10-, and 15-minute time-segments, each devoted to a special department of news, sports, or provocative feature vignettes, coordinated and brightened by the presence of Jack Buck.

You find this kind of idea broadcasting only on the CBS Owned Radio Stations across America. Already sponsors know listeners are really listening. Because listeners are really buying.

Are you selling on the CBS Owned Radio Stations? They are at your service, too.

CBS-TV Balancing Its East-West Originations; Shifts Soaper To Coast

Still another CBS-TV daytime show is moving to the Coast, and this time it's the first of the web's oldline soapers to make the move. Show is "The Brighter Day," one of seven longrunning soap operas on the network, which will shift to Television City effective the last week in June.

Shift marks the first time CBS-TV has as much daytime programming originating from Hollywood as it does from N.Y. And that's figuring in the early-morning Dick Hottelet news and "Captain Kangaroo" as an hour of Gotham originations. On a straight daytime basis, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., the Hollywood originations far outnumber N.Y., three and a quarter hours for the Coast to two and a quarter for Gotham.

Reason for the move is a familiar one, the need to utilize facilities more efficiently. CBS' Television City plant doesn't have enough programming to keep it busy, while the network in N.Y. is trying to operate more efficiently by dropping studio leases.

"Brighter Day" was selected for the move from among the seven CBS soapers because it's the only one of the group that's produced by the web itself. The other six—"Love of Life," "Search for Tomorrow," "Guiding Light," "As the World Turns," "The Secret Storm" and "Edge of Night"—are all agency produced. They represent the only CBS daytime programming remaining in N.Y., and amount to only two and a quarter hours a day.

The CBS-TV Hollywood boom finds three new morning half-hours, "Video Village," "Double Exposure," "Your Surprise Package," plus the "Face the Facts." "House Party" and "Verdict Is Yours" stanzas in the afternoon added to "Brighter Day." Of these, only "House Party" was a Coast origination a year and a half ago. Others either moved from Gotham or were started on the Coast.

Added to the Coast totals are CBS-TV's two daytime vidpix reruns, "I Love Lucy" and "The Millionaire."

That Foreign Yield

Importance of the foreign market to vidfilm producers again is underscored. Many series, on their first time out on the network hardly break even on costs. It's the foreign take, in instance after instance, which brings an immediate profit.

Metro TV's "National Velvet" could serve as a case in point. Sale to Canada and Australia brings in an extra $6,000 to $7,000 per episode, putting the series in the profit column on its first time out. Metro has foreign rights to the series in English speaking areas of the world, with NBC distributing series in non-English areas.

WMCA's Labunski On Editorials: 'Sponsors Respect You for Them'

Topeka, April 18.

Veepee and general manager of New York independent radio station WMCA, Stephen B. Labunski, gave an inside view of his station's w. k. on-air editorial policy in a talk Saturday (15) before the Kansas Assn. of Radio Broadcasters here.

"If there is a single activity for which WMCA is distinguished in the minds of New Yorkers," Labunski said, "it is its hard-hitting, free-swinging editorial policy."

He cited the WMCA precedent last year of endorsing a presidential candidate both on the air and via full-page newspaper ads, and said that the Senate's Freedom of Communications Subcommittee hearings on the endorsement of the Demo candidate established a principle: "a radio broadcaster has an unqualified right to endorse any political candidate so long as he properly allows opportunity for opposing views."

"Don't let anybody tell you that you should avoid controversy for fear of offending listeners, sponsors or newspaper writers," Lubinski told the broadcast gathering. "WMCA thrives on controversy, and the vast majority of our listeners and the vast majority of our advertisers respect us for the positions we take and, in fact, for the bluntness with which the station expresses its views."

Providence, R. I.—Richard C. Dreyfuss, who has resigned a similar job with WSAZ-TV, Huntington, W. Va., has become program manager of WPRO-TV here. He originally came into Broadcasting administrative work with NBC-Chicago back in '46.

NBC, MCA Defendants In 100G Suit Over Use Of 'Suspicion' Title

Manni E. Moore, prexy of Transcribed Radio Shows, is suing NBC and Music Corp. of America for $100,000, charging in New York County Supreme Court that they "misappropriated" his rights to the title "Suspicion." Plaintiff said that use of the title (for an old Alfred Hitchcock format) destroyed its value to him in the video market.

Moore alleged that NBC and MCA, which co-produced "Suspicion" with the network, knew of his claims to the title before they produced it for tv. He charged that he had attempted to sell his radio series, "Suspicion," to tv producers and that he offered it to MCA, the co-defendant before MCA made the show for airing. Suit claims that NBC and MCA, "due to their size in the industry and the scope of their operations, may effectively foreclose a single entrepreneur from a means of presenting his product to the public."

Technician Strike Hits BBC-TV, ATV

London, April 18.

Both of Britain's tv networks were hit by unofficial strike action last week. The first victim was Associated Television and their live transmissions were affected by a walkout of members of the Association of Cinematiograph and Television Technicians which took place on the morning of the opening of the company's new $11,000,000 studio centre at Elstree.

As a result some weekend programming was affected, mainly a live transmission of the latest episode in the "Emergency Ward Ten" series. A film program was substituted. At one time it was also feared that the weekend transmission of "Sunday Night At the Palladium" would also be affected but an arrangement was reached in time to enable the show to go on the air on schedule.

BBC-TV services were interrupted when members of the Electrical Trades Union staged a walkout following the introduction of new shifts as a result of the recent agreement of a 42-hour week. Some minor rearrangements were necessary in the program schedule.

One studio program, "Tonight," managed to go on the air when it was switched from the studio to an outdoor location on an iron emergency staircase about 100 feet above the studios to catch the last of the daylight.

Chamber of the Mexican Radio Broadcasting Industry, and top radio outlets throughout the republic.

In general feeling is that the interest of the public in sporting and other major events has been exploited by major sponsors, including Gillette, and that stations have been taking the short end for far too long a time.

From now on no programs offered under these "economically harmful conditions" will be accepted by Mexican broadcasters.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

Storer Broadcasting has reported first quarter earnings of $1,055,417.87 net after taxes compared to $1,423,079.11 for the same period a year ago. Company points out that the first quarter of '60 included a loss tax carry-forward at tv station WITI and no such carryover applied this year.

Per share earnings amounted to 42.6c for the quarter, compared to 57.5c in the first three months last year (there are 2,474,950 shares outstanding).

Making the report at the annual stockholders' meeting in Miami, company chairman George B. Storer said despite the dip from earnings a year ago, current figures indicate that the decline has "bottomed out" in March. He said the remaining months of '61, and particularly the latter half, should show substantial improvement. Part of his optimism, he said, was due to the biggest March in the group's 34-year history for billings of the seven radio outlets.

George B. Storer Jr., was elected president, succeeding his father who remains chairman of the board. Storer Jr. had been veepee for tv since May, 1957.

Visual Electronics Corp., a five-year-old privately held company selling and servicing equipment to broadcasters, got a longterm loan from American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres. In return, ABPT has options to buy up to 40% of the stocks in the company.

James B. Tharpe, president of Visual, declined to specify the amount of the loan, since it is a closed company. The five Visual offices in the U.S. deal in items such as tv automation equipment for stations.

Number of television picture tubes sold at the factory rose from January to February, but a decline in prices caused a drop in revenues from the sales. Factory sales continued below last year's level, Electronic Industries Assn. reported.

February sales of tubes were pegged at 728,989, as against 707,835 in January. Revenues, however, fell from $14,430,755 in January to $14,395,981 in February. For the first two months of this year, 1,436,824 tubes, worth $28,826,736 were sold at the factory, compared with 1,536,483 tubes, worth $30,326,910 for the same 1960 span.

National Assn. of Broadcasters is distributing a booklet designed to give civic and other non-profit groups information on how to go about getting free radio and television time.

The handbook, prepared by NAB Public Relations Service, points out that stations are not bound to give cuffo time but that they pride themselves on being alert to public service needs. NAB is selling the handbook at 15 cents a single copy or 12 cents for lots of 100 or more to member stations only.

ages in the public affairs field will be permitted on CBS-TV if they deal with subjects in the non-news field which do not require the editorial control of CBS News. A history of Hollywood, produced by Dave Wolper, was the precedential case, but other non-fiction shows in such areas will also be permitted. Heretofore, CBS had taken the position only its own pub-affairs staffers can undertake such non-entertainment shows. Basic motive behind Salant's ruling was to free his staff for the more serious stuff in the pubaffairs field.

Decision to transfer CBS Sports out of the CBS News Division and into the CBS-TV network, one which has worked out satisfactorily for all concerned, since the sports unit felt hamstrung as part of the news operation and Salant believed that sports didn't properly belong under the jurisdiction of news.

Salant is far from sure that his overall policy moves will restore to CBS its former ratings preeminence, though he is certain they will bring back to the network its reputation as the best news organization in the business. As to the ratings and the Huntley-Brinkley dominance of news auds, he views this as a matter of personality over content. Right now, CBS doesn't have the personalities to match Huntley-Brinkley, but Salant's going to make sure it has the content.

Washington, April 18.

A Chicago Heights, Ill., AM station has been called on the carpet by Federal Communications Commission for allegedly making false statements to conceal an unauthorized transfer of control.

FCC ordered Seaway Broadcasting Co.; headed by William S. Martin, to show cause why its construction permit for WMPP should not be withdrawn. A hearing on the order will be held in Chicago at a date to be set later.

Overseas Press Club's Radio-TV Citations

Network news and pubservice coverage was prominent in the broadcast citations at the annual Overseas Press Club awards dinner Friday (14) in New York.

In the Class II category, best radio and/or television reporting from abroad, CBS-TV's "Eyewitness to History" was the winner for the seg titled "The Road Ahead," which climaxed a series of six shows presented by the web when the Paris Big Four Summit meeting collapsed. The weekly half-hour news show is produced by Leslie Midgley.

Same category radio winner was Edwin Newman, NBC Radio, for his reporting from abroad.

For the best interpretation of foreign affairs, NBC-TV's "White Paper" on the "U-2 Affair," produced by Irving Gitlin and narrated by Chet Huntley, was the winner.

BOB HOPE SHOW
With Bob Hope, Phil Harris, Patti Page, James Darren, David Rose Orch, others Producer: Jack Hope

Writers: Lester White, John Rapp, Mort Lachman, Bill Larkin, Charles Lee

(McCann-Erickson)

The amazing thing about that hardy perennial of standup and skit comedy Bob Hope is that his material is just as hardy and perennial as he is.

In his Buick special on NBC Wednesday night (12), for instance, Hope and guest Phil Harris wound it with a whiskered bit concerning two sailors on pass in Paris. The burleycue bird-dogging of Parisian femmes was just as funny—in fact, funnier, with the added sight values—as it was 17 years ago when Hope was doing it for the Armed Forces Network in Europe.

Likewise, the show opened with Hope's standup institutional of one-liners. The jokes are the same, only the subject matter has been changed; updated: "They're sending x-ray machines to the Congo. They're still looking for Lumumba."

In between, there were less funny family situation skits with Hope again dominating. In support were Harris and chic pop chirp Patti Page, who was kept so busy with comedy thesping she didn't get the song spotlight until the last 15-minutes. She was fine in a brace of tunes that were backed by segue.

There also were 13 kids in one of the family skits that made for a busy background if not much else.

Young singer James Darren did the opening song seg. He had more style than voice and came off as sort of a peach-fuzzed Dean Martin.

David Rose's musical backing was excellent throughout, and the whole show managed to have a firm pace that still seemed offhand and unaffected. Bill.

WONDERAMA
With Sonny Fox, emcee; Yaffa Yarkoni, Neomy Shemer, Hava Kohav Danvers Producer: Norman Berger
Director: Arthur Forrest
Exec Producer: Mel Baily
240 Mins., Sun.; 9 a.m.
PARTICIPATING
WNEW-TV, N.Y.

Long a children's program, "Wonderama" came up with a salute to Israel's 13th birthday on its Sunday (16) edition via WNEW-TV, N.Y. For this special the station sent emcee Sonny Fox to survey the new state and report on how its people live. What he learned there made a tremendously interesting documentary.

Among other places, Fox visited a Tel Aviv street cafe and an Israeli kibbutz (a collective farm). His camera crew filmed street scenes, noted the abundance of bicycles and even lensed a couple of supermarkets. But unfortunately the effect of this informal tour of Israel was largely dissipated by integrating the footage within the "Wonderama" show.

As most pre-schoolers are aware, "Wonderama" is chock full o' animated cartoons. It was disconcerting to have a "Felix the Cat" or a "Heckle & Jeckle" short continually interrupt an absorbing study of Israeli customs. No doubt it was hoped to amuse the moppets with the regular format and at the same time show them what life is like in Israel.

However, most tots prefer cartoons exclusively. And older viewers who want to be informed have little or no interest in "Felix the Cat." Fox' fresh footage deserved separate exposure. Such an airing unquestionably would have commanded a larger audience. Aside from the travelog, Fox also had folk singer Yaffa Yarkoni, composer-singer Neomy Shemer and the Hava Kohav Dancers on hand. They provided a lusty sample of Israeli culture. Gilb.

TEA TIME
With Buff Cobb
Producer: Aaron Ehrlich
Director: Arthur R. Spitzer
15 Mins., Mon.-Fri., 4 p.m.
WHITE ROSE TEA
WNTA-TV, N.Y.
(Al Paul Lefton)

This 15-minute WNTA interview strip finds hostess Buff Cobb and a guest nervously rattling tea cups in a parlor setting and making chit-chat that's about as potent as the stuff they're quaffing.

Show caught Wed. (12) guested authoress Anita Loos who got in plenty of plugola for her current, "No Mother to Guide Her," a satirical novel about a Hollywood starlet.

Miss Cobb was fidgity. Miss Loos was phlegmatic. Between them, the banter was only fleetingly alive. Miss Cobb said Hollywood was a dangerous town to go to because a person could be terribly swayed out there. Miss Loos said morals were a matter of boredom. Miss Cobb asked Miss Loos if she had a beautiful daughter would she let her go to Hollywood. Miss Loos said if she had a beautiful daughter who wanted to go to Hollywood, she'd disinherit her.

The authoress and former screen writer mentioned some of the genuine friends she had during her Coast days, among them W. C. Fields and Paulette Goddard (who was a neighbor and with whom she'd fly off to Paris to celebrate finishing a project).

While Rose tea sponsors Miss Cobb ("and how do you like your tea, Anita Loos?" was the intro) on Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Tuesday and Thursday were sustaining at this writing. Bill.

ABC FINAL REPORT
With Don Goddard, John MacVane, John Scali, Peter Clapper, John Rolfson, others
Executive Producers: John T. Madigan, William McSherry
Writers: Al Berglund, Robert Armstrong

Directors: Marshall Diskin, Armstrong

SUN OIL
ABC-TV, from N.Y., Washington
(William Esty)

First key innovation by ABC News chief, Jim Hagerty, was "ABC Final Report," the news strip that premiered Monday (17). Initial stanza came very late, after the Oscarcast, but hereafter it is scheduled to begin at 11. It's the first time any network has skedded a news stanza in a latenight spot, when local stations normally cover the news. Actually, it is hard to call the lineup for the program a network, since it consists, for the moment, only of the ABC o&o stations in N.Y. and D.C., which are also the originating points for the program. (Next fall, ABC hopes to feed it to the full web prior to the nightly start of the hour Warner Bros. reruns.)

The new strip had a very ragged beginning Monday. Hagerty's idea is to get coverage from the newsmen closest to the scene, which is what he tried to do on the first "Final Report." Yet it led to so many unnecessary cuts from N.Y. to Washington and visa versa that the strain of the day's principal story, the Cuban invasion, was lost. The cutting to and fro seemed needless. Though the program divorced itself from using an "anchor man," one was necessary to bring cohesion out of confusion. On the plus side, though, was the work of John Rolfson, Peter Clapper and particularly John Scali from Washington. While they had no visual aids in telling the news, they were hip to the D.C. angles. Still and all, one, at the most two of them, could have told the story from Washington and been done with it.

After the long and confusing story on Cuba, there was a brief one on Laos. Afterwards, for the last five minutes, Don Goddard, took over, but he really couldn't be called an anchor man because he only narrated the closing news features, which were indifferent to bad: Pix of Adenauer in Texas, of Ike making a Pa. speech, and of Bangkok boxers. While they had film to back 'em up, these were stable stories.

Hagerty seems to have a competent news staff, specialists in their way, but to kill them with razzle dazzle as was the case on the first show and to simultaneously deprive them of a decent pictorial background was distracting. If ABC can work out the innumerable kinks, it might just win some of its affils away from local news nightly at 11. Art.

DUBONNET TIME
With Mantovani Orch, Dorothy Collins, John Conte, others
Director: Duke Goldstone
30 Mins., Sat., 10 p.m.
SCHENLEY IMPORT
WNTA-TV, (film)
(Kleppner)

Mantovani may have the disk and concert field under control but he's got a long way to go to make a similar impact in tv. The maestro, whose London records have sold in the millions here, comes on for Dubonnet wine with a presold audience but he won't hold it if the initialer in this series is a sample of things to come.

The opening show was a throwback to pic studio musical short subjects that were prevalent a decade or so ago. Those musical shorties had a purpose then as a fill-in for the main feature but wouldn't hold up as a solo entertainment. Neither does Mantovani's half-hour footage.

The show was devised in cliche terms. There were shots of the big orch as it worked through the musical numbers, some production dance sequences in an attempt to bring visual values to a strictly audio presentation and a guest star for a vocal fillip. The format won't set back tv but it doesn't indicate any progress, either.

For the opener, Mantovani had Dorothy Collins as guest star. She did okay by "Lover Come Back To Me" and "Over The Rainbow." John Conte was a stereotyped emcee and the bulk of the presentation featured Mantovani's lush musical interpretations. Worked over were "When You Wish Upon A Star," "That Certain Smile," "La Ronde" and "Warsaw Concerto." All were offered in Mantovani's rich and colorful manner but it all had the effect of a visual LP which some manufacturers are reported to be working on now.

In an attempt to build added audio values the show is being aired simultaneously on WNTA-AM and WNTA-FM. The three-way hookup is supposed to bring in high fidelity reproduction. Gros.

BETTER HEALTH FOR YOUR CHILDREN
With Howard Whitman, narrator
Producer-writer: Whitman
Director: Dennis Kane
60 Mins., Wed., 8 p.m.
UPJOHN CO.
WNEW-TV, N. Y. (tape)

Ethical drug house, the Upjohn Co., got together with the American Pediatric Assn., writer Howard Whitman (who incidentally has set up his own packaging operation) and Metropolitan Broadcasting to present this one-hour special as part of a continuing series on medicine.

With Whitman producing and narrating, a panel of pediatricians and other doctors participating, and Metropolitan providing the technical facilities and televising the show via tape on WTTG in Washington (where the program was produced) and WNEW-TV, N.Y., the show represented an intelligent method of using television for public relations purposes. And the blurbs, in this case, were all institutional in nature, stressing Upjohn's research.

Pediatrics can fill a book, and have, in fact, filled several which have become bestsellers. Consequently, a one-hour runthrough covering ages from birth through adolescence can afford only a fleeting once-over of the subject. More properly, this should be a weekly series (like Dr. Benjamin Spock's a few years ago on NBC).

But considering the limitations of time, Whitman covered a remarkable amount of informative ground on the subject of children's health problems, running the early-age gamut of toilet training and demand feeding right on through smoking for teenagers. Generally, the advice given by the several pediatricians on the show was sound and reassuring, and there were some interesting demonstrations of new techniques to extract swallowed objects from the aesophogus or bronchial tubes and methods of conducting hearing tests and of anaesthetic treatment for children.

All in all, a fastmoving, informative hour which achieved much in spite of a necessary tendency toward skimpiness. Director Dennis Kane moved his cameras nicely through the various elements of the show, cutting from panel to demonstrations easily and giving an overall effect of continuity throughout. Chan.

virtue of Como's new contract with the web, there are those who see a third go-round for the series.

CBS programmers presumably made the mistake of plunking down some $700,000 for 13 installments of the Wiere Bros. comedy series, "Oh Those Bells." It was originally scheduled a year back for the current semester, but the key affiliates (under the new practice that entitles them to a closed-circuit pre-screening) flatly rejected it. But if for no other reason than to square that 700G outlay, CBS is still determined, somewhere, somehow, to sneak it into the schedule (although it's presently on the shelf.) For a while there was talk of writing them off as a summer entry.

Perhaps of the three webs, ABC would seem to have the stronger conviction as to what it wants (as evidenced by the continuing cycle of program rejections, despite sponsor pressure) as opposed to the self-perpetuation motives of others more anxious to curry topside favor and play it cozy rather than an anxiety to always do what they feel is right for the viewer.

Gribbin also charged that "such a reduction in program time is in effect an increase in network rates. Time is being taken away from the purchase of a program and not compensated for by a proportionate decrease in charges." He also declared that the increase in local announcements would "increase the difficulties in policing announcement schedules and determining the efficiency of performance." Gribbin "strongly" urged Treyz to reconsider and asked Stanton and Kintner to hold the line.

Treyz, in his reply to Gribbin, said that ABC "is now firmly committed" to the revision, and in effect said Gribbin was closing the barn door after the horse had been stolen. Pointing out that ABC had made its Feb. 1 announcement well before the start of the selling season so that any business placed and accepted would provide for the expansion in station breaks, Treyz declared that some $200,000,000 in nighttime business had since been written, including substantial billings from Y&R itself, all with the full understanding that the 42-second breaks would obtain.

Treyz told Gribbin that his quarrel is not with ABC, but with the other networks, who are "attempting retroactive changes by proposing to alter terms and conditions of business already placed and accepted by them." In other words, ABC clients had the option of not doing business with ABC if they didn't like the new breaks, but in the case of CBS, the expanded breaks would be imposed on contracts already written to include 30-second breaks.

T'aint So: Treyz

Treyz followed up his initial wire to Gribbin with another one explaining why ABC thought the move would be in the public interest. He said that "the entire extra revenue provided by the slight increase in commercial time goes to the local affiliated station, thus providing a broadened and stronger economic base for the station to help finance improved television service in the public interest." He used the local versions of "Expeditions" as an example of such programming.

He also stated that under the new plan, programming time (including billboards and network identification) would still comprise 87.8% of the evening hour as compared with the present 88.3% and commercial time would increase from 11.7% to 12.2%, an increase which "cannot be properly described as 'a chaos of commercialism' or 'an infringement upon responsible use of the free airwaves.'"

Of this breakdown, Treyz said, the advertiser will receive 10% and the local station 2.2%, as compared with its current 1.7%, an increase to which the station is entitled, in Treyz' opinion.

New ABC pattern will call for two 20-second spots and a non-commercial two-second ID between programs. Treyz said he didn't believe that this constitutes over-commercialization because the number of commercials in the break remains the same; only the length is changed. Current 30-second break has one 20-second spot and a 10-second ID (of which eight seconds are copy and two seconds ID).

Competitively, it's another story, however. Hylan said CBS is opposed to any expansion, but must protect its own affiliates. What would happen, he stated, is that ABC would double the number of nighttime adjacencies by the move, and opening up new adjacencies around its top shows like "The Untouchables" and diverting business now held by CBS affils in weaker time slots.

For example, a CBS affiliate wouldn't lose its adjacencies around "Gunsmoke," but might lose those it has around "CBS Reports" because the advertiser involved had a crack at a new adjacency tagged onto "Untouchables." Consequently, it's incumbent on CBS to protect its affiliates by doubling the number of its own desirable adjacencies so that the affil can keep that business.

As to Treyz's point that the number of adjacencies won't be changed, fact is that only a limited number of advertisers use 10-second ID's, whereas use of the 20-second spot is universal (in fact advertisers usually make the same basic commercial for one-minute and 20-second use, saving on production costs, but must make a separate 10-second blurb). Consequently, the ABC move would double the number of the most-used commercial form, the 20-second spot.

There's only two exceptions to the new ABC plan, the breaks following the Monday 8:30-9 and Thursday 9:30-10 programs. These time slots had been committed to Procter & Gamble verbally prior to ABC's Feb. 1 announcement, and on that basis Treyz indicated that the current 30-second break will obtain for all of next season.

Outward Bound—A German Tragedy

Berlin, April 18.

A tragic incident is reported from Berlin. It concerns a German vid pic production, "On the Seven Oceans," which Max Nossek is going to direct for NDR (Hamburg) on an extended voyage.

When the team was to go on board in Hamburg, it was informed that the ship would only take 30 people. Since the list contained 31 people, one person had to be dropped at the last moment. It was Berlin actor Karl Ludwig Schreiber. The bitterly disappointed 51-year old man couldn't take it—he committed suicide via an overdose of sleeping pills. The ship with the 30 tv people left Hamburg April 5.

The East-West propaganda war via tv continued in 1960 without any slack, with the greatest Communist emphasis on East German facilities. However, USIA said Russia is believed to be constructing a tv station near its border with Norway and Finland.

The East German telecasts are aimed at an estimated 600,000 West German viewers. "Meeting in Berlin," "The Black Channel" and "Telestudio West" are three "highly propagandistic" programs telecast regularly, according to USIA. East Berlin obtained a telecast of Milan's La Scala opera, according to USIA, and slipped in a virulent anti-West propaganda program during the intermission, catching countless West German viewers who didn't want to miss the rest of the opera.

USIA also said the Kennedy-Nixon "Great Debates" rubbed off internationally. Both Japan and Italy now have debate-format tv programs.

Communist bloc countries have also established a network called "Intervision," the report said.

While it never achieved the feeling of spontaneous conversation, which would have been desirable, it nevertheless made for an engaging (though not absorbing) hour of television.

Smith addressed Sandburg as though he were an eyewitness to the war, and the poet unbashfully answered with the authority of one who had been, although he was born 13 years after Appomattox. Best slants were those that went beyond history book documentation, such as the insights into the kind of person Lee was; the way in which Mary Lincoln, although a "borderline mental case," was actually good for her husband; and how a photographer missed a shot of the President delivering the Gettysburg Address because he hadn't counted on so short a speech.

To relieve the straight q.-&-a. format, Sandburg recited one of his Civil War poems, read an account of the Gettysburg battle (the camera illustrating with shots of the statuary), quoted from Lincoln and sang movingly a few bars of "Dixie." The battle site abounds now in monuments, cannons and grave markets, as a sort of al fresco museum, but it was the surrounding natural landscape that afforded the chief pictorial interest.

Close-Up!

One of the best documentaries on ABC-TV's "Close-Up!" series was "I Remember," telecast Friday (14) night at 10:30. In simple, telling terms, in words and pictures, the half-hour documentary told the moving story of one man's revisit to Nazi concentration camps.

The telecast in a sense served as a backdrop to the Eichmann trial now going on Israel. The odyssey of a nightmare revisited was symbolized by one Simon Gutter, a former inmate of the Nazi camps, now an American citizen, who revisited the sites of his torture.

It was an intimate story and the production-writing team never strayed from the individual perspective, making the story all the more powerful for the viewer. Gutter, playing himself, was an engaging, moving figure.

Leo Swaim, credited as the writer, showed masterful restraint. Producer-director Nicholas Webster handled his assignment with a sure touch. Photography and editing all helped to complete a fine outing for Bell & Howell.

Treyz to Rivals: 'You're Copycats' In Diversity Plea

Cincinnati, April 18.

Oliver Treyz, ABC-TV president, blasted the other tv networks last week for copying the program paths "pioneered" by his web.

"The leaders of yesterday," Treyz said before the Cincinnati Ad Club, "have become the followers . . . As it has progressed, ABC-TV has made a valuable contribution to a healthy state of varied programming within the network, but there is a higher balance to achieve—and this can only come at the overall industry level."

Treyz declared that each of the three tv webs "must strike out on its own, confident of its inherent strength and creativity." The ABC topper felt that the quick death of the tv quizzes, which his network did not air, cancelled out the "significant dividing line" that existed up until then between ABC, on the one hand, and NBC and CBS on the other.

He said he could have emulated the quiz successes at the other webs, but chose instead to find "fresh formats with basic appeal to the audience that ABC primarily seeks." He said he thought it a trap to become a "carbon copy."

Treyz said that by counter-programming, ABC was able to make its fast climb. "Imitation," he added, "is the sincerest form of flattery, but the poorest kind of programming."

For a moment, the ABC prexy relaxed his broadside at the competition to make an object lesson out of the rating success of NBC's "Singalong With Mitch." He said that it became the No. 1 stanza on Friday nights at 9 because of its total dissimilarity to the competition on ABC and CBS.

"We at ABC are persuaded that the highest cause of television is served by each network delevoping its own vitality, its own individuality and its own uniqueness and personality."

AN OPEN LETTER TO TELEVISION PROGRAM EXECUTIVES, PRODUCERS, ETC.:—

In June, I'm beginning a new program for Westinghouse Broadcasting. The project, which has been in the works for several months, is already fully staffed. Hence my present staff, on The Mike Wallace Interview, will shortly be available.

Because they are people of intelligence, inventiveness, efficiency and independence, too good to be launched into the anonymity of random job hunting, it occurred to me that this might be an effective way to call them to your attention. Here they are:

AL RAMRUS . . . Al has produced the interview program for the past two years. Before that, he was my chief writer when the interview was on ABC; and prior to that, a writer from the beginning of Night Beat on Channel 5. In his spare time, he has written public affairs specials, and film documentaries; and done on-the-spot radio broadcasts of major news events. Back in the dim past he served for two years as a crackerjack police reporter. I've never seen Al take on a piece of work in a new field or old, that he didn't do superbly.

EDITH EFRON . . . Edith now works for me as a television writer and she also edited my newspaper column. She has an incisive, original mind, a remarkable talent as both writer and editor. Her other credits: staff writer at the age of 22 for the New York Times Magazine Section, Central American correspondent for Time-Life, Assistant Woman's Editor of Look Magazine. Her by-lined articles have appeared in Esquire, Life, Good Housekeeping, New York Times Magazine. Wants to stay in TV.

TOM COHEN . . . Within a year after graduating from Yale, Tom had produced three consecutive public affairs series for META, over Channel 11, which made him, at 23, New York's youngest producer. Following that, he had a hand in various documentaries and television series including Sylvania Award winner "Astronomy for You", and Sherwood Award winner "Concept" for the CBS network. This year, he's done topflight work as one of my writers. Has a versatile mind, masters new and difficult assignments with remarkable speed. Producer-writer capabilities.

RITA QUINN . . . Rita has been my production assistant, gal Friday, social secretary, and as a booker, has cajoled nearly 1,000 celebrities onto my interview program within the past four years. She has personal contacts with all major publicity and PR people in town. Carries 300 important phone numbers in her head. Types 100 words per minute, shorthands 180 per minute, spells like Webster, is grammatical as Fowler. Granite loyalty.

These four know and respect each other . . . work together as an efficient machine. So if anyone were to buy the whole package, he'd really have something.

If you're interested, call me or any of them directly at JUdson 2-7300.

And if you're not in the market now, you might hold on to this ad for the future.

The Darby Sisters (Musicor): "DON'T LET IT END" (January), a ballad in the contemporary groove, gets an interesting workover by this team. "YA GOTTA" (January*) is a snappy uptempo slice.

Eddie Hodges (Cadence): "I'M GONNA KNOCK ON YOUR DOOR" (Sigma*), bows this young thesper on a bright rocking ballad with strong chances to land in the pop bestseller lists.

Roy Hamilton (Epic): "YOU'RE GONNA NEED MAGIC" (We Three*) is an excellent ballad delivered with potent commercial impact. "TO THE ONE I LOVE" (Saxon*) is a big ballad entry with a beat that should find broad appeal.

Frankie Avalon (Chancellor): "WHO ELSE BUT YOU" (Debmar*), a nifty romantic ballad, is handled in pleasing, relaxed style by this teenage fave. "GOTTA GET A GIRL" (Sequence*) is another winning ballad with a light Latin flavor.

George Greeley (Warner Bros.): "LUCY'S THEME FROM 'PARRISH'" (Witmark*) is a melodic pic tune in a neat instrumental setting spotlighting George Greeley's pianistics. "ALLISON'S THEME" (Witmark*), from the same film, is another highly listenable slice with a choral assist.

Dave Gardner (RCA VICTOR): "COWARD AT THE ALAMO" (Film-TV: Johnstone-Montei†) is an amusing historical saga skillfully delivered by this southern comic. "YOU ARE MY LOVE" (Milgard*) is a cornball vocal.

The Renegades (Dorset): "STOLEN ANGEL" (Starling-Dara‡) is a good rocking ballad tailored for the teenage market in lyric and in this combo's high-pitched delivery. "KEEP LAUGHIN'" (Starling-Dara‡) is another side with colorful sound.

Clyde McPhatter (Mercury): "WHOLE HEAP OF LOVE" (Edison‡) is a nifty rhythm number with an amusing teen-slanted lyric delivered to the hilt by this singer. "YOU'RE MOVIN' ME" (Eden-Progressive‡) is another rocking side with good chances.

Los Machicambos (London): "PEPITO" (Raleigh‡) is a neat straight Latin entry in a fine vocal and instrumental setting rating spins. "DIMELO EN SEPTIEMBRE" (BIEM) is an interesting ballad entry also with lyrics only in Spanish.

The Ventures (Dolton): "LULLABY OF THE LEAVES" (Bourne*), the standard, turns up in a striking guitar arrangement that'll draw spins. "GINCHY" (January) is a similarly grooved instrumental.

The Blossoms (Challenge): "SON-IN-LAW" (Golden West Melodies‡) is an amusing rocking comment from the mother-in-law's point of view, which is, at least, a fresh perspective. "I'LL WAIT" (Brana‡) is a more conventional rhythm item.

Bobbi Martin (Coral): "CRY, CRY, CRY" (David‡) is a strong rocking ballad effectively delivered by this songstress. "I NEED YOUR LOVE" (David‡) is an okay uptempo slice.

Warren Covington-Tommy Dorsey Orch (Decca): "THE HUM DE DOO (Abbott‡) is a bouncing slice introducing a new dance in a catching choral-instrumental format. "PAYDAY" (Wakabe‡) is a nifty instrumental.

James O'Gwynn (Mercury): "DOWN ON THE CORNER OF LOVE" (Pamper‡) has an okay country ballad flair that will get it good spinning returns in alfalfa areas. "I'M GETTING NOWHERE FAST" (South Coast‡) is based on alfalfa strains and it's strictly for hillbilly traffic.

JACK SCOTT ..... A LITTLE FEELING
(Capitol) ..... Now That I

Jack Scott's "A Little Feeling" (Wolfpack‡) bows this singer under the Capitol banner with a strong ballad due for strong teener impact. "Now That I" (Wolfpack‡) is a more routine rocking ballad.

NEIL SEDAKA ..... LITTLE DEVIL
(RCA Victor) ..... I Must Be Dreaming

Neil Sedaka's "Little Devil" (Aldon‡) gives this singer another swinging entry which he belts strongly. "I Must Be Dreaming" (Aldon‡) is a pretty ballad also with chances

DORSEY BURNETTE.....THAT'S ME WITHOUT YOU
(Era) ..... Great Shakin' Fever

Dorsey Burnette's "That's Me Without You" (Doral‡) is a solid rocking idea delivered in standout style by this rockabilly performer. Great Shakin' Fever" (Studio) is another snappy side.

PAT BOONE ..... A THOUSAND YEARS
(Dot) ..... Moody River

Pat Boone's "A Thousand Years" (Conga‡) is an excellent ballad handled at the top of this singer's form. "Moody River" (Keva‡) is a sad ballad in a bright rhythm format.

TOMMY EDWARDS ..... THE GOLDEN CHAIN
(MGM) ..... That's The Way With Love

Tommy Edwards' "The Golden Chain" (Summit‡) is a bright ballad with a shuffling rhythm catchily projected. "That's The Way With Love" (Southern‡) is a lilting ballad also with strong chances.

RICKY NELSON ..... TRAVELIN' MAN
(Imperial) ..... Hello Mary Lou

Ricky Nelson's "Travelin' Man" (Four Star‡) is a nifty ballad handled in pleasing low-pressure style by this young singer. "Helly Mary Lou" (January‡) is another appealing rocking item.

THE DELACARDOS.....HOLD BACK THE TEARS
(United Artists) ..... Mr. Dillon

The Delacardos' "Hold Back the Tears" (Saxon‡) is a sharp rocking ballad projected in top contemporary style by this combo. "Mr. Dillon" (Saxon‡) is a cute novelty idea nicely handled.

SID BASS.....THE GIGGLING GIRLS OF GREECE
(Carlton) ..... Funny Bone

Sid Bass' "The Giggling Girls of Greece" (E. B. Marks‡) is a colorful instrumental entry with an infectious melody due for lotsa spins. "Funny Bone" (Pambill) is another brightly styled orchestral side with a choral assist.*

ROGER WILLIAMS.....THE SONG OF THE RAIN
(Kapp) ..... A Lover's Symphony

Roger Williams' "The Song of the Rain" (Mills) is another attractive piano-styled instrumental due for big play. "A Lover's Symphony" (Stearns-Lorab‡) is a lush melodic idea tastefully handled.*

Festival Showmanship: Railway Station Dance, Latin Frolic In Togas

Yehudi Menuhin is artistic manager of this year's Bath Festival, June 1-11, at the English spa. In this he follows the latterday pattern of talent taking charge of a music festival, per Pablo Casals, Gian-Carlo Menotti, et al. Menuhin has also used the occasion for a booking of his piano-playing sister, Hephzibah.

Novelties pend for this event, including a midnight dance at the railway station and a gala in the old Roman baths, admission requiring the wearing of a toga. Invitations are couched in Latin, of course.

Soloists at Bath include pianists Louis Kentner and Fou Ts'Ong, harpsichordist George Malcolm, cellist Gaspar Cassado and guitarist Andres Segovia.

Album Reviews

"Ella Fitzgerald Sings The Harold Arlen Song Book" (Verve). Ella Fitzgerald has made another notable addition to her recordings of "song books" by the top pop and showtune writers. In this double LP set, she does two dozen Harold Arlen melodies, comprising some of the greatest standards in the ASCAP catalog, with her customary swinging style. She gets excellent backing from the Billy May arrangements on numbers like "Blues In The Night," "Between The Devil and The Deep Blue Sea," "That Old Black Magic," "It's Only A Paper Moon" and "Over The Rainbow," among others. It's a thoroughly attractive packaging job from the Matisse sketch to the enclosed photos and notes.

Ferrante & Teicher: "Golden Piano Hits" (Ultra Audio). One of the hottest instrumental combos currently in the pop market, this piano duo has come up with another surefire entry in this lush workover of familiar pop and long-hair standards. Backed by an orch under Nick Perito, Ferrante & Teicher display a neat change of pace between swinging sounds on tunes like "Begin The Beguine" and "Canadian Sunset" and the lusher attack on numbers like the "Warsaw Concerto" and Tschaikowsky and Chopin melodies. This United Artists subsid label maintains its high technical standards.

Henry Jerome Orch: "Brazen Brass Brings Back The Bands" (Decca). Henry Jerome is sticking to his click "Brazen Brass" formula in this nifty instrumental stanza in which he evokes memories of the great swing bands of 30 years ago. Using sharply contrasting sections to accent the sound impact, Jerome achieves solid musical values at the same time in this rundown of numbers like "In The Mood," "Dipsy Doodle," "Sing, Sing, Sing," "Woodchopper's Ball" and "Cherokee."

Bobby Darin: "The Bobby Darin Story" (Atco). This packaged "Bobby Darin Story" is the story of his single clicks. "Splish Splash," "Mack The Knife," "Artificial Flowers," "Queen of the Hop" and "Lazy River" are some of the jukebox faves reprised here. It's a swinging package headed for strong sales action.

"Stravinsky Conducts-1960" (Columbia). A striking packaging conception, involving the use of transparent plastic case, a photo gallery and some autobiographical notes plus a disk of spoken commentary by Stravinsky, sets off this fine musical offering of two of the composer's most popular works. "La Sacre du Printempos" and "Petroushka." Both works are interpreted by Stravinsky conducting the Columbia Symphony Orch.

Teri Thornton: "Devil May Care" (Riverside). Teri Thornton, in her disk bow, impresses as a solid jazz vocal talent. The texture of her voice is rich and her style is consistently tasteful, whether on the slow or uptempo ballads. In this set, she turns out standout versions of songs like "Blue Champagne," "The Song Is You," "Left Alone" and "What's Your Story, Morning Glory," among others. A jazz combo backs up ably.

Morton Gould Orch: "Moonlight Sonata" (RCA Victor). This set spans the pop and classical idioms with a repertory and orchestral style that have across-the-board appeal. Morton Gould has shaped some glistening arrangements of works by composers as diverse as Beethoven and Arthur Schwartz. Also included are numbers by Harold Arlen, Vincent Youmans, Debussy, Kreisler and one piece of Gould, all dressed in rich symphonic garb.

George Cates: "Polynesian Percussion" (Dot). Joining the roster of percussion packages, this set hinges its music on familiar Hawaiian standards played by a flock of assorted string and tympany instruments. Although the sound effects are present, George Cates keeps the accent on the music without any obtrusive gimmicks. As such, it's a listenable wrap-up of numbers like "Pagan Love Song," "The Hawaiian Wedding Song," "Beyond The Reef," "Kaiua" and others.

Webley Edwards: "Let's Sing With Hawaii Calls" (Capitol). This set gives an Hawaiian setting to the "sing along" format and its a pleasing entry in this groove. The usual pattern of using a choral ensemble and including the song lyrics is followed in this offering on such island song faves as "Hawaiian Wedding Song," "On The Beach At Waikiki," "Aloha Oe" and others.

"Dance To The New Live Sound of Ralph Flanagan Orchestra" (Coral). The spearhead of the "bring-back-the-band campaign some 10 years ago on the Victor label, Ralph Flanagan has again come up with a smart dance band set for Coral. It's not likely that now, as then, the bands will be coming back, but Flanagan is at least keeping alive the big band tradition in these cleanly executed, danceable arrangements. It's a varied book of standards and lesser known numbers.

Doris Day: "Bright and Shiny" (Columbia). Doris Day is in a bubbling happy mood in this package. The mood is contagious and spreads a sunny feeling for overall programming pleasure. The title song, "I Want To Be Happy," "Make Someone Happy" and "Happy Talk" help spell out her jovous disposition. Neal Hefti's bouncy backing helps.

WELK GETS CERTIFIED SINGLE, LP GOLD DISKS

Lawrence Welk has copped gold disks for both his "Calcutta" pop single and album on the Dot label. The awards have been certified by the Record Industry Assn. of America.

To qualify for RIAA certification, a single record must sell 1,000,000 copies and an album a minimum of 500,000 units with a factory billing of at least $1,000,000. The sales are audited by a firm of certified public accounts before RIAA certification is granted. The "Calcutta" tune is published by George Pincus' Gil Music.

Bill Manville Column Getting LP Showcase

Bill Manville's "Saloon Society" has been parlayed from a newspaper column to a book to a record album. The "Saloon Society" LP will kick off Roulette's Spoken Word Series.

Manville's column first appeared in the Village Voice, weekly published in N.Y.'s Greenwich Village, and was later published in book form by Duell, Sloan & Pearce. In the album, Manville narrates stories about the hipsters and the non-conformists who inhabit his "Saloon Society."

'60 GRAMMY AWARDS & WAILS

Col A&R Chiefs Become Hot Talent So Prexy Lieberson Taking Charge

The artists & repertoire direction of Columbia Records is being taken over by the company's prez Goddard Lieberson. The prexy's takeover stems from the fact that in the past couple of years his a&r chiefs have developed as creative artists with little time to spend on the administrative functions of an a&r post. This applies to Mitch Miller, who's developed as Col's most important album seller via his "Sing Along" sets, Frank DeVol and Percy Faith, who've established themselves as potent sellers in the album and singles field.

DeVol, who took over as pop a&r chief in the east last year, will continue as a recording artist and record producer. Percy Faith, on the Coast, meantime, has resigned as musical director but will continue as a recording artist via his longterm disking contract with the label.

Lieberson will conduct the diskery's a&r operation on a floating concept with Col's artists & repertoire staffers. "Old a&r men never die," he sums up, "they just become creative performers."

The Col move follows a deemphasis of the a&r chief that stems from the inroads being made by indie disk producers, master buys and productions teams that some of the major companies have established. RCA Victor, for example, has shifted its a&r chief Steve Sholes to head the Coast office and is now operating without a designated a&r chief. This is a far cry from the days when a Mitch Miller was in charge of all pop at Columbia or a Dave Kapp, and a Joe Carlton had the last words in pop at the Victor operation.

Phono Sales Still Sliding

Washington, April 18.

The slump continues in phonograph sales with February figures sharply off January totals, according to Electronic Industries Assn. Sales for the first two months of 1961 were also far behind last year's pace.

EIA reported 204,638 stereo sets sold at the factory during February as against 211,383 the month before. The total through February was listed at 416,021 compared with 665,995 for the first two months of 1960. Retail stereo sales for February stood at 225,722 units 45,402 fewer than in January. For the first two months of this year, 496,846 sets were sold at retail as against 715,699 for the same 1960 period.

Monaural set sales at the factory totalled 50,710 for February—44,107 below January. For the first two months of this year, factory monaural sales stood at 131,076 compared with 211,049 for the first two months of 1960. Retail monaural sales amounted to 61,646 in February and 105,753 in January. Through February, 167,399 sets were sold, as against 253,876 for the same 1960 span.

Caro Joins Victor

Howard Caro, formerly with Grand Award Records, has joined RCA Victor as manager of the pop albums editorial and creation services department. He'll be repsonsible for coordinating pop LP production and for the development of new ideas in this market.

He'll work under George Avakian, head of the pop album department.

Name Solti Dallas Maestro

George Solti has been signed as the 1961-62 conductor of the Dallas Symphony Orchestra. Pact is for one season. Solti, who resigned last month as conductor of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, replaces Paul Kletzki here.

Latter resigned after three years to return to his Switzerland home.

BMI's First Oscar

Broadcast Music Inc. copped its first Academy Award with the title song from the "Never On Sunday" pic. Song was written by Greek cleffer Manos Hadjidakis. An English lyric was written by Billy Towne.

The tune is published by Michael Stewart's Sidmore Music and Esteem Music, a subsid of United Artists, which released the picture.

Tooter Plight Cues Drive For Fed Subsidies

Cleveland, April 18.

The plight of the U.S. musician will be used to accent the need of a Federal legislation to subsidize the performing arts, it was indicated here today (Tues.) by American Federation of Musicians prexy Herman Kenin in an address to the Assn. of Women's Committee of the Cleveland Orchestra.

Kenin said that the average annual income derived from symphony performances was less than $4,060 before taxes or about $75 per week. This average, moreover, is distorted by the five symphonies, Boston, Chicago, Cleveland, New York and Philadelphia, which pay higher scales and have longer seasons than all the others. Kenin said that symphony musicians are forced to supplement their earnings with outside work, some of it in non-musical fields which run the gamut of aerial surveyor to paramutuel official.

Kenin pointed to the "strange paradox" that existed in both the U.S. and Canada where the market for good music is growing but where fewer musicians are earning their livelihood today than there were 30 years ago. He pointed to the sharp increase in disk sales as reflecting a greater public interest in music.

The AFM prexy said his union would shortly present to Congress a program for financial aid to symphony and operatic companies.

CREED TAYLOR SWITCHES FROM ABC-PAR TO MGM

Creed Taylor is switching his artists & repertoire berth to MGM/Verve. For the past several years Taylor had been in the a&r slot at ABC-Paramount main'y producing albums. In recent months he had been producing packages for the Impulse label, ABC-Par's subsid jazz label.

According to Arnold Maxin, MGM/Verve prez, Taylor will concentrate on producing jazz packages for Verve releases. ABC-Par execs are currently scouting the field for a jazz man to a&r their Impulse line.

Evansville Hosting Indiana Jazz Festival

Chicago, April 18.

Evansville, which picked up the Indiana Jazz Festival last year two weeks after it had been cancelled by the French Lick Sheraton, will host again this year on June 23, 24 and 25 at the city's new $2,000,000 Municipal Stadium. French Lick hostelry dropped the affair on short notice after showcasing it for two years, apparently because of the riots at Newport and several other festivals.

Dave Brubeck, Benny Goodman and Dinah Washington will headline this year's show in the 15,000-seat stadium.

INDIES SQUAWK AT MAJORS' HEFT

RCA Victor walked away with the third annual National Academy of Arts & Sciences Grammy awards and the indie Artia label walked out of the organization. The Artia beef stems from NARAS' award selection techniques which drew a hefty squawk from Columbia prexy Goddard Lieberson last year and which forced a modification of the nominating procedure.

The Artia complaint, echoing gripes of many indies and voiced by its veepee Peter C. Sutro, claimed that NARAS favors the major manufacturers. His stress was on the classical categories since Artia deals in longhair imports from overseas. Sutro pointed out that in the 10 categories in which longhairs were listed there were 67 nominations, as follows: RCA Victor, 33 nominations; Columbia, 10 nominations; London, nine nominations; Capitol, seven nominations; Artia, two nominations; Angel, one nomination; Vanguard, one nomination; CRI, one nomination; DGG, one nomination; Oiseau-Lyre, one nomination; American Society, one nomination. Victor copped six awards, Capitol two and in two categories in which classical artists were named, a pop artist won the award.

This, says Sutro, is obviously a lopsided situation that is caused by the fact that records are nominated and awards given by "creative people" in the industry. "How any person working in the classical a&r department of RCA can have more than a cursory knowledge of what is being released by the rest of the industry is a mystery. He is, in fact lucky if he can keep up with his

Carlton Swings Into Jazz With Parker Estate

Carlton Records is making its first major move in the jazz field in a tieup with the estate of the late Charlie Parker. The deal gives Carlton access to recorded material owned by the Charlie Parker Record Co., which was recently activated by the widow, Doris Parker, manager Aubrey Mayhew and attorney Florence R. Kennedy to reclaim the jazz saxist's works.

According to Joe Carlton, who heads the Carlton diskery, the albums will bear the Charlie Parker Record Co. tag with the additional legend stating that Carlton Records is the sole selling agent. Carlton will handle the platters on a worldwide basis.

It's expected that there is now enough Parker material available to produce 25 albums. In addition to Parker, the company will issue disks made by Lester Young and Billie Holiday. There will also be a contemporary jazz group which will be kicked off with sexist Cecil Payne. Latter's first album will be titled "Cecil Payne Performing Charlie Parker Music."

Carlton will debut the line in two weeks. In addition to the Payne LP, a Parker and Young album will make up the first release. The packages will be double-fold deluxers and will be marked at $5.98.

Cash 14G, Des Moines

Des Moines, April 18.

The Johnny Cash show, in three performances here last week, grossed over $14,000 at the KRNT Theatre here, topping a record set by Cash a couple of years ago.

Show included the Tennessee Two, Bob Luman, Buck Owens, Rose Maddox and Gordon Terry. Smokey Smith Enterprises promoted.

Celler's Proposed New Federal Act (Stiff Fine and Jail) Designed To Curb Disklegging Mfrs. & Distribs

The war against disk piracy, which has been conducted on various courtroom fronts in the past few years, may get a key weapon in the form of Federal legislation being sponsored by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.). Celler, sponsor of many bills aimed at helping the music biz, has put a bill into the hopper which will make interstate and/or foreign commerce in pirated or counterfeit disks a criminal offense subject to five years in jail and a $10,000 fine. Both manufacturers and distributors knowingly handling illegal disks would fall under the law.

Sparking the new legislation for Celler was the fact that the counterfeiters are now draining the disk biz of some $20,000,000 a year. This represents not only a loss of Federal excise taxes to the Government but also of income taxes since it's presumed that the counterfeiters are not declaring their income.

The Music Publishers Protective Assn., with Julian T. Abeles as counsel, has been an important factor in shaping the bill. Abeles, who testified before the Celler House committee some years ago on amending the Copyright Act to remove the exemption from jukebox operators, has been spearheading the campaign recently against the pirates and forgers.

Abeles has been pushing to make bootlegging a criminal offense but also subject to civil damages. Celler has incorporated several of his suggestions into his bill, including the angle of overseas coverage since disk piracy has now become an international business. Abeles is optimistic now about getting a general revision of the 1909 Copyright Act since the Celler bill would make an important modification in the penalty provisions of the Act. Instead of treble damages of 6c per illegal disk manufactured, Celler would award an automatic

Honolulu, April 18.

Hawaii's House of Representatives formally thanked Elvis Presley and his manager Col. Tom Parker for raising $52,000 at a recent concert here in benefit for the U. S. S. Arizona Fund.

Resolution stated that the Presley show, which drew 5,000 payees, was the biggest single gate in the history of Hawaii. Parker was included in the resolution of thanks for helping to make the benefit a success.

MGM Accenting 'Live' Kickoffs For New Disks

MGM Records is stepping up its promotional activity in the grassroots areas to kick off its new releases. Diskery is scheduling personal appearances of its key artists at large shopping centers in the hinterlands to stir up the drive.

In a tie-in with Modell's Shoppers World in Lodi, N.J., arrangements were made for a Tommy Edwards to appear at the record department Monday (17) afternoon. Modell's advertised the event in local newspapers and on radio and tv as well as through use of store window displays, in-store displays and through continuous announcements over the public address system. The Edwards' appearance is for his new release of "Golden Chain."

The arrangements call for Modell's to purchase a large quantity of the new Edwards' single and current albums through the diskery's distributor, All-State New Jersey Inc., as part of MGM's condition to produce the artists for personal appearance.

In a similar tie-in last week (12) with the E.J. Korvette stores, MGM disker Conway Twitty was shuttled to Springfield and Philadelphia for personal appearances at both Korvette stores on the same day. The Twitty push was for his "The Next Kiss" platter. Twitty's appearance at the Springfield store was preceded by a motorcade heralding his arrival at the store. Page ads in all the Philly papers in addition to radio and tv spots were part of the promotional campaign.

Sol Handwerger, MGM's director of publicity, promotion and exploitation, is arranging and coordinating the dates. He is issuing a special manual of instructions for distributors and field representatives outlining in detail steps, procedure and material necessary for carrying out this type of store exploitation.

EVERYBODY SUES BUT PUCCINI ON HIT TUNE

A claim by singer Tommy Prisco that he wrote the lyrics to "Don't You Know?" based on Puccini's "Musetta Waltz," was thrown out of N.Y. Supreme Court last week by Justice Henry Epstein. The judge ruled that the only problem involved in the case was one of credibility and that the weight of credible evidence was with the defendants, Lee Magid and Bobby Worth.

Magid is manager of Della Reese who clicked with "Don't You Know?" on the RCA Victor label. Worth is a singer-composer who said he wrote lyrics to the "Musetta Waltz" from "La Boheme" back in 1951, a year before the tune went into public domain.

Crookshank Exits As 'Big 3' GB Rep

London, April 18.

Paddy Crookshank has quit as European representative of the Robbins, Feist & Miller Music. He's also ankled his directorships in the British companies of Francis, Day & Hunter and B. Feldman, plus retiring from the boards of several European companies.

Crookshank has been Robbins' man in Europe for seven years. He said that "the parting is perfectly amicable." His future plans are uncertain.

S-B Publishes Score Of Off-B'way 'Peter Grant'

Shapiro-Bernstein is going off-Broadway for a musical score. Firm has latched on to the publishing rights for "Meet Peter Grant," which is scheduled to open at the Folksbine Theatre, N. Y. May 8.

The score was written by Ted Harris (music) and Elliot Arlack (lyrics). Lee Bergman is producing.

Perez Prado Tours

Perez Prado starts a week of one-nighters throughout Jamaica, B.W.I., next week, followed by 17 days of Texas ditto and then returns to the Tropicana, Las Vegas. Prado orch has been at the Vegas plushery for a run until essaying the Caribbean and Texas dates.

Herman A. Diaz, son of RCA Victor's Herman Diaz Jr., is now the new manager for the Prado outfit. MCA books it.

VARIETY'S RECORD T.I.P.S.

FTC Ringing Down Curtain On Payola Drive; Sees New Law As Safeguard

Washington, April 18.

In an action which apparently rings down the curtain on Federal Trade Commission's anti-payola campaign, an FTC hearing examiner has recommended dismissal of complaints against Columbia Record Sales Corp., Columbia Record Distributors Inc., Capitol Records Distributing Corp. and Dot Records.

Hearing examiner Abner E. Lipscomb based his action on motions by FTC staff attorneys. Latter reasoned that the omnibus broadcasting bill enacted last September, with its elaborate anti-payola-plugola provisions, made continued prosecution of the firms "an unnecessary expenditure of time, effort and funds in determining the legality of the alleged practice, since the protection of the public interest is now fully assured by specific statute."

Lipscomb agreed, but recommended that dismissal of the complaints be conditioned on FTC's right to start further proceedings against the outfits "should future events so warrant." Lipscomb action technically doesn't constitute a final decision of the Commission, but indications were that it would stick.

About 100 anti-payola complaints have been issued by FTC since the crackdown was launched December, 1959. All but a handful have been settled by means of consent orders barring the record companies from engaging in future payola.

Metronome in Rank Tie For Far East Coverage

Metronome Records, Swedish firm, is broadening its international coverage. Latest addition to Metronome's foreign setup is a deal with Rank International making the diskery's entire catalog available to Cosdel, the Rank licensee in Japan, Cambodia, Hong Kong, Indo China, Indonesia, Korea, Laos, Okinawa, the Philippines, Taiwan, Viet Nam and Siam. The deal was worked out in N. Y. between Rank lawyer Paul Marshall and Claes Dahlgren, of Orion Development Corp., Metronome's U. S. affil.

Metronome is now represented in Denmark, Finland, Norway, and Germany and has affiliates all over Europe. In the U. S., the Metronome material is released by such labels as Atlantic, Atco, Mercury, Prestige, Cadence, Argo and World Pacific.

Henry Tobias Gets Option On Eddie Davis' Comedy

Hollywood, April 18.

Henry Tobias, songwriter who moved to the Coast after exiting last fall as entertainment director of the Fontainebleau Hotel in Miami Beach, has taken an option on a musical comedy written by the late comedy writer, Eddie Davis, titled "Diz Muz Be Dere Place." Tobias is writing the score for the show.

Tobias also has completed a video script for a musical based on the careers of the three songwriting Tobias brothers, Harry, Charlie and himself. He's also launched his disk label here, Pat Records, with a vocal group, The Gems.

Roy Harris Muffs Honor

Lancaster, Pa., April 18.

Roy Harris, American composer, was immobilized in his San German, Puerto Rico, home with a bum knee last week, and so unable to appear in person—as skedded—to accept the 1961 Composer's Award of Lancaster Symphony Orchestra.

He was to have conducted his own "Kentucky Spring" scherzo. Conductor Louis Vyner, of the Curtis Institute of Music, Philadelphia, and conductor of the "Strong Virtuosi" of Philadelphia, directed the performance instead.

This is Vyner's 12th season as conductor for Lancaster Symphony.

Previous recipients of the Composer's Award, both of whom accepted it in person, and conducted representative works of their own, were Howard Hanson and Peter Mennin.

Reich Disk Biz Climbing Back To 1958 Peak

Frankfurt, April 18.

More and more buyers are selecting a longhair record instead of a popular number, according to the 1960 report just released by the West German Record Industry, from its Cologne headquarters.

One explanation for the trend has been that because the price of records is a rather hefty one in comparison to other forms of entertainment in West Germany, the folks who plunk down the price of a platter would prefer one that they can play for years, instead of a top popular favorite.

During 1960, the industry just revealed, 57,777,000 records were brought out on the German market, a considerable increase from the 52,000,000 platters sold in 1959, and just about the same as the highest recent year of record sales, 1958, when 57,200,000 records were sold.

Classic platters accounted for about 37% of the total income to the record industry last year, while some of the firms, such as German Electrola, reported that the classics accounted for an all-time high of 48 of their business. The 37% is just about double previous years, when the longhair records meant from 16 to 20% of the total take.

Deutsche Grammophon was reported to have the highest percent of the total business, about 30% of the entire volume of the record industry. Electrola followed with 28% of the entire income, and Telefunken had 20%, with Philips getting around 12 or 13% of the entire business. The rest was split up among the smaller firms.

The old 78 rpms are just about out of production, the industry report added, and most of those still being turned out are headed for export to the Far East or to Africa. The German industry is more and more following the American trend of concentrating on single and longplay platters, the report concluded.

Duke-Lieberman $21,750 Suit vs. Johnny Desmond

Los Angeles, April 18.

Singer Johnny Desmond has been named defendant in a suit asking $21,750 filed in Superior Court by Maurice Duke and Al Lieberman, operating as Duke Productions.

Complaint states that via promissory note signed by Desmond in 1956 and under a contract of that date singer agreed to pay amount specified for rights to life of late Russ Colombo, held by plaintiffs. Under pact, it's asserted, if Desmond did not pay $21,750 by March 1, 1957, he then was to reassign rights to plaintiffs upon payment of $1,750.

Duke and Lieberman also asked court to determine ownership of late crooner's life story.

Red Nichols & and Five Pennies booked for a one nighter here at the Music Hall in Houston, June 7.

Eddie Mathews Doubles As Musicor Sales Chief

Eddie Mathews, promotion chief for United Artists Records, will now double as sales director for Musicor Records, a label distributed through the UA distrib network.

Mathews, who will work under Andy Miehle, UA Records sales topper, is hitting the road to visit distribs in his new dual capacity.

Aussie Station's 'Big 60' Formula, Artist Not Tune

Sydney, April 18.

A Sydney radio station, 2GB, has launched a new concept in formula radio with a "Big 60" pop list based on artists rather than hit tunes. Station is accenting "the people who make the hits" and is able to draw on past recordings of the top artists.

Like in the U.S., some of the stations here have teenage music formulas while others cater to adults. It's figured that the accent on artists rather than current clicks, will help 2GB bridge both markets. Also duplicating the American pattern, the station is distributing its "Big 60" chart to all Sydney and suburban disk dealers. Des Foster, 2GB's manager, instituted the idea for the key station in the Australia-wide Macquarie network.

Mexico City, April 18.

The Mexican Society of Authors & Composers, which had caused jailing of Frank Navarro for nonpayment of royalties on music exploited over jukeboxes in Mexicali and other frontier areas, has now come to terms with operator.

Guillermo Midaguilar, Society executive, said that a "favorable pact" was signed with Navarro last week, with operator paying around $8,000 on account and signing notes for $40,000 more, with this covering back royalties due for past three years.

Because of the stiff Society attitude other operators are falling in line, paying up back royalties. Agreement has also been signed with Luis Alonso Huerdo who heads Aparatos Musicales, S. A., a firm operating hundreds of jukeboxes in La Paz, Ensenada, Tecate, Mexicali and other frontier cities.

Juke operators, scared by imprisonment of Navarro on behest of the Society, are now changing their attitude with operators in Laredo, Matamoros, Tampico, Ciudad Juarez and other points communicating to the Society their willingness to dicker to pay up back royalties and enter into new contracts.

'TUBBY TUBA' TOOTER HITS AFM SOUR NOTE

Hollywood, April 18.

Vet film musician George Boujie has returned from San Francisco after having been nixed out of a $200 job April 8 at annual S. F. Boys Club band show. Boujie would have done his longtime "Tubby The Tuba" routine.

His Frisco date had been booked by Bernie Salin, member of Frisco's AFM Local 6, union which banned Boujie's apperance there on a bill with other AFM members. Reason: Boujie got expelled year and half ago by Local 47 here during early era of that union's war with rival Musicians Guild. Boujie joined the Guild, but continued to pay his dues at Local 6, his hometown local to which he has belonged more than 20 years.

Upon his arrival in Frisco for date he was confronted with (a) ukase he could not play with AFM members there (b) an $8 rebate of his last quarterly dues paid Local 6. His membership in Local 6 had been terminated March 21, a membership dating back to 1936 when he migrated here from S.F. and transferred to Local 47.

France's SACEM Wins Point Over AM-TV Divvy

Paris, April 18.

All the rumors about a possible nationalization of the French performing rights society, SACEM (Le Societe Des Auteurs, Compositeurs Et Editeurs De Musique) have been allayed. These started due to some friction between the various authors rights group about the divvying of the annual radio and television rights which are usually made up in one lump sum annually and shared by the groups involved, including SACEM, drama orgs, etc.

It seems that the Society of Authors felt that written material should take precedence over tunes and symphonies, but SACEM clung to the idea that it was the amount of performing time that counted. The SOA wanted to call in an arbiter from the Ministry of Culture which started the talk of nationalization.

Groups finally agreed on the sharing among themselves and it will be on a time basis. At a recent meeting, the over 600 of the 1,100 SACEM members who vote on procedure, made it clear that they wanted to keep things democratic with a vote for all members and not only by the moneymaking ones.

George Levy Joins King's Publishing Co.

George Levy, vet music man, has joined Syd Nathan's King/Lois Publishing Enterprises. Levy will maintain Pandora Music, his own indie publishing firm, in addition to his duties of acquiring new talent and masters for King Records and its affiliated labels, Bethlehem, Federal, Deluxe and 4-Star. He'll also be on the lookout for music catalogs to bring into the publishing combine.

Levy will team with Nat Tannen, Billy Myles and Jack Pearl in a general exec capacity and will also work in general promotion and exploitation of the various Lois and affiliated properties. Levy will headquarter in N. Y.

Minucci Launching New Regatta Label

Ulpio Minucci, composer-arranger and indie disk producer, is launching a new label to be known as Regatta Records. The new diskery will be a subsid of T.M. Productions Inc. Regatta will be headed by Minucci with Irv Trencher as sales manager. Fred Jay and Art Harris in charge of artists & repertoire, Piero Rizza recording and representing Regatta in Italy and Judge White performing a similar function for England and France.

Minucci has already signed Bob Halley, Will Sanders & the Duprees.

Trencher, who has already lined up a full roster of distributors, was in promotion and sales for Southern Music and Top Rank Records before joining Regatta.

The detailed mechanics of the payola operation began unfolding this week in N.Y. Special Sessions Court in the trial of disk jockey Peter Tripp for commercial bribery. Tripp, formerly with WMGM, N.Y., and now a jockey in San Francisco, is being charged with taking $36,050 from eight disk manufacturers and distributors in the period of June, 1958 to October, 1959. The indictment involved 39 counts of commercial bribery, each punishable by a year in jail and a $500 fine.

Witnesses placed on the stand by the prosecution unveiled two different techniques of paying off jockeys. One was direct payment for spins on a weekly or monthly basis and another method was to cut the jockey in for a "royalty" on each record sold. Tripp's lawyers, Benjamin Shedler and Morris Goldman, concede that Tripp accepted the coin both ways, but they maintain that he was not guilty of commercial bribery since he was an "independent contractor" and not an employee of the station.

Under questioning by assistant district attorneys Joseph Stone and Michael R. Juviler, Harry Apostoleris, partner in Alpha Distributors, said he paid Tripp $10,400 until the payola scandals broke open. Apostoleris testified that Tripp agreed to spin four Alpha-distributed disks every day for $750 a month, a figure arrived at after some friendly haggling. At Tripp's request, the checks were made out to the disk jockey's wife, Marilyn Tripp. At the same time that Alpha was paying Tripp, Laurie Records, a label handled through Alpha, also shelled out $8,000 to Tripp without Alpha and Laurie knowing of the other's deal with the jockey.

Marvin Cane, vice-prexy of Coed Records, said he paid Tripp a half cent royalty on each "16 Candles" disk which the jockey laid on heavily on his show. Cane said the tune zoomed into the top 40 within three weeks and Tripp kept on playing it until it became a smash hit. Tripp had a similar deal on the "I Wonder Why" Coed disk. According to Eugene Schwartz, Laurie Records exec, he had a deal under which Tripp received a half-cent royalty on every Laurie disk whether Tripp played them or not.

In opening the case, Stone charged Tripp with selling air time that did not belong to him. He said that Tripp's activities were detrimental to WMGM since its reapplication for an FCC license in May, 1960, was withheld because of Tripp. Stone said that a deal for the sale of WMGM for $11,000,000 to Crowell-Collier has still been held up pending FCC approval.

Tripp's trial is the first of a series involving payola to broadcast personnel. Last May, five disk jockeys, a former station manager and two former station record librarians were arrested and accused of accepting $116,580 in illegal payoffs.

Ray Charles Racks Up 22G In Midwest Dates

Ray Charles in a pair of concert dates over the weekend in Detroit and Cleveland scored a healthy $22,565. Saturday (15) at the Masonic Aud, the singer hit an SRO $14,136 which included 100 standees in this 4,600 seater, while he hit a strong $8,429 at the Music Hall, Cleveland, the following night. In both instances there was a $4 top.

Both dates were promoted by Hal Zeiger.

Robert Marks O'seas

Robert Marks, exec v.p. and general manager of E. B. Marks Music, headed for Europe this week on a seven-week tour of affiliates in England, France and Spain.

Marks is taking a flock of material for possible publication overseas including a tune based on the new dance craze, "The Charanga," which is a variation of the pachanga. Robert Marks had been in charge of Coast operations until he shifted to his new post in the N.Y. office. He's the cousin of Herbert Marks, E. B. Marks Music prexy.

Inside Stuff—Music

Columbia Records is releasing an album titled "Music of Richard Yardumian" performed by Eugene Ormandy and Philadelphia Orchestra. It was 24 years ago, at the age of 19, that Philadelphia-born Richard and Ruth Yardumian were married. They had met as volunteer helpers working for Stokowski, in the early days of the Philadelphia Orchestra's Youth Concerts. Today, composer Yardumian and his wife are the parents of 13 children (seven less than 17th century Bach). They (15) live in a sprawling 26 room house (the most ancient part was built in 1703) in a suburb of Philadelphia called Bryn Athyn. Their home is called Land of Yardumian. Yardumian's father was a minister and a great friend of Woodrow Wilson. The 14 points of the Wilson plan included one, giving freedom to the Armenians, which was a result.

Yardumian's works are now in the permanent repertoire of the Denver, Houston, Detroit, Boston, Kansas City, Indianapolis, Tucson, Philadelphia orchestras, and have been played by leading orchestras in Canada, Europe, Japan and Australia. The theme of his "Armenian Suite" is the signature of the Voice of America broadcasts behind the Iron Curtain.

Minneapolis-St. Paul's KDWB-TV's April Fool whimsy on its own "Foolish Forty" survey of alleged pop songs included such contrived titles (?) as "Pony Time" (Eddie Arcaro); "I'll Have Another Cup Of Coffee" (Brendan Behan); "How Deep Is The Ocean" (Lloyd Bridges); "Wild Juan" (Mrs. Peron); "Where The Buoys Are" (The Sailboaters); "Greener Pastures" (Vigoro); "I Wanna Love My Life Away" (Bernie Finch); "For Old Crimes Sake" (Mickey Cohen); "Cry" (Jack Paar); "Deep In The Heart of Taxes" (Ingemar Johansson); "Smiles" (Ed Sullivan); "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes" (Ed Murrow); "Why Dont's You Believe Me" (Nikita); "Don't Worry" (Jack Kennedy); "I Don't Wanna Cry" (Richard Nixon); "That's It, I Quit, I'm Movin' On" (Eisenhower); "You Can Have Her" (Arthur Miller); "Gee Whiz (Look At His Eyes)" (Floyd Patterson).

As part of America's goodwill program towards South America, Broadcast Music Inc. has commissioned a work, "Chiaroscuro For Orchestra," by longhair composer Henry Cowell at the request of the U. S. Embassy in Guatemala. The Cowell work will be presented to reps of the Guatamalan and U. S. governments this month for transmission to Jose Maria Franco Gil, conductor of the Guatamalan National Symphony Orchestra for performance in July. John J. Muccio, U. S. Ambassador to Guatamala, was approached last year about the commissioning of a symphonic work dedicated to that country and enlisted the aid of Mrs. Jouett Shouse, chairman of the President's Music Committee of the People-To-People Program. Mrs. Shouse asked BMI to foot the bill.

MGM Records is devoting April for a special promotion on the late country & western singer-composer Hank Williams. For its "Salute To Hank Williams Month," the diskery is putting on a special sales program drive on six newly repackaged and recataloged Williams' sets. Six illustrators have been commissioned to design the new albums which are titled "Hank Williams Lives Again," "I'm Blue Inside," "Luke The Drifter," "First, Last and Always," "Let Me Sing A Blue Song" and "Wanderin' Around." The sales pitch will offer one free album for every five purchased with special dating privileges and the regular 2% discount.

Dick Linke has shifted the homeoffices of his management firm to the Coast. He'll keep a N. Y. branch but the main operation will now be centered on the Coast because of his increased activities with the "Andy Griffith TV Show." Because of the shift Linke will reshuffle his talent stable. He's giving up singer Tommy Leonetti as of May 1 but he'll continue to manage Margaret Ann with the Ernie Mariani Trio and 11-year-old singer Robin Clark who records for Capitol.

Joe Csida, veepee for eastern operations at Capitol Records, addressed the spring convention of the Ohio Assn. of Broadcasters last week (7) on the subject of "Broadcasting In The Sixties." The meet was held at the Greenbriar, White Sulphur Springs, W. Va. Other speakers were Terry Lee, managing director of tv station WAGA, Atlanta, and Robert Taft Jr., majority leader of the Ohio House of Representatives.

International Music Calendar for 1961 lists 10,452 music events in 1,005 cities in 98 countries. Calendar, just released by the President's Music Committee of the People-to-People Program, is the only comprehensive compilation of world music and dance activity. Folk, religious festivities, symphony, choral, chamber music, opera, ballet and jazz are all included. Information is also given on the larger musical festivals, such as those in Salzburg, Edinburgh and Glyndebourne.

Jorgen Ingmann's "Apache," recorded by Metronome Records in Copenhagen and released in the U. S. via Atco, is now on a global kick. Claes Dahlgren, of Orion Development Corp., Metronome's N.Y. office, has arranged for releases of Ingmann's "Apache" in Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Mexico, New Guniea, Chile and Japan. Meantime, the Danish guitarist is negotiating for bookings in the U.S.

"African Waltz," Cannonball Adderley's instrumental disk hit that started in England, was composed by Galt McDermot of Montreal, who was co-composer of "My Fur Lady," McGill U.-musical that toured Canada professionally for a year in '57-'58. Galt McDermot Trio cuts cool jazz for Colin Kerr's Laurentien Records in Montreal.

MUSIC AT NEWPORT REPLACES JAZZ FETE

Newport, R. I., April 18.

Newport, which threw out the jazz festival this year, refusing to allow the Newport Jazz Festival to play because of last year's riots, is to have a "modern music show" at Freebody Park instead this summer.

Music at Newport Inc. inked a contract in New York, Friday (7), with a producer's group to stage a modern music show at the park. The entertainment, described by Eugene P. Faerber, prexy of MAN, as a diversified program of modern music, which will include jazz, will be presented June 30 and July 1, 2, 3.

Mex Orchs in Row Over 'Magic Violins' Billing

Mexico City, April 18.

Roberto Perez Vazquez, leader of the Villa Fontana Magic Violines, says that the musical unit of Arturo Romero is being erroneously billed in the Las Vegas Dunes Club as the "Magic Violins." The National Assn. of Actors will caution Romero from sanctioning use of the Villa Fontana name for his group. The unit is currently appearing in the Villa Fontana Restaurant in this capital.

Vazquez said that the similar billing is causing confusion in the U.S. and that his unit is apt to suffer financial losses because of confusion with the Romero unit made up of 11 violins and 2 pianos.

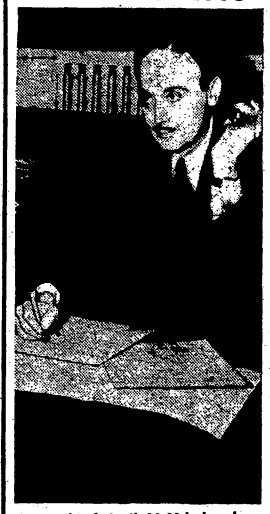
$5,000 in damages if illegal manufacture can be proved.

In attacking the counterfeiters, Celler said that "the manufacturers, distributors and dealers are denied their legitimate profits. The songwriters, artists, musicians and publishers are deprived of their royalties and the Federal Government is robbed of its excise and other taxes."

Several counterfeiting rings have been uncovered in the last year. Along with the MPPA, the American Record Manufacturers & Distributors Assn. has been active in tracking down the forgers who have been pressing large quantities of hit LPs, including those by Frank Sinatra, Shelley Berman, Bobby Rydell, etc. The counterfeiters can turn out the forged disks at slightly under 60c per copy.

Peter De Rose



The week of April 23-30th has been dedicated as "Peter de Rose Memorial Week," commemorating the 8th Anniversary of the death of the composer of "Deep Purple," "Wagon Wheels" and many other hits. His music will be featured on radio & TV and after 1 P.M., April 24th, Duffy Sq. in N.Y.C. will be known as "Peter de Rose Memorial Square" for that time. Among other tributes, nine water color paintings by Carrie E. Singhi, inspired by names of his great songs will be exhibited all week at the Leonardo de Vinci Restaurant at 60 W. 56, New York City. On Sunday, April 23rd, the Fordham Manor Reformed Church at Reservoir Ave. and Kingsbridge Rd. (where Peter's widow May Singhi Breen de Rose was baptized and attended Sunday School), the present minister, Dr. Donald Bruggnick, has requested the organist, Karen Brandenberger to play Peter's immortal "Deep Purple" as a prelude to the 11 o'clock service, his well known hymn, "God Is Ever Beside Me" and closing with "I Heard a Forest Praying," which he wrote for John Charles Thomas.

A fitting tribute to Peter de Rose, the beloved music man.

Kapp: Freddy Martin

Freddy Martin and his orch will now record under the Kapp banner. The moveover to Kapp marks a reunion for the maestro and the label's chief Dave Kapp. They worked together when Kapp was pop artists & repertoire chief at RCA Victor. Martin will bow on the Kapp label with two tunes written by Max Steiner for the Warner Bros. pic "Parrish": "Lucy's Theme" and "Paige's Theme."

Martin, who's been on the Capitol label for the past several years, has been concentrating on the LP field but Kapp plans to put him into both the pop single and packaged goods areas.

Kip: Judy Lynn, Others

Lonnie Kaufman, Kip Records prez, has added three singers to his label. They are Judy Lynn, Joey Randazzo and Tony Martinez.

Miss Lynn debuted on Kip last week with "A Year And A Day."

own company's releases. Since RCA has the most employees eligible to vote, it receives the most nominations."

Sutro added, "Since, in its first two years, this abuse was so flagrant, NARAS, this year, attempted to rectify matters somewhat by inviting a few choice record reviewers to participate in the nominations. This resulted in some of the off-brand labels receiving nominations, as well as the nominations of some of the less "popular" or "warhorse" releases of the majors. It is, however, clear that this did not solve the problem."

Sutro doesn't want his squawk to be construed as "sour grapes" but he questions whether such companies as Angel, Vanguard and DGG produced only one outstanding classical record in 1960 and did such labels as Mercury, Decca, Epic, Westminster and Everest, among others, produce nothing worthy of even a nomination.

In addition to the six classical Grammys, Victor swept the field in five other categories. Capitol and Columbia tied for second spot with six each, Warner Bros. and Verve came up with three each. Awards were made in 39 categories.

Negro singer Ray Charles scored in the personality race with four awards. Bob Newhart, Ella Fitzgerald and Henry Mancini walked off with three each.

The Grammys were awarded simultaneously on both Coasts last Wednesday (12) with dinner-dance fests at N. Y.'s Hotel Astor and Hollywood's BevHills Hotel. Vet recording exec Edward (Ted) Wallerstein emceed in Gotham and Mort Sahl carried the ball on the Coast.

Although it was an overall recording industry sponsored affaired in N. Y., two music publishing firms were listed as patrons. The firms were Leeds Music and the Music Publishers Holding Corp. The "patron" rap comes to about $400 a table. Each firm had its own table at the dinner.

Although this year's event wasn't televised, the NARAS entertainment committee latched on to the Modern Jazz Quartet, Dave Brubeck, Bill Dana and Paul Anka to entertain between the Grammy giveaways. Manny Albam batoned the orch for dancing and fanfares.

Fiedler Downbeat

St. Paul, April 18.

Would-be musicians would be wise to prepare for other types of vocation, according to Arthur Fiedler, Boston Pops conductor. Here to take part in a panel discussion at Macalester college, Fiedler suggested that the electronics field for one offers a much brighter future than music.

"What intelligent young man would work himself to death becoming a violinist only to find that he can get work for 26 weeks a year at best?" Fiedler asked, adding that "in electronics he's set for life."

German GEMA's Tape 'Espionage'

Wants To Collect Performance Rights From Privately-Owned Home Recorders

Frankfurt, April 18.

The weighty question of just whether GEMA, the powerful association for performance rights which is the equivalent of ASCAP in Germany, can invade the private home and collect the rights of its composers is making court history in Germany.

And the outcome, if GEMA can enforce its objectives, might make downbeat record industry history throughout the world.

In a matter which the record industry and the wire-recorder and tape recorder manufacturers refer to as "wire record espionage," GEMA is demanding that every sale of a wire recorder be reported to GEMA.

Its process which began in May 1955 is still being bandied about as to whether this is an invasion of private rights. Objective, of course, is that GEMA wants to check just how much music the 1,000,000 owners of wire recorders are duplicating on their home machines. And eventually, the strong union hopes to collect fees from the private owners, just as it does from the restaurant owners who play records of GEMA composers, and just as it collects from the television and radio stations in Germany.

One trial suit is now pending before the Berlin court, in which GEMA has demanded that a manufacturer provide the names of all the stores who are buyers of the wire recorders, and that the stores further provide the names of the ultimate purchasers of the machines.

The manufacturer maintains that this is going to build up a private spy organization for GEMA, and that it would be impossible for the union to invade each home and control the final music that the purchasers might decide to record. Besides, claims the manufacturer, the composers and musicians are surely not financially damaged by any private people who re-record their radio or television performances or make tapes of records. They maintain that instead, re-recording the music makes for added popularization of the tune and of the musicians playing it.

Throughout Europe, private ownership of tape and wire recorders is allowed, with no police or other controls as to who buys the machines and how or for what they are used. And, maintains the recording industry, for GEMA to enforce its fee collection against the private owners would be a bitter and unfair blow for the manufacturers and for the final buyers.

My Sincere Thanks NARAS

Unit Bookings for South America Cue Growing Market for U.S. Entertainers

South America is breaking wide open as a buyer of American talent. Until now they have been going in for name, but now the direction of the talent buyers seems to be in specific directions, including large units. Among those booked for South America are Jim Hetzer's "Jamboree Spectacular," the ice show current at the Thunderbird Hotel, Las Vegas, and a magic show to be produced by Noel Sherman.

In addition, the promoters are going after even bigger game. There is now an attempt being made to get names such as Dean Martin, Frank Sinatra and Dinah Shore to go into a Latin swing. Sammy Davis Jr. is already played there.

Thus far, name acts and units imported to South America by various promoters which includes radio stations in Brazil, have been name developed through disks. Generally, they have been doing quite well and now they're looking for other kinds of attractions as well.

The major agencies are now paying a great deal of attention to the South American market, despite the fact that there have been some indications that the same governments are trying to slow down the flow of coin for talent. Thus far, according to the agencies, promoters and the offices have been able to develop means of enabling the acts to get their money out of the countries involved.

The bulk of the talent buying is being done in Brazil with Rio de Janeiro and Sao Paulo being the two major cities involved. There is also a sizable market in Buenos Aires and Noel Sherman is starting his show in Santiago, Clule, which has been one of the countries not visited as frequently.

The difficulty with most layouts has been the scarcity of time available for SA stands. Most of the headliners have rarely played more than 10 days. Because of the vast expense of transporting units, it will be necessary to play longer tours in order to retrieve the high initial costs. It is therefore likely that there will be a lot of American show biz floating around the major South American cities for some time.

Presley's Hawaiian Feat

Honolulu, April 18.

Elvis Presley and his manager, Col. Tom Parker, have been kudosed in a house resolution adopted by First Legislature of this new state, expressing appreciation for the success of singer's one-man show on behalf of the USS Arizona Memorial Fund. Bash raised more than $52,000.

Benefit was presented between shooting skeds on Hal Wallis' "Blue Hawaii," locationing here for Paramount release.

Latin Quarter, N.Y., To Change Shows Twice Annually

The Latin Quarter, N.Y., is undergoing several show policy shifts. The first will be the temporary use of names to shore up the present program during its closing months, and the second will be a twice annually change of show, instead of the once-yearly shift.

Ed Risman, managing director, has found that since the bulk of his business comprises those who will repeat serveral times during the year, it's best that they be provided with something new to maintain interest. As now scheduled the two show-starts will be in April and in October. The next new bill is scheduled for October with Ron Lewis again producing.

Meanwhile, to buttress the box-office of the present layout, Risman is starting a headliner policy at intervals. He has the Crosby Bros. going in April 26. Deals are in the works for Eleanor Powell to come in May 27 and Liberace for an August or early September stand. Also booked are Patti Moore & Ben Lessy for a July engagement.

The LQ biz, according to Risman has been holding up excellently. However, with a new show not slated until the fall, Risman is bolstering the late spring and summer business with the name lineup. He feels that with the LQ type trade, probability is that the use of names appealing with the promsters during May and June, the out-of-town buyers plus the conventioneers may be alienated, thus he's sticking to the acts appealing to the more mature spenders.

Lionel Stander Trying To Reopen Chi's Chez Paree

Actor Lionel Stander is attempting to raise coin to reopen the Chez Paree, Chicago, with a policy of tab versions of Broadway musicals.

Stander has approached the Latin Quarter, N.Y. management about coming in on the venture, but latter has made no decision as yet.

500 Club, A. C., Kicks Off July With Frances Faye

The 500 Club, Atlantic City, is starting on its summer plans. Frances Faye has been booked for the week of July 1.

Operator Skinny D'Amato is presently enlarging the lounge where the bulk of activity will take place. The large room will be used probably on weekends and when top attractions become available.

Shots Fell 2 In Mpls. Key Club

Minneapolis, April 18.

Two nightclub patrons were shot and critically injured Friday (14) at the Key club, Minneapolis nitery where many top stars have appeared during the past three years. Incident occurred when Richard Hockett, a customer who had been evicted from the bistro, returned with a gun. Key club owner Henry Sabes, armed with a Browning automatic, ordered Hockett to drop his gun. When Hockett refused, Sabes shot twice. First missed but the second struck a tablesitter, Cecil W. Carter, who suffered a fractured skull.

When Hockett again refused to turn over his weapon, Sabes shot a third time, hitting Hockett in the neck. The two victims were taken to a local hospital. At the time of the shooting, there were 100 persons in the nightclub including two detectives on a routine check of the place. Episode happened so fast that the officers were unable to intervene.

Sabes was not held by police.

NO ADVICE IN DARVAS BOOK, N.Y. CT. RULES

The Appellate Division of the New York Supreme Court last week upheld a lower court ruling that dancer Nicholas Darvas' (& Julia) book, "How I Made $2,000,000 in the Stock Market," does not offer investment advice. Tome was published last spring by the American Research Council.

N.Y. State Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz had charged that the book was false. He also asserted that Darvas made only $216,000 over the period referred to by the book.

But in a four to one decision, the describes certain methods used in specific transactions, actual or fictional, which turned out successfully for the author." The tribunal also noted that the publication and accompanying promotional ads are not investment advice.

Indict Vegas Hotel Exec On Stock Fraud Charge

Allard Roen, manager and a part owner of the Desert Inn and Stardust Hotel, both Las Vegas, was among those indicted last week by a Federal grand jury in New York, for conspiring to defraud the public of $8,000,000 in stock through false and misleading literature. The leading figures in the indictment was Alexander Guterma, now serving a sentence of four years and eleven months on fraud.

Indictment stated that in 1955 Guterma created the Shawano Development Co., a holding corporation which, it was claimed, bought leases to various cheap properties and sold them to Shawano in return for which the corporation issued in excess of 8,000,000 shares and turned the stock over to the defendants. Stock was then sold to the public at $1 per share through misleading advertising, literature, and by local and longdistance telephone, the indictment said.

Allen & Rossi Switch

It's costing a lot of loot to get the comedy team of Marty Allen & Steve Rossi under the management they want. Steve Rossi who some years ago signed with Helen Noga, has made an out-of-court settlement with the personal manageress to the tune of $10,000. Recently, a court awarded Allen's former personal manager, Buddy Allen, $7,500 in return for winding up their managerial relations.

Following the payoff of Miss Noga, the team signed with Bullets Durgom of the management office of Durgom & Katz.

London Music Hall Shows Coming To N.Y. in 2-Way Talent Exchange

London, April 18.

Swap of artists and material has been fixed between New York's new Strollers Theatre-Club (housed in the old El Morocco and London's long-standing Players' Theatre. Deal was consummated after talks here between Strollers topper John Krimsky, and Don Gemmell and Reginald Woolley of The Players.

Said Krimsky before returning to New York: "Musichall shows of the kind they do at the Players are among my plans for the Strollers. I am returning to London, probably next month, to discuss further details with Gemmell and Woolley and to sign artists."

Comedienne Hattie Jacques, who combines her Players Theatre appearance with film roles, notably in the "Carry On" series, is among the performers whom Krimsky would like to have at his New York spot. Another is singer Marjorie Manners.

"I may also find an emcee for the show in London," Krimsky added. "Although it is musichall, the emphasis will be on champagne rather than beer, so I want a top name—somebody like Robert Morley, Peter Ustinov or James Robertson Justice. Hermione Gingold is very interested in the idea of being a femcee, but she is too tied up with other things to do the job for me for awhile."

Under swap plan, Krimsky will also have access to the Players library of Victorian and Edwardian vaude songs and their wardrobe of oldtime musichall costumes. In return, Strollers artists and material will be available to the Players.

There will also be an interchange of book-shows. The long-running "Boy Friend" started at The Players and Krimsky is interested in a plan which Gemmell and Wolley are mulling to receive "The Co-Optimists," a hit London musical of the 1920s.

Said Krimsky, who expects to gross $10,000 a week at The Strollers, where audiences for the stage shows will be limited to 199: "I believe there is a great need for this type of theatre in New York to handle musicals that are too small for Broadway and too big for an off-Broadway house."

What, No Bubble Gum?

Chicago, April 18.

London House will pick up the tab for all guests under eight years old accompanied by their parents on Sundays between four and eight o'clock.

Club, which features small combos and singles, currently has Jack Teagarden.

Maksik Back To Name Policy At Brooklyn Club

Ben Maksik's Town & Country Club, Brooklyn, is returning to the name policy, switching over from the steady use of units, which has been the fare at this eatery for several seasons. Due to start the headliner policy will be Billy Daniels going in for the September opening; Buddy Hackett to follow with Morty Gunty slated after that. More names are being lined up.

The policy represents a return to the former show format when Maksik played moderately priced names. When he enlarged his capacity, Maksik went into the superstrata of attractions going as high as $40,000 plus overages for Jerry Lewis and Judy Garland, with names such as Victor Borge pacted at $35,000. However, this policy didn't pay off for Maksik and he soon filed a petition for rearrangement.

Maksik afterward switched to non names and units. He has had long runs with his current occupant, "Jewel Box Revue" and "Smart Affairs." Maksik also switched to a near complete banquet business policy. Apparently, it's easier to book parties on the strength of a name rather than on a revue. Even with the "Jewel Box Revue" there were nights when he had to book another show in order to get certain parties. These departures apparently are forcing Maksik back into the headliner policy.

Minn. Repeals 'Blue Law' For Pro Football Kickoff

Minneapolis, April 18.

With major league pro football scheduled to bow here next fall with debut of the Minnesota Vikings, the Minnesota legislature has had to repeal one of the state's "blue laws" which prohibited football from being played on Sundays.

Repealer introduced in the state senate directs that grid battles must be played "in a quiet and orderly manner." Reference has nothing to do with the head-knocking on the field, however. It was written into the bill to prevent sports events from interfering "with the peace, repose and comfort of the community."

THANK YOU, McGUIRE SISTERS!

. . . Your recently concluded engagement in the Casanova Room, Deauville Hotel, Miami Beach, ended all too soon.

To each of you — Christine, Phyllis and Dorothy — we're very grateful for the superb job you did . . . and our thanks too, to Dave Barry, The Kane Sisters and Burt Farber.

We were delighted with your capacity audiences and as for your performance — MAGNIFICENT!

It is most gratifying to note that the Miami Area Amusement Editors and columnists agree with me — as did thousands of our Casanova Room patrons.

We'd LOVE to have you back — any-time, and MANY times!

Appreciatively,

"THE GREATEST: Were I given my choice as to which current show to catch in our town, if I could see only one, it would be the McGuire Sisters. There is only one word that adequately describes them, SENSATIONAL. They have a fantastically paced concert or musical revue, however you prefer to classify it. I can't help believe if there were more acts comparable to the McGuire Sisters available for the night club circuit, that this industry wouldn't improve considerably."

"With some clever surprises the McGuires make mucho music but they are showwomen, too. They blend into a harmonious treat for eye and ear."

VARIETY

"The trio played this room two years ago. Going on their impact then and on audiences at current stand they're one of the more solid big-dough acts. Opening night they garnered heavy reception with every number. It's smartly staged to allow for display of comedic bents, with the gal-in-the-middle, Phyllis, show-stopping via her artful carbonings of Judy Garland, Louis Armstrong among others." Lary.

Oldtime Sawdust Flavor Marks N.J. Preem of Beatty-Cole Bros. Circus

By GEORGE GILBERT

Cliffside Park, N.J., April 18.

With lotsa marquee lure in Clyde Beatty, Emmett Kelly and Captain Astronaut, the Clyde Beatty-Cole Bros. Combined Three Ring Circus opened a 36-day stand here Saturday (15) at the Rosenthal Bros.' Palisades Amusement Park. While the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus shapes as formidable competition across the river at New York's Madison Sq. Garden, it has produced little b.o. effect on previous circuses at this fun emporium.

For the Beatty-Cole Bros. show, staged under a tent, has that oldtime sawdust and spangles flavor that evokes childhood memories in oldsters and stirs the imagination of today's moppets. The $2.80 top is less than half Ringling's $6.50 and there's also free parking and free admish to the amusement park.

Prior to opening here, the Beatty outfit kicked off the season March 31 at Commack, L.I., and also played the New Haven Arena. Show was late in arriving from the New Haven stand; a number of acts and displays were omitted from a press preview, including Captain Astronaut who emulates the Zacchinis in a "shot-from-a-cannon" routine.

Sock Lion Tamer

Beatty himself, who shares top billing with sad-faced clown Emmett Kelly, scores per usual in putting a dozen lions and tigers through their paces. The veteran trainer makes it look easy as he cracks his whip and brandishes a chair while the jungle denizens are contribbing assorted feats.

Show has some fine aerial and high wire artists. Among the latter are The Great Wallendas, a legendary name in big top history. Six males and three femmes walk and ride bikes on the wire. Their sock routine is highlighted by a bit in which one of the girls balances on a horizontal pole at the top of a multi-man pyramid formation on the wire.

La Norma, billed as "Denmark's lovely goddess of flight," impresses with some breathtaking feats on the trapeze. Bob Top & Lauren who roller skate on a miniature platform high aloft, have a solid novelty act. Particularly effective is the climax where femme spins rapidly in mid-air suspended by her feet from her partner's neck.

'Slide For Life'

The Great Huberto's ascent up a steep wire is so suspenseful that his "slide for life" down the strand is almost anti-climactic. The Redondos, two males and a femme, are a corking good flying trapeze turn. They click handily with varied somersaults. Gran Moises, The Two Latinos and The Great Munoz are a trio of tight wire acts who contrib such feats as somersaults and rope jumping.

The Great Gallasso, aided by an unbilled femme assistant, stands on his forefinger. He does the routine on a variety of props in a theatrical atmosphere that wins aud attention. Honey Sisters (4), imports from England, are a fast moving acro troupe who excel in tumbling and varied gymnastics.

15 Clowns—Count 'Em

Clown contingent, led by Emmett Kelly, supplies some standard buffoonery. There are some 15 funmakers in all and their antics register mightily with the kids. Another slick novelty is The Carla Troupe, two males and a femme who cavort on a rotating ladder. The Frielanis, a mixed sextet of unicyclists, handle their wheels with precision.

Steve Fanning's elephants go through some of the classic routines in all three rings. Trainer's assisted by two girls billed only as Colleen and Patricia. Other animal acts include Brickles Dogs, Dante's Chimps and Farmer Don's Pigs.

Aerial Beckett, two girls on ropes, offer feats of derring-do while aloft. Rounding out the bill are the trampoline turns of The Jordan Trio and The Victors. The Pierots do some snappy plate spinning. Equestrians Mimi, Corinne and Lola were among the turns that were omitted on night caught.

Band under William Browning Jr.'s lusty direction provided some spirited backing. Overall production and staging were somewhat ragged at the preview performance, but the flaws undoubtedly will be ironed out.

Clyde Beatty-Cole Bros. Combined 3 Ring Circus

Presented by Irving and Jack Rosenthal. Frank McClosky, general manager; Walter Kernan, director and production supervisor; James O'Dell, supt. of elephants and menagerie; William Browning Jr., musical director; Frank Hunter, equestrian director. At Palisades Amusement Park, N.J., April 15-May 21; $2.80 top.

Acts: Clyde Beatty, Emmett Kelly, Captain Astronaut, La Norma, Bob Top & Lauren, The Great Gallasso, The Redondos (3), The Great Wallendas (9), The Great Huberto, Aerial Beckett (2), The Jordan Trio, The Pierots, The Victors, Mlle. Lalage, The Mimes (6), Colleen, Carla Troupe (3), The Frielands (6), Virginians Duo, Brickles Dogs, Dante's Chimps, Farmer Don's Pigs, Honey Sisters (4), Olga Ming, Ronnie Lewis Duo, Gran Moises, The Two Latinos, The Great Munoz, Mme. Tina, Greta Frisk, Steve Fanning's Elephants.

Mexico City, April 18.

Frank Sinatra is slated to arrive here tomorrow (Wed.) for a series of benefit performances which includes a gala April-in-Mexico ball at the Hilton-Continental with admission pegged at $120 per person. Lotsa hoopla is being readied for the singer's arrival and his reps have assured the local press that he'll grant interviews and provide reporters with all the time they require.

Biggest day on Sinatra's itinerary will likely be Thursday (20), with scheduled visits to the Mexican Rehabilitation Institute and an audience with President Adolfo Lopez Mateos and First Lady Eva Samano de Lopez Mateos. The President's wife is sponsoring the benefit ball at the Hilton-Continental which will be held Thursday evening. Also contributing their talents cuffo at the festivities will be Mexican singer Lola Beltran and Los Panchos.

The following day Sinatra is set for an appearance at the International Movie Theatre, again a gala event, with seats selling at $8 each. Saturday there'll be two pop priced shows. Ducats will be scaled from $1.20 to $2.40 per person. The singer, incidentally, is paying the plane fares to and from Mexico for himself and seven musicians. Lodgings and food are being provided by the hotel.

While there have been a flock of reports that Sinatra may make appearances in a theatre, night club and the National Auditorium, most sources are inclined to doubt the star will fill any commercial dates. It's believed he'll confine himself exclusively to the benefits.

Following Sinatra's performances, Mrs. Mateos hopes to initiate a series of annual functions featuring top international names which would aid the Mexican Rehabilitation Institute and the National Institute for Protection of Children.

DE-SABATH TORONTO, BUT NOT BURLESQUE

Toronto, April 18.

Exhibition of Sunday films between 1:30 p.m. and midnight goes before the City Council of Toronto for approval on April 24, with Famous Players (Canadian) and Odeon Theatres (Canada) Ltd. opening their Toronto houses immediately green light is given.

Legislation will also apply to Sunday productions at legitimate theatres, plus concert hall engagements, but will not permit Sunday burlesk, though managements of both striptease houses here complain that if their stage shows are acceptable the other six days in the week, why should they be discriminated against on Sundays? Mayor Nathan Phillips is lone disputant against "censorship measures" of Sunday burlesk performances.

Legal department has also been instructed to lift the Sunday 6 p.m. curfew on sports.

On Sunday films, Controller Donald Summerville, partner of FPC, continues to excuse himself from City Council discussions because he is a theatre-chain owner.

CANCEL PITT CONCERTS

Pittsburgh, April 18.

Dinah Washington cancelled out of her contract at Carnegie Hall here Friday (14). No reason was given by Dawn Productions which is producing the show.

Last week, Sol Hurok cancelled a Marion Anderson concert at Syria Mosque saying the star was "indisposed." Neither show had been heavy on its pre-sale campaign.

Inside Stuff—Vaude

Two Canadian girls and two American men are the first entertainers seen by UN troops in the Congo. They're thrush Mae Sagan of Montreal, magico Celeste Evans of White Rock, B. C., accordionist Luigi Apparati and xylophonist Joe Rankin. All have been working out of N. Y. Both femmes toured Korea and Japan in '53 for Canadian government and the Gaza Strip in '59 for UN. Latter brought them a year's work in Europe.

Two cases of entertainment licenses being refused hotels or restaurant operators in Ottawa were cited by Ald. Charles Germain last week. He and Ald. Ellen Webber are trying to get some nightlife in the Canadian capital. A pitch for it was also made recently by Paul Gormley, vet Ottawa VARIETY correspondent, on his weekly CBC radio program, "The Entertainment Theme."

Arthur Winarick, operator of the Concord Hotel, Kiamesha Lake, is probably one of the more important talent buyers in the country and has been for some years. However, until last week, he had never been in a night club, other than the one in his hotel. He broke his longstanding rule to view the antics of Allen & Rossi at the Copacabana, N. Y. Marty Allen is the husband of his longtime executive aide, Lorraine (Frenchy) Trydelle.

Louis Prima's Brother In 8G Federal Tax Jam

New Orleans, April 18.

Bandleader and former nitery operator Leon Prima was indicted Friday (14) by a Federal grand jury on charges of attempting to evade $8,345 in income taxes for the years 1954 and 1955.

The accused formerly operated the 500 Club on Bourbon St. and is the brother of musician Louis Prima.

Newhart's LP Routines Click in Carnegie Hall Reprise; Grosses $8,000

There are assets and liabilities to having a hit comedy album. Among the assets, in Bob Newhart's case, are that within a year after his first "Button Down Mind" LP broke through on the Warner Bros. label he's been a hot property in clubs, concert, tv guest shots and has been signed for a film and his own tv series. That his two LPs are potent drumbeaters for his concert work was evidenced at N.Y.'s Carnegie Hall Sunday evening (16) when he pulled in a near-capacity house at a $4.50 top for a $8,000 gross. The major liability is that the familiarity with the bulk of his material due to wide sales exposure on disks takes a lot of the edge from his performance.

Newhart knows the problem involved in having to rely on bits that have been grooved and during the second part of the program remarked, "This is a new one for those who are keeping count." The new ones, an agency man talking to JFK about the sponsorship of his tv press conference, a travelog dissertation, and a speech delivered by a corporation man welcoming new employees to the organization, are sharp and have lots of bite and will undoubtedly form the nucleus of his next LP excursion.

Among his album reprises were the retirement party, the griping G.I. in Revolutionary days, the man from the manufacturing firm trying to iron out the bugs in the Wright Bros. invention, the driving instructor and the Khrushchev tv arrival bit. Although they are stock stuff by now, Newhart sets 'em up neatly and precisely. His low-pressure style and timing are excellently calculated and his ear for vocal mannerisms is astute. The familiarity, however, breeds constraint instead of convulsions.

Preceding Newhart in each of the two acts is the Chad Mitchell Trio. The young vocal trio, assisted by Jim McQuinn on guitar, are excellent folk purveyors. They have bounce and wit as in "The Song Of The Temperance Union" and poignancy as in "Johnny" the sirring original of "When Johnny Comes Marching Home." Also big in the group's repertoire are "Puttin' On The Style," "I Do Adore Her," "Super Skier," "Moscow Nights" and "Lizzie Borden." The concert was promoted by Felix G. Gerstman who previously brought Mort Sahl and Shelley Berman into Carnegie. Gros.

Haymes' Cafe Exit Cues $3,000 Suit

Baltimore, April 18.

Vincent Bonolis, operator of the Mardi Gras, Baltimore, has filed charges with the American Guild of Variety Artists, against singer Dick Haymes, and Fran Jeffries, who it is alleged breached a week's contract for the spot. It's claimed that Haymes walked out despite the fact that all conditions of the contract by the management, including an augmented orchestra, had been adhered to.

A spokesman for Haymes, however, claimed that the orchestra was incapable of handling the musical arrangements that Haymes brought with him, and his artistic standing in the community would have been endangered had he worked under these conditions. Haymes also decried the dressing room arrangements in which he and his wife would have had to change in a room with musicians and without locks, he said.

The spot is also seeking to retrieve the costs of advertising and publicity. However, all AGVA contracts are "pay or play" and therefore each party is liable only for the face value of the pact.

Judy Garland Pulls 4,000 in Atlanta

Atlanta, April 18.

Judy Garland racked 'em up here Thursday (13) night at Municipal Auditorium, when 4,000 patrons at $5.50 top cheered her as she ran through her extensive repertoire of songs.

She was backed up by a 28-piece orchestra fronted by her own leader, Mort Lindsey, and a few sidemen pieced out with musicians from Atlanta Symphony Orchestra).

It was Miss Garland's first appearance in Atlanta.

Miss Garland sang in Atlanta under the auspices of the Atlanta Music Club, of which Marvin McDonald is concert manager. Music Club's scholarship fund benefited from her concert here. McDonald also booked her in Birmingham, where she sang Tuesday (11) and in Charlotte Saturday (15) and also has her scheduled in Greensboro, N. C.

N.Y. MIRROR DROPS CABARET REVIEWING

The N.Y. Mirror's venture into cabaret reviewing along the same formats as legit shows was shortlived. The new type of reviewing whereby the paper would run a revue of a show in the last edition and repeat in the four earlier editions the next day was stopped because of complaints by the N.Y. Newspaper Guild.

The Guild ruled that Mel Heimer, a Hearst syndicated columnist, who shared the reviewing stint with Frank Quinn, was doing a dual task. The Guild felt that Heimer was working for two separate employers in writing for the Mirror's nitery dept. The project therefore, was abandoned.

Sheraton-Blackstone, Chi, Returns to Flesh Policy

Chicago, April 18.

Sheraton-Blackstone Hotel, whose Mayfair Room once housed one of Chi's prime supper clubs, returned to an entertainment policy yesterday (Mon.) but this time in its plush Bonaparte Room. Latter has been a swank dining spa with a circa 1812 décor aspiring to be the chief south-Loop competition to the near north's famed Pump Room. Opening act is Hildegarde, who will be in till April 29.

Management of the hostelry hasn't set future acts for the room and apparently is waiting to measure response to the new policy.

Tradsters feel that the move is being made for its promotional and status value rather than as a major step into the nitery biz. The Bonaparte has been doing well as a class dinery.

The Camellia House of the Drake Hotel has been using solo-thrushes and has apparently been pleased with the results. Carmen Cavallaro and his trio are currently there.

Busiest Clubdater

Eddys' and came over to help Hahn highlight the date.

What keeps Hahn so busy in a business where 40 weeks is a lot of work for most acts? One is a very hungry manager-booker, Hahn says. The booker travels ahead of Hahn by several weeks, piles up almost as many miles as does his client.

The other factor probably is that Hahn is the only one of whatever he is. He parlays the trick shooting with a good line of comedy, some of it strictly golf, but much of it suitable for any stand-up comic.

More than 90% of his dates are at country clubs, but he takes an occasional night club date, has played gunslinger Draper in "Shotgun Slade" on tv, made a Universal short, and picked up a few extra chores thumping for Ballantine's ale.

These even bring a few residuals. There are also the usual endorsements for golfing equipment and apparel, and his connection with the Paradise Country Club, Crystal River, Fla. All in all it's an attractive profession, offering unlimited travel, all the dates you can fill, and is open to any entertainer, especialy if he is Paul Hahn.

New Acts

HARRY BABBITT (3)
With Cathi Hayes, Debby Kay
Songs
40 Mins.
Harris, Anaheim, Cal.

In a fast-paced show worked in a room offering many handicaps (lighting, sound, seating, etc.) Harry Babbitt makes his return a surefire click. It's a show that can be suited to any room but ideal to meet the demands of a lounge act. With misty-voiced Cathi Hayes and pert Debby Kay as vocal and visual support, Babbitt has a pair of femme chirpers who offer appeal to the mastiff side and make for a well-rehearsed and fast 40-minute show.

Babbitt, whose Kay Kyser years ("Kollege of Musical Knowledge") and lately on tv shows over NBC, have given him a stature in show biz, shows a youthful, virile physical appearance, and his strong, vigorous, yet mellow pipes should please the femme trade. Act, with material written by Alan Copeland, is fresh, smartly staged and top drawer throughout. Break-in at Harris' has few kinks; even with obvious electrical handicaps (lights and mike) it had machine-gun pacing and lagged little if any.

Vet entertainer Babbitt takes his intro through Miss Kay and Miss Hayes warbling "I'm Just Wild About Harry" followed by Babbitt's "Won't You Surrender?" Singer then spotlights his two charmers, both of whom can belt a ballad or tinkle a tempo. Miss Hayes does an uptempo turn on "Birth of the Blues" and Miss Kay a poignant, versatile "Come Rain Or Come Shine."

Some of the former Kay Kyser melodies are given a few bars in a medley, done nostalgically, as they sing Dorsey, Goodman and Miller band tunes that get boffo response. Medley, titled "Why Don't They Bring Back the Bands?," is topped by the hit of the show, when Babbitt and the girls run through old standards, in uptempo, as they imitate various current hit vocalists and groups.

Babbitt has conceived two shows for his upcoming bookings, each of 40 mins. Second show is entirely different in routine with more solos by the femme which, although providing plenty of interest, tends to dissipate interest in Babbitt as featured performer. A bit of juggling with some of the numbers from the second show into the first would help both turns. Miss Hayes' kookie version of "Frankie and Johnny" and Miss Kay's delightful "Wouldn't It Be Loverly" are showstoppers in themselves but it's Babbitt's windup on "Shanty Town" that had the crowd asking for more. Act should hit big in smart room or lounge as top-billed but could use more attractive gowns for gal singers.

In room worked, lighting was poor, sound system practically non-existent, pillars blocked view of many diners, and yet rope was up for all three shows. Babbitt's warmth of personality and sincere vocalizations give show fine headliner but addition of girls make it a crowd-pleaser attraction.

BOB GROSSMAN
Folk Songs
30 Mins.
Unicorn, Hollywood

Good showmanship, excellent pair of pipes, new material international in scope and perfect timing mark Bob Grossman as a fireball performer with only exposure needed to make him a No. 1 folk balladeer. Only 19, the newcomer savvies the showmanship angle with tight-fitting sport shirt and banana-peel tight trousers that should get the femme interest. His fingering on the guitar lacks nothing as he melodizes and vocalizes "Tall Hope," "Jerry," "La Quince Brigada," "Hey Zhankoye," "The Sweetest Wine" and "Everybody Loves Saturday Night." Latter eventually had packed house joining in a la Mitch Miller as Grossman led them in singing ditty in French, Spanish and Hebrew versions.

Singer's disk, on Eureka label, may aid bookings if given airplay but it is in the personal realm that Grossman sparkles. He sells a song in humor as well as one of tragedy and his versatility should make him a success in near future.

BROOKFIELD & HARTIG
Comedy
20 Mins.
One Fifth Ave., New York

Break-in stand of this prepossessing man-woman chichi satire entry augurs certain orbiting on the small room circuit, plus attendant discerning tele buildup. But once around they're apt to shrink from view unless they use current tryout for some doctoring.

Jennifer Brookfield and Herb Hartig are both appealing actors, she also being a decorous (and undumb) blonde, he somewhat reminiscent of Shelley Berman in style. Their framework is tandem sketches and monology, employing themes blandly cheerful rather than audacious. One seg has femme in spex as "Dr. Joyce Uncle" in rib of N.Y. video counselor Joyce Brothers, with "Uncle" billed as ex-resident psychologist at Vic Tanney's. Bit evolves more farcical than biting, is modestly effective, and for audience outside Manhattan likely to have even less effect. As soon-to-be-marrieds, in another sketch, they point up telephonically how misunderstandings arise between lovers, but the piece is rather patent.

A more dependable chuckler is Hartig's string of male seduction gambits, followed by Miss Brookfield's catalog of distaff demur lines, which Hartig in turn sequels by lining out the standard comebacks for saving male face after the turndown. If not too original, bit still has sound ha-ha value.

Couple still have to work on their rapport, but that's natural at this early stage. More relevant is the need for some fresher viewpoints and scripting. Potential otherwise is all there. Pit.

FIA KARIN
Songs
17 Mins.
One Fifth Ave., New York

Fia Karin, Juilliard-trained, and relying on 88 and conga drum accomp in this situation, offers a fresher-than-most songalog, but can stand to loosen up. Particularly in an intimate setting, such as this, she goes about it too intensely and resultantly projects a harsh vocal-visual quality.

The emphatic attack could be part nervousness, of course. Whatever, the need, if she's to click in the boites, is to ease the pedal and "feel" the lyrics more. As for booking projects, she doesn't need a specialized room, but intime spots are apt to take more to her style and such titles as "I Wish You Love," "You've Changed" and "Man That Got Away." Pit.

JEANNIE WOODSON QUARTET
Songs, comedy, dancing
25 minutes
Tidelands, Tucson

Blonde Jeannie Woodson, long a mainstay with the Fabulous Woodsons, branched out with her own outfit here in Tucson. Known heretofore for her dancing and baton-twirling, Miss Woodson demonstrates she can do a convincing job as vocalist, in addition to her talents as a dancer-baton-twirler.

Her vocal of "Summertime" leads into a Basie-type rhythm by pianist Bob Marquis, followed by "Pretty-Eyed Baby," which spotlights a Satchmo vocal and some some tight-muted trumpet by Cass Preston. Miss Woodson comes back with "Lover Man" to big palming and begs off with "I Want To be Happy." Ver.

PARIS & CLAIR
Dance
15 Mins.
Horizon Room, Pittsburgh

In break-in date here, Paris & Clair reveal excellent potential and may be the next great dance team on the cafe circuit. While not quite on a par with the top teams like Chiquita & Johnson or Darvas & Julia they show that, with continued progress, they can be the adagio darlings of the coming years.

Femme is a dazzler who looks and talks like a Gabor. Paris, her male counterpart, handles her in the lifts with grace and poise. A lot of time and effort has gone into this act and it should be very rewarding. Bookers of cafes and tv spectaculars should catch this act pronto. Lit.

Copacabana, N.Y.

Andy Williams, Marty Allen & Steve Rossi, Douglas Clarke, Johnny D'Arc, Paul Shelley & Frank Marti Orchs; $5.50-$6 minimum.

Jules Podell's kellerkabaret should swing with a solid beat to the cash register with the current bill headed by Andy Williams and Allen & Rossi. They bring in two diverse sets of customers. Williams, with a disk backlog of topsellers, has a lure for the younger set and the more mature citizens who go way back to Kay Thompson & The Williams Bros.

On the other hand, Marty Allen & Steve Rossi are a rapidly rising comedy turn with a linealogy which includes long sojourns at the Concord Hotel in the Catskills. Many of the mountain vacationists were there opening night, and it's likely they'll be very much in evidence as the team's run progresses.

Williams is an accomplished singer as well as an affable and personable gent who makes the pewholders at home from his opening gambit. His metier is in the familiar tunes, but with hep and knowing treatments. At several points in his act, he was on the verge of starting a community sing.

At all times Williams has a strong rhythmic motivation and, when necessary, a delicacy and sublety in interpretation. He's an always interesting performer, not only on the basis of his songselling, but in his selection of tunes. He ranges from Kurt Weill to the nostalgic efforts of Tin Pan alley. In all cases, his work is highly satisfactory to the congregation.

Allen & Rossi are, by many standards, comparative newcomers, despite the fact that this is their third trip to this spot. They are approaching headline status, so great is their growth in the comedy field, in their brief partnership span, they've built a sizeable following. Allen, (ex & De Wood) partnered with Steve Rossi, who used to be the house singer at the Sands, Las Vegas.

It's a Martin & Lewis type arrangement, with Rossi supplying highly developed and pleasing pipes, and Allen providing a wide variety of comedy, some of it being fairly heady for the Copa crowd. Allen has a tour-de-force in this episode. He starts with his trademarked "Hello Dere" and thence into zany kinds of impressions, comedy poems and, something new, dancing. It all adds up to excellent cafe hilarity.

Tahoe Harrah's

Lake Tahoe, April 14.

Johnny Mathis, Pompoff Thedy Family (3), Dorothy Dorben Singers & Dancers, (14), Leighton Noble Orch (20); no cover, or minimum.

Johnny Mathis is the first of the younger set headliners to play this 700-seat swankery, and the name is proving a potent b.o. lure. And the reason is apparent: he sells. Albeit Mathis made the local scene before when he set a high jump record in a track meet at the University of Nevada in Reno in 1955 as a member of the San Francisco State College team, this marks his nitery debut for the Reno-Tahoe area.

In his 45-minute songalog he covers it all—with the exception of rock 'n' roll—and he does it niftily. Accent is definitely for the mature tablers, such as this room attracts. Working smoothly and easily, he essays a multitude of titles from "Ring the Bell" to "Maria."

Enunciation is studied with strong projection. Headliner makes with a few words before the exit numbers, but it's brief. Numbers offered on night caught included "There Goes My Heart," an impressive "Misty," "Wild Is The Wind," and a sensational interpretation of "Maria." Leighton Noble augmented his orch to 20 for the Mathis date, and his men play the full show in usual commendable style.

The Pompoff Thedy Family, also new to the Tahoe scene, score heavily in a well-rehearsed slapstick routine that's a natural for both saloons and video. With two clowns and a straight man, the act is Continental in flavor with a variety of props, i.e., spinning toupes, a duck that sings on command, oversized shoes, and a violin duet on one instrument. Offering is face-paced and commands continued yocks.

Opener spot is handled by the 14 Dorben Dancers & Singers in a colorful production on a "Belle of the Ball" theme with costuming and backdrops accenting the colonial theme. Choreography again rates the plaudits.

Louis Prima & Keely Smith set to open April 20. Long.

Flamingo, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, April 13.

Joe E. Lewis, Pat Suzuki, Don Kirk, Flamingoettes (12), Nat Brandwynne Orch (12); presented by Morris Landsburgh, produced by Dave Victorson; choreography, Lorenzo Maldonado; asst. choreographer, Jerry Jackson; $4 minimum.

Joe "Evergreen" Lewis is back with an assortment of stories, parodies, and one-liners in a classic-type act which apparently will never wear out the welcome mat. He revives some of his big yockpullers and tosses in some freshies (including two John F. Kennedy songs) which stamp him indelibly with the living legend category. As usual, he is spurred to the finish line by the flexible piano artistry of Austin Mack.

Pat Suzuki gets 100% billing with the comedian's comedian in this outing, and the refreshing personality of the Japanese-American songstress is an ideal billbalancer. First-nighters were enthusiastic in their reception of her songalog: "Make Believe," "Poor Butterfly," "St. James Infirmary," "Don't Look At Me That Way," "Black Magic," "You'd Better Go Now," and a medley of Rodgers & Hammerstein numbers from her Broadway vehicle, "Flower Drum Song." Special arrangements by Peter Matz and staging by Hugh Lamberts are a strong assist.

A production number saluting Miss Suzuki's Broadway hit is the curtain-raiser; it features the big voice of Don Kirk, with Yoshiko Kasao and Carmen Gonzales as the decorative courtesans. Lorenzo Maldonado did the choreo; Nat Brandwynne's fine orch (12) backs the show, in through May 10.

Duke.

International, N.Y.

Alan Gale, Fran Warren, Boots McKenna Line (12), Mike Durso & Aviles Orchs; $6 minimum.

Alan Gale is boniface Jack Silverman's potent counter for the post-Lent-Form 1040, etc., slough. And a bus party from Camden, N.J., swelling last Wednesday's (12) preem turnout, augurs the b.o. form figured for this Broadway basement through the next three weeks.

Gale is, of course, an annual installment here, and a stout entry for the Catskill-Miami Beach shuttlers who dig him in or out of season. They know him like a book, and the affection is boundless and mutual. For the first-nighters, at least, he had member-of-the-family status, and the attendant house party esprit conditioned his session all the way for strong and consistent appreciation.

It produced a suitably loose display of his harkback waggery—the anecdotal and dialect retrospectives and standard family trade topicals that for years have cushioned him. He worked 'em over effortlessly and artfully, and even where he was anticipated he had the stuff in reserve to prime fancy response. Doubtless he had the crowd set up for almost any serving he chose, but he didn't abuse even with gamier ploys, which were kept in proper gemutlichkeit key.

If he can be faulted, it's in his tendency to push the glycerin a bit much via the warbling embellishment and his "born to entertain" getaway. These are staples of his and get a patient hearing, but they do make the going a bit sticky.

Fran Warren, mellower of voice and manner, and looking good, plies her belt-and-ballad book with a diligence that copped lively mitt praise to perhaps compensate for the crowd buzz. Her spot was predictably a toughie—any chirper here, in fact, has her work cut out. That and some strident orchestration aside, Miss Warren has achieved a surer command of her voice and in general delivers with a moxie she didn't always have.

Hotel Plaza, N.Y.

Eartha Kitt with Maurice Levine, Dorothea Freitag, Danny Barrajanos, Paul Palmieri; Ted Straeter and Orch and Mark Monte's Continentals; $10 premiere dinner; $3 and $4 cover.

Eartha Kitt is in at the Plaza's Persian Room at $4,000 a week plus percentage-of-the-covers and should do right by Neal Lang's plushery. The songstress with the feline mien is no stranger here and knows the clientele. More importantly, she knows her songalog and gets everything across to fullest returns in a generous hour's repertoire that ranges from her typical s.a. items to Israeli, Swahili, Turkish, French, Spanish and Afro-Braziliano.

A canny performer, she projects in an engaging variety, changing pace and mood and minimizing a former penchant for too much of the femme fatale. The admixture of languages and themes makes for extra values.

Miss Kitt is a painstaking performer. Her arrangements are top-notch and interpretations versatile. Dorothea Freitag, her special accompanist, is credited for the special arrangements with Arthur Harris; Maurice Levine is her own conductor, as are the augmented drummer and guitarist.

Miss Kitt is handsomely accoutred (Ritter Bros. and William McHone get billing for the furs and gown). Withal, the Katharine Dunham alumna has come a long way since Monte Proser first presented her on the Gotham scene at the now extinct La Vie En Rose (today's Sardi's East site) exactly 10 years ago.

Her opening set is in the trademarked Kitt manner of ballad and sly entendre. Then follow the linguistics interlarded with her standout disk items such as the inevitable "Si Bon" and "Uska Dara" (Turkish).

Per usual, the Ted Straeter dansapators get the customers on the floor and same goes for Mark Monte's sprightly Continentals. John Fossati, the maitre d', had his hands full at the special $10 preem night and traffic augurs well for the duration. Abel.

Chicago, April 10.

"The Best of Lerner and Loewe" with The Showtoppers (6); produced by Ruby Newman; directed by Lee Daniels; Kenny Black Orch (5); $2.50 cover weekends, $2 weeknights.

After experimenting with a variety of formats for the Polynesian Room, the Edgewater finally has come up with a properly frothy show for this large stage and room. The three girls and three young men who compromise The Showtoppers unit are capable novices with good voices and a fair amount of spirit. And, of course, the Lerner & Loewe catalog is a cinch click in competent hands, and the group treats it with the respect it deserves.

What the show lacks is production values. It's all songs and singing, and the presentation would benefit from some real dancing or comedic pace changers in lieu of the rather basic choreography. The bits of footwork in "I Could Have Danced All Night," "Get Me To The Church on Time" and "With A Little Bit of Luck" are deft takeoffs on the original stage business but end up as only terp appetizers in this presentation.

The male members of the sextet are the strongest element of the act, particularly Ron Brandt, who shows some comedic flair in the delivery of several of his numbers. Al Lavorato and Frank Schulte handle the L&L standards ably in virile musical comedy style. Distaffers Carole Marsh, Jean Palmerton and Lorie Walsh show verve and vitality.

Kenny Black orch manages a remarkably big sound for a five-piece unit in backing the show and also delivers topnotch dansapation.

Bill is in till April 30. Mor.

Slate Bros., L.A.

Los Angeles, April 13.

Carmen McRae, Mickey Manners; 2-drink minimum.

New jazz-comedy bill at this boite balances smoothly, although both Carmen McRae, sepia songstress headliner, and Mickey Manners, N. Y. comic in a local debut, took a while to warm to the room at Wednesday's (12) opener.

Miss McRae, in a return booking, touches only briefly on her usual far out jazz and vocal gyration styles, concentrating chiefly on mood ballads. "If Love Is Good to Me" shows top technique, while a closing jump tune, "Who's Got the Last Laugh Now?," scored heavily. "The Ship I Sing" is solid and she displays unique styling on "Our Love Is Here to Stay," latter with a slight "scat" rhythm.

Manners impresses with fresh, clean material that indicates preparation. Opening quietly with a sober bit on thoughts before the opening, he builds into a good takeoff on sex and films. He scores well with patter, playing on words and names of special local interest. High spot is a clever skit as a tv western marshal.

AGVA prexy Joey Adams intro'd Manners with gags of his own. Miss McRae is backed by her own able trio, Bill Rubinstein, piano; Walter Perkins, drums, and Bob Cranshaw, bass.

Pair are in for two weeks with options. Dale.

Hotel Roosevelt, N.O.

New Orleans, April 14.

Frankie Laine, Reed & Bobbi Royale, Charlie Spivak Orch (12); $2.50 weeknight min.; $4 Sats.

An ovation greeted Frankie Laine opening night (13) at Seymour Weiss' plush nitery. A capacity aud didn't have enough even though singer was on some 50 minutes. He had the oldsters as well as youngsters applauding all his tunes. They were Laine fans and he gave them his all.

Laine is a hard-working, highly effective tunesmith with an undeniably strong sell. He has the same impact on local niterygoers as such personalities as Sophie Tucker, Jimmy Durante and Joe E. Lewis, yet he is an inspiring, rare and vibrant talent. He works his songs with feeling, sometimes with tenderness as when singing "The Green Leaves of Summer."

Since his fame was built on disks, Laine reprises some of his hits—"Moonlight Gambler," "My Desire," "Wild Goose," "Shine" and "Mule Train." He couldn't miss and the end of the lyrics were forgotten in many instances in favor of hefty mitting.

Laine also scores heavily with his newest platter, "Wanted Man," plus "Rocks and Gravel" and a lusty "When the Saints Come Marchin' In." He could do no wrong opening night, and had to beg off.

Supporting Laine in show are Reed & Bobbi Royale, a polished terp team who also register solidly. They run the gamut of ballroomology and are skillful and pro in what they do.

Charlie Spivak and his musical crew background the show and play for dancing. His orchestra is a smooth, listenable aggregation capable of satisfying in all departments. Sound musicianship is evident in the tight integration of his sidemen, while excellent arrangements by Spivak gives his outfit a bedrock foundation.

Spivak personally wins acclaim with his trumpeting of "Fascination," "Summertime" and other faves.

Show runs until April 26. Liuz.

Statler-Hilton, Dallas

Dan Rowan & Dick Martin, Rich Bono Orch (10); $2-$2.50 cover.

Rowan & Martin are back for a second date at the plush Empire Room. In their 1957 date they were known as 'rising young comics.' At a capacity opening (13) zany duo proved to be among the top comedy teams extant.

The 50-minute stint reprises many former sketches, the format's the same, but the timing and delivery is flawless to bring running laughs. It's clean material, but includes some double entendre bits that leave it to the auditors—and they respond. After Rowan's opening monolog and some banter bits, Martin reprises his "Old Man River" vocal, with grammatical corrections from Rowan interspersed. Hilarity embraces a beer drinking stunt by Martin, spoofing of tv commercials and a Shakespearean effort by Rowan, with his partner as a drunken ringsider heckles. Situation stuff scores heavily, especially a new bit of interviewing a medic on tv.

Rich Bono's house band cuts the show neatly. Act runs two weeks, with Jane Morgan due April 27. Bark.

Basin Street East, N.Y.

Ella Fitzgerald, Bill Dana, Derek Smith Trio; $3 music charge.

Ella Fitzgerald is one of the few pop singers around today who has achieved global stature and has managed to hold on to it. In this jet age, she's able to hop around the world in comparative traveling ease spreading her melodious gospel before an international audience that can't seem to get enough of her. An example of this jet-made world-wide circuit was evidenced by the fact that she closed in Israel Tuesday (11) and was at Basin Street East two days later (Thurs.) in fine vocal form.

The new crop of recording popsters can learn a lot from her. Without vocal gimmickry and without physical embellishments, she sings 'em out strong and true. Her control over ballads and the rhythm items is a constant wonder and delight. On for over an hour, she never lets up, and although there seemed to some opening night jitters on her part, it was a set that wrapped up the overflow house for a solid payoff.

Her repertoire, too, is distinctive. Opening with a swinging "On the Sunny Side of the Street," Miss Fitzgerald easily moves around diversified material as "On a Slow Boat to China," "Can't Help Loving That Man," "People Will Say We're in Love," "Anything Goes," "Too Close for Comfort," "Mr. Paganini" and the socko wrapper-upper "Mack the Knife."

There's also a fine salute to Harold Arlen to tiein with her new Verve package, "The Harold Arlen Song Book." In this instance her commercial for the platter is warranted. Miss Fitzgerald gets a handy backing from a quartet consisting of drums, bass, guitar and piano.

Bill Dana's job here isn't as easy. He's a low-pressure comic who has to fight hard to break through in this large room. Dana is a clever fellow with a humorous insight but he needs a stronger delivery push in these environs. His Jose Jiminez characterization is familiar and likeable but it wears thin after a while. He manages to sustain some interest by switching from the Jiminez dialect to his straight Dana personality but there never seems to be a buildup for that solid yock payoff.

His astronaut segment comes off best, probably because of the topicality of the Soviet breakthrough, and it showed that his material can be sharp and current and can have proper impact when the delivery is strong. Gene Wood gives him an okay straight-man assist during an interview segment.

The Derek Smith Trio (piano, bass, drums) is fine in its brief instrumental offerings. Gros.

Le Cabaret, Toronto

Toronto, April 11.

Patti Leeds, Frank Manzell Trio; $1.75 cover.

First chanteuse to snag a four-week contract at the posh Le Cabaret, Patti Leeds stayed on for 40 mins., had to give three encores to a final begoff at opener.

The charming redhead opens with a bouncy "Just One of Those Things," switches to slow tempo in "Can't Help Loving That Man," presents a saucy "Big Daddy" and a cute "100 Years from Today," an oldie medley of big-band days including "Get Me Some Money," "Marie" and "Chattanooga Choo-Choo," and gets off with "Man of the Hour," written for her by Peewee Irwin.

Miss Leeds' three encores, complete with guttural inserts, were "Some of These Days," an uptempo "Dinah" and "Up a Lazy River," in alternate slow and swing style. Her arranggers are Joel Herron and Ange Calea.

Miss Leeds is headed toward being a big-time chanteuse. Her engagement here lasts till April 29. McStay.

GUS LAMPE BUYS INTO ARIZ. MANOR, PHOENIX

Gus Lampe, former talent booker for the Schine Hotels and Theatres, has purchased an interest in the Arizona Manor, Phoenix. His last position with the Schines was as executive manager of the Cocoanut Grove of the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles.

Currently one of the inn's rooms has a dance policy. Whether this will be expanded under Lampe's aegis, hasn't yet been determined. Lampe is g.m. of the Arizona Manor.

Hotel Roosevelt, N.Y.

Lester Lanin Orch (14); Al Conte Trio; cover, $2-$3.

Some inkling as to the draw of Lester Lanin, playing his first public engagement in New York City, is found in the crowds he attracted even on the night caught last Thursday (13), one of the wettest this spring. Hence, it would appear that John G. Horsman, general manager of the Hotel Roosevelt, has come up with another winner in the Roosevelt Grill.

Lanin, President Kennedy's personal choice to play at the recent Inaugural Ball and who has played leading society functions of the Fords, Astors and DuPonts, might almost be described as dance band Stokowski. Once one gets over the novelty of seeing him in his energetic directing, which he obviously enjoys, the patron soon realizes that here is danceable music, poured out so smoothly that even the poorest dancer falls in with the swing.

Lanin, who has turned his dance bands into a huge biz that employs some 800 musicians, has a large catalog and during a period of three hours seldom does a repeat. The older tunes are done with much aplomb.

Among the oldies are such tunes as "Crazy Rhythm," "Make Believe," "Sheik of Araby" and "Beautiful Doll." Also in his repertoire and played like the first time out are "Back Home in Alabama," "I Ain't Down Yet," from the "Molly Brown" musical; "Embraceable You," "Many Splendored Thing" and "After You're Gone."

Lanin has a couple of heavyweights in his combo — Chubby Silver, saxaphonist, who weighs nearly 400 pounds, and Big Chief Russell Moore, an Indian and trombonist who tips the scales at 370. Latter handles all vocal chores. Outfit has two 88'ers, with their pianos set side by side. Lanin brings up individual musicians for solos, including his chief violinist, and the aforementioned sax player. But mostly he concentrates on playing solid dance music.

Per usual, the Al Conte Trio gives the Lanin crew a breather with their dance rhythms. Currently, they are spotlighting Latin-American music. Conte's pianistics stand out. This trio seems like part of the lease here, having been in the room for six or seven years. Wear.

Beauville, Miami Beach

Miami Beach, April 16.

Barry Ashton's production of "Playmates In Paris" with Jay Kenneth, Nita & Pepi, Carla Lucerne, Marcel Le Bon, Martha Aguilar, Carole Dreyfus, Shari Martel, Playmates (8); staged and choreographed by Ashton, costumes Lloyd Lambert, Les Rhode Orch; $5.50 food or bev. minimum.

Following an in-and-out winter and run of names, the Deauville's Morris Lansburgh seems to have hit a rich vein of paydirt with this Barry Ashton low-budget package —a budget that in winter, couldn't pay half the fee of a topper or a strong "added attraction." The big click of this imaginatively staged revue augurs a lookaround by other operators for like ideas. Only the Carillon—from which inn Lansburgh got his inspiration—has such a package, the town's longest running show, now in its third year and produced by Lou Walters with all of his usual play-up-the-gals flair. And not so oddly enough, the two are immediate neighbors on hotel row.

First night saw the first complete sellout of the Casanova room since it reopened last December. With it, there was a strong sprinkling of the spenders normally attracted only by oppers. What they all saw was a package that lived up to its Gallic title, with just the right amount of the fancy stuff, complete to two beauts who display their upper-reaches to delight the males and pop the femmes orbs. The "Playmates" are leggy-lookers who can dance as well. The bare-breast moments are handled briefly and in good taste after the auditors are readied by a zingy opener to set the Parisienne flavor.

The Deauville's always had a ready-made stage for this sort of production, with extras in backstage and lighting equipment. Ashton smartly, has taken advantage of the technical equipment. For instance, there's a live-steam curtain, long unused, that he utilizes with inventive bair in a patterning which has the femmes gliding in and out of the misty setting for a sock visual impact. There's also the use of black-lighting in which a set of multi-colored rubberized strands are ingenuously manipulated by the dancers to make it all look like a Mondrian painting come to exciting, moving life. Eye-catchers in their solo spots in these and other production numbers are Martha Aguilar, Carole Dreyfus and Shari Martel.

The topper to it all is Jay Nemeth, one of the most skilled ventro-technicians seen on this jaded nitery run in years. His vis-a-vis is an appealing dog, whose face is manipulated in a manner that makes him seem alive. The "talking hound" commands attention and laughs throughout the stint, via bright crossfire "dialogue" and song-duets. Plus some yockmaking mugs—by the "dog" and one liner. Nemeth is the big hit of the package.

Coming near Nemeth in show-stop quality is the acro-adagio team of Nita & Pepi. A handsome pair, the gals one-hand balancing atop Pepi's head is a wham exercise that peaks their twists, slides, spins and acro-talents.

Carla Lucerne is a charmer, a highly attractive blonde who belts out a big-beat and turns to a soft love-chant with equal vocability. Marcel LeBon is an amiable Gallic chanter with some personable angles in which he works around ringside, hitting solidly with special lyrics.

The whole is staged with taste and originality. Costuming is clever and expensive looking. Ashton may have to run the show for some weeks before amortizing that cost. The affair runs a tight 70 minutes. Going on the big-click at both preem shows, it looks like this four-week booking may be extended into another long-runner: it's a cinch for solid biz, what with the summer - tourist and convention season now on, the types who'll be most likely to proceed to a "daring" display of the femmes in the built-up Parisienne rep; the solo acts are a big, big plus. Lary.

Bon Soir, N.Y.

Phil Foster, Sylvia Syms, Little, Dane & Mason, Three Flames; $5 minimum.

The Bon Soir is per se a versatile room able to showcase the far out as well as the more worldly talents. Its intimate confines start me-and-thee relationships between performer and audiences and enable an act to get a tremendous rapport.

For this occasion, the Bon Soir has a new face, Phil Foster. It's a different part of town for the comedian who has generally proclaimed his Brooklyn genesis to uptown as well as out-of-town audiences. He has the accent of the natives of that borough, and a style of humor indigenous to that area. They're equally acceptable in these environs.

Foster tosses in some localisms including a few lines on the folk singers who were driven out of the precinct several days prior to the opening. Although it's a new and strange sound to the spot, he scores heavily to prove that Brooklyn-based lines have even broader acceptability than previously believed.

Sylvia Syms is a veteran in this spot. In manner of operations she's diametrically opposite that of Foster, assuming a hep and knowing air along with fat-girl's jollity. Although assuming the presentation of a neo, her tune concepts are fairly basic and performance values are solid. Vocal asides and tunes do her in good stead. However, her choice of a closing number seemed wrong for this particular spot. Nonetheless, she scored heavily.

Little, Dane & Mason, who have made several round trips to this room, gain favor with each succeeding visit. They have made a specialty of fugues and canons, spicing each rondelay with humor and musical inventiveness. These lads have a refreshing facade despite the fact that they refuse to become polished performers, and make off to hearty mitts.

Jimmie Daniels, the perennial emcee, opens with his parlay of legit musical tunes and makes a strong stand, while the Three Flames, with Tiger Haynes as their chief spokesman, pound out the musical backing and contribute much of the character that gives this room its special flavor. Jose.

Chateau Madrid, N.Y.

De Castro Sisters, with Francisco Gonzalez; Trini Reyes, with Juan Sastre; Jose Jiminez Orch (5); $5 minimum weeknights, $6 weekends.

As long as they stick to singing and plugging (liberally) their various Capitol Records albums, the three De Castro Sisters are in a safe and melodically sound groove during their current Chateau Madrid outing. It's the comedy that's off-key, as when they note that although Cuban, they're no relation to another famous personage with the same name. On the other hand, maybe that wasn't meant to be funny.

The girls, however, give the ringsiders their money's worth of harmonizing, turning from the sweet to the big beat stuff and back again without missing a note or a carefully rehearsed bit of footwork. Trio does more than nine individual numbers, plus a couple of fine medleys of show tunes.

They're at their best with special arrangements of such tunes as "The Trolley Song" (somehow Elmer Gantry gets into the lyric) and a counterpointed mixture of "When The Saints Go Marching In" with "The Song from River Kwai." Francisco Gonzalez gives them special bongo support and because of his size (small), is often the subject of their excursions into dialog comedy.

Flamenco dancer Trini Reyes opens the show with some expert Spanish hardshoe terping. Petite, dark-eyed dancer makes three quick changes of costume, all nifty, for as many numbers, with guitar accompanist Juan Sastre filling in the pauses with two haunting solos.

Jose Jiminez' orch provides the background for the show and the tempo for patron playtime. Anby.

Shamrock, Houston

Houston, April 13.

Dorothy Shay with her Kinfolks, K. Bert Sloan-Dick Krueger Orch (11); no cover or minimum.

Dorothy Shay, whose grin says things more eloquently than most entertainers' lines, returns to the Shamrock Hilton's Continental Room after an absence of a year. On stage for an hour, plus a legitimate 10-minute encore, thrush draws plaudits for her hillbilly humor and fine pipes.

Her good humor becomes quickly infectious after her opening medley of "songs most requested that I don't do." There's a bevy of tunes from the hills, but perhaps best received is her "Stout-hearted Men." Quips between tunes are also a plus, and femme shares spotlight with her "kin," Jo Ann Miller and Curtis Wheeler.

Miss Miller's part in show has been padded since last year, and that also becomes a plus as she does several duets with Miss Shay and a solo entitled, "When the Evening Sun Descends the Sky and I Are Blue," but which somehow sounds like "St. Louis Blues." Miss Miller, who overdoes somewhat the pop-eyed bumpkin cousin, scores with Miss Shay in duet of "Country Girl."

When auditors insist that Miss Shay return, she does "Efficiency," her w.k. tune wherein she uses both hands, feet and body for clever bet-off. The Sloan-Krueger Orch does its usual superb backing job.

Show plays for two frames, to be followed by the Dukes of Dixieland April 27. Skip.

Cloister, Chi

Chicago, April 14.

Phil Tucker, Dobie Twins, Naomi Barrett, Eddy Subway Orch; $2 cover weekends, $1.50 weeknights.

The Cloister, which has shuttered and changed entertainment policy four times in recent years, has reopened with a handsome new decor and with a resident comic who has traded in Joe Miller for Krafft-Ebing. It is now a split-level room with heavy carpeting and drapes and with one mirrored wall, the latter necessary for viewers because of a three-foot square post only a few feet from the stage. Room capacity has been doubled to about 200, including a dozen bar seats.

Comic Phil Tucker comes to the Cloister after 13 years at the Silver Cloud, a nabe nitery where he developed a large local and conventioneer following. His rep is based primarily on a strongly off-color routine, which he brings with him minus only a strip bit that he did at the Silver Cloud.

Off-color is somewhat of an understatement for Tucker's 90-minute exploration of the facets of sexual perversion. He's undeniably talented and capable of extremely clever mimicry, but his choice of material proves more of a handicap than a help in demonstrating his abilities. Instead of topping himself with a funnier gag, he can only shake up his audience by going into more and more taboo areas.

Despite his many deviate portrayals, Tucker's fine comedic hand is essentially attached to a limp wrist. His swish impression, if it is that, provides the canvas on which he daubs his takeoffs on other perversities. He is aided in these excursions by a mobile face, that could be that of an overripe 20-year-old or a decadent 40, surrounding a large pair of china-blue eyes.

Tucker also plays the electric organ (a source of several dozen word plays) and does a bit of terping with the Dobie Twins, a buxom pair of dancers who ably handle several standard routines including a modified strip. Chirper Naomi Barrett warbles a few durables in a soft voice to round out the bill.

Even for those accustomed to deep purple, this show is strong medicine. It's definitely not for prom kids and will probably be offensive to a good many sophisticates who are willing to venture just so far into the blue. However, it's clearly money in the bank for the Cloister and undoubtedly will get a great play from conventioneers, the Rush St. rounders and the old Silver Cloud bunch. Mor.

Ritz Carlton, Montreal

Montreal, April 12.

Coronados (3), Johnny Gallant, Paul Notar Trio; $1.50-$2 cover.

The Coronados broke the ice last season as the first singing trio to paly the Ritz Cafe and their immediate click resulted in current re-play. Threesome (two boys and their sister) is a well-disciplined combo and despite youth, display plenty of show biz savvy and aplomb.

Songs are evenly divided with male section of outfit but as happens with most distaffers, the femme has the last work and most of the words. However, sister Anita is as pert as she is talented and does much to bloster overall impact of act.

Intros for the most part are handled by brother George and not too well. The rambling introduction and the injection of a little "humor" never get off the floor. He also leaves himself wide open to hecklers which happened a couple of times on night caught.

Material is pleasant and harmonizing okay. Team shows greater restraint than on last time around, and by adapting their volume to limitations of this particular room they've garnered better reception. Boys use guitars for background on most numbers together with house 88'er Johnnny Gallant and Paul Notar's fine trio.

Coronados are in until April 22. Newt.

Ye Little Club, L.A.

Beverly Hills, April 12.

June Ericson, Randy Sparks, Joe Felix Duo; two-drink minimum.

Marshall Edson has a pleasing bill with newcomer June Ericson and holdover Randy Sparks, who deftly complement each other in a smoothly-balanced show of particular show biz appeal.

Miss Ericson, a pixieish blond cutie with a strong legit voice, makes her local debut with specialty versions of obscure show songs designed to point up unique comedy-vocal talents. She delivers straight for the most part, relying on clever lyrics and a sometimes elastic facial quirk to bolster a wide "vocalistic" range.

Her standouts include a soliloquy from "archie & mehitabel" and a folksy chant called "Swamps of Home." A top technician, she handles blues ably with "You Don't Know the Half of it Dearie Blues" and hits a nice, soft mood with "Woo Me Gently."

Entering his seventh week, Sparks continues to please with his solid guitar and sweet vocals of popular folksongs, scoring heavily with the poignant "Billy Won't Be Playing Anymore" and a rousing community song entry, "Oh, Sally Brown."

Joe Felix duo (piano and bass) backs Miss Ericson well. Dale.

Queen Elizabeth, Mont'l

Montreal, April 14.

Dany Dauberson (with Roger LeSourd), Denny Vaughan Orch (11), Louis Bannet Trio; $2.50-$3 cover.

Dany Dauberson returns to the elegant confines of the Queen Elizabeth's Salle Bonaventure following a year's absence and this statuesque chanteuse still packs the wallop of other visits.

Sheathed in a clinging gown by Balmain, Miss Dauberson, with her blonde, short-cropped hair and trim figure, is an impressive sight in this lofty room as she belts out a torchant whether it be "Stormy Weather" or Gilbert Becaud's tender "Marie."

Thrush includes a brace of Becaud songs in her current offering and both are standout, far ahead of anything else in session and much more suited to her particular style of singing. The dramatic sequences, although contrasting nicely, tend to get out of hand and are not nearly as effective.

Roger LeSourd at the piano and a small rhythm group give femme fine backing throughout 25-minute stint and the Denny Vaughan orch takes over for customer hoofing, in their usual capable fashion. On night caught, dinner biz was capacity which has been the trend for past few weeks with second shows during week about half.

Miss Dauberson is in until April 29. Newt.

Club 76, Toronto

Toronto April 11.

Bob Howard; 50c cover.

In for five weeks here on return round, Bob Howard jammed the customers into the Club 76 on opening night, again proving that the songster has a brand of ragtime piano-playing that labels him as an extra special entertainer and that the patrons have memories of his previous visit.

Normally, Howard is on five times a night for 30-minutes but on his re-engagement at the Club 76, opening night stretched into only three stints, middle one lasting two hours and crowding the room to its 86-capacity while around 50 would-be customers waited continuously outside from 9:00 p.m. till midnight — when caught.

Best low cover charge may be misleading, a pint of beer costs $1, minimum liquor drink is 95c, and no coffee is served.

Howard in strawhat and shirt-sleeves, banged the ivories in an oldtime singsong of audience participation that had the jazz pianist interpolating the fave tunes with his alternate tremolo and bass profunda singing voices, his off-the-record lyrics and his chatter between numbers for a two-hour chore in which the customers kept sending up requests.

Howard goes into the Blue Angel, New York, immediately after his stint here, ending May 6 McStay.

Drake Hotel, Chi

Carmen Cavallaro & Trio, Jimmy Blade Orch (6); $3 cover weekends, $2.50 week nights.

Poshy Camellia House, which has been interspersing its playing of chantootsies with occasional standup comics, takes still another tack with Carmen Cavallaro's hi-fi pianistics.

Backed by his own able trio, he serves up a lush helping of Kern, Porter and Duchin nostalgia, and the mostly middle-aged auditers ate it up with toe-tapping relish.

For a pace-changer in this musical revival meeting, Cavallaro replays his Caribbean-South American standards such as "Vaccino Moon," "Brazil" and "Begin the Beguine" in his own distinctive style—a style that pre-dates the Afro-Cuban cycle initiated by Machito and Stan Kenton in the early '40's. With Cavallaro the rhythm is all in his left hand and not with assorted bongos, maracas, jawbones, et al, and it comes off strong and incisive.

Working in close rapport with Cavallaro is trio of Jimmy Norton on guitar, Vincent Lateano Jr., drums, and Robert Emerson on bass.

Musical numbers: "Direct From Vienna," "A Very Nice Man," "Fairyland," "I've Got to Find a Reason," "Mira," "Sword, Rose and Cape," "Humming," "Yes, My Heart," "Everybody Likes You," "Magic, Magic," "Tanz Mit Mir," "Carnival Ballet," Theme from "Carnival," "Yum Ticky," "Tne Rich," "Beautiful Candy," "Her Face," "Grand Imperial Cirque de Paris," "I Note Him," "Always Always You," "She's My Love."

The tinsel world of traveling tentshows is the background for a sentimental fable of innocence triumphant in "Carnival!" a delightful musical at the Imperial Theatre. This is a boxoffice smash for producer David Merrick, a spectacular director - choreographer credit for Gower Champion and a glittering personal success for Anna Maria Alberghetti.

"Carnival" (omitting the exclamation point hereafter), is the legituner adaptation of the Leslie Caron picture, "Lili," with music and lyrics by Bob Merrill, book by Michael Stewart, based on Helen Deutsch's story material. It has been done with imagination, exquisite taste and extraordinary skill. Although misanthropes may cavil at its guileless sweetness, general audiences will revel in it, and the moppet trade will make it a matinee powerhouse.

The atmosphere of smalltime carnivals is superbly created in the show, which is located in an unspecified town in southern Europe, apparently France, at an unspecified time, apparently a generation or so ago. The curtain is up as the audience enters the theatre, with a dimly lighted barestage and a backdrop representing a vaguely definable outdoor scene.

A figure strolls on, sits and begins playing a little tune on a concertina, and then the ragtag members of the carney troupe enter and, as roustabouts raise the tents and arrange the wagons and equipment, the motley performers, freaks and others fill the stage, and the agreeably muted pit orchestra picks up what turns out to be the recurring musical theme. In only a few moments the atmosphere, characters and situation are established.

The action thereafter shifts back and fourth between carny performance and backstage life, with interest centering on a pathetic little waif who joins the troupe, the lecherous magician who wants to seduce her, the mistress-assistant who tries to thwart him, and the embittered but protective puppeteer and assistant who befriend her. There are appealing, rousing and amusing songs, appropriately lively dances and, even for a non-addict, captivating puppet interludes.

Amid the hubbub of the carny performances and the backstage life there are clowns, freaks, jugglers, animal acts, tumblers, strongmen, aerialists, sideshow performers, souvenir and refreshment hawkers, in addition to the key figures of the proprietor, the magician and his aide, the two puppeteers and the orphan girl.

Under Champion's brilliantly conceived and executed staging, the performance has remarkable dimension, tempo and style, with delicious touches of comedy, in some cases deftly blended or contrasted with pathos.

Miss Alberghetti, small and slim, with large dark eyes, nondescript clothes and an air of helplessness and longing, plays the waif who joins the troupe and becomes the pawn in the jealous rivalry between the magician and the puppeteers. In her innocence she comes to love the four enchanting puppets and regard them as animate beings, and she provides the inspiration for the act's emergence as the tentshow's the feature attraction.

There are several amusing and touching bits of puppet performance, and a couple of skillfully comic scenes between the devious magician and his adhesive, resourceful foil, notably including a satirical ballad during a basket-piercing sword trick. At the finale, of course, the puppeteer who has been hiding his emotional vulnerability behind a bitter member finds his true love with the love-starved girl, and she clings to the puppets which represent his various selves.

The theme tune, running hauntingly through the show, has what might be called incidental lyrics about how love makes the world go 'round. Merrill has also written a number of appealing songs, some soft and lilting for the romantic passages, some definite and rousing to generate the synthetic excitement of the carnival and a few brightly amusing for the comedy scenes.

Most of the numbers are admirably suited to the story situations and several are likely to be standard pops. Among the notable items are "Mira," "Humming," "Yes, My Heart," "Beautiful Candy" and "Her Face." There are no singing and dancing choruses in the usual sense, but several ensemble numbers skillwully blend song and dance with stage business.

Miss Alberghetti is irresistibly touching as the lonely, timid girl. She sings with beautiful simplicity and her acting is a triumph of expressive restraint. James Mitchell is vividly suave, and somehow likeable, as the predatory magician, and Kaye Ballard turns in a gem of comedy singing and acting as his adhesive partner.

Jerry Orbach is plausible in the ill-explained role of the bitter-seeming puppeteer, and his singing is agreeably forceful. Pierre Olaf, who was an elfin highlight in the original Broadway cast of "La Plume de Ma Tante," is outstanding as his beguiling little assistant.

Also notable are Henry Lascoe as the carny producer, and the standard acts from vaude days, Paul Sydell, with his trained dogs, and the two juggling Martin Bros. Will Steven Armstrong has designed the light, simple and appropriately gaudy scenery, and Freddy Wittop has provided flamboyantly illustrative costumes.

As a financial project, "Carnival" represents a potential goldmine. The production was financed for a mere $250,000, which is practically a pittance by present-day standards for musical shows, and it was brought in for about $200,000. It's figured to be able to net $20,000 a week at capacity.

Although the technique of "Show Boat" is antiquated, the music and lyrics are irresisttble and there's something undeniable about the vigor of the subject and the honesty of the characters. As the starter of the N.Y. City Center's spring season of light opera, opening last Wednesday night (12), the 33-year-old semi-classic is still enjoyable.

Just to list the song hits indicates the solid appeal of the show. They include "Only Make Believe," "Ol' Man River," "Can't Help Lovin' Dat Man," "Life Upon the Wicked Stage," "You Are Love," "Why Do I Love You," "Bill," and "After the Ball." Since there are such capable singers as Jo Sullivan, Robert Rounseville, Carol Brice, Anita Darian and Andrew Frierson, the vital musical element is safely handled.

But not all is well in this umpteenth revival of the Jerome Kern-Oscar Hammerstein 2d adaptation of Edna Ferber's long-ago novel. Despite the sentimentality of the yarn, there's a curious lack of emotional impact. And while "Donnybrook!", on its Philadelphia break-in, is a winsome musical show with so much going for it, particularly a lush Johnny Burke score with actors who can sing it, that it's obvious faults look readily flexible. For the second time within three weeks, Philadelphians have been exposed to a show derived from a film hit (Carnival!" was the immediate predecessor) and while this may not indicate a trend (two is a coincidence; three is a trend.—Ed.), it suggests that Hollywood has found another market for its classics besides the late, late shows.

Robert E. McEnroe has turned Maurice Webb's "The Quiet Man" into a reasonable facsimile of its screen original. It has the retired Pittsburgh pug returning to his Irish homeland with pease on his mind and meeting a scrappy Gaelic redhead whose dowry he has to wrest from her equally scrappy brother.

The story line could stand expansion, an unusual condition with Philly premieres. Playing the role of the marriage-broker, Eddie Foy, who skips and scampers and soft-shoes whenever he gets the chance, could use at least one more comedy number.

Since the stage version can't really put on the classic climactic battle finale that John Wayne and Victor McLaglen staged in the picture, the second act needs more comedy building. Foy leads a quintet of inebriated Irishmen in a funny number called "Wisha Wurra," but more of the same could be used.

Oddly enough, there is room for more material. From the standpoint of length, "Donnybrook!" was in good shape on its opening night. Under Jack Cole's direction and despite a few premiere mishaps in staging, the show moved with a generally fast pace.

But while Cole's choreography starts on a high note of reels and jigs and kilted prancers, the invention isn't sustained. One more good lively number would look fine against the suggestive and practical settings and scrims provided by designer Rouben Ter-Arutunian.

But with the songs and songmakers, there is no protest whatever. Newcomer Joan Fagan is a red-headed delight as the heroine and she knows what to do with Burke's melodies, particularly "Sez I" and "He Makes Me Feel So Lovely." Stalwart Art Lund contributes notably to songs like Ellen Roe" and "I Have My Own Way" and a witty complaint about the "Irishness" of the piece in "The Loveable Irish."

Susan Johnson gives the show a rousing start in the first act when she belts out "Sad Was the Day," an ironic little gem about the joys of widowhood, and later she and Foy collaborate on "I Wouldn't Bet One Penny" which stops things in their tracks. Veteran Clarence Nordstrom also halts things with his sentimental "A Toast for the Bride." Credit also Sibyl Bowan and Grace Carney as O'Casey types in a sort of Graeco-Gaelic commentary and Charles C. Welch as the engaging parish priest. Hurd.

Spring Thaw

Toronto, April 5

Mayor Moore presentation of two-act (32 scenes) revue. Staged by Mayor Moore; sets and lighting, Michael Johnston; costumes, Clara Jeffery; musical directions, John Fenwick; choreography, Alan Lund. With Dave Broadfoot, Barbara Hamilton, Peter Mews, Jean Templeton, Jack Duffy, Betty Robertson, Bill Cole, Leo Leyden, Gale Gerber. Opened March 29, '61, at the Crest Theatre, Toronto; $6.50 top.

In a fortnight's tryout of nine Ontario cities, with a trans-Canada tour contemplated after its Toronto run, "Spring Thaw" is a two-act revue that has its writing ups-and-downs but members of the cast do all right with what they are given. Proceedings sag in the middle of second act and should be tightened by insertion of new material.

Strained themes of satire include separate need of a Canadian flag and anthem, the Daughters of the Empire, the Canada Council grants, the Governor-General's annual literary awards, and some takeoffs on tv commercials. Latter are dog-eared, lacking freshness of approach.

Better items are "Table Talk" by Stan Daniels; an Eskimo art travesty by Bob Fulford; "Togetherness," a satire on church unity, with lyrics and music by Mayor Moore; "The Shady Lady" bedtime tv story; and an excellent imitation of Shari Lewis; the puppeteeer, plus "The Loan Company," qualify as bright material, both written and acted by Joan Templeton.

Outstanding, too, is the unveiling of a new tank, this written by Alan Manings, and a ribbing by the whole company setup on the huckster methods—complete with patriotically undressed girls—of the whole automotive industry and the advertising agencies thereof.

One element in bad taste was the Lerner-Loewe takeoff on O'Keefe's opening with a three-weeks' Toronto tryout of "Camelot," although the paraphrasing of "I Wonder What O'Keefe's is Brewing Tonight?" drew the biggest hand of the evening.

Jean Templeton emerges as a promising comic. Also attracting favorable reaction: the clowning of Barbara Hamilton, the sweet singing of Betty Robertson, the robust baritone of Bill Cole; the monologs, songs and dances of Peter Mews, Dave Broadfoot, Jack Duffy and Leo Leyden; the impish antics of the voluptuous Gale Gerber.

The Alan Lund choreography merits praise, plus the switch-sets of Michael Johnston which lend swift pace to the mobility of the various turns. There's a briskness to the Mayor Moore staging, with the reservations of needed cuts and additions. Dock.

Calls Opera Threat 'Brinkmanship'

AGMA Rep Has Caustic Answer to Frisco Mgmt.'s Ultimatum on Unemployment Insurance

San Francisco, April 18.

San Francisco Opera Assn. president Robert Watt Miller has issued an ultimatum to the American Guild of Musical Artists in their deadlocked dispute. In a letter to Mrs. Diane Fivey, the union's local representative, he has threatened to cancel the association's entire autumn season if the dispute is not settled by next Thursday (20).

Mrs. Fivey calls the ultimatum "brinkmanship" and says she is "tired of this 'save-the-sinking-ship' approach to collective bargaining." State labor conciliator Adolph Koven, who has been meeting separately with management and labor negotiators, said he'd call a joint confab for early this week.

AGMA, representing 185 singers and dancers in the opera company, has been seeking a 5.8% wage raise, plus unemployment insurance. The opera company has offered a 5.5% raise, according to Miller, but has flatly rejected the unemployment insurance.

It is the latter issue which is tying up the whole negotiation. If unemployment insurance were provided for AGMA members only, the cost would be only $5,400. But State law requires that if one employee of a firm is covered, all employees must be.

That would bring the total cost to around $18,000, because musicians, stagehands and administrative personnel would have to be included. In a sense, therefore, AGMA's fight is the fight of the AFM and stagehands, too, because neither of these unions has yet signed its 1961 contract with the opera company. They usually follow AGMA, because the performers start rehearsals earlier.

Columbia Artists Forms New Unit, Fox & Wilford, to Accent Legit

Columbia Artists Management Inc., which has previously relegated legit to sort of a stepchild status in its operations, is now putting the theatre on somewhat of an equal footing with its concert activities. A new managerial division, which will be concerned largely with legit, has been added to the four managerial groups which in the last 13 years have constituted the basic makeup of the organization.

The new division, the establishment of which was approved by the CAMI board of directors last Thursday (13), will be headed by Herbert Fox and Ronald Wilford. It'll be called Fox & Wilford in the style of the other divisions, known as Judson, O'Neill & Judd; Schang, Doulens & Wright; Curt Weinhold & Andre Merterns. Each of the departments represents a particular group of artists and attractions.

Besides legit, which has been handled for CAMI by its Broadway Theatre Alliance subsidiary, the Fox & Wilford division will also be concerned with other entertainment fields such as arena shows, television and films. CAMI has always been involved in tv and pix as artists' representative, but an expansion into those fields possibly on a packaging or producing level is being considered.

Park Shakespeare Fest To Start a Week Later And at Different Site

With the postponed opening of its new Central Park amphitheatre, the N.Y. Shakespeare Festival is adjusting plans as to location and schedule to bridge the gap until the new completion date of July 22. The $400,000 project in the Belvedere Lake section of the Park, was originally slated to be finished by May 31.

Rejecting the idea of postponing the season until the new site is completed, Festival producer Joseph Papp has selected an alternate location for temporary facilities on a ballfield adjacent to the construction site. The interim location has been accepted by Parks Commissioner, Newbold Morris, who will discuss with Mayor Robert F. Wagner an appropriation from the city of $7,000, the estimated cost of the alternate project.

Papp had intended to open the summer's program of free shakespeare on June 29 with "Much Ado About Nothing," at the new amphitheatre. Revised plans call for a July 5 start with "A Midsummer Night's Dream," at the alternate site, to be followed on Aug. 2 by "Much Ado," at the new theatre and "Richard II" opening Aug. 28.

The Bristol Construction Co., general contractors for the project, cited bad weather and contract delays as reasons for the delay. Work started early in January.

St. Cloud College Builds 300-Seat Summer Theatre

St. Cloud, Minn., April 18.

The 300-seat summer theatre to be constructed on the Park Lane Country Club property at Lake L'Homme Dieu near Alexandria, Minn., will be operated by the newly-organized non-profit Alexandria-St. Cloud State College Performing Arts Foundation.

Purchase of the property and erection of the theatre will cost $45,000 and 5% interest bonds are being sold to help finance the project. The Foundation's board of directors is headed by Dr. George Budd, president of the St. Cloud college and Arthur Housman and Keith Michael, of the college faculty, will supervise the stock program.

The company is to include professional and college drama students from the upper midwest. Students may earn college credit for their participation. Plans call for the theatre to be ready for an opening next June 27.

The Ziegfeld Club will hold a Cocktail-Tea Dance next Sunday afternoon (23) in the Persian Room of the Hotel Plaza, N. Y.

Recognition

In the trade, the name of Broadway producer David Merrick is as good as Brooklyn or the Shuberts. That was noted by playwright-actor-producer Howard Lindsay while presiding over a fund-raising luncheon for the New Dramatists Committee last Friday (14) at Sardi's restaurant, N. Y.

Lindsay tossed off the line after greeting the diners, comprising about 200 individuals connected with the theatre, with a comment about how gratifying it was that Broadway had a new hit in "Carnival," which opened the previous night.

Then, with a vet's timing he got his laugh with the quip, "Okay, so it is David Merrick's."

Touring 'Becket' Returning to N.Y.

"Becket," currently on tour, will return May 8 for a Broadway engagement of three-four weeks at the Hudson Theatre. The production underwent a change in its two major roles when it exited New York for the road. Laurence Olivier, who costarred in the title role, transferred to the part of the King, succeeding Anthony Quinn, who withdrew for a film assignment.

Since the start of the tour, Arthur Kennedy has been costarring in the title role. The production ends its road hike May 6 in Philadelphia.

MEXICAN REDHEAD' HITS SPAIN IN FALL

The successful Mexican production of "Redhead" will tour Spain beginning next Oct. 8 at the Teatro Sasuela, Madrid, where it's booked for a four-month run. The Rene Anselmo-Luis de Llano production is scheduled to follow that engagement with an eight-month tour of Spanish cities. It's believed to be the first time a Mexican theatrical venture has been lined up for a tour of Spain.

The Mexican production of the musical, which had a lengthy run at the Teatro de los Insurgentes, Mexico City, followed its stand there with a tour of Mexico. Rehearsals for the Spanish trek are scheduled to begin in Spain next September with Anselmo supervising the pre-production planning of the presentation. Virma Gonzales and Armando Calvo, who costarred in the Mexican production, will repeat their roles for the Spanish touring company, which will be directed by de Llano and choreographed by Kevin Carlisle.

"Redhead," which ended a 57-week Broadway run in March, 1960, and then toured, has a book by Herbert and Dorothy Fields, Sidney Sheldon and David Shaw, lyrics by Miss Fields and music by Albert Hague. The Mexican version of the musical is titled "La Pelirroja."

'Miracle' to Chi for Run; 'Raisin' to Move May 20

Chicago, April 18.

Martin Tahse's touring production of "The Miracle Worker," with Eileen Brennan headlining, will move into the Erlanger Theatre here next Monday (24) for a stay of at least 10 weeks. The road company, which opened last Wednesday (12) at the Playhouse, Wilmington, is playing this week at Ford's Theatre, Baltimore.

Scheduled to continue here until May 20 will be "Raisin in the Sun," now in its eighth week at the Blackstone Theatre. The local Shubert Theatre, which was vacated last Saturday (15) by "Flower Drum Song" after a 22-week run, will get Ethel Merman in "Gypsy" for 10 weeks beginning May 29.

Herman Bernstein Will Book New Fisher in Det.

Herman Bernstein, a Broadway manager, will book the new Fisher Theatre, due to open in Detroit next fall as one of the top-capacity houses for touring shows.

Besides being general manager for Broadway producer Leland Hayward, for whom he's handling the New York and touring companies of "The Sound of Music," Bernstein is the lessee and booker of the Hudson Theatre, N. Y., and is partnered with James Nederlander in the operation of the Erlanger Theatre, Chicago.

Hungover Behan Sore at Canada; TV 'Fellow' Nix?

Toronto, April 18.

Dried out but mad as a wet hen, Brendan Behan left Toronto last Friday (14) with a scornful declaration that the town "stinks." Informed of the Russian cosmonaut's rocket flight around the earth, the Irish novelist-playwright planed for New York with the comment, "The only space I'm interested in right now is Times Square."

Behan is still so incensed at Toronto in particular and Canada in general that he would like to prevent the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. from doing a television version of his play, "The Quare Fellow." He elaborated, "I don't want anything I have written to be shown on the CBC, or the Canadian stage or sold in bookstores in Canada."

Donald MacDonald, CBC publicity director, says that the author will have to take legal action to prevent the showing of "Quare Fellow." He explains that CBC bought the rights to the play and has invested a substantial sum in the production.

At a hearing in magistrate's court, Behan was ordered to appear April 27 on a charge of causing bodily harm to a Royal York Hotel detective and assaulting police called to arrest him. He arrived in court after leaving Sunnyside private hospital, where he was under treatment for two weeks for alcoholism and diabetis. He was arrested for creating a disturbance at the Royal York Hotel following the opening night performance at the O'Keefe Center of a jazz revue, "Impulse," in which he was m.c. and star.

The playwright-novelist was released in $1,000 bail put up by Eammon Martin, Toronto Transport Commission inspector. At the hearing, prosecuting attorney Lloyd Graburn argued that there are adequate medical facilities at Don Jail, and that Behan should be confined there. But magistrate Tupper Bigelow disagreed and granted bail.

Another Hits O'Seas; Phyliss Curtin Sets Up Crowded European Dates

Another instance of the American opera singer who makes it bigger in Europe is Phyliss Curtin, currently back in the States for a concert tour. She has this season sung Salome, Traviata, Butterfly and Donna Anna with the Vienna State Opera, all major credits.

Because of the European upbuild this season Miss Curtin is booked for next season in Vienna, Berlin, Stuttgart, Munich and Turin, plus both German and English language recordings and telecasts.

The Italian date will see her in a new production of "Pelleas et Melisande."

As contracts stand she'll be busy about three-fourths of next season overseas, with only a minority of time in her native land. She was unable to accept a role in Noel Coward's new musical, "Sail Away," due for a West Coast breakin this summer.

WEINSTEIN OPTIONS 'WHEELS'

Henry Weinstein, operator of Westport (Conn.) Theatre, has Broadway-optioned "Circle of Wheels," Arthur Ross legiter which had a brief engagement at El Capitan Theatre, Hollywood, two years ago.

He'll try it out first in east at his Westport house in July.

No-Advance-Dope Policy Clobbers Tony Awards Newspaper Coverage; Protest Merrick, Guild Citations

By JESSE GROSS

The switch this year by the American Theatre Wing to a system whereby the winners of its annual "Tony" awards were not disclosed in advance was a flop in terms of press coverage. Publicity is a major factor in the prize-giving event, since press coverage spotlights not only on individual winners but the theatre itself.

In past years newspapers, among others, were informed of the "Tony" winners in advance of the actual award presentations, so stories and accompanying picture layouts could be prepared. Thus, the Wing's annual "Tony" ceremonies, held Sunday nights because of the Monday-Saturday evening schedule for working legit performers, were usually given hefty coverage by the morning papers throughout the country.

That wasn't the case last Monday morning (17), following the presentation of the "Tonys" the preceding night from 11:15-12:15 in the Grand Ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, N. Y. In some editions of the New York dailies, presumably because of deadlines and perhaps other factors, the event was either ignored or covered only partially. Press service "Tony" stories also missed many of the morning sheets throughout the country because they failed to make deadlines.

In New York, however, on-the-spot coverage of the award presentations was provided for the third consecutive year by WCBS-TV. Besides the regular "Tony"

Greeks Are Coming

Los Angeles, April 18.

Greek Theatre Assn. of L.A., will sponsor a U.S. tour late this summer of the Greek Tragedy Theatre Co. from Athens, prior to troupe of 30 winding Greek Theatre season here in September, per James A. Doolittle, general director.

Under direction of Athens company's founder and artistic director, Dimittrios Rondiris, Greek Tragedy Theatre will make its first appearance in America in N.Y. in mid-August, and will appear at various cities on six-week tour en route to Coast.

Crix Pick 'Home,' 'Honey,' 'Carnival'

"All the Way Home," hallyhooed by its producers as "The Miracle on 44th Street," won the N.Y. Critics Circle award as the best American play on Broadway in the past 12 months. The musical winner was "Carnival" and the foreign play selection was "Taste of Honey," both David Merrick productions.

The Fred Coe-Arthur Cantor production of "Home," adapted by Tad Mosel from James Agee's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel, "A Death in the Family," rescinded a quickie post-opening closing notice and is now in its 21st week at the Belasco Theatre, N.Y. The play got eight votes, beating "Devil's Advocate" (seven votes) "Advice and Consent" (four votes) and "Far Country," "Period of Adjustment" and "Big Fish, Little Fish" (one vote each).

"Carnival," which opened last Thursday (13) thereby just getting in under the wire for the critics balloting, got 13 votes. It's an adaptation of the film "Lili," with music and lyrics by Bob Merrill and book by Michael Stewart. Other musicals in the running were "Irma La Douce" and "The Unsinkable Molly Brown," each pulling two votes, and "Camelot," "Do Re Mi" and the off-Broadway "Fantasticks," each nabbing one vote.

"Taste," by Shelagh Delaney, grabbed seven votes. Also getting the nod from some of the critics were "Becket" (five votes), "Rhinoceros" (four votes), "Hostage" (three votes) and the off-Broadway "Roots" (one vote). The awards were announced immediately after the Critics Circle meeting yesterday (Tues.) over CBS radio by Kenneth Banghart, who interviewed the crix at the Hotel Algonguin, N.Y., where the voting session was conducted.

OFF-B'WAY HOUSE HAS LICENSE, COURT RULES

Judge Frederick Strong, in N. Y. Municipal Court yesterday (Tues.) dismissed a N. Y. License Dept. complaint that the Eleanor Gould Theatre failed to obtain a theatre license. The spot, which is now running "Ladies' Night in a Turkish Bath," had been operating under a cabaret license okayed by the N. Y. Police Dept.

The dismissal came after Joseph Mintzer, representing the License Dept., conceded that it would be okay with the licensing division if the theatre continued with the cabaret permit, even though it was offering a legit vehicle.

The Eleanor Gould Theatre is located on the site of the former Old Roumanian Restaurant, which moved to Broadway and is now operating as the International.

The first off-Broadway Actors Fund benefit performance is scheduled for midnight May 1 by the double-bill of "American Dream" and "Death of Bessie Smith" at the York Playhouse, N. Y.

John Raitt, Larry Kert As Summer Tuner Stars At New San Diego Spot

San Diego, April 18.

John Raitt and Larry Kert will repeat their original Broadway roles in "Pajama Game" and "West Side Story," respectively, when the musicals are presented at the new Circle Arts Theatre here this summer. The 1,854-seat in-the-round operation will launch its inaugural season of summer musicals May 26 with Kert and Carla Alberghetti in "Story." Raitt's "Pajama" stint is set for Sept. 5-17 as the last of eight shows during the semester.

Each of the productions will run two weeks, with the exception of "Story," which will get in an extra two days. The opening entry will be followed June 13-June 25 by "Pal Joey," with Irene Manning and Bobby Van headlining. Miss Manning, incidentally, has been announced for the starring role in the off-Broadway production of "The Tattooed Countess," scheduled for a May 3 opening at the Barbizon Plaza Theatre, N.Y.

Juliet Prowse in "Silk Stockings" will be the June 27-July 9 offering and from July 11-July 23 it'll be "Fanny" with Billy Gilbert, who succeeded Walter Slezak in the Broadway production. Peter Palmer is slated for a July 25-Aug. 6 stand in "New Moon" and "Take Me Along" with Jack Carson will be the Aug. 8-20 entry, followed by an Aug. 22-Sept. 3 presentation of "Plain and Fancy."

Eric Sharpe and Alan Light are presenting the 16-week season with Kenneth Page and Jack Gross Jr. Light is producer, Gross, co-producer, Sharpe general manager and Page publicity supervisor. Productions will be directed by George Eckert. Marvin J. Rosen is stage manager, Ronald Dupree choreographer and Hal Hidey conductor. The operation was referred to as the San Diego Melody Theatre, Inc., in a recent VARIETY story.

Philly Park Tent Gets Lawrence & Lee's 'Night'

"Turn on the Night," a new drama by Jerome Lawrence and Robert E. Lee, has been optioned by Ethelyn R. Thrasher and Paul Stoudt, operators of the Playhouse in the Park, Philadelphia.

They will test the play Aug. 7-12 as part of the regular strawhat season at the Playhouse, with an eye to Broadway next season. Nina Vance will direct.

Shows Abroad

The Tenth Man

London, April 14.

Michael Codron presentation (by arrangement with New Watergate presentations Ltd and Saint Subber & Arthur Cantor) of a three-act drama by Paddy Chayefsky. Staged by Donald McWhinnie; decor, Brian Currah; lighting, Richard Pilbrow. Opened April 13, '61, at the Comedy Theatre, London; $3 top.

Cabalist ..... Cyril Shaps
Sexton ..... John Barrard
Sabbissel ..... David Kossoff
Zaretsky ..... John Gabriel
Agent ..... Martin Miller
Foreman ..... Harold Goldblatt
Esther Foreman ..... Valerie Gearon
Archer Landeau ..... David Knight
Harris ..... Reginald Barratt
Ralph ..... Paul Eddington
Elder Kessler ..... Jon Laurimore
Younger Kessler ..... John Tordoff
Policeman ..... Anthony Baird

Though understandably a substantial hit on Broadway, where there is a large Jewish population to provide the nucleus of the audience, "The Tenth Man" is a ticklish proposition for London's West End. There are six times as many Jews in New York alone than there are in the whole of the United Kingdom, and that must undoubtedly be an influencing factor, though Michael Codron must have been aware of those facts before deciding to import the Paddy Chayefsky play. Possibly, though it doesn't seem very likely, Codron's confidence may prove justified.

With one or two exceptions, this is a replica of the Broadway presentation. The set has been reversed and the rabbi's office switched to the opposite side of the stage, but that makes no significant difference. But somehow or other, and for no clearly definable reason, the New York version had considerably more heart, a greater warmth and a deeper intensity. That could well be due to Tyrone Guthrie's highly sensitive direction, though Donald McWhinnie is no slouch when it comes to staging a play.

One highly distinguishing feature of this presentation is the performance of Valerie Gearon, a West End newcomer who plays the young girl possessed by a dybbuk. She is natural talent with striking good looks, and her performance has a depth and conviction that becomes a veteran. She commands attention, even in the long passages when she has nothing to say and all the action is centered on the other half of the stage.

The principal roles are filled by David Kossoff and Martin Miller, and it's virtually a case of typecasting for both. David Knight gives a forceful performance as the young lawyer brought in off the streets to make a quorum in the synagogue, and John Barrard as the sexton and Cyril Shaps as the cabalist, lead an able supporting team.

Brian Currah's decor admirably captures the atmosphere of a dingy little synagogue. Myro

One Over The Eight

London, April 6.

Michael Codron presentation of a revue in two parts (31 scenes). With Kenneth Williams, Irving Davies, Sheila O'Neil, Robin Hawdon, John Howard, Lance Percival, Lynda Baron, Toni Eden, Sheila Hancock. Sketches by Peter Cook. Additional material by John Mortimer, Lionel Bart, N. P. Simpson, Steven Vinaver, Carl Davis, Stanley Daniels and John Bird. Staged and choreographed by Paddy Stone. Music, Lance Mulcahy, lyrics, John Law. Decor and costumes, Tony Walton; lighting and projection, Richard Pilbrow. Opened April 5, '61, at the Duke of York's Theatre, London, $3 top.

It was probably inevitable that there would be a sequence to the highly successful "Pieces of Eight" but, as so often happens, the successor is disappointing. The material is all too thin and there are too many dull items in the 31 sketches.

Kenneth Williams is the only member of the "Pieces of Eight" cast in the new revue, and though he is a natural and talented comedian, his impact on this occasion is rather limited. It is not his fault. It is just a case of not being well enough served by the writers. And the other talented members of the cast are handicapped in the same way. Very few of the sketches have the bite or the wit necessary to sophisticated revue, and only one or two have standout quality.

Attractive and economical decor has been devised by Tony Walton. Another item of strength is the dance numbers devised by Paddy Stone. They are bright, lively and occasionally vigorous; but for a revue there appears to be too much emphasis on the terping at the expense of straight comedy sketches.

It is a versatile cast of nine to justify the title but not the fullest use has been made of all the available talent. The girls all look good and there is a distinct emphasis on youth and vitality. Kenneth Williams, of course, is the star attraction but the others are all first-rate. The femme contingent is made up of Sheila Hancock, Toni Eden, Lynda Baron and Sheila O'Neil, and their four male opposites are Irving Davies, Lance Percival, Robin Hawdon and John Howard. Miss Hancock probably makes the best individual impression, but the others also make their mark. Myro.

The Wakefield Mystery Plays

London, April 6.

Mermaid Theatre presentation of 18 of 32 mystery-playlets performed at Wakefield, Yorkshire in the 15th century. Stars Martin Matthews, James Bolam, Gloria Dolskie, Daniel Thorndike, Norman Scace, Margaret Wolfit. Edited by Martial Rose; directed by Colin Ellis and Sally Miles; settings by Bernard Miles; costumes by Audrey Cruddas; lighting by David Kave. Medieval music chosen and arranged by Denis Stevens, sung by the Ambrosian Singers, conducted by Denis Stevens, and recorded by John Read in the Church of St. Magnus-the-Martyr. Opened April 5, '61, at the Mermaid Theatre, London; $2.13 top.

God ..... Martin Matthews
Archangel Gabriel ..... Anthony Gardner
Noah ..... Daniel Thorndike
Mary ..... Gloria Dolskie
Joseph ..... Daniel Thorndike
John the Baptist ..... John Woodvine
Jesus ..... James Bolam
Pilate ..... Norman Scace
Mary Magdalene ..... Margaret Wolfit

Revived professionally for the first time in 400 years, this cycle of medieval playets turns out to be an inspired vaude show with God in it. Faith, hope and charity are all on the crowded bill. So is pretty nearly everything else—from The Creation to Judgment Day.

Relieved by lashings of slapstick, bawdy wisecracks and striptease in reverse (in the Garden of Eden, where else?) the playlets evoke an age in which, as Mermaid Theatre topper Bernard Miles has it, "life was a unity—swearwords, sexual references, prayer and devotion unashamedly mixed."

Nobody knows who wrote them, but a century or so before Shakespeare, Wakefield already had a master-dramatist who could turn Old and New Testament into a show for the groundlings. He could handle tears—the Crucifixion at the Mermaid recalls Oberammagau. He could handle laughter—Noah's argument with his dizzy wife on whether or not she shall step into the Ark (built on stage in 12 minutes) is a cross-talk duo that could have been handled by Burns and Allen.

And he was not afraid of a swift mood-switch. Three seconds after the Bethlehem shepherds have been involved in a bedroom laugh-bit about a sheep disguised as a baby, they are welcoming the infant Christ.

With a 90 mph gusto, in which religious fervor and salt-earthiness are equally mixed, the direction of Colin Ellis and Sally Miles slaps the playlets on to a two-deck stage. Top-deck: Martin Matthews, splendid top-executive God, sitting on his throne. Bottom-deck: the mouth of Hell opening for its ration of sinners.

In a cast of nearly 50 hard-worked thesps, James Bolam's Christ, Margaret Wolfit's Magdalene and Daniel Thorndike's double as Joseph and Noah are unforgettable. Nash.

La Peau De Singe

(The Monkey Skin)

Paris, April 6.

Ludmila Vlasto, Georges Vitaly presentation of three-act comedy by Christine Arnothy. Staged by Francois Maistre; set by Roger Harth. With Jacques Duby, Renee Cosima, Jeanine Crispin, Genevieve Brunet, Jeanne Herviale, Claude Laurence. Opened March 24, '61, at the Theatre La Bruyere, Paris; $3 top.

Jerome ..... Jacques Duby
Madeleine ..... Jeanine Crispin
Florence ..... Renee Cosima
Helene ..... Genevieve Brunet
Annette ..... Claude Laurence
Jocelyne ..... Jeanne Herviale

This is a comedy about a simple, lovelorn young man married off to three different type girls by his doting mother. Contains crisp ideas and several funny moments, but it remains sketchy and mainly an idea for a play without the solidity of characterization to give it meaty weight. So it looms mainly a Paris item.

Young man first weds a supposedly pure girl due to his mother's insistence on a wife of virtue. But she turns out to have twins from an early liaison though she is always avoiding her husband's amorous passes. Next an intellectual novelist treats him only as an experience. Then a loose girl who is ready to forget her past with him. Her mother opts for the last but he is still unsatisfied and it ends with all the women trying to get him back and he trying to escape all of them.

For a first play Christine Arnothy displays a flair for dialog and situation but not construction. Gets too involved with logic and explanation to make a rather callow point about a man needing many women or one that can fill all needs as a sort of female chameleon.

Direction is rapid and playing graceful, but it does not add up to satisfying theatre and remains somewhat too literary with ideas replacing character perception. Mosk.

Glory Be

London, April 5.

John Ryan and Joseph Hone (for Envoy Productions) presentation of a two act musical. Book and lyrics by Fergus Linehan. Music by Aldeen Kinlen & Paddy Murray. Score by Dr. A. J. Potter. Designed by John Ryan. Dances arranged by Patricia Ryan. Staged by Michael Garvey.

Imported from Dublin, "Glory Be" is a naive Irish musical with a gentle touch of satire. It has a pleasant charm of its own but should be regarded as a fill-in for the Theatre Workshop with only the remotest of chances of moving to the West End with any degree of success.

The book by Fergus Linehan is even more nebulous than usual. In a pleasantly vague sort of way there is a story line about an art festival and a group of artists who boycott the official event and stage a show of their own. That's about it. As part of the plot there is the romantic goings on of a heroine and a hero who come from opposing camps with the inevitable conflicts.

When it comes to show tunes there is an air of liveliness and general good humor; but the romantic ballads are heavy going and the romantic leads are strained to cope with them. Easily the best feature of the production is Milo O'Shea, a jarvey (or cabbie), who acts as a sort of compere, introducing the scenes in a beguiling style.

Patricia Cahill, who plays the heroine, is quite a looker, and Gerry Sullivan adequately fills the romantic male role. David Kelly, Charles Mitchel and Rosaleen MacMenamin are among those who impress most.

Michael Garvey's staging is comfortably leisurely, and John Ryan's decor is neatly adaptable. Within the narrow limits of her briefing, Patricia Ryan has done a fair job in dance arrangements. Myro.

'Wishy-Washy' Reviews Not B.O.

producer-theatre owner organization "do something" about Taubman, on the ground that the Times critic writes "no opinion" notices that fail to express any definite reaction to shows and, in consequence, have little effect in terms of boxoffice sale. After discussion, a committee was named to study the matter.

The committee included Merrick, producer-director Herman Shumlin, producer Irene Selznick, producer Kermit Bloomgarden and producer-pressagent Arthur Cantor. The selections were made after Cantor had left the meeting and, by an unexplained quirk, he was named chairman, although he had argued against the idea of taking any action against Taubman or other critics. Cantor subsequently notified League executive director Irving Cheskin that he would not serve on the committee, and a scheduled meeting last Monday (17) was not held.

In opposing the suggestion that the League should attempt to deal with the critic situation, Cantor reportedly argued that reviewers must write the way they feel, and bring whatever talent and skill they possess to the job of reviewing. Attempts to bring pressure on newspaper managements are likely to be useless, he claimed, since publishers invariably resent and resist interference in matters of editorial policy.

In Merrick's case, he has been publicly critical of Taubman since the latter succeeded Brooks Atkinson last fall as the Times reviewer. Several months ago he attempted to insert an ad in the Times, with copy reading, "Bring Back Brooks Atkinson." The paper refused to accept the ad, however. The producer has since repeatedly aired his disapproval of Taubman as a critic.

Merrick's bid to have McCarten superseded on the reviewing of "Carnival" failed in its immediate objective, although the producer may figure he gained some tactical or psychological advantage in the attempt. The New Yorker critic attended the second night performance of the musical Friday night (14), using purchased tickets. His notice will appear in this week's issue of the mag.

The producer's letter to Shawn read, "Enclosed herewith are opening night 'Carnival' tickets for the New Yorker. I respectfully submit for your consideration the fact that your regular columnist, John McCarten, has publicly made highly prejudiced remarks about me, and in his review about my play 'A Taste of Honey,' took a personal swipe at me, although at that time I had never met him or made the slightest comment about him.

"In democratic tradition, when the judge is prejudiced, it is automatic that one can obtain a change of venue. I beg you, therefore, to please assign another member of your staff to cover 'Carnival' on opening night. I leave it, however, to your fair judgment."

The New Yorker editor replied in a note reading, "Thank you for making the friendly gesture of sending us opening-night tickets for 'Carnival.' Since, however, you believe that fairness demands 'a change of venue' and I disagree, I don't feel right about our accepting these tickets, and therefore I must return them to you. I hope that in time you will come to respect our policy on criticism."

On a previous occasion, after the "Taste of Honey" incident, Merrick refused to send McCarten opening-night seats for "Do Re Mi." In that instance, McCarten attended a subsequent performance, but his review was delayed until the following week's issue. The review was a pan.

Merrick's barring of Citron from the "Carnival" opening apparently stemmed from the tv interviewer-commentator's unfavorable comments about "Do Re Mi." Whatever the reason, Citron had arranged for Cue mag critic Emory Lewis to be the guest-interviewee that night of the "Carnival" preem, but when tickets for the musical didn't arrive, the tv performer contacted pressagent Harvey Sabinson.

The p.a. explained that the matter was out of his hands, but suggested that Citron go to the Imperial Theatre before the premiere performance, on the chance that he might be admitted as a standee. When he arrived at the theatre he was refused admission, however, although he spoke to Merrick personally and argued heatedly with members of the producer's staff.

On his tv program later that night from the Pierre Hotel, N. Y., Citron explained that he could not review "Carnival" because he'd been barred from the theatre, but had Lewis give a capsule review of the musical. He has had no subsequent communication with Merrick or the Shuberts, who own the Imperial Theatre.

Merrick apparently made no attempt to bar John Crosby from the "Carnival" opening, although the N. Y. Herald Tribune columnist wrote at a scathing piece about "Do Re Mi." Similarly, the producer has cooled off in his resentment against Herald Tribune drama critic Walter Kerr, perhaps as a result of the latter's rousing review of "Do Re Mi."

Previously, Merrick has asserted that the critic's unfavorable reviews were attributable to elbow "nudges" by his wife, playwright-authoress Jean Kerr, during performances. The producer was also quoted at the time as calling Kerr a "dull writer." The critic replied with a sharply kidding column in effect denying the "nudges" charge.

some of the broad comedy is suitable for the turn-of-the-century showboat locale, it seems needlessly exaggerated in this presentation.

The production numbers seem more elaborate than remembered from numerous previous revivals. Moreover, they vary considerably in quality. Several of the dance numbers are good, but others tend to be stage waits. The play-within-a-play, the hokum meller performance on the showboat, suggests a lengthy edition of "The Drunkard" without the beer.

As stager, Dania Krupska appears to have organized the performance well, though she hasn't minimized the broad playing or curbed the running time of some of the ensemble bits. Arthur Partington's choreography is animated but unevenly effective. Julius Rudel conducts the show skillfully, although the voices aren't always audible across the wide orchestra pit.

Joe E. Brown gives an enthusiastic performance of Cap'n Andy, emphasizing the heartiness, getting the laughs and occasionally adding a few touches of his own. Miss Sullivan is a decorative and vocally pleasing Magnolia, if just a bit lacking in warmth. Rounseville sings the role of Ravenal well, but seems "preoccupied" as an actor. His love scenes seem strangely passionless.

Andrew Frierson is an excellent Joe, both vocally and dramatically. Anita Darian is acceptable as the pathetic Julie, Jane Kean and Richard France are engaging as the hoofing comedy team of Ellie and Frank, Carol Brice is good as Queenie and Isabella Hoopes plays Parthy Ann as a termagent. Howard Bay's scenery and lighting creative something of an illusion of magnitude, and Stanley Simmons has collected the usual assortment of period costumes.

Given Miss Ferber's flamboyant original story, the Jerome Kern music and Oscar Hammerstein 2d lyrics have imperishable magic. Hobe.

Chi Little Theatre To Do Unpublished Plays

Chicago, April 18.

Scofield-Parker Brood Due at Stratford, Ont.

Stratford, Ont., April 18.

Paul Scofield is due here April 29 to prepare for his appearance this season in the local Shakespearean Festival productions of "Coriolanus" and "Love's Labour's Lost." The British actor has been vacationing since the April 1 closing of the London production of "Man For All Seasons," in which he costarred.

Scofield, who'll be accompanied here by his actress-wife, Joy Parker, and their two children, will essay the title role in "Coriolanus" and the part of Don Adriana de Armando in "Love's."

Met's Spring Tour Of Seven Weeks

Metropolitan Opera Co. departed Monday (17) morning by special train for Boston, starting point of its spring tour of 54 performances in seven weeks and nine cities. Winds June 3. Some 300 persons are travelling, singers, musicians, stagehands and management.

Nine works are being trouped: "Martha," "Turandot," "Nabucco," "L'Elisir d'Amore" (all new) plus the bread-and-butter standbys, "Traciata," "Auda," "Boheme," "Rigolleto."

'Carnival' Mopup'

ent is figured to be slightly under $200,000.

The musical, which drew generally bullish notices from the first-string daily newspaper reviewers, has music and lyrics by Bob Merrill and book by Michael Stewart. Half the financing for the presentation was put up by Metro, producer of the "Lili" film in 1953. The picture, based on a story by Paul Gallico, was scripted by Helen Deutsch.

B'way Lays Egg as Easter Fades; 'Carnival' $48,028 (6), Center $43,989, 'Birdie' $43,838, 'Rhinoceros' $24,554

Broadway tumbled last week after taking an Easter holiday jump the previous stanza. The drop in business was substantial for all but a few shows. The marginal entries were hit especially hard. The capacity shows were "Camelot," "Mary, Mary" and "Sound of Music." The "Mary, Mary" gross was cut by theatre party commissions.

There were eight shows with discount tickets in circulation last week, including "Music Man" and "Under the Yum-Yum Tree," which closed last Saturday night (15).

Asides and Ad-Libs

Playwright-television scripter Theodore Apstein is on the Coast for rewrites and production of his original script about the final 24 hours in the life of a bullfighter, due for vidfilming for "Four Star Theatre." He's due back in two or three weeks at his home in Sneden's Landing, N. Y. Between tv assignments, Apstein is working on a new stage play.

William Talbott, script editor for the Samuel French agency, has asked the National Educational Theatre Assn. to compile a list of acceptable one-act plays, which French would include in its catalog for the amateur performance. Other one-acters would be dropped from the list. Talbott was among the speakers at a recent meeting of the State of Iowa Community Theatre Assn., at Iowa City. Another confab was held at Iowa City last week by the state high school theatre conference. Both get-togethers were sponsored by the State Univ. of Iowa.

Perhaps it was only a shrewdly slanted come-on for book-buyers, but the ostensible end was probably served by the display ad in last Wednesday's (12) dailies for the new Una Troy novel, "The Other End of the Bridge." The premise of the blurb was that the book offers a basis for a legit musical by composer Richard Rodgers and lyricist Alan Jay Lerner, who a week previously announced the formation of a new collaborative team. The copy was headed, "Attention Rodgers and Lerner: Here's the perfect book for your first collaboration—Bewitched as 'Sound of Music,' Romantic as 'Camelot,' and filled with a whole chorus of 'Fair Ladies.'" The novel is published by E. P. Dutton.

No wonder so many of the reviews of the current "Big Fish, Little Fish," at the ANTA Theatre, N. Y., complained of the confused ending. It's been revealed since the Hugh Wheeler comedy was rewritten during the tryout tour to indicate that the old scandal which ended the hero's promising career as a college professor involved a male student, not a coed . . . Speaking of sponsor-style script revisions, what's this about Loring Mandel eliminating the alleged anti-liberal tone of "Advise and Consent," his adaptation of the Allen Drury novel, currently at the Cort, N.Y.?

"I'm really fortunate, because I can combine a hobby with business. In six years my plays have grossed $36,000,000—so I guess you would call that success. Part of the reason has been that I don't give up on a play easily."—Broadway producer David Merrick, as quoted by Phil Santora in the N. Y. Daily News.

"When I read 'Mary, Mary' in manuscript, I loved it; when I saw it in New Haven, I loved it; when I saw it in Boston, I loved it. I was also eating and sleeping well. As a result, I was in an utterly unfit state of mind to be attending the theatre as a reviewer. Furthermore, I have been back to 'Mary, Mary' just recently, and I still love it. Consequently, I shall express no opinion of the play."—Walter Kerr, drama critic of the N. Y. Herald Tribune, in a Sunday column explaining why he did not review "Mary, Mary," the Broadway comedy by his wife, Jean Kerr.

"The off-Broadway theatre, just like the on-Broadway theatre, is really a reflection of America and the American economy. The theatre, as we know it, is considered a commercial enterprise, no matter on what level we may want it to be. The fact is that you sell tickets and are trying to get people to come in there every night. Since off-Broadway has begun to succeed, we now face union problems. These unions say, 'All right, you're doing very well. Now we need one more stagehand, you've got to have a treasurer, the actors have got to get more money,' and so on. These encroachments of an economic nature loom larger and larger, and therefore we have to raise our prices, which is, I think, intolerable."—Producer-director Carmen Capalbo, in an unsigned interview in Gentlemen's Quarterly magazine.

"At first glance, I am probably not everyman's cliche of a French tart . . . However, there are many types of women and there are many types of tarts. If they don't care for mine, they can lump it."—British singer-dancer Elizabeth Seal, star of "Irma La Douce," as quoted by Joseph Wershba in the N. Y. Post.

"We're too involved in every detail to produce on an assembly line. We've noticed that other producers have people called 'production assistants,' but we can't comprehend what the job is. It doesn't exist here. We're our own 'production assistants.'" — Producer Harold S. (Griffith &) Prince, as quoted by John S. Wilson in Theatre Arts mag.

"I have become very old-maidish of late. I think it rather suits me. The only loneliness I have ever known is the mood that happens when I am alone in my dressing room before a first night. But that happens to all theatre people and there is nothing you can do to combat the feeling of desolation. Once the first performance is over and the audience's reaction is there, the loneliness dissolves." — English actress Flora Robson, in an article in a series on "Why I Never Married," in the London Daily Express.

"I don't know that being secure and comfortable has ever done anything for anybody. I think to be self-sufficient is a legitimate goal in itself. A person must be self-sufficient before he can be happy. This means to be rooted in life, not in a particular place or situation." —Actress Julie Harris, as quoted by Margaret McManus in the N. Y. World-Telegram.

Performing Arts, effective at the conclusion of the current legit season, the subsidiary firm will be continued for the purpose of completing its obligation to handle the tour of the road company of "Fiorello." It's anticipated that the touring musical will run through 1962.

Fox & Wilford, both connected with BTA, the former as president, will continue their association with the operation, as will Charles K. Jones, who'll also help in the establishment of the new division. Jones and Wilford are also officers of BTA, which routed five bus-and-truck companies this season. Three of those, "Andersonville Trial," "J.B," and "Pleasure of His Company," have already closed. Remaining, besides "Fiorello," is "Once Upon a Mattress," due to fold May 27 in Washington.

Three legit companies, comprising four productions, will be handled by the Fox & Wilford department next season. Two of the productions will be "Mary Stuart" and "Elizabeth the Queen," which will be sent out as a repertory program by the National Phoenix Theatre in partnership with CAMI. The company will be tagged the National Repertory Theatre.

"Mary Stuart" is the Jean Goldstone-John Reich adaptation of Friedrich Schiller's drama, which was presented in 1957 at the Phoenix Theatre, N.Y. It was subsequently toured by the National Phoenix Theatre last season. The two other presentations will be "A Thurber Carnival," and the tentatively-titled, "A Pride of Lions."

"Thurber," which will be produced by Michael Dewell and Frances Ann Hersey, will costar Imogene Coca and her husband, King Donovan. "Lions," a new property adapted by A. E. Hotchner from works of Ernest Hemingway, will be produced by Hotchner with Rod Steiger as star. In addition to the projects mentioned, the new division will also manage U. S. tours for French mime Marcel Marceau. However, Marceau's European commitments will prevent an American tour during the 1961-62 season.

The division will also manage the careers of certain legit and concert personalities, including Cornell McNeil, leading baritone of the Metropolitan and San Francisco operas, and Rita Gorr, leading mezzo soprano of the Paris and Covent Garden operas. Miss Gorr, signed last week by CAMI, will make her debut at the Metropolitan next fall.

Theatre Institute Gets Strawhat on Nantucket

The Institute for Advanced Studies in the Theatre Arts, N. Y., is extending its activities to summer stock. The group will present an international Theatre Festival at the Straight Wharf Playhouse, Nantucket, Mass., for eight weeks fom July 3-Aug. 26.

Dr. John Mitchell, president of the Institute, will be resident producer.

Habima Cancels Tour of Europe

Tel Aviv, April 18.

The Habima Theatre here has scrapped plans for a tour of western Europe in May and June. Cancellation of the project is attributed to lack of funds. The proposed tour had been accorded hefty publicity and the Habima company had already begun warming up in "The Dybbuk" and "The Golem," the two plays scheduled for presentation.

The decision to drop the trek stemmed from two principal monetary factors. London impresario Peter Debney withdrew his invitation for the group to visit England when he was unable to raise $11,200 in Britain to cover the transportation costs of the Israeli company.

Besides that, the Habima management figured the actors' earnings on tour would provide for the individual upkeep but would not be enough to support their families in Israel. The Israeli Foreign Office was prepared to help out because of the goodwill that might result from such a tour, but the project was cancelled before a solution could be worked out.

The attitude of the local press was that the Habima should have known better than to prepare for a tour not fully organized in advance.

Priced at $12.50 And None To Be Had, Toronto Vexed At Met Opera Jam

Toronto, April 18.

Smarting under their inability to get seats for next month's Met Opera visit to Toronto at even $12.50 top, unsuccessful fans are assailing the Rotary Club here, plus the b.o. staff of the O'Keefe Centre since the latter snaffled the Met from Maple Leaf Gardens which had housed the annual trek for the past seven seasons.

Crux of the problem is that O'Keefe's, with its 3,200 seats, has been forced to raise its prices to $12.50 from $10 per performance, with many former ticket-buyers this year getting no mail order priority. On simple mathematics, it costs $210,000 for the week's Met appearance here, with a sellout netting the local sponsoring Rotary only $220,000—or $10,000 for charity distribution.

O'Keefe's is being given free, with all of the take (some $178,000) going to the Met, $19,000 to the stagehands, and $15,000 for O'Keefe advertising. Last season, Rotary barely cleared expenses at Maple Leaf Gardens, donating some $6,500 to charity after a last night S.O.S. to members to purchase additional seats at $10 top.)

Smaller seating arrangement at O'Keefe's has magnified this season's problem, with opera buffs complaining about the seating and acoustics of a hockey arena that accommodated a potential opera-going audience of some 9,000 capacity in previous seasons at Maple Leaf Gardens here.

Raised To $12.50

Audience ire has arisen through increase of $10 top to $12.50 per formance, with 2,400 O'Keefe seats skedded at top prices, plus chaos of mail orders going first to Rotary Club of Toronto members to all that formerly subscribed to the six evening performances of the week's engagement, with remainder going to O'Keefe's regular subscribers, but not until Rotary had first inserted this season's lineup in Toronto dailies.

Caught in the middle are many disappointed fans, with the cost of the Toronto visit of the Met some $30.000 in excess of last season and indications that it will go even higher next year.

Repertory

O'Keefe Centre program is Monday evening, May 29, von Flotow's "Martha" as updated by Ann Ronell with Victoria de los Angeles, Rosalind Elias, Richard Tucker and Giorgio Tozzi, with sets by Oliver Smith and costumes designed by Motley; (30) Puccini's "Turandot" with Birgit Nilsson, Teresa Stratas, Franco Corelli, Frank Guarrera, with sets and costumes by Cecil Beaton; (31), matinee of Verdi's "La Traviata" with Anna Moffo, Dino Formichini and Robert Merrill, with production by Tyrone Guthrie and sets by Oliver Smith; (31) evening, Verdi's "Aida" with Leonie Rysanek, Irene Dalis, Eugenio Fernandi, Anselmo Colzani, Jerome Hines, with production by Margaret Webster, sets and costumes by Rolf Gerard; (June 1) Puccini's "La Boheme" with Dorothy Kirsten, Dorothy Coulter; Richard Tucker, Loronzo Testi, Giorgio Tozzi, with production by Joseph L. Mankiewicz; (2) Verdi's "Rigoletto," with Laurel Hurley, Barry Morell, Cornell MacNeil, William Wildermann, production by Herbert Graf; (3) Matinee, Verdi's "Aida," same singers as earlier in week; (3) evening, Verdi's "La Traviata" with Anna Moffo, Jan Peerce, Frank Guarrera.

On top of seating mishaps, Rotary committee was asked to make its choices on next year's tour of the Met, with eight of 10 to go on tour and six to be brought to Toronto. Rotary picked "Adrana Lecouvreur," "The Masked Ball," "Force of Destiny," "La Boheme," "Madame Butterfly" and "Lucia di Lammermoor." They turned down "Tosca," "Salome," "Cosi fan Tutti" and "Girl of the Golden West."

Schedule N.Y. City Ballet For Vancouver Festival

The opening presentation of the Vancouver International Festival this summer will be the N. Y. City Ballet. The dance troupe will travel directly from N. Y. for a July 24 opening at the Queen Elizabeth Theatre, Vancouver. The company of 75, including 56 dancers, has been booked into the house for a week's stand, with three completely different programs due for presentation.

Following the Vancouver date, the troupe will play San Francisco, Los Angeles and then Chicago. The ballet booking at the Queen Elizabeth will be followed by the preem of Benjamin Britten's opera version of "A Midsummer Night's Dream," to be directed and designed by Harry Horner.

Mexico Legit's $3,200,000 Take

Mexico City, April 11.

Mexican legit and variety theatres took in more than $3,200,000 (U.S.) last year, according to the Bureau of Statistics (a dependency of the Dept. of National Economy).

The take was about $800,000 more than in 1959. During the 12 months a total of 4,879,350 boxoffice admissions were sold, the Bureau said, with best month in May when boxoffice topped $396,000, with February being low month at somewhat over $131,000 in round figures.

New French News Mag

A new French news mag hit the stands last week, patterned obviously on the Time and Newsweek. It is called Continent and the first issue, backed by Philippe de Rothschild and put out by the big newspaper and mag distrib combine, Hachette, it is to be published in French and German and cover most of Western Europe in distribution.

Reviews are strictly local as are pages on personalities. Cover has Joseph P. Kennedy as the grey eminence behind his son, President John F. Kennedy. Outlook appears status quo and rightist.

There Was A Critic!

The late H. T. Parker, the eminent drama critic of the old Boston Evening Transcript, was mentioned briefly in a recent article in the Atlantic Monthly, the third in a series by associate editor Charles W. Morton. Parker, who signed his reviews with only his initials, H.T.P., was one of the most respected critics in the country, and also a noted eccentric.

Morton mentions him only briefly about Parker because, he explains in the pieces, the subject was covered [illegible] in a monograph, "H.T.P.: Portrait of a Critic," by David McCord, published by Coward-McCann in 1937. However, the Atlantic writer recalls a typical Parker incident, presumably never reported in print.

The late John Cutler, one of the Transcript editors, told Morton of having been present one day when Parker was cleaning out his desk, an ancient rolltop crammed with assorted theatre programs, letters, memos, clippings and gimcrack gifts and mementos. Digging into a lower drawer, the critic pulled out a ballerina slipper, looked at it for a moment and then told how it had been given him by Anna Pavlova.

At that time, Parker related, he was living in the far west and had been gravely ill when the great Russian dancer played an engagement in the city. Instead of proceeding with her tour she cancelled a number of subsequent bookings to remain and nurse him, he recalled. Concluding the bit of reminiscence, Parker tossed the slipper in the wastebasket and resumed cleaning out his desk.

Early in his journalistic career, Morton was on the staff of the Transcript, and his series is based on his recollections of the paper's final period.

'U. S. Vastly Uninformed'

William J. Lederer, co-author of "The Ugly American," told a Honolulu group his new book, "A Nation of Sheep," is a "nasty book and may be a great failure" but it will set out to prove that Americans are vastly uninformed concerning national and international affairs and attempt to show how the situation may be remedied.

Lederer said the average reading time of Americans on international news is less than three minutes per day and constrasted this with an average of four hours tv viewing.

All About Irene Kane

Somebody's always puneturing popular myths. Now it's that perennial bleat about cynical, self-satisfied New York being uninterested in new talent. A young writer-actress named Irene Kane is proof to the contrary.

Miss Kane, who's been earning a nice living for some years writing, mostly anonymously, for Dell publications, had a byline piece called "Memoires of a Nobody" several weeks ago in the drama pages of the Lively Arts section of the Sunday N.Y. Herald Tribune. It was written at the suggestion of John Springer, a publicity man for Robert E. Griffith & Harold S. Prince, producers of "Tenderloin," at the 46th Street Theatre, N.Y. Miss Kane is featured in the musical, and the article was intended as a plug for the show.

It was a light humorous piece and the response stunned Miss Kane whose anonymous writing for fan mags hadn't prepared her for such appreciation. First, there was a congratulatory note from pressagent Richard Maney, whom the actress-singer had heard and read about but never met. He does not work for Griffith & Prince, and wrote merely to express admiration. Miss Kane treasurers the latter.

She also enjoyed a fan letter from a super-serious and terribly worldly young student at Lawrenceville School, and has been gratified at the changed attitudes of some of her acquaintances, both in and out of the cast of "Tenderloin." One prominent young actress, currently in another show, had never designed to speak to Miss Kane before, despite several introductions, but greeted her like an old friend at a party last week.

Most tangible of the reactions to "Memoirs of a Nobody," however, was a check for $50, totally unexpected, from the Herald Tribune. Also gratifying was the action of a New York drama editor who, upon reading the piece, forwarded it to Charles W. Morton, associate editor of the Atlantic Monthly. Morton wrote Miss Kane, complimenting her on the "Memoirs" and suggesting that she do other humorous articles for his publication.

Morton also passed the Herald Trib article along to an editor of Atlantic-Little Brown, who wrote Miss Kane to suggest a luncheon meeting to discuss the possibility of her writing a book. A few days later a similar letter arrived from Ken McCormick, editor of Doubleday. Literary agents have also begun manifesting interest.

That's about all, at least thus far.

'10 For Wednesday Night'

McLelland & Stewart will publish "Ten For Wednesday Night," anthology of 10 short stories by Canadians originally commissioned for airing on the Canadian Broadcasting Corp.'s "Wednesday Night" radio show.

Edited by CBC's Robert Weaver, it will include items by w.k. Canadian pen people such as Morley Callaghan, Ethel Wilson, Mordecai Richler and Alice Monro.

'American English'

"The Ordeal of American English" (Houghton Mifflin; $1.75), by C. Merton Babcock, is a kingsize paperbound book of much interest to all students of semantics. Author is Professor of American Issues at Michigan State U., author of various articles on language, and prepared this as college text for students of composition.

Book includes "The VARIETY of Language," by Abel Green, from the 55th Anniversary Number (Jan. 6, 1960). It also dwells on other language and slanguage pieces, all contributing to an interesting cross-section for anybody interested in writing and writers and the use of language, with accent on the American "Einglish as she is spoke." Abel.

'Leading Ladies'

"Leading Ladies" by Barbara Marinacci (Dodd, Mead; $4), is a collection of general information about Mary Betterton, Peg Woffington, Sarah Siddons, Charlotte Cushman, Ellen Terry, Bernhardt, Duse, Mrs. Fiske, Ethel Barrymore, Laurette Taylor and Gertrude Lawrence. Author performs adequate research, but tome adds nothing new concerning its stars. Volume may interest students and theatre browsers.

There are several illustrations and a bibliography. Rodo.

Dick Condon's Projects

Former film publicist-turned-novelist, Richard Condon, now residing in Mexico City, has been huddling with his agent, Hal Matson, in New York, on new writing projects.

McGraw-Hill is bringing out his latest book, "A Talent For Loving (Or, The Great Cowboy Race)" in July. George Axelrod has exercised his option on the picture rights to Condon's "Manchurian Candidate" and his first novel, "The Oldest Confession," starring Rita Hayworth, is in production, to be retitled "Once A Thief."

'Famous Modern Newspapermen'

N.Y. Herald Tribune staffer Milton Lewis and his wife, Mildred Lewis' freelance writer, are doing "Famous Modern Newspapermen" for Dodd, Mead for spring 1962 publication. It is part of the publishing house's "famous" series (artists, inventors et al.), inspirational books for the teenage educational market.

The Lewises' "modern newspapermen" gallery will comprise Brooks Atkinson, Meyer Berger, Heywood Broun, Art Buchwald, Bob Considine, John Crosby, Abel Green, Ernie Pyle, James Reston, Sylvia Porter, Red Smith.

'Weiss of the Yankees'

Harold Matson is agenting "Weiss (George A.) of the Yankees," autobiography of the baseball executive, which he will write with Robert Smith's collaboration.

Smith had his "Baseball" published by Simon & Schuster in 1947; and his book on "Baseball in America" is due via Holt, Rinehart & Winston in the fall as is "The Story of Pro Football" which Doubleday will bring out later in '61.

First Santa Maria Book

First book about the revolution aboard the Santa Maria two months ago, has been published in Holland by Bruna, Utrecht. Rather obviously, it is named "The 13 Days of the Santa Maria." It's an 80c paperback.

Though the book has one name for the author, Link van Hofwijk, it is written by three journalists, Link van Bruggen, Jos van Hofwegen and Hein Waalwijk, whose names were contracted into Link van Hofwijk.

Idea arose when the three reporters interviewed Santa Maria passengers at the Amsterdam airport, Schiphol. Each of them then started writing his own third of the story. After 14 days, the three parts were consolidated into an all-round 100,000 words mss.

More 'Holiday' Guides

Holiday Magazine Guides series added six new titles recently to the 10 brought out last April. Designed and edited under Holiday's supervision, the new tomes include Switzerland, The Low Countries, Restaurants of Europe, Shopping in Europe, Mexico, and The Caribbean and the Bahamas.

A joint enterprise of Holiday and Random House Inc., the series spells out what to see and where to see it, among other things. RH and Holiday are mapping extensive promotional plans to bally the new titles. American Express is also cooperating in pushing sales.

Cerf's Denker, 'Camelot'

As soon as the notices were out on "A Far Country," Bennett Cerf sought out playwright Henry Denker and signed him for the book rights to the play.

Cerf's Random House also will publish "Camelot" under a just-closed deal with authors Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe.

CHATTER

Marie Rodell & Joan Daves now repping Coast's Shirley Collier agency in New York. Hollywood agency formerly worked with Sidney Satenstein.

Jim Thorne, actor, skindiver, producer, photographer, major in the U. S. Army Reserve, founder and president of Adventure Inc., has signed with Doubleday to write an autobiographical book of his career.

"This Is the Holy Land," picture book by Bishop Sheen, photographer Yousuf Karsh and H. V. Morton (Hawthorn), already a Catholic Digest Book Club, Catholic Family Book Club and Catholic Literary Foundation selection, has been adopted by Air France as its official guide for tours of the Holy Land.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Hollywood.

One of the riddles of writing is that if you grow rhapsodic about New York, London, Paris, Rome, Vienna, Moscow or even Hong Kong you are big league, but if you throw equally handsome prose ecstatically at Keokuk, Eureka, Kansas City, Sacramento or Calipatria you're a hick.

There's no use fighting this credo because the invisible censors who have laid out these rules will list even neutralists as hicks from the sticks. I've just been reading Gerard Fay's "Passenger to London." It substantiates this prejudice in favor of big towns. Did anybody ever swoon with delight over big feet?

Fay limits his rhapsodies to London and in smaller measures to Dublin and New York. His job is London editor of the Manchester Guardian (which, to get away from these hick implications, has dropped "Manchester" from its billing).

Fay was one time an actor, not a very good actor, but an actor. He was also the son of an actor and his Uncle Willie wrote "The Fays of the Abbey Theatre." Gerard Fay himself added to this dossier by writing "The Abbey Theatre, Cradle of Genius," so that his father, Frank Fay, and his Uncle Willie would not be too neglected in what they did in the theatrical transition between The Irish National Theatre and the Abbey Players.

He reports that Lennox Robinson lectured a half hour on the Abbey without ever once mentioning the Fays. Actually they were not quite that neglected. Willie got a whole page of recognition in John Parker's Who's Who In The Theatre in 1926.

The O'Fahys Become The Fays

Though young Fay was born in Rochdale, Lancashire, in 1913, and was raised in Ireland and spent much of his boyhood on tour with his family in the English provinces, the other side of his family stuck to Ireland. The name was O'Fahy, but when his grandfather, who was a tailor, went to England and saw signs "No Irish Need Reply" he changed his name from the Irish O'Fahy to the English Fay. These small retreats set back Irish freedom hundreds of years.

Show people traveled mostly on Sundays. Before the show on Saturday night everything would be got ready and what could be shipped of costumes, wigs, shoes and personal props would be sent down to the railroad station. Young Fay's first writing was inscribing the family basket with legends like, "F. J. Fay, Abraham Lincoln Company, Passenger to Newcastle-on-Tyne." Fay's title "Passenger To London" derives from this tradition.

It is the author's claim that he began to act in Dublin at seven and was finished at 14. That was his career as a pro. Later, he skidded down the ladder a bit and did some acting as an amateur.

'Hamlet' At Fourteen, Wheops!

In the Garrick Club there hangs a portrait of William Henry West Betty, whose acting career was limited to the years between his 13th and 17th birthdays. He played "Hamlet" at 14, quit acting to go to Cambridge and lived to be 80. There is no portrait of a Fay in a similar role.

Fay's star performance was in a comedy called "The Irish Jew" at the Empire, now changed to the Olympia, a change which Fay thinks shows an Irish preference for paganism.

His mother and father were in this play at the same time. Pressagents in those days passed up such opportunities for exploitation, though by the time the three Barrymores were being cast for the price of one, the p.a's had caught up to such family bargain appeals.

It was not until he was 50 that Fay's father got the chance to play the prince in Hamlet, and that had to be with an amateur society. Though a good actor, he was short and leading men know that the two most important listings in show biz are their height and telephone numbers.

A Midsummer Night At Gogarty's

How crazy the Irish can get when it comes to the theatre is well illustrated when "A Midsummer Night's Dream" was played in Oliver St. John Gogarty's garden. Gogarty was away and left instructions for the cast to dress in the garage. It was overlooked that there were girls as well as boys in the cast and a servant suggested that perhaps a little sacking hung across one end of the garage would satisfy the demands of modesty. The sacking was rather opaque and young Fay says he learned lessons of feminine anatomy that he never forgot.

His father had certain ideas about acting which would be just as good today. For one thing when a scene is being played in the dark he instructed the actors to speak more loudly than usual. Young Fay hung on to the coattails of his father when broadcasting came into Ireland and had parts in several of his father's productions.

He writes that James Stephens, author of "The Crock of Gold," who was a tiny man, developed a new genius as one of the first natural broadcasters in English. He has nice things to say too about George Russell and Sean O'Casey and not such nice things to say about W. B. Yeats, who was a great poet and mediocre playwright and hardly more than a nominal legislator as Senator Yeats. Fay reports that Yeats had the Steinach operation and his whole personality changed.

In time young Fay got far out of the theatre and in fact was working as a machinist in Rochdale when a chance came for him to catch some plays for the Rochdale Observer. Thus began his career in journalism, and three years later he joined the Guardian.

He came out of the war in 1944 okay, having attained the rank of major and being wounded in the early days of the fighting in Normandy. By 1946 he was well enough to join the London staff of the Guardian and ten years later became its London editor.

So 'Clink' Came From Southwark, Eh?

These 8,000,000 Islanders squeezed in less than 1,000 miles became his beat, and except for short junkets to other countries and capitals, London has been his beat ever since. He can dig up the oddest facts. For instance, the phrase "in clink" he says derives from the ancient Clink Prison in Southwark. He knows all the pubs and can write glowingly of them.

Fay reveals an interesting example of foresight among publishers. The Manchester Guardian was owned by the Scott Trust and the trustees thinking the Germans might live up to their threat of invasion, transferred the trust deed to Baltimore in care of Paul Patterson, president of the Baltimore Sun papers. As H. L. Mencken of The Sun was known to be anti-British, the publishers of the Manchester Guardian must have figured his kraut bias was only skin deep.

Fay also does a fast profile on Lord Beaverbrook, specially at Fredericton, New Brunswick, where the Beaver poured much of his largesse over the Canadian countryside. A little man with a huge head, and a not very pretty one, Beavie has endowed the University of New Brunswick and given the area a beautiful art gallery and a club. Fay confesses he really would have nothing to offer a paper like Beavie's Daily Express "as all my upbringing has been on serious newspapers."

Read By Wrong People

His view was that England's papers with multi-million circulations are not the papers with power. Seemingly, in England, you can't have both. Circulation wouldn't even guarantee advertising. Lord Southwood built up the Herald to the largest daily sale in the world but the advertisers wouldn't follow him in.

The Herald lost its place to the Express, and the Express to the Mirror, but the advertisers are more concerned with who's buying the paper, rather than how many. At least so it appears in England.

Fay's latest hot and spot news is that Grosvenor Square which used to be called Eisenhower Platz is now called Diefenbaker Platz, because the Canadians have taken over the old American embassy.

This "Passenger To London" is quite a guy.

N.Y. Expo Class For Masses

in the general exhibits, and in the amphitheatre but the idea of creating a special midway with its barkers and shills and spurious razzle-dazzle that was such a mistake in the 1939 N.Y. World's Fair—that this is something I just won't stand for."

The industrialists and the restaurateurs, the showmen consultants, the talent agencies and others whose opinions matter—all of which Moses is fully cognizant and has respect for—nonetheless stress an "amusement area." Says one, "If Moses doesn't like the word 'midway' call it something else—call it 'funway' or even the corny 'amusement area'."

To this Moses rebuts, "Then the inference is that all the other more important things in the fair are not fun. Well, it's just not so! What could be more fun than the Moscow Circus, including their famed Popov the clown, being brought in for the Russian Pavilion. Or Ringling having a circus in the American exhibits.

"Walt Disney has a successful operation and it's all highgrade without any shills or barkers or tawdry come-ons. Disney has been out here and even VARIETY has quoted him that he thinks we're on the right track."

But being on the right track doesn't mean kewpie dolls and pinball games. And as for the conventional, non-industrialized show biz aspects, Moses realized that for the "responsible and veteran" amusement park operators the short sixmonth season, for two years, just doesn't make it worthwhile without some commercial or sponsorial underwriting. He named the Tilyou family of Coney Island Steeplechase there just marked its diamond jubilee as also having been out to the Flushing Meadows site of the N.Y. Fair and agreeing it wasn't economically feasible for them. Moses' idea of a practical show business undertaking, for example, is the Pepsi-Cola Music Hall at Disneyland with its marathon show, soft drinks and atmospheric restful retreat which pays off both at the gate, in exploitation, and in goodwill.

$2 Admish

One practical accent Moses has for the N.Y. Fair is the gate receipts. He expects to "make a lot of money from admissions." It will be a $2 top as against 75c in 1939 and $1 for children 40c in '39-'40.

Music Corp of America, William Morris and General Artists Corp. are in constant touch with Judge Samuel I. Rosenman who, with Sydney M. Kaye, of the Rosenman, Colin, Goldmark & Kaye law firm, has been screening show biz ideas. Leon Leonidoff and Meyer Davis have ideas, among others.

David Merrick was brought in by Pepsi-Cola president Herbert L. Barnett, for example, but while "one top showman" will soon be designated, Moses accents that the Fair and the Lincoln Center of Performing Arts is almost a two-pix simultaneous operation. Lincoln Center opens also in 1964 and Moses' idea, in effect, is to key the Fair in tandem with the Center. The latter will accent the orthodox "indoor" type of musical, operatic and ballet and, perhaps, even the type of operetta, musicomedy and lighter divertissement now associated with the N.Y. Civic Center. From other observations, there is a good chance the Center may decide to remain in its present West 55th St. site.

The huge Amphitheatre, where Billy Rose's Aquacade was such a click in the 1939-40 affair, appears set with a "unique" spectacle under this "top showman." Details cannot be revealed considering some competitive angles, also terms, which the Fair figures could place it at a trading disadvantage if disclosed before finalization.

Moses' idea of the "ideal" industrially-sponsored show would be a Kraft Music Hall, for example, where Perry Como would originate his NBC telecasts, ditto other shows.

Or an RCA Victor Music Hall from whence Belafonte and other artists would originate.

This doesn't shut out the Latin Quarter-style of show which, in actuality, is a current negotiation.

The most casual observers of Moses-at-work realize one thing: he is aware of all criticism; he doesn't resent it because, in actuality, he faces up to almost every observation with a realistic rebuttal. If he were completely dogmatic he would blind himself to or ignore the criticisms, of which there are many; instead, he comes to grips with each barb but the end-result is the same—if he thinks he's on the right track he will make no bones about his viewpoint but it is never in the nature of apology. More, it is a rationalization and exposition of planned thinking born of experience. And he has a lifetime of experience as a public servant.

Bob Moses' Credo

Moses' credo on the Fair's operation was perhaps best summed up before the students at Brandeis U. in Waltham, Mass., recently when he stressed "there will be no third-rate Coney Island midway or cheap vulgar honkytonk area, but amusements will be found in profusion in the international and industrial areas and on the shores of our lakes.

"We are not puritanical killjoys. We do not depreciate fun. We are not against gaiety. We shall have it throughout the Fair, but not concentrated in the narrow Streets of Cairo. We shall inaugurate many new inventions infinitely more diverting than whiskered women, tattooed giants and nudes on ice, such as worldwide color television.

"I have spent a large part of my life resisting pressures to put catchpenny devices, mechanical amusements, shooting galleries, fan dancers and slot machines on our public beaches. It is because of the absence of these gadgets that Jones Beach is Jones Beach. There's no evidence that limiting them breaks a fair or a park. They are not required to attract people in numbers, least of all at night when magnificent exhibits, brilliant lighting, restaurants, rides and shows are presented by exhibitors to advertise their products and not for direct profit. Raw side shows caused much concerned at the 1939-1940 World's Fair, brought down on the management the indignation of churches and necessitated a cleanup. This will not be repeated in 1964 and 1965 . . . ."

Stressing the unique mating of the Fair is its "partnership with the Performing Arts Center at Lincoln Square, a vast cultural complex supported by public and private funds, in Manhattan's upper West Side, headed by Mr. John D. Rockefeller 3d, built to keep pace with the Fair. We shall develop programs jointly, advertise them and issue invitations jointly so that visitors can arrange in advance to attend the many concurrent attractions at the Fair and the Performing Arts.

In Tandem With Lincoln Center

"This arrangement has many advantages. The Fair will not attempt to duplicate, parallel or compete with the music, opera, theatre, dance and related offerings at the Performing Arts Center which can do these things much better, and the Performing Arts will win the benefit of the association with Fair attractions and get people into the habit of summer attendance at airconditioned theatres, auditoriums and stages which otherwise might be dark."

The Lincoln Center of Performing Arts has this timetable which, however, may experience some hurdles: Philharmonic Hall (under construction) for 1962 opening. In 1963 the Repertory Drama Theatre, Damrosch Park & Band Shell and underground garage are supposed to open; and in 1964 there should be completed the new Metropolitan Opera House, Juilliard School, Student Theatre, Drama Studio and Recital Studio (all same project), Chamber Music & Recital Hall, Theatre for the Dance & Operetta, Library-Museum.

Moses is faced not only with the problem of showmanship and entertainment but getting big business to underwrite it as well.

'Tivoli' Pattern Out

The so-called "Tivoli" concept of entertainment, patterned after the famed Copenhagen amusement park, is now not deemed feasible in that neither the Federal, state nor city authorities are interested in making their exhibits permanent. On the other hand, industry must count on a 24-week season, for the two-year period, and by the nature of educational foundation under which the N.Y. Fair Corp. operates as a tax-free undertaking the permanency aspect is out, other than for the cultural and educational heritage, viz., the permanent park.

None the less, industrial exhibitors, showmen, concessionaires and even the international and Federal agencies feel that some sort of gimmick is necessary to churn traffic. Nor does it mean the games of chance or barkers or shills that Moses deprecates.

Logistics And Finances

The logistics of organization revolves around a corps whose manpower is only matched by its American know-how and financial wizardry. This makes academic the almost $70,000,000 bankrolling required. Actually the promissory notes total $67,500,000 and income from space rentals and advance ticket sales (en bloc) are pegged at $30,800,000 so that the overall nut is $98,300,000.

Against this construction is estimated at $57,700,000; interest and financing costs, $10,000,000; other expenses (including contingencies), $30,600,000—a total of $98,300,000.

The Fair intends to leave to the City of New York a completed Flushing Meadow Park; a new Queens Botanical Garden, and a $23,260,000 surplus for educational purposes.

This is how the Finance Committee breaks down the Fair Operating & Interim Periods: admissions, space rentals and other income (1964): $68,200,000; $81,950,000. Operating expenses: 1964—$26,075,000; 1965—$27,315,000.

Post-Fair the Finance Committee anticipates a $96,760,000 remainder from operations against which will be charged $1,000,000 for demolition; $5,000,000 for restoration of the park; $67,500,000 payment for notes (at 6% interest); and a surplus of over $23,000,000 to the City of New York for educational purposes.

Seattle 'Recognized'

Moses makes light of the fact that the International Fairs Commission has "recognized" the Seattle Fair for 1962, hence cannot participate "officially" in the N.Y. 1964-1965 undertaking because already many of the member-countries of the International group have defected via their leading industries. In effect British woolens and motors; French perfumes; Philips electronics representing Holland, etc., through their privately endowed industrial buildings, will still have their national flags flying over their exhibits.

Gastronomy will be an epicurean adventure for the cognoscenti according to expectations. Pleasant culinary memories of the British Buttery, the French, Italian and Belgian Pavilions and all the others, from Latin America to the Far East (despite the alarums of war in those days) are recalled.

For example, Maxim's of Paris may be part of the PanAmerican Airways building, since Louis and Maggie Vaudable, owners of the famed Paris restaurant, also do the catering for PanAm.

Maximum space permitted is 50,000 square feet which rents at $4 per, so the maximum rental is $200,000 per annum or $400,000 for the two years. What the industrialist, nationality or other exhibitor puts on the site is up to them. By March 1, 1961 more than 50% of the space had been subscribed.

Incidentally, the other face of coin, vis-a-vis the "showmanship" slant, is Moses' enlistment of Leo Carillo to woo the Latin American and other Spanish countries. In like manner, former N.Y. Gov. Charles Poletti who heads the international team has a corps of goodwill ambassadors girdling the globe.

The details of construction, the one billion for the new arterial highway approaches which will be a permanent heritage not only for the Flushing Park thereafter but for the new baseball stadium there, is a masterpiece of organization, planning and financing.

Triple Celebrations

The correlation of the 1964 Fair to mark the 300th anni of the founding of New York; the 20th anni of the establishment of the UN in New York; and the opening of the Verrazano-Narrows Bridge—the greatest suspension bridge in the world—and the completion of the Flushing Meadow Park, are the concomitant calendar events.

The arterial connections to the Fair will be paid for out of Federal, state and city funds which would have been paid for anyway, but now accelerated to coincide with the 1964-1965 event.

Transportation to the Fair, by ferry from Manhattan to the Flushing Meadow Lake, will be accelerated on arrival by moving sidewalks and carnival-type bus and other conveyances, chiefly part of the Greyhound system.

The catering appurtenances will be dominantly divided between the Brass Rail (Levine Bros.), which does the catering at Jones Beach as it did at the U.S. Pavilion at the Brussels Exposition in 1958, and with Restaurant Associates (Jerome Brody & Co.) which operates the class Forum, Four Seasons etc. as well as the Riker chain of pop-priced eateries. Both will have the hot-dog stands as well as class eateries. Meantime, Arnold Shleifer (Tavern-on-the-Green) has the catering in the Administration Bldg.

As an incidental to general information, unlike the afterthought press-radio coverage in 1939, a special Press HQ will be set up next to the Administration Bldg, under press & information veepee Bill Berns, ex-NBCaster. Tom Deegan, chairman of the Fair's executive committee, is one of the three p.r. agencies servicing the corporation; William J. Donoghue Co. is another p.r. outfit; and J. Walter Thompson is the ad agency.

Seattle's Space Needle

Brussels' Atomium, on which was perched a class restaurant, will be topped by the 550-foot-high Space Needle at Seattle's Century 21 Exposition opening in April 1962 on which, too, will be a class restaurant (22) capacity). It will revolve and as one eats the views of the Cascade Ronge, Puget Sound and Mount Rainier come into view.

Like the Unisphere (N.Y. 1964 and the yesteryear Atomium in Brussels, the Space Needle not only will remain as a permanent reminder but already a Las Vegas syndicate is planning a counterpart as a natural lure. It also plans to charge an admission to diners and, in off-hours, to visitors.

3 Years to Preem

This Saturday (22) group of city, state, national and international, press and show biz have been invited to the ceremony, luncheon and entertainment which will celebrate "three years to opening day" (1964). Guests are being transported by chartered ferryboat, if not coming by private car.

The ceremony will take place at the Unisphere site and in the N. Y. City Bldg. The Unisphere, to be erected by the U. S. Steel Corp., will be the theme symbol of the Fair representing "man's achievements on a shrinking globe in an expanding universe, and the necessity of achieving peace through understanding," as Moses puts it.

It will be the biggest armillary sphere ever constructed—an armillary sphere is a model of the world formed on concentric rings. Unlike the Trylon & Perisphere, which Moses observes didn't live up to its author's intentions, the Unisphere which will be 13 stories high, mounted over a 350-foot pool, will not be taken down after the Fair. It will be left as a permanent symbol of the permanent park in New York's Flushing Meadows.

Mementos of World's Fairs

Brussels 1958, despite its Atomium symbol, had two big hits in the Sputnik (with dog) in the Russian Pavilion and the beautiful U.S. Pavilion built by Edward D. Stone.

New York 1939, despite its Trylon & Perisphere to symbolize "the world of tomorrow," best recalls Billy Rose's Aquacade, General Motors' Futurama, nylon, airconditioning and television. Also it gave impetus to the great international restaurants (French and Belgian pavilions for example, England's The Buttery, et al.).

San Francisco 1939 left Treasure Island, now a key Navy base, as heritage of the Golden Gate Exposition.

Chicago 1933 marked Chi's 100th anni, hence "A Century of Progress." It may have been officially symbolized by an impressive Hall of Science but somehow Sally Rand's fan-dancing had greater mass identification (a thing Bob Moses doesn't want to see happening in 1964-65).

Philadelphia 1926 was formally the Sesquicentennial Exhibition and left the huge stadium used since for the annual Army-Navy football games, also as a site of a world's championship bout, etc.

Other expos over the years produced such highlights or memorable offbeat items as "Little Egypt" vieing with Paris 1889's Eifel Tower and automobile innovations. Four years later in Chicago 1893, the Columbia Exposition as it was called, marking the 400th anni of Christopher Columbus' landing (it was a year behind schedule) introduced the electric light and the Ferris Wheel, Chi's answer to Paris' La Tour d'Eiffel.

Bob Moses' 1964 Fair will feature moving sidewalks but Paris 1900 first introduced the escalator and, of course, left the imposing Grand Palais and Petit Palais as permanent mementos.

Eichmann

dio-telegraph office set up in the courtroom. Its facilities can handle 35,000 words per hour.

"Eichmann's typically German craving for order will be well satisfied here," a French journalist told Heinrich Jaenicke who represents Quick magazine, from Munich, the town where the Nazi movement was born. He added that he's somewhat disturbed by the "Prussian efficiency" with which the Israelis have organized everything surrounding the Eichmann trial.

The four Marconi four-and-a-half inch video cameras, installed by Capital Cities Broadcasting Co. of New York, are barely visible in the courtroom. Newsmen have complained about Capital Cities' monopoly and the arrangement of sharing radio-tv vedio taype and photographs as a pool. But the pooling was regarded as necessary in order not to disturb courtroom decorum.

The telefilm processing laboratory is in a nearby building, connected with the courtroom via cables. Every foot is immediately processed and distributed to radio-tv reps. Some have set up special messenger services between Jerusalem and Lydda airport to speed the tapes to London, New York, etc.

to the ballet in New York). She arrived 45 minutes late, 15 minutes after the curtain was up. It wasn't her fault, however, as Stevenson's plane was delayed getting to Washington.

The Secret Service called tow trucks to take away a number of cars parked near the entrance of Lisner Auditorium to make room for a fleet of White House limousines. This was done without Mrs. Kennedy's knowledge, and without notice to the owners of the cars involved, who couldn't find their autos when the opera was over.

The First Lady remained in her seat during both intermissions, and an unprecedented aisle jam resulted. Scores surged down to stare at her and wouldn't move, leaving those seated next to her no way to get out, or to get back to their seats if they had managed to get out.

The President's wife went to a champagne supper for the cast after the performance, but stayed only 20 minutes. Paul Callaway conducted the performance, and the cast featured Hanna Ludwig, Loren Driscoll, Mildred Allen and Richard Cross.

citations, there were two special presentations, one to David Merrick for his intensive production activity over the last seven years, and another to the Theatre Guild for organizing the Theatre Guild-American Repertory Co., now touring overseas.

Unlike the regular awards, the special citations to Merrick and the Theatre Guild has been disclosed about 10 days prior to their actual presentation last Sunday night. Broadway producer Kermit Bloomgarden, a longtime member of the Wing's board of directors, learned of them last week and protested the procedure by which they were established. When his request for a special meeting to discuss his protest was turned down, Bloomgarden resigned from the board, informing the Wing of his action by telegram last Thursday (13).

Bloomgarden says that the awards reflect a "pressure push" and were "completely devoid of dignity" in the way they came about. He's particularly miffed at the award to the Theatre Guild, which he understands was tossed in to appease the Guild, after word of the Merrick citation got out. It has been noted that Wing president Helen Menken is a member of the Guild-American Rep troupe.

Bloomgarden's stand, confirmed by other members of the Wing's board, is that the committee chosen to make nominations in 19 regular categories was not authorized to make special awards. The recommendations of the nominating committee were voted on by paid up members of the Wing.

The Committee

The nominating committee comprised John Chapman and Richard Watts Jr., drama critics of the N.Y. Daily News and the N.Y. Post, respectively, Herman Shumlin, producer-director; Edward F. Kook, lighting executive and technician, and Jo Mielziner, scenic designer.

Broadway producer Alexander H. Cohen, another member of the American Theatre Wing's board of directors who's dissatisfied with the organization's annual legit awards, cracked "The Tonys are phonies and always have been." He demanded, "How can a committee make nominations when they haven't seen all the shows, and how can 300 members vote when they haven't seen the performances of all the nominees."

As a result, Cohen asserts, "You get a lot of nonsense. The Tonys are merely a popularity contest." Cohen says he intends proposing to the League of N. Y. Theatres that the Wing's annual awards either have to be run professionally or forgotten. Anent the special awards, the producer claims he was informed two weeks ago by George Richards, acting head of the Wing in the absence of Miss Menken (his wife) that there would be no special awards this year.

Broadway producer and Wing board member Alfred de Liagre also thinks it was "unfortunate" that the nominating committee's decision to make the special awards was not referred to the board of directors. He says the committee had been approved by the board to make nominations in the 19 regular categories and that any special awards should also have had the approval of the board, which was not consulted, presumably because there wasn't enough time.

In the awards to performers, the British showed up the Americans by winning in three of the four star categories. The British winners were Richard Burton, Elizabeth Seal and Joan Plowright. Another Britisher, John Gielgud, copped a "Tony" for staging. Incidentally, in accepting his "Tony," Burton made an obscure reference to this being his only chance to win the award. When queried the next day as to what he meant, Burton, who was cited as musical male star for his performance in "Camelot," stated the show, which marked his debut in a musical, would also probably represent his last appearance in such a vehicle.

Theatre and a party of 10 interracial men and women booked seats and attempted to enter the cinema but they were stopped in the vestibule as the right of admission is reserved in all theatres.

In spite of appeals and requests non-whites are prohibited from seeing overseas companies when they appear in the main theatres and only when special performances are arranged in Municipal Halls, where mixed audiences are permitted, do they have the opportunity of seeing and hearing overseas talent. Such was the case when the Cliff Richards show was in Capetown and they were "permitted" to hear him at a matinee, when they had to leave work and lose pay.

In the days of the Opera House and Tivoli Theatre a section of the auditorium was set aside for non-whites and they had the same opportunity as whites of seeing visiting companies but now mixed houses are not allowed.

or the years of the autobiographer and the average reader to whom this book will appeal. Somehow the Algonquin of the Alec Woollcott-Neysa McMein-George S. Kaufman-Harold Ross span (in the 1920s) is a niche all its own.

Harpo with total recall (and capable collaborative assist by Rowland Barber) illustrates that, with quip and wit, warmth of humor and anecdote that seemed especially indigenous to the Broadway of the 1920s. Harpo also bespeaks fun and affection and human relations in the decades thereafter, right up to BevHills circa '61.

Harpo's gregariousness made him cross paths with the rich and the great within and without show biz, and his memoir should enjoy wide appeal; not only for the show biz book buffs but as a commentary of the life and times of the last 30-odd years. It is replete with honest humor and affection and is far from sticky. Abel.

out better financially if he had produced the two-character play himself.

According the report, "Born Yesterday" was produced last season by three member theatres with all reporting disastrous results. Two of group's spots produced "Life With Father" and scored with the comedy, while "Golden Fleecing" was an uneven entry, clicking in some places and flopping in others.

A list of CORST—recommended titles includes "Mousetrap," "The Hollow," "Howie," "Rebecca," "Dark of the Moon," "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," "Streetcar Named Desire," "Tunnel of Love," "Bells Are Ringing," "Yes, My Darling Daughter," "Mister Roberts," "Teahouse of the August Moon," "Separate Rooms," "Peg O' My Heart," "No Time for Sergeants" and "Abie's Irish Rose."

Anent "Ladies Night," the CORST analysis includes the comment that Samuel French, licensing agent for the play, continues to quote a percentage royalty on it, while recent Broadway smashes are on flat fees.

OBITUARIES

OSKAR WAELTERLIN

Oskar Waelterlin, 63, artistic director of the No. 1 Swiss legiter, the Zurich Schauspielhaus, since 1938, died April 4 in Hamburg where he was skedded to stage a new production of the Debussy opera, "Pelleas and Melisande."

Born in Basle, he had the top post at the Stadttheatre there from 1925-32, then went to Frankfurt-am-Main, Germany, as first stage director, a position he held until 1938 when he assumed the Zurich assignment. The current season was to be his last at the Zurich legiter, having been re-signed as general manager of his native city's Stadttheatre as of next fall. Three days prior to his death, he had completed the 125th staging of his 23-year Zurich reign, a revival of Swiss 19th century poet Josef Viktor Widmann's comedy-drama, "Maikaefer -' Komoedie," which garnered rave reviews.

Waelterlin is credited with gaining status for the Schauspielhaus during World War II when it emerged the lone German-lingo stage in Europe after the closing of all German and Austrian theatres. At that time, the Zurich house became a haven for some outstanding thesps who had fled from Nazi persecution. He also pioneered initial German-language productions and world preems of such authors as Thornton Wilder, William Saroyan, Jean Giraudoux, Paul Claudel, Jean-Paul Sartre, John Steinbeck, T. S. Eliot, Eugene O'Neill, Tennessee Williams et al. Also authored a number of prose works and dramas, including "The Other Life" and "Henri G. Dufour," as well as theatrical writings.

Survived by a sister.

William S. Cherry Jr., 56, Florida broadcasting executive, died April 13 in Miami Beach.

He was chairman of the Cherry Broadcasting Company, which owns radio stations WDBO AM and FM and tv station WDBO-TV at Orlando, Fal. In 1949, he headed a group of business men which bought radio station WNEW in New York. It was sold in 1954.

TATSURO MATSUO

Tatsuro (Tats) Matsuo, 51, longtime show promoter, died April 13 in Honolulu. For the past five years, he had been manager of the Royal circuit's Roosevelt Theatre and also packaged nitery shows. His father, the late Seichi Matsuo, was the first Japanese showman in Hawaii.

Surviving are his wife, three children and three brothers.

AUGUST DEFRESNE

August Defresne, 67, Dutch playwright and director, died April 2. His first play, "Kings," was performed in 1924. Then followed "The Houseboat," "Lord Lister's Legend." He represented Holland in 1928 at the Stanislawsky Celebrations at Moscow. His plays had socialistic undertones, apparent in "Other Leaders" from 1929 on which the public reacted with riots, applauding and singing the International. In 1929 he was co-founder with Albert van Dalsum of a theatre group, and from then till 1955, they formed a team, specializing in message plays. He also took up direction.

After World War II, several of his plays were produced, among them "The Uninhabited Island." His play "The Eternal Chance," dating from 1958, was produced in Germany, but never in Holland. In this last period he directed Shakespeare's "Richard III" and "King Lear," among others. In 1955 he took leave from the stage. He became professor at the Academy of Dramatic Arts at Amsterdam, reading Analytical Direction.

ABRAHAM VAN DER VIES

Abraham van der Vies, 61, director of the Rotterdams Toneel, died April 3. He started his career as a dancer, and appeared among others in State's "Parade" and Stravinsky's "L'Histoire Du Soldat." After World War II he started the "Scapino" ballet group, that specializes in ballet for children. Then, in 1947, he moved to the Netherlands Opera at Amsterdam where he became a producer and in 1950 was appointed artistic director of The Netherlands Opera.

In 1955 he became secretary-general of the Association Europeenne des Festivals de Musique at Geneva. Last year he returned to Holland to become director of the theatre group "Rotterdams Toneel."

BRITISH HUMOR SCORES IN U.S.

Red Square-to-Trafalgar Square May Day Link on BBC-TV Sked

London, April 25.

Encouraged by the outstanding success of the first ever direct transmission from Moscow to London, BBC-TV is now readying plans for direct coverage of the May Day celebrations in the Red Square. Top brass of the Soviet television services arrived in London last week to conclude the necessary arrangements with BBC execs.

The May Day parade program will run about two-and-one-half hours from 7:30 a.m. British time and Richard Dimbleby will be in the Red Square to act as commentator.

On the same evening BBC's Panorama program will also come from Moscow. Final plans for this show are not yet complete but the introduction for sure will be live, though there may be some film interpolations which will be transmitted from London.

The BBC's first direct program from Moscow on Friday (April 21) covering the reception of space-man Yuri Gagarin was immediately converted into the U.S. 525-line standard and was on the air in New York the same afternoon, having been made available to all the three networks as well as to CBC in Canada.

ALL ALIEN PIX BIGGER TAKE

By VINCENT CANBY

U.S. muscleman Steve Reeves, star of almost a dozen Italian-made beefcake-spectacles, may soon be knocked off his golden pedestal by a 90-pound weakling. Situation would be in the best tradition of American pulp fiction, or, more importantly, of British film comedies wherein a bowler-hatted worm (usually Peter Sellers or Alec Guinness) turns and triumphs over his cockier opponent.

The fact is that last year British comedies emerged as one of the most important single factors in the continuing expansion of foreign film grosses at the American boxoffice.

VARIETY's annual survey of the b.o. performance of non-American films in the U.S. market reveals that in the 1960 calendar year, nine British comedies, which starred Sellers (whose weight is unreported), Guiness, Ian Carmichael and oneupsman Terry-Thomas, took in a fancy $6,659,000 this side. That's a lot of laughs, even if you don't have a sense of humor.

Reeves hasn't turned flabby. In the same period, four of his pec-

Kennedy Tax Ideas Look Certain To Kick Show Biz in the Exchequer

Washington, April 25.

Segments of show biz are due for a financial belting if Kennedy tax reforms go through Congress and they might.

President's tax message Thursday (20) called on Congress to doctor tax laws in several respects. Among them:

—Toughen up sharply on free-wheeling expense account deductions, a move which could cut deeply into night club, theatres and other entertainment businesses.

—Wipe out foreign "tax havens" both for corporations and for individuals, like film stars and others, who take up foreign residence to soften the tax bite.

While there was some question whether Congress this year will enact a tax bill carrying all Kennedy proposed in his long message, the Capitol Hill guessing was that at least some of his recommendations would be voted into law before adjournment. The Democratic leadership in Congress appears determined at this time to

875 Pix, Yes, But 80 Earned the $

The total number of 875 foreign pix reported by VARIETY as having earned an estimated $50,291,105 in the U. S. market last year may be misleading.

While 875 foreign pix were screened at least once by U. S. and Canadian exhibs during 1960, 90% of the total revenue was earned by no more than 80 films, including the product handled by the major U. S. companies and the four or five leading independents.

At the lunch, Col execs presented the Russian dance master with 90 tickets to "Bye Bye Birdie" for the May 3 matinee with the frank and friendly statement that the Moiseyev Dancer will see "what the west has to offer in the way of musicomedy dancing." P. S.—Col owns the film rights to 'Birdie.'

L.A. Fears Nitery Censorship After Comic's Arrest on Obscenity Charge

By DALE OLSON

Hollywood, April 25.

Threat of nitery censorship looms locally as the result of an April 14 arrest of comic-monologist George Hopkins at The Jesters club in Stanton, suburb near Disneyland. Comic, according to reports from his manager, Bob Leonard of World Artists Management, was taken into custody by the Stanton Police Department prior to his performance last Friday night (14) on a citizens' warrant charging violation of section 311.6 (vagrancy-lewd) of the State Penal Code. Complaint charges him with using four-letter words in his act.

Significant point of the arrest, according to Leonard's report, which was later confirmed to VARIETY by Stanton police chief Edward L. Allen, is the fact that arresting officers and, in fact no member of the department had seen Hopkins' act to determine a basis for the complaint. Hollywood lawyer Herbert E. Selwyn, who is familiar with this type case, pointed out, however, that the law provides for an arrest of this kind simply on basis of signed, witnessed complaints from local citizens.

Hopkins himself said he used several four-letter words during the course of his performance, but pointed out these were in connection with commentary on current world conditions. "They were not designed to create lewd or prurient reactions on the part of patrons," he said, also noting that when some customers on the evening prior to

File Film Brief Vs. U.S. Customs On 'Tropic' Book

The Motion Picture Assn. of America will file a friend of the court brief in a new case to test the right of U. S. Customs to censor by preventing importation of incoming books, films, etc. The new case, filed in Federal Court in N. Y. yesterday (Tues.), involves Henry Miller's bawdy, and supposedly autobiographical, novel, "Tropic of Cancer," long banned by U. S. Customs.

Attorney Ephraim London is handling the case on behalf of private citizen Dorothy Upham. Miss Upham wrote the U. S. Treasurer that she intended to import the Miller work and, in effect, invited the Customs to try and stop her. They have. She also refused to give Customs an out by saying she

London, April 25.

Leslie Botibol, licensee at Churchill's, one of Mayfair's top niteries, has been found not guilty of permitting the restaurant to be the habitual resort of known prostitutes. Harry Meadows, Churchill's topper; Marcel Pinto, former manager of hostesses, and headwaiter Salvator Vella were all found not guilty of aiding and abetting.

Magistrate Geoffrey Raphael, while finding for the defendants, nevertheless rapped the night spot: "I have little doubt that the conduct of this restaurant has in some respects been disgraceful, and the behavior of at least some of the hostesses is open to most severe criticism."

In commenting on the verdict, Meadows said: "Had the case gone against us, it would have been a severe blow to London night life. Tourists visiting the restaurant on their own enjoy the company of hostesses."

On a charge of selling liquor after permitted hours, Botibol was fined a total of $280 with $210 costs, and Meadows with $168 with $280 costs.

30 Miles of Vidtape On Eichmann Trial During First 5 Days

By JOSEPH LAPID

Jerusalem, April 25.

During the first five days of the Eichmann trial, 30 miles of videotape have been made by Capital Cities Broadcasting Co., the New York company with the exclusive rights to put cameras into the courtroom.

According to producer Milton Fruchtman, three hours of videotape are sent day by day abroad, one to New York, one to London and one hour to West Germany. From these spots, copies are distributed all over the American continent and Europe. The greatest interest shown is in West Germany for reasons that are easy to understand. Special deliveries were made to faraway places like Southern-Rhodesia and Burma. Israel is still the only place where people haven't seen the Eichmann trial, as there is no tv in Israel and the local newsreel companies refused to buy from Capital because they still claim their right to put cameras in the courtroom. The only place where Israelis may see the trial is an auditorium near the courtroom, which is connected through closed-circuit tv. The 700 seats of this auditorium are crowded day by

Seattle Expo's 74-Acre Layout Opens Yr. Hence

Seattle, April 25.

In just four days short of a year—on April 21, 1962—Century 21 exposition, billed as "America's first space-age world's fair," will open on a 74-acre tract within a mile of Seattle's downtown business district.

Much work has been done on the exposition, the idea was first proposed in 1955) but much remains to be done and there are doubters among the civic leaders of this city whether it will be accomplished. Pace of construction, however, is quickening, entertainment bookings are beginning to jell and Expo officials say all will be ready on opening day.

Harold Shaw, director of performing arts, formerly with Sol Hurok and National Concert & Artist Corp., is presently in Europe lining up attractions, with bookings to be announced on his return about mid-May. No bookings have been announced by Shaw, but the Seattle Symphony has set the Philadelphia Orchestra with Eugene Ormandy conducting for May 24 and 25, 1962, and Northwest Releasing Corp (Zollie Volchock and Jack Engerman) have booked Victor Borge for May 17, 18 and 19. Both attractions will be in the Opera House.

The Symphony, Northwest Releasing and Don Johnston, manager of the Opera House-Playhouse-Arena complex, are assisting Shaw with C-21 bookings, but Shaw has final word on all entertainment. He has said he is "neither a longhair nor a shorthair"; that all types of entertainment will be considered.

Shaw wrote Expo general manager Ewen Dingwall asking how far he could go as to the sophistication of sex in shows. Dingwall replied that while Expo has a scientific, "what will the future bring?" theme, above all they don't want to leave out any of the essen-

Johnny Carson Reviews Reviewers

"VARIETY headlined it: 'Yuri & Kru Boffo in Red Square'. Initial stint of pudgy stand-up comic Nikita Khrushchev and straight man Yuri Gagarin drew big mitt from firstnighters in Moscow. Kru, relying on new material broken in at General Assembly, soon had ringsiders chuckling at his sick one-liners. Gagarin, new to this room, should cut reference to Kennedy and fey routine with. Kru. Both need more topical material. Had to beg off".

Jack O'Brian

"The first half of Mr. O'Brian's column was devoted to a picture of the American Flag—and then he got patriotic. Nikita Egbert Khrushchev and Yuri Gagarin debuted in a typical capital gains gimmick last night. Khrushchev, looking like a fat David Susskind, used too much Steve Allenish blue material. And Mr. Stanton—Kru sneaked in three plugolas. He plugged the Congo, Communism and the Hess Bros. And if the networks are really concerned. I think they'll creek; they'll find that Khrushchev is the one I exposed over a year ago as having pink leanings."

Dorothy Kilgallen

"The Harwyn clan was agog last night when intimate chums of Yuri Gagarin confided that the woman most concerned about Mr. G's safe return was not Mrs. G., but an apprentice ballerina at the Moiseyev Ballet. And must I remind the State Department again that Khrushchev's bearded buddy was seen holding hands last night in P. J. Clarke's with Abe Lastfogel hollering 'Cuba Si—MCA NO.' Is there a divorce in the works or a new pilot film?"

Plot Castro Pic

Mexico City, April 25.

According to the anti-Castro forces in this capital, plans for a film indictment of the Cuban dictator are moving ahead satisfactorily. The picture, which will present the "dramatic story" of families disrupted, children smuggled out of communist Cuba, the adjustment required by refugees fleeing by the thousands to the U.S., etc.

It is claimed that Hollywood motion picture elements also have offered "every aid" to realize production. This is to be shot in Florida and Mexico, with top-rank Cuban actors working for free. But in casting for the picture, no Cuban actor has agreed to enact role of Fidel Castro. They'll likely have to use a Mexican player for this.

Lift (A 'Houseplane') And TV Bewitch 40 In African Congo Company

Glasgow, April 25.

Forty natives of the African Congo, at the Falcon-Empress Theatre here in "Congo Drumbeat," had a field day when they discovered their city hotel had a "houseplane" (elevator) as well as a "sound-machine" (tv set). They queued up for elevator rides between rehearsals.

Dancers, on a brief European trek, are recruited from primitive villages in the Lunda district of Katanga. Others are from Tshokwe, Bahimba, Balumba and Babemba. Remy Kabamby, director, picked up its talent on a month's tour of the villages.

"We would send word ahead that we were coming on our talent-finding mission," said Kabamby, "and the village chiefs would have the best talent in their areas awaiting us."

Garry Moore's Friars Fete Nabs 75G for Charity

This year's Friars Frolic, a salute to Garry Moore, was an economic success, with its $75,000 gross of which the souvenir journal's advertising yield was $31,000. Tickets at the Hotel Astor, New York, were scaled at $50 and $75 and the Grand Ballroom's 750 attendance made for comfortable service since it wasn't overcrowded. The show was sparked by Jack E. Leonard and withal it was a pleasant divertissement as the variety specialists did their stuff in a sort of intramural cavalcade, all laced with goodwill to the guest of honor who was keynoted variously either (1) for his "clean" appeal; (2), his short stature; 3), his crew-cut.

The distinguished dais included CBS brass and stage-screen-tv personalities, most of whom did their stuff with good grace. An irritating note was Henry Morgan's seemingly too-kidding-on-the-square diatribe against Steve Allen and the Meadows Sisters which prompted Leonard to chide the panelist, "You ought to put a hearing-aid on your mouth." This was in relation to Morgan's taking-off on Ted Lewis in what sounded also like an awkward attempt at humor which sounded too grim and too captious.

Show erred on length and could have stood some editing. Jean Carroll, a funny gal usually, overdid the humor with a marathon act. In fact several overstayed, with result that, in view of the 7:30 scheduled teeoff, the 1 a.m.

TOLL CRIMPS FAMOUS PLAYERS

Plastic, Mobile, Fireproof Balloon As Theatres for Cinerama

Hollywood, April 25.

Cinerama prexy Nicolas Reisini has a new idea for expanding use of process beyond four-wall theatres, which he has been renting for exhibition of five travelogs.

New project is called Ambulent Theatre. It's a fireproof plastic balloon that can be folded on trucks for quick movement from one city, town or village. Understood balloons open like a tent and can embrace 3,000 seats plus room for screen and projector(s).

Reportedly, Reisini has 100 trucks with necessary equipment on order, many of which will be ready shortly for spreading Cinerama showing travel backlogs and for "How the West Was Won" (tent. title for "Winning of the West"), and "The Brothers Grimm," first two new triple screen Metro pix, to be produced this year, and to be followed by two more next year. However, "West" isn't expected to be released until 1962, which gives Reisini sufficient time to build up Ambulent Theatre possibilities all over the world.

Raoul Levy, who starts producing "Marco Polo" in October for release next year, has already been in contact with Reisini on acquiring or leasing two trucks. Talks were held last week in Gotham.

Producer Levy's interest in new Cinerama venture pivots about France. In this country there's a 33⅓% tax on entertainment. For tent shows such as the balloon gimmick, tax is only 15%. Idea is to secure two such theatres for showing "Polo" all over France. On hard ticket basis, of course.

'Vita' Cuts for U.S.

The five minutes cut from the original running time (180 minutes) of "La Dolce Vita" for its U.S. premiere represents only "a little trimming" of non-essential detail, according to producer Louis Dollivet, French partner in the Italian-French coproduction.

Most of the material that was cut, he reported in New York last week, was in the "false miracle" scene. And none of the cuts, he emphasized, was sponsored by the N. Y. State Licensing Board or U.S. Customs.

Dollivet further reported that the Russians had expressed interest in acquiring "Dolce" if they could make certain deletions. Director Federico Fellini, however, guards the integrity of his property closely and turned the Russians down flat.

Hard-Ducat Vs. Grind Test Of 'La Dolce Vita'

Boston, April 25.

How the Italian import, "La Dolce Vita," is to be shown in the U.S is supposed to be dependent on the results of roadshow in New York at the Henry Miller legit theatre versus grind at Ben Sack's Gary in Boston.

The film, which broke the house record, set by "Sleeping Beauty," in its first week at the Gary, looks to rack up $35,000 with continuous lines or its first week ending tonight (Tuesday 25). "Vita" opened Wednesday (19). "Vita" is being run in four shows a day starting at 11 a.m. with a 10 min curtain call between shows. The film is the European version, uncut, with titles.

Sack, who said he held out for grind policy, reported that George Josephs, sales manager for Astor Films, gave him carte blanche to run grind as did George Foley, atty. for Bing Crosby Enterprises.

Prices at the Gary for "Vita" are from 80c, $1.75 and $1.80. Each show has been capacity since opening, Sack said. He stated that he felt his policy of grind would be the one adopted for further U.S. dates.

Mike Mayer N.Y. Counsel To Societe des Auteurs

Attorney Michael Mayer has been appointed special counsel in New York to rep the Societe des Auteurs, Compositeurs et Editeurs de Musique, the French ASCAP which watches out for the interests of French composers and authors. Increasing popularity of French films in the U.S. has substantially hiked revenues due French music people from use of their works in films shown here.

Mayer, partner in firm of Spring & Mayer, also is exec director of the Independent Film Importers & Distributors of America.

Plan Film Studio In San Diego, Chile

Hollywood, April 25.

Plans for an independent film production company under aegis of producer Geza de Rosner to be setup at the Film Chile Studios, San Diego, Chile, are nearing completion with producer planning three films to be lensed there during late '61 and early '62.

Pix, entering the $300,000 budget range, will utilize both American and Chilean actors and will be semi-documentary in approach, Rosner said.

Producer is presently negotiating his "Easter Island" documentary, filmed on island of same name off Chile, for release in 50 key U. S. cities in September.

"Easter" will be pre-exhibited to charity groups to raise funds for rehabilitation of country's May, 1960 earthquake victims, after which commercial saturation starts, Rosner said.

TELEMETER TEST CUTS DIVIDEND

Toronto, April 25.

With $1.07 per share dividend as compared with $1.30 for corresponding 12-month period, 41st annual report of Famous Players Canadian Corp. for fiscal year ending Dec. 31, 1960, shows general skid in earnings due largely to the absorption of preliminary expenses and operating losses incurred in the operation of the company's Telemeter test system in Etobicoke, a suburb of Toronto. Dip in shareholders' receipts also reflects share of company's losses incurred during the past year by its subsidiary, General Sound and Theatre Equipment Ltd.

Net earnings for the year were $1,857,251 as compared with $2,259,058 for previous 12 months, with 1959 including 17c per share of profits realized on the sale of fixed assets and marketable securities, with the 1960 results 12c per share of such profits. Dividends paid to shareholders during the year exceeded net profits by $748,357 but the company "continues to be very strong" and "directors have felt justified in continuing to make dividend payments in excess of earnings."

Diversified

Besides such diversifications as Telemeter, tv stations, community antenna operations, equipment supplying, lobby confections and bowling activities, FPC has also eliminated unprofitable operations by selling one theatre and discontinuing four leased houses. Affiliated companies sold 11 theatres and discontinued the operation of three leased houses.

However, FPC acquired a 50% interest in the ownership and operation of five additional drive-ins; and one affiliated company completed the construction of a new theatre (including stores and offices) at Thompson, Manitoba.

Said John J. Fitzgibbons, FPC prexy and managing director: "It was not expected that the Telemeter project, first of its kind in the world, would become immediately profitable as we are pioneering in this new medium of selling and presenting entertainment, via cable in the home, but our experience in this project has now en-

Texans Grope to Define 'Obscene': Think It Starts With 'Reclining'

Austin, Tex., April 25.

A bill to tighten the ban on "obscene" movies was approved by the Senate Jurisprudence Committee meeting in the Texas State Capitol. Sheriff Jime Line of Amarillo, said the bill, sponsored by Senator Grady Hazlewood of Amarillo, follows closely the standards of the "old Will Hays Hollywood code office."

"It is needed to remedy some bad loopholes in the law against lewd and obscene movies," said Line. "I wish you Senators could go to a drive-in movie when one of these sexy movies is being shown and peruse with a flight light what goes on in the cars. I'm not a bluenose or a prude but it's terrible."

In defining obscene movies, the bill refers to those depicting a male and female "in a reclining or semireclining position in or upon a bed, cot, bedroll, pad, floor, divan, car seat or upon the ground, haystack or other structure; or in an automobile, airplane, boat or floating device or in water or any other place . . ."

That prompted Senator George Parkhouse of Dallas to ask if it would affect a man shown saving a woman from drowing in a movie.

Senator Jep Fuller of Port Arthur raised a question about freedom of the press and freedom of speech.

Sheriff Line apparently clinched his argument then by declaring: "Freedom does not give anyone a license to corrupt the morals of children."

The bill would give officers authority to confiscate obscene film and declare the films "shall be subject to forfeiture and destruction."

Horton's Return

Ottawa, April 25.

Edward Everett Horton returns to the screen after seven years, in Frank Capra's "Pocket Full of Miracles"—but he forgets for which studio. For that he quits the touring "Once Upon a Mattress" May 18. It played two performances here April 4.

Brookly-born Horton says, "I loined to speak poifect English in univoisity." His comment on tv: "It's just like acting, only you can't wave your hands so much."

Paul Raibourn's O'seas Study Trip

Paul A. Raibourn, Paramount vicepresident, leaves New York for Rome today (Wed.) on an unusual mission. The film exec is out to probe the possibilities of a new way of reaching the public by way of motion picture presentation. The implications could be political as well as a matter of entertainment but the specifics anent this have been left unsaid.

Sources close to the situation say "the Russians and the Czechs have spent lots of money on how individuals react—such as to Cinerama—how you get into people." The thought here is that the C'rama observer has the sense of participation more so than with other cinematic enterprises.

Raibourn will prowl Italy because it's an art centre—if not the art centre—looking for just that. He wants a new process because "we must get more profound effects," more so than with conventional television in color or pay tv, and even more so than with C'rama.

The man from Par, when in Rome, will seek out sources otner than the usual film business interests.

Par, '60, Drooped, First Quarter '61 Up; Stock at $80

Paramount in fiscal 1960 had a dip in earnings, when compared with 1959, but the first quarter of the 1961 fiscal year (calendar year) is ahead. The drop in 1960 was anticipated in financial quarters but this did not curtail the continuing rise in Par stock prices on the New York Stock Exchange. The common issue closed last week at $80, up $1.75 per share.

Consolidated net for 1960 was $7,026,000, or $4.20 per share based on 1,673,231 shares outstanding at Dec. 31, 1960. Comparative net for 1959 was $7,519,000, or $4.47 per share, on 1,683,598 shares then outstanding.

Fourth quarter of 1960 brought a consolidated net of $889,000, or 53c a share, compared with $910,000, or 54c per share.

First quarter of 1961 meant a consolidated estimated net of 2,450,000, or $1.46 per share, compared with $1,699,000, or $1.02 per share, in the corresponding period of 1960. First quarter of 1961 also saw realized an investment profit of about $400,000, or 24c per share as based upon 1,673,231 common shares outstanding as of April 1, 1961.

Atty. Fees of $240,000 Sought From Hayward

Hollywood, April 25

Susan Hayward has been sued for $240,000 legal fees by law firm of Gang, Tyre, Rudin & Brown, due, according to them, in connection with four pix, "I Want To Live," "Between Thunder and Sun," "Elephant Hill," "Back Street," plus other legal services.

Actress was sued under her real name, Edythe Chalkley, and Carrollton Inc., company in which she's involved was also named.

Madison Ave. Researchers Scout Toll As X of Tomorrow's Merchandizing

Just where Madison Avenue and its big dough clients will fit in if and when pay-tv achieves major medium status is becoming topic A with the grey flannel set. They've got the flags running up and the surveyors trotting out—but the conclusions thus far are sketchy, iffy and vexing.

Outlook at this stage, in short, is anybody's guess, and the ad lads are frankly admitting same. What they don't know at the moment could jam an attache case.

Whether sponsorship (some, at least) will prevail on feevee is one question, but purportedly not the main one. Of more concern to the agencies, it seems, is the impact of countrywide paysee on the public's time. Young & Rubicam's Charles Benesch figures "competition for the consumer's time will increase the already hot competition for the consumer's attention by all advertisers and their agencies." Meaning more pressure on the hucksters to fasten attention on a client's soap, auto, swimsuit, cereal, etc.

If that's Mad Avenue's private headache, there are likely to be compensations, "for also hypothesized when toll comes of age are new products to be manufactured and merchandised—goods and services both directly related to pay-tv and as by-products of consumer activities related thereto. Benesch, for example, speculates that "convenience foods" might result, plus a hypo in use of tint tele and wall tv screens. Individual imagination can foresee other offshoots.

Commercials, Too?

On the question of commercial participation in feevee, that's speculative at the moment, although some affirmative signs are around. The upcoming RKO General-Zenith test in Hartford indicates it will make some time so available; and at the Telemeter echelons there's some thinking some advertising might be carried in the afternoons as part of free programming. Not in terms of the current Etobicoke experiment, of course, but as an "if-and-when" prospect.

Related and pertinent to ultimate commercialism of feevee, its advisability, etc., is the reaction from Telemeter homes in the W. Toronto suburb, with the doorbell ringers being told that absence of commercials is a major joy of the experiment. One survey alone discloses that three out of four test homes canvassed listed this as the top consideration.

Some Y&R research last year turned up the intelligence that most Telemeter subscribers had no strong objections to commercials per se, but rather with their frequency. Researcher Benesch construes this to mean that "properly spaced commercials would be acceptable (on feevee), especially if they serve to permit reduction in program charges to the subscribers." This, presumably, could prove the key factor in toll's acceptance of sponsorship. For how much will it be worth to subscribers to keep paysee free of corporate underwriting?

Corollary question is whether the economics of feevee would still require some sponsorial support. Present arithmetic on the subject indicates not. One break-down figures that a wire system (such as Telemeter) must average roughly $35 per set a year to amortize its fixed costs (maintainance, collections, etc.), calculated on the basis of 100,000 receivers. An average take, then, of as little as $52 a year (obviously a conservative sum, even in median terms) could yield a tidy profit. The proviso in this, of course, is that program costs be spread over at least 1,000,000 sets across the country. Given multiples of that set count nationwide, the profit potential hits a stellar magnitude. (Plus, of course, the added advantage that profits are returned swiftly from a multi-million receiver hookup.)

Meanwhile, there's some immediate profit at least for the survey-takers, occasioning some pointed levity that the Etobicoke subscribers may well be spending more time replying to questions than watching feevee.

Hence, a word of caution for their soon-to-be Hartford counterparts.

ACTOR BUYS OUT

George Hamilton Pays Sanders 10G Each For 7

Hollywood, April 25.

Actor George Hamilton, who filed suit against T-D Productions for declaratory relief of his five-year pact, has settled out of court with understanding he will pay Terry and Denis Sanders (T-D Prod.) $10,000 per pic for next seven pix in five years, exclusive of those he makes for Metro.

T-D contract now reverts to Ash Prod., which Hamilton formed recently to loan star out when not engaged by Metro.

Sanders Brothers, under original ticket, used Hamilton in "Crime and Punishment, U.S.A.," released by Allied Artists. They also loaned him to Frank Woods for "Angel Baby," Continental Film recently sold to AA.

Youngstein Rumors Anew And Again He Denies All; Dickering Play for UA

Coast rumors persist about United Artists veepee Max E. Youngstein "leaving the company to produce independently" and once again he is forced to deny. Reported "first indie property" is being negotiated for, but per always, on behalf of UA. It is the N. Y. Drama Circle's prize play, "All The Way Home," dubbed "the Miracle on 44th St." because of its lingering despite anemic business at the Belasco Theatre.

Major hurdle in UA acquiring "Home," says Youngstein, is the deal. He regards it as a low-budgeter "which must be made at a price" and if producers Fred Coe and Arthur Cantor, and author Tad Mosel who adapted James Agee's "A Death In The Family," a previous Pulitzer Prize winning novel, "are willing to gamble for a percentage-of-the-profits they have themselves a deal."

Youngstein adds that he was dickering with Coe and the William Morris agency even before "All The Way Home" opened on Broadway.

'NAZI BEAST' CYCLE STIRS SPAIN

Wild West-Style Censorship

Abilene, Texas, Would Fine Theatres, Managers and Parents If Kids See 'Objectionable' Films

The Motion Picture Assn. of America is expected to play an important part, along with Texas COMPO, in fighting the strange new film classification ordinance just enacted by the City Commission of Abilene, Tex. The measure, approved Thursday (20), not only provides for the classification of all films, but would make theatre operators and employees, along with parents, liable to fines of up to $200 for allowing minors to see "objectionable" films if the minors are not accompanied by parent or legal guardian.

MPAA execs in New York Saturday (22) were awaiting recommendations on a course of action from Manning (Tim) Clagett, of the MPAA's Washington office, who attended the hearings in Abilene, and from Mrs. Beverly Tarpley, attorney who repped Texas COMPO at the hearings.

Three methods of attack are open to the film people. The first would be a petition for an injunction against the statute on the grounds of its unconstitutionality —the method successfully employed by the MPAA last year in defeating an attempt by the state of Pennsylvania to set up a censorship board. The two other avenues of attack would be via criminal court proceedings—to get an Abilene exhib to show a pic which had not been classified, and to send a child to an objectionably-rated film without parent or guardian. In both cases the police would have no choice but to arrest the offending parties.

The ordinance sets up a nine-member (all of whom must be parents) board, appointed by the mayor, which is empowered to classify pictures as follows:

"A"—Acceptable to "average persons."

"B"—Acceptable for adults and children at least 12 years of age and older.

"C"—Objectionable for minors. Can be shown only to persons at least 18 years old, unless accompanied by parent or guardian.

"D"—Objectionable. "Not rec-

Candid Dore Schary Says 'Campobello' Flops in U.S.; Better Sold for Europeans

Although it seems to be going well enough abroad, at this stage, Warners' "Sunrise at Campobello" was a "failure" in the United States. This is the word from Dore Schary, who produced and scripted the film from his own hit play, and who wonders if perhaps the stateside campaign was on the beam.

Schary, talked to in New York this week, is not the sour-grape type, was more or less speculating. He noted, however, that the WB ads in America did not bear down on the Franklin D. Roosevelt biopic angles and possibly they should have. There was accent on the late President overseas, in contrast.

In any event, it's clear that "Sunrise" proved only floppo in Yank theatres. Must have been a particular disappointment for staunch Democrat Schary.

The former head of the Metro studio also said he has "notions" about a couple of new plays, but nothing concrete. One would be political, the other about Hollywood. Latter would be analytical but nothing so scathing as, say, Clifford Odets' "Big Knife."

As for picture-making, Schary said he doesn't fit in with the new wave of epic scaled production. Undoubtedly he has more films under his belt but they'll not be in the De Mille-like category. He reminded an interviewer that he never has produced a spectacle, and never will.

Canadian 'Bloody Brood' Secures U.S. Code Okay

Ottawa, April 25.

Meridian Films' beatnik-themed "Bloody Brood," made by Julian Roffman, has finally won a Code seal for U. S. showing after about a year's holdup. One violence scene is being cut.

Timing may be a break, as film's star Peter Falk has since been under spotlight via "Murder Inc."

"Bloody Brood" has been sold for distrib in France and Germany.

To Feed Hartford's Toll, Leland Hayward Scouting Europe For Material

Leland Hayward left over the weekend on a six-week European trek to scout possible material for use in the Hartford pay-tv experiment, which he is serving as a consultant. He'll tour England, France, Germany, Austria and Italy in search of suitable legit properties and other attractions.

Hayward is serving as consultant to Teko Inc., the company licensed by Zenith to program the Hartford setup utilizing the Zenith Phonevision system. He'll submit recommendations on programming at a later date to RKO General, which as licensee of the station involved must okay the programming.

NAT'L AUDIO-VISUAL ALIGNS VS. CENSORSHIP

The entertainment film committee of the National Audio-Visual Assn. has pledged its cooperation in the campaign against censorship and will enlist the support of non-theatrical film audiences around the country in the fight.

Decision was disclosed in New York last week by Tom Brandon, prexy of Brandon Films and chairman of the committee. The committee was holding its annual meeting at the Barbizon-Plaza.

The 16m industry, said Brandon, is an established part of the motion picture industry. "We invite all users of 16m film to join with us in the fight for the freedom of the screen."

Gabriel Katzka Advising Pathe, As Continental

Hollywood, April 25.

Gabriel Katzka has been signed as film packaging advisor to Pathe-America Distributing Co., Inc., per Budd Rogers, president of the company. He'll operate in manner similar to his work with Continental Distributing Inc., functioning for Pathe in Hollywood and Continental in New York.

New advisor will sift variety of production deals being offered to P-A for financing and distribution. He has recommended two with big name stars this week, it was revealed.

Before deals can be set, all P-A productions must be approved by a special Theatre Owners of America committee, according to agreement set at the TOA convention here this summer.

First film coming out on this deal is "The Deadly Companions," being readied for June 6 world premiere in Tucson, Arizona, where it was filmed. Harry Joe Brown production of "O'Brien's Navy" has been announced as company's next venture.

GERMANS HELPED IN CIVIL WAR

Valladolid, April 25.

International Film Week of Religious and Human Values at Valladolid (April 9-16) spectacularly confirmed international scope of the new 'Nazi Beast' Film Cycle (per VARIETY, lead story, April 5).

Of the 22 films in contest for The Golden Standard (religion), The Golden Sheaf of Wheat (human values) and The International Critic's Award (FIPRESCI), four condemned Nazidom's racial barbarics while a fifth, made in Germany, treated partisan resistance to the German invasion of Greece during the last World War. At least one other rapped German military knuckles by reference.

Variations on a theme opened early in the festival with the Susan Strassberg-starrer "Kapo," a searing condemnation of German concentration camps and gas chambers. On the following day Valladolid programmers presented "Conspiracy of Hearts," accenting the valiant adventures of Catholic nuns to shelter and save Jewish children from Nazi hands.

German-made "Death Is the Price of Love," which won Valladolid's Golden Sheaf of Wheat for its human values, subordinates the conflict between German invaders and Greek resisters and essays a note of reconciliation in protagonizing an elderly Greek couple who succor friend and foe—a tragic contradiction in time of strife.

The scrupulously - documented "Mein Kampf" (minus censored Hitler-Franco talks) preceded the Italian entry "Tutti a Casa," in which Marshal Badogolio's armistice with the Allied Forces becomes a blood-bath for Italian troops who refuse to continue the war alongside their former German partners.

Concentrated emphasis on the 'Nazi Beast' and German war uniform stirred a sharply contrasting pattern of emotions in Valladolid, Spain. Observers here pointed out that Hitler's Condor Division helped Franco during the Civil War and Franco sent his Blue Division to the Russian front during World War II.

Anti-Semitic Talk

Hearty audience protest to the "cycle" surprised no one, but the ensuing wake of anti-semitic references that appeared in the local press plus word-of-mouth conviction that international Jewry had manipulated this type of film production, disturbed and worried some visitors to the International Film Week of Religious and Human Values. Anti-semitism was sporadic and nostalgic but representative of minority opinion only.

Yet the contagion reached high up to Valladolid fest director Santiago Antolin, who injudiciously used the expression "Jew money" at the closing ceremonies in appealing for the establishment of a bank fund as a spur to proper Christian film production.

No one is quite sure why the Deutschland "unter" alles' note was so strong, not even film week organizers. But whatever the explanation, political controversy sideswiped religious and human values at Valladolid this year.

AB-PT (1ST) QUARTER RECORD EARNINGS

All-time high for first quarter earnings of $3,425,000, or 81c. a share, is reported by American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres. This compares with $3,336,000, or 78c. per share, for like period last year.

Prez Leonard Goldenson also reported that consolidated earnings, including capital gains, soared to $7,339,000, or $1.73 a share, from $3,380,000, equal to 79c a share in '60.

'Kampf' Director Now Winding Eichmann Pic

Stockholm, April 18.

Swedish film director Erwin Leiser, known abroad for his documentary, "Mein Kampf," is in Israel putting the final touches on a new documentary about Adolf Eichmann and the Third Reich. Release date should be late next month or early in June. The producer is the aging Swiss I. Wechsel. Leiser and Wechsel have decided to donate all profits from the forthcoming film to organizations and institutions that devote their time and energy to assist those who suffered from the misdeeds of Eichmann.

Leiser's prime aim has been to transform the facts and figures about Eichmann's misdeeds into actual episodes. Furthermore, he wishes to emphasize the theme that even the weak have a right to live.

Zurich's Lazar Wechsler Gets Into Eichmann Pix Market With Leiser

Zurich, April 25.

Lazar Wechsler, head of the Swiss Praesens-Film A. G. Zurich, is currently producing a documentary feature entitled "Eichmann and the Third Reich." It is being scripted and directed by Erwin Leiser whose documentary about the atrocities of the Nazi reign, "Mein Kampf," has been the year's top grosser here as well as in other European countries.

Pic is described as "a strictly authentic document about the life and crimes of Eichmann" and will contain original footage from archives all over the world, as well as excerpts from heretofore unpublished internal instruction films to the Nazis, footage depicting original witnesses to the Eichmann crimes and material presently being filmed in Israel by Leiser during the trial.

World distribution rights have been acquired by Columbia whereas Praesens will release the film in Switzerland end of May. Leiser will be assisted by Miriam Novitch, and cutting is to be done by Swiss Hans Heinrich Egger. Vet cameraman Emil Berna is lensing.

Praesens, incidentally, is taking large-space ads in Swiss dailies to announce the film and to establish its authenticity in contrast to the fictionalized AA picture, "Operation Eichmann," which is currently being rush-released in a number of Swiss houses. In the latter film, Eichmann is played by an actor, and footage contained therein is non-documentary.

DROPS DIRECTOR AS TO DOCUMENTARIAN

Berlin, April 18.

After 13 shooting days in Donaueschingen, western Germany, Dr. Hermann Schwerin, producer of "The Transport," got rid of his director, Herbert Viktor. The Fono production, "The Transport," was Viktor's first directorial assignment on a feature film. Schwerin felt that Viktor, a former documentary film maker, followed too much the documentary pattern while Schwerin preferred concentration on player performances.

This directional failure cost the producer about $50,000. Film's budget is said to surpass $300,000. Juergen Roland, newcomer director, took over Viktor's job.

Film stars Hannes Messemer. Messemer, incidentally, will direct Schwerin's next film, "The Lamb."

That a producer fires his director in the middle of shooting is a rare thing in German film biz. The Schwerin-Viktor incident is actually the first tough case around here.

Cannes-bound Otto Preminger—his "Exodus" leads off the fest there May 3 as an out-of-competition entry—spoke this week of his impending filmic plans. He says he has no projects for Broadway at the moment, and expressed sympathy for an harassed Gen. Charles D. Gaulle.

The film-legit producer-director leaves at week's-end for the Cannes round-robin, leading a party that includes Peter Lawford (and wife), Jill Haworth and Sal Mineo. First stop is Paris, from where Preminger will charter a Caravelle jet to fly 100 or so French theatrical and political figures to Cannes where he also has plans to toss a luncheon-and-pour for the press—the segment he considers most important at Cannes or any fest. Preminger's publicity proclivities are no secret, of course.

There's a possibility the fest might yet be cancelled because of the latest French army insurrection in Algeria, or at least induce curtailment of festivities. Preminger, however, said he thought the chance of a washout was slight.

Anent his future docket, he has seven more commitments—three with United Artists, four with Columbia—starting off with "Bunny Lake is Missing," suspense yarn for Col release which goes into rehearsal in mid-June and before the cameras July 5. Plan is to put it into release around next Christmas. Then, by the start of November, he'll launch "Advise and Consent," picturization of the Allen Drury novel-turned-play, with Wendell Mays scripting. This one is for UA.

Both pix are via Preminger's Alpha Productions (successor to his Carlyle banner), and will be black-and-white. "Bunny Lake" is definite as a popscale entry, and likely ditto for "Advise," though

Swedish 'Mein Kampf' Vs. American 'Op. Eichmann' Studied in Film Trade

Allied Artists' "Operation Eichmann," fair in its early playdates domestically, looks like it won't get off the pad at all in W. Germany, where the film censorship board has pronounced it verboten. Reason, according to a Reuters dispatch from Wiesbaden, is that the treatment of the hunt and capture of the genocide ace is "oversimplified."

Other current pic in the new "Nazi beast" cycle, the Swedish "Mein Kampf," which Columbia acquired, had no trouble with censorship in W. Germany, and in fact played there to click business.

Pic started its Times Square run at the Rivoli last week, with filmites noting the campaign plays down fact it contains essentially old and familiar footage. Point is made, for instance, by N.Y. Times reviewer Bosley Crowther. Columbia apparently felt that public cognizance of this fact could only downbeat the boxoffice, since, as Crowther comments, film contains very little footage that American audiences have not long since had the opportunity to see. Critic also makes references to a "rather conventional compilation" of newsreel and stil pictures.

Too early yet, of course, to fairly assess reception here to "Kampf," but if the "Operation Eichmann" performance so far is an omen, reviving the Nazi history looks to fall far short of best-seller b.o. Tradesters, in this connection, are recalling the pale biz of "Diary of Anne Frank" (20th) as original evidence U.S. audiences don't care to be reminded.

On this theme, apparently, there's no correlation between b.o. potential here and abroad. Apart from artistic angles, pix in this genre are old-hat to U.S. audiences, but obviously revelatory to the Germans.

"The Young Savages" is a kind of non-musical east side variation on "West Side Story." It is a sociological cussword puzzle, a twisted riddle aimed at detection of the true motivation for juvenile crime, as set against the backdrop of New York's teeming East Harlem district in which neighborhood nationalities mobilize into youthful raiding parties at the drop of a psychotic frustration.

Sad to relate, since there is reason to suspect that a deeply perceptive, fully convincing screen story lurks in this wild tenement region, the Harold Hecht production produced by Pat Duggan) fails to arrive at any novel insight into the environmental mess, nor does it approach the subject with fully methodical logic or the calculating objectivity required for the dramatic job it sets out to do. Instead, it gets waylaid with a number of familiar stereotypes, cliches and convenient oversights, and eventually resolves the issue by pinning the blame for an unquestionably heinous and premeditated crime on that old, reliable whipping boy, society itself. A spectator comes away with a bad taste in his mouth, but no new dramatic potion with which to wash it out.

If the United Artists release scores at the boxoffice, and there is reason to believe it won't do poorly at the wicket windows, it will owe a principal share of its success to the timely nature of its theme. Juvenile crime is, of course, a very real, ticklish issue begging for attention. It is rich, ripe dramatic pasture for thoughtful, creative minds and a source of some concern for all Americans, especially those in large cities who can come into contact with the problem just by heading down the wrong street at the wrong time. For all of its shortcomings, this should be a magnetic attraction in the nation's big cities.

The picture is inventively, arrestingly directed by John Frankenheimer with the aid of cameraman Lionel Lindon. Together they have manipulated the lens to catch the wild fury of gang pavement warfare; twisting, tilting, pulling way back, zeroing in and composing to follow and frame the vicious excitement as if the theatre spectator was the immediate participant who happened by at an inopportune, dangerously insane moment and grew too excited and emotional to observe objectivity. The technique works to perfection in the opening sequence, in which the crime is committed that sets the stage for the story.

But there is nothing Frankenheimer or any of the craftsmen can do to make the yarn itself—concocted by Edward Anhalt and J. P. Miller out of a novel by Evan Hunter—stand tall as screen fiction. The story is that of three Italian lads (of 15, 16 and 17) who murder a blind Puerto Rican boy of 15 who is regarded as a top warlord of a rival gang. Immediate motivation: the blind boy acts as a kind of one-man arsenal for the Puerto Ricans who, when cornered by the police, deposit all their weapons on his person to avoid apprehension (a doubtful technique in that the lawmen would be a good bet to shake down this shadowy bystander, blind or not, as well as the others). At any rate, the case for the prosecution is taken over by scrupulous d.a.'s asst. Burt Lancaster whose search for truth and justice and familiarity with the law of the asphalt jungle (he grew up there) leads him to make a valiant courtroom stand on behalf of the boys he is supposed to be trying to convict, at the suggested expense of the political aspirations of his boss, a very shallow figure who seems less a man than the traditional symbol of empty, heartless ambition. The young toughs get off easy and society, that convenient intangible, gets the rap.

Lancaster smoothly and persuasively dispatches his chore. Shelley Winters is effective as the mother of one of the responsible lads (Stanley Kristien), whose mild one-year sentence seemingly disregards his undeniable participation in conspiracy to commit murder. Kristien does a good job. Dina Merrill is adequate as Lancaster's socialite wife. Edward Andrews plays the stereotyped d.a., a bit type-casting. Best of the supporting players are Luis Arroyo, Vivian Nathan, Pilar Seurate and Telly Savalas, with other standout portrayals by Chris Robinson, John Davis Chandler and Neil Nephew.

The flavor and chaos of the New York slum has been captured, both on-the-spot and through Burr Smidt's art direction. Eda Warren's editing is competent. David Amram's music most exciting when it is accompanying the action passages with driving, shrieking atonal chord thrusts. Tube.

Sabu	John Drew Barrymore

Universal has itself a ho-hum but saleable sex-and-actioner in the now-familiar Italian spectacle genre. It's complete with the usual cheesecake dancing girls, a desert battle between two armies, and a crocodile kill by a doughty warrior in the muddy Nile.

Believability in these epics is scarcely tried as the yarn plays out its good-versus-evil theme, but doubtless there are plenty of customers around who won't be looking for anything more than the customary carnal carryings-on, power struggles, etc. Even by these standards, however, "The Pharaohs' Woman" is a rather pallid offering. While the pic has a couple of American names in Linda Cristal and John Drew Barrymore, they don't figure to drum up the trade. The appeal, such as it is, is obviously in the type of picture.

Miss Cristal is plenty figure-fetching in an otherwise vacuous part of the noblewoman-cum-slave girl desired by a pair of feuding Egyptian princes and a court physician. Barrymore dutifully glowers and snarls his way through one of the prince roles, and in the end is put to death. Armando Francioli portrays the triumphant prince okay, and Pierre Brice woodenly plays the physician who ultimately wins the girl.

Technical credits are par for the course and oke. The Eastmancolor is less garish than might be expected for this type of entry.

Ring Of Fire

Exciting action-suspense drama about a kidnapping and a forest fire. Weak storyline overshadowed by hot, on-the-spot production. Fairly good b.o. looms.

Metro release of Andrew and Virginia Stone production. Stars David Janssen, Joyce Taylor, Frank Gorshin; features James Johnson. Directed and screenplay by Andrew L. Stone; camera (Metrocolor), William H. Clothier, editor, Virginia L. Stone; special effects, Herman E. Townsley; music, Duane Eddy; sound, Franklin Milton; assistant director, Henry Spitz. Mr. Hobart	Doodles Weaver

No moss has much of a chance to gather on filmdom's rolling Stones, Andrew and Virginia. Continuing their association with elements on bad behavior, they have shifted their imaginations and energies from the waterlogged "Last Voyage" to the firelogged "Ring of Fire" and, with the aid of a battery of cinematic experts and cooperative actors, pro and non-pro, have cooked up a full head of theatrical steam.

This is a motion picture of the old rip-roaring showmanship school, a "fun" film that keeps an audience alert and a trifle overwhelmed by the sheer production of the thing. As a display of sheer filmmaking know-how itself, it serves a definite entertainment function. There are major reservations, to be sure, in the area of its dramatic content, but these are sufficiently overshadowed by the pictorial excitement and technical flash that assaults an audience's senses from the screen. The Metro release, in which four relatively new talents are given an opportunity to cut loose, should be a handy, fairly successful attraction.

Stone's original screenplay is plenty hard to swallow; in fact it's downright indigestible in spots, but as the serviceable foundation or "excuse" for an ostentatious display of production prowess, it is exonerated. Director Stone, at any rate, certainly makes the inflammatory most of writer Stone's fickle fiction. The yarn would have one believe that an Oregonian police officer (David Janssen) who is counter-apprehended (or kidnapped) in the act of apprehending three less-than-wholesome young people (Joyce Taylor, Frank Gorshin, Jimmy Johnson) could manage to: 1) talk his captors out of a clean getaway in favor of forging through a forest to some nebulous destination, 2) re-apprehend them in an unguarded moment, 3) engage in a shadowy smooching spree with the girl, 4) get captured again, 5) persuade them to continue playing follow-the-leader, himself as leader, 6) lead them smack into a trap, 7) rescue an entire town from the clutches of a wild forest fire seconds after he stands accused of statutory rape relations with the girl, 8) fall in love with the girl.

Janssen gives further evidence that he may become one of Hollywood's top stars. He has the looks, the masculinity, the personality, and he can act. His reactions and his timing are keen. Miss Taylor scores, too, as the sultry, thrill-seeking girl in whom a spark of humanity lurks beneath the hardened veneer. Gorshin, switching from comedy to drama, is explosive and convincing as the head menace, and Johnson, in his first screen exposure, is true as his unstable henchman. There are other sound enactments by Joel Marston, Ron Myron, Marshall Kent and Doodles Weaver and, in fact, the entire citizenry of the town of Vernonia, Oregon, participated actively in the film and acquitted themselves well under Stone's astute surveillance.

William H. Clothier's photography is vivid and dexterous, bathed in sharp Metrocolor hues and shot from a variety of exciting angles, including some breathtaking aerial scrutiny of the fiery activity. The enormous forest fire that climaxes the film actually is made up mostly of footage taken last summer of a pair of legitimate blazes, one near Baker, Oregon, the other Truckee, California. Smokey Bear would be terrified by the proportion, but pleased as punch by the message (a casually discarded ciggie caused it all in the film). As editor, Mrs. Stone has employed sudden shock and humor to good effect as punctuation marks between the action. Herman E. Townsley's special effects heighten the magnitude of the flaming spectacle. There is a title tune penned and strummed by Duane Eddy, a twangy gee-tar melody that is infectious in a monotonous sort of way. Tube.

Very Important Person

Even those who think that yet another screenseye view of a German prisoner-of-war camp is by now very old hat should still get some amiable yocks out of "Very Important Person." Writer Jack Davies has dreamed up a lively enough yarn. Ken Annakin's direction is lighthearted and the thesping is flippantly cheerful. Though there's not enough marquee value to mean much in the U.S., the pic is loaded with the laffs and is a safe bet for average houses.

Film bows in and closes with a nifty parody of "This Is Your Life," the victim being a gruff, distinguished scientist (James Robertson Justice) who had a remarkable wartime experience. Posing as a naval public relations officer he is flown over enemy territory to see at first-hand the results of one of his radar experiments. He's shot down, flung into a POW camp and suspected by some of the prisoners of being a spy.

But when word comes through from War Office that he is a Very Important Person whose escape must be assisted in every possible way, the other prisoners give the job top priority. But it's the irascible, super-efficient professor who organizes his own escape in the most bland manner. This simple story line has been tricked out with some of the usual POW camp film cliches, notably the inevitable camp concert, the clashes between the irrepressible, facetious Royal Air Force types and the humorless Germans and the tunneling botch-ups.

The huge, bearded James Robertson Justice has a role right up his alley as the arrogant professor, the master of the withering squelch, the chap who suffers fools very ungladly. He is excellently cast. With only one previous film appearance behind him, in "Geordie," Scottish comedian Stanley Baxter, here eagerly grabs a useful chance of establishing himself. Baxter is a sound recruit to the screen. He plays a dour, suspicious prisoner of war dedicated to the art of tunneling.

Baxter doubles this with the role of the humorless, prissy German camp commandant, and the double comes off remarkably well. Further switch calls for Baxter to impersonate the camp commandant so that he is virtually responsible for a subtle treble.

Leslie Phillips, Jeremy Lloyd and Peter Myers romp through the parts of typical silly ass RAF officers. There are also familiar entries from such regulars as John Le Mesurier, Richard Wattis, Colin Gordon, Norman Bird and Eric Sykes. Justice Joan Haythorne makes brisk impact as a supercilious secretary. Gimmick casting is that of Godfrey Winn, prolific journalist and tv personality, as the tele interviewer. Winn, who used to be an actor many years ago, fulfils the chore ably.

"Very Importnt Person" is an agreeable, light comedy with sound allround technical credits and more cheerful good humor than wit.

Here's a straightforward crook drama that makes no pretense to any particular subtlety but tells its flimsily-built story with punch. It builds up to a neat but fairly incredible climax. Could be that the dialog might have been a shade slicker and the criminal types are fairly familiar characters. But there are some useful performances, compensating for lack of top stellar value.

The pic has the virtue of topicality since, regrettably, payroll snatches have been a formidable entry in Britain's recent crime sheet. Yarn concerns a gang of smalltime crooks who are planning to snatch the payroll of the Kneale factory, loot valued at around $280,000. Inside man is a wages clerk.

But, after much planning, the gang hits a snag. Their catspaw is taken off the run and, worse, the factory introduces an armored van which is foolproof, according to the two men who devised it. Nevertheless, bandit Michael Craig is not put off. He forces the stooge to copy the layout of the van. The raid is pulled off with the usual edginess caused by unexpected snags such as a traffic jam snarling up the timetable. During the raid, the driver of the armored car is killed, his mate badly injured and one of the four robbers also gets a fatal slug.

From then on its not only the police looking for the bandits but the vengeful young widow of the murdered driver also chipping in with anonymous phone calls and letters to the "inside man" determined to make him sweat and break down. He has his other problems, too, with a nagging wife who starts an affaire with the boss of the thugs and eventually doublecrosses not only her husband, but her lover and finally herself. Altogether, there's a great deal of skulduggery going on, with everybody putting the cross on everybody else.

The raid sequence is well done and so is a rather incredible but effective scene where the crook disposes of two of his henchmen in a bog.

Sidney Thayers' direction is straightforward and plenty of brisk cutting raises the tempo of the film whenever it shows signs of flagging. Ernest Steward's lensing is fine. Location scenes shot in and around Newcastle are authentic.

The characters are mainly conventional for this type of thriller and the chosen thesps fulfil their chores satisfactorily. Craig, for once playing a heavy, is a suitably dour, tough criminal with the necessary smoothness to impress the ladies. There's the weak, ambitious man drawn into crime by need of money and by the incessant nagging of his wife. William Lucas has some first-rate nervy moments in his role. Billie Whitelaw as the vengeful young widow, gives her usual shrewd performance, but here she's handicapped, since the character is never properly developed and though her objective is clear her method of reaching it is not. Francoise Prevost, as the Frenchwoman, has one or two effective displays of shrewish temper.

Another Stance on 'Oscar'

Most of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences voters and Hollywood at large may be shocked to discover that a not insignificant segment of the national lay press took occasion of with last week's "Oscars" to castigate the industry.

Right or wrong in their viewpoints, there were editorials and columnists across the land who scored "the 2,300 craftsman . . . for casting their votes for prostitution and adultery," as one put it.

"For a while, it wasn't clear who would get first place—the prostitutes or the adulterers—but the ladies of the evening won out, even though they seldom do in real life." The same columnist (Terrence O'Flaherty in the Frisco Chronicle) also observed that "the only decent pictures nominated for major acting awards — 'The Sundowners' and 'Sunrise At Campobello' — were rejected . . ." and the "best" picture award went to "The Apartment" which also, it was noted, is based entirely on an adulterous theme.

Bill Loeb Whams Industry

Manchester, N. H., April 25.

The fact that three of the motion pictures involved in this year's Academy Awards dealt with prostitution has been sharply criticized by a front page editorial, "Debauchery, Incorporated," signed by the publisher, William Loeb, in the Manchester Union Leader.

The newspaper mentioned Elizabeth Taylor in "Butterfield 8," Nancy Kwan in "The World of Suzie Wong" and Melina Mercouri in "Never On Sunday."

The Union Leader also pointed out that "Spartacus," a film which earned a number of Academy nominations, was written by Dalton Trumbo, who, the newspaper said, had been identified as a member of the Communist Party by 10 different persons in sworn testimony before Congressional committees.

Regarding the Taylor-Kwan-Mercouri films, the editorial said: "In the opinion of this newspaper, the American people are not a collection of perverts and sexmongers, as Hollywood apparently estimates them to be, and we think that eventually the gutter level at which Hollywood is currently producing pictures will so alienate the American people that millions of dollars will be lost on pictures which the public will refuse to see."

Star's Editorial Blast

Minneapolis, April 25.

Tradesters here are burning over editorial last week in the Minneapolis Star which roasted Academy Award winning films. According to film officials, the newspaper went out of its way to knock Hollywood and add fuel to the pro-censorship fire.

Editorial, which was headed "Hollywood's Best," castigated moviemakers in no uncertain terms. "There was one award missing," article claimed, "that should have been made to Hollywood as a whole for what was perhaps the lowest level of prize-winning content matter to parade across the nation's theatre screens in many a year.

"Elizabeth Taylor got her Oscar for portraying the loose 'lady' of 'Butterfield 8'; Burt Lancaster for his characterization of the lustful preacher and Shirley Jones for the role of a prostitute in 'Elmer Gantry'; Peter Ustinov for a role that included procuring women for gladiatorial trainees in 'Spartacus.'

"And the sweepstakes winner—best film, best producer, best director and best writing—was a little saga of sex and sin wrapped up in the seductive title of 'The Apartment.'"

What particularly incenses trade reps is the newspapers' apparent double standard in evaluating pix. Movie spokesmen point out that film critics of the Star and its sister newspaper, the Tribune, have been lavish in their praise of foreign movies which concentrate even more heavily than American product on sexy aspects the editorial writer finds so objectionable.

'Gabler': For Whom the Toll Yawns

Latest of New York-Originations to Telemeter Subscribers in Toronto a Letdown

By ROBERT A. McSTAY

Toronto, April 25.

Ibsen is not the answer. Ibsen on tollvision is indeed a bore. This is the impression of the VARIETY reviewer here and of those (five persons) in the home of subscriber Jack Wells, a chemical company exec. This family had skipped Gian-Carlo Menotti's "The Consul" earlier but had been enchanted with Carol Channing's intimate revue, "Show Business," paying to see it on their metered set three times during its week's run.

Hedda Gabler

Telemeter pay-see tv origination from N.Y. of Henrik Ibsen play. Stars Anne Meacham. Staged by Davis Ross, with Telemeter technical direction by John Goetz.

Hedda	Ann Meacham
Julia Tesman	Lois Holmes
Berta	Elizabeth Colquhoun
George Tesman	Lester Rawlins
Thea Elvsted	Lori March
Judge Brack	Frederick Rolf
Ellert Loevborg	Mark Leonard

"Hedda Gabler" runs April 20-26, with matinees Saturday and Sunday (22-23) at $1.50 coin in-insertion performance.

Complete with off-stage pistol shootings but entire action taking place in the Tesman villa in an unnamed European capital, Ibsen play has no general appeal for the majority of Telemeter subscribers, apart from absence of commercials.

Played in a single set, alternating long-shots and close-ups (well received technically) plus fine direction and a good cast failed to absorb the group. Theme was too sombre, script too wordy. Acting drew some appreciative remarks for Anne Meacham in title role.

Kabuki Lammisters

Tokyo, April 25.

Danshiro ... Danko Ichikawa, w.k. father and son kabuki actors, followed Chusa Ichikawa and a number of others in breaking away from Shochiku and signing with Toho.

Movement of kabuki actors to Toho appears to have broken Shochiku's longstanding monopoly on Japan's ancient art form.

Yank Films Still Lead in W. Berlin

Berlin, April 18.

As usual, U. S. films still dominate the local preem-house scene. Six out of the 18 first-runs are currently playing American feature pix as compared with four French, two British and two native films. There also is one pic from Italy, Austria, Japan and Greece, making up the other four films.

"Ben-Hur" (M-G) is now in its 12th week at Delphi Palast. Same company's "Butterfield 8" has reached 10 weeks at the MGM Theatre, an all-time record at this house. "Can-Can" (20th) is in its fourth round at Zoo Palast, and still doing brisk biz.

"Midnight Lace" (U) and "Bellboy" (Par) are in their second weeks at Atelier am Zoo and Filmtheater Berlin respectively. "Spartacus" (U) just preemed at Titania Palast.

The two British pix are "League of Gentlemen" at the Astor and "Two-Way Stretch" at the Studio.

Heston Sees 'El Cid' Very Modern, The Hero Who Is Also Victim of the Times

Madrid, April 25.

"The traditional screen hero is a thing of the past," according to Charlton Heston who terminated months of preparations and almost six months of filming in Spain where he stars opposite Sophia Loren in Samuel Bronston's "El Cid."

Prior to his departure for final scenes in Rome of the ambitious medieval film canvas Anthony Mann is directing, Heston explained that the individual is now living in the Age of the Victim.

Within this synthesis, he puts his finger on what he considers a definite trend not only in modern litrature and theatre, but in the area of motion pictures as well.

"It's a trend I've noticed during the past decade, that stems basically from the enormity of the tragedies and calamities with which mankind has been clobbered. The result has been that social critics have emptied inkwells to relieve the individual of that vital sense of responsibility."

Heston made the point that in the "time of the scapegoat" no one is to blame—not even "the arbiters of our existence.

"Before Samuel Bronston sent me the 'El Cid' screenplay last year, I had the feeling that this kind of thinking was obliterating the traces of the great legendary and historical figures who wehe so much a part of my early education, and who were conscious of their responsibility for whatever happened to them and around them."

"It was only after I thumbed through the Frederic Frank-Philip Yordan screenplay that I discovered a new type of hero, and the only valid hero for the times we live in—a hero who is also a victim.

"The Cid," Heston pointed out, "was the greatest warrior in Spanish history and had a clean slate of victories and no defeats. But with the exception of the Cid's final, crucial victory over the invading Moors, every triumph added shattering conflicts to his growing fame.

"The Cid had a point-of-view—a 'modern' one for 11th Century Spain. He wanted to unify his country, incorporate countless numbers of disputing thronesships under a single ruler who would make it possible for Spaniards, Arabs and Mozarabs to live in peace. With each successful step formard in this direction, El Cid simultaneously matured as a victim of created self-interests, inept vision and petty jealousies."

Heston felt that the concept of a hero who suffers the tortures of frustrating incomprehension by becoming a victim of his great deeds, is the only one that modern movie audiences will accept. Having seen approximately three hours of roughly edited footage, Heston said "El Cid" will be far more than a series of sword-fights and battles, all of which he wins.

He said he was leaving Spain 25 lbs. lighter but happily convinced that Anthony Mann had transferred the tragi-heroic figure of El Cid to the screen with great human qualities, historic authenticity and an uplifting sense of tragic dignity.

Daughters of American Revolution Rise Rhetorically Vs. Show Biz

Washington, April 25.

Daughters of the American Revolution sounded off at their annual hen-cackle here against films, television and the legitimate theatre. Nothing American in the way of entertainment pleased the corsaged defenders of old family ties. Whether any, or many, of the members ever buy theatre tickets or know what they are talking about from direct investigation was very much doubted by showmen hereabouts.

The ladies apparently bought, or were sold, every anti-idea now current. They saw Hollywood full of Reds and history perverted. They picked up and parrotted the conventional charge of stories full of brutality, sadism and violence.

Their generalities could not be wider but their data was nil. No titles of plays, films or broadcasts were mentioned. But showmen must heed the Daughters or face Federal blue-pencilling. Actually the Daughters have no connection with the Federal government except a compelling desire to tell it how to operate.

Meanwhile, The Awards

Washington, April 25.

UA's "Alamo" and Disney's "Swiss Family Robinson" have been picked as the best patriotic and children's film respectively by the Daughters of American Revolution at their annual convention here.

On hand to receive plaques on behalf of their producers were Russell Birdwell for "Alamo" and J. B. Becheen for "Swiss Family Robinson."

Only 44 OK With DAR

The Daughters of the American Revolution okayed for family viewing only 44 motion pictures out of a total of 204 screened by its motion picture committee in the last 12 months. All of the films previewed were approved by the Production Code of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, according to the DAR.

Of the overall total, 68 films were judged suitable only for adults, 57 for "adults and mature young people," 31 for "adults, mature young people and young people," and 44 for family audiences.

DAR reps could not explain the difference between "mature young people" and just plain "young people." The report of the DAR's motion picture unit was made to the DAR convention here by its chairman, Mrs. Edward J. Reilly.

Extras Love Praise, Too

Hollywood, April 25.

Billy Wilder's acknowledgement and kudo to film extras and the part they played in his production of "The Apartment" at Oscar ceremonies last week brought following acknowledgement by Jeffrey Sayre, prexy of Screen Extras Guild, in a telegram to producer-director:

"On behalf of the board of directors and the entire membership of the Screen Extras Guild, I want to thank you for your most gracious mention, at the Academy Awards presentation, of the extra players' contribution to your fine picture, 'The Apartment.'

"We pledge you that we will continue to do everything within our power to promote Hollywood's great motion pictures."

MPAA Repudiates Value Line's Blast

Washington, April 25.

Last week's Value Line Survey blast against the Motion Picture Assn. of America's fight against censorship "grossly misrepresented" the facts, Ken Clark, MPAA veep, says in a letter to Value Line, which suggested that the MPAA anti-censor efforts were pretty much a case of "too little and too late."

Clark specifically pointed out that MPAA had participated in the Times Film case with an amicus curiae brief before the U.S. Supreme Court, and did not wait to join the case, as stated by Value Line, until the court's adverse decision was appealed.

Denying that the association "seldom fights for its beliefs," Clark stated that the MPAA had fought the "Curley" case in Memphis in 1949 and won major victories before the Supreme Court with the Geiling case in 1952 and "M" case in 1954. And right now, according to Clark, MPAA is participating in the fight against the Pennsylvania censorship statute.

Dublin, April 25.

On the morning after the announcement of Oscars for Burt Lancaster and Shirley Jones for performances in "Elmer Gantry" (UA), the Irish films censorship appeal board gave the film the thumbs down sign and supported censor Liam O'Hora's rejection. The Elizabeth Taylor starrer "Butterfield 8" (M-G) also has been given the redlight by O'Hora, but Metro is expected to carry the fight to the appeals board.

Another picture which figured in the awards, "Never On Sunday" (Lopert) also failed to get a showing here. And it is not expected that Ingmar Bergman's "The Virgin Spring," rated top foreign winner, will clear the Irish censorship hurdle.

As Patriotic As You Dears

Daughters of the American Revolution recently sounded off against motion pictures, their content and morals. It provoked Eric Johnston, head of the Motion Picture Assn. of America, to crack back at the dames:

"The American motion picture industry need apologize to no one for its Americanism, its patriotism and its devotion and service to the ideals of democracy and freedom in the United States and around the world.

"No medium over the years has done more to bring about an appreciation of the history, the principles and the traditions of America."

Why Keep Taking It?

Hollywood, April 25.

Following attack by Daughters of American Revolution on the film industry (and other entertainment media), Columbia producer-director George Sidney reiterated his recommendation for a united industry front to challenge and fight organizations which take pride in lambasting pix for headline opportunities.

Sidney contends, "We need unity in any fight against pseudo critics, alleged censorship experts and villification diehards. All these people need is a fissue or fig of story or acting not to their liking to start a barrage. And then we're off to defending ourselves again."

JAPAN EXEC UPHOLDS CUSTOMS CENSORSHIP

Tokyo, April 25.

Prime Minister Ikeda claims that film censorship by customs officials is not unconstitutional. He was replying to an opposition member in a plenary session of the Lower House.

Ikeda said: "Even if freedom of expression is to be guaranteed, it is quite natural that specific restrictions should be exercised in order to safeguard public welfare. Hence, it is not unconstitutional to prohibit import of films which are detrimental to the public safety and morals of the Japanese people."

Foreign film distribs are concerned over the impact of the Prime Minister's statement. It was in answer to Socialist Yoshinori Yasui who had asked whether the strengthening of the Customs Tariff Law wouldn't be an infringement of freedom of expression.

L.A. Biz Perks; 'Cimarron' Lusty 26G, 'Sun' Bright $15,000, 'Black' Smooth 17G, 'Apartment'-'Gantry' Sock 28G

Los Angeles, April 25.

Los Angeles first-runs are picking up considerably this frame, sparked by a block of new entrants and Oscar winners. "Cimarron," in first general run, should rack up a lusty $26.000 or over playing in four theatres. "Raisin in Sun," single-booked at Warner Beverly, is sighting a fine $15.000 in first at Warner Beverly.

"Black Sunday" looks like slick $17,000 in two houses. "League of Gentlemen" is headed for a big $8.000 at Music Hall. Reissue of "The Apartment," Academy best pic award and other Oscars, and "Elmer Gantry," best actor award plus other kudos, looms sock $28,-000 or over in three situations.

Both "Absent-Minded Professor," in sixth at Chinese, and "Gone With Wind," in fifth at Hollywood Paramount, each are heading for hotsy $14.000 or close.

"Never On Sunday," also Oscared for best original song, is soaring to a great $10.000 in 22d round at Fine Arts. "Spartacus," which also won several awards, likewise is climbing ahead of last week for a sturdy $12,000 in 27th round at Pantages.

Estimates for This Week

Hillstreet, Pix (Metropolitan-Prin) (2,752; 756; 90-$1.50)—"Black Sunday" (AI) and "Little Shop of Horrors" (Indie). Slick $17,000 or near. Last week, Hillstreet, "Look in Any Window" (AA), "The Plunderers" (AA) (m.o.) (1st wk), $3,200. Pix with Warren's, Wiltern, "Suzie Wong" (Par), "Foxhole in Cairo" (Par) (2d wk), $16,300.

Warner Beverly (SW) (1,316; $1.50-$2)—"Raisin in Sun" (Col). Fine $15.000. Last week, "Pepe" (Col) (16th wk), $8,500.

State, Wiltern, Iris, Baldwin (UATC-SW-FWC-State) (2,404; 2,-344; 825; 1,800; 90-$1.50)—"Cimarron" (M-G) (1st general release). Lusty $26,000 or better. Last week, State with Hawaii, "Carry On, Sergeant" (Indie), $5,800. Iris with Los Angeles, "Hippodrome" (Cont), "Michael Strogoff" (Cont) $7,600. Baldwin with Orpheum, Hollywood, Loyola, "Alamo" (UA) (3d wk), $17,500.

'Vita' Record 35G, Hub; 'Sunday' 15G

Boston, April 25.

Biz is zooming at the Hub b.o. currently sparked by some big ones. City is being topped by "La Dolce Vita," which is breaking the record at the Gary. Italian import is being shown on grind, with four shows a day and 10-minutes curtain call between. "General Della Rovere" opened big at Exeter. "All Hands on Deck" is slick at Paramount. "Portrait of Mobster" is rated neat at Pilgrim. Second week holdovers are paced by the wham grosser, "Absent-Minded Professor" at Memorial. "Never On Sunday" is busting the house records at Beacon Hill with lines since opening. "One-Eyed Jacks" is solid in fourth at Astor.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (B&Q) (1,170; 90-$1.50) — "One-Eyed Jacks" (Par) (4th wk). Fine $10.000. Last week, $11,000.

Beacon Hill (Sack) (678; $1-$1.50) —"Never On Sunday" (Lope) (3d wk). Wow $15.000. Last week, $16,-000.

Boston (Cinerama, Inc.) (1,354; $1.75-$2.65) — "Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama) (reissue) (10th wk). Okay $8.000. Last week, $9,-500.

Capri (Sack) (900; $1.80-$2.20) — "Ben-Hur" (M-G) (m.o.) (18th wk). Oke $4.000. Last week, $5,000.

Center (E. M. Loew) (1,540; 60-$1.25) — "Gorgo" (M-G) (2d wk). Slick $8.000. Last week, $10,000.

Exeter (1,376; 90-$1.50) — "General Rovere" (Cont). Fast $10.000. Last week, "Two-Way Stretch" (Indie) (8th wk), $5,000.

Fenway (Indie) (1,350; $1.50) — "Bernadette of Lourdes" (Janus) (3d wk). Nice $7.500. Last week, $8,000.

Gary (Sack) (1,277; $1.25-$1.80)— "La Dolce Vita" (Astor). Boff $35,-000, breaking house record. Last week, "Pepe" (Col) (9th wk), $5,-000.

Kenmore (Indie) (700; $1.50) — "League of Gentlemen" (Kings)

Portland, Ore., April 25.

Biz is strong here currently despite the holdovers and transient name shows. The Orpheum, with oldie combo of "Apartment" and "Elmer Gantry," booked to cash in on Oscaring, shapes wow. "Absent-Minded Professor" looms hotsy in second at Paramount while "Gone With Wind" looks big in fourth at Broadway.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (1,890; $1-$1.50)—"Gone With Wind" (M-G) (reissue) (4th wk). Big $7,000. Last week, $8,200.

Fox (Evergreen) (1,600; $1-$1.49) —"Pepe" (Col) (2d wk). Sturdy $6,500. Last week, $6,400.

Hollywood (Evergreen) (900; $1.25-$2.49)—"Ben-Hur" (M-G) (7th wk), on popscale. Hotsy $4.500. Last week, $3.700.

Music Box (Hamrick) (640; $1.50-$3)—"Exodus" (UA) (14th wk). Fine $6,500. Last week, $8.000.

Oriental (McFadden) (2,100; $1) —"Sundowners" (WB) and "Sons and Lovers" (WB) (reissues). Okay $3,500. Last week, "Private Lives Adam and Eve" (U) and "Time and Eternity" (U), $2,800.

Orpheum (Evergreen) (1,536; $1-$1.49)—"Apartment" (UA) and "Elmer Gantry" (UA) (reissues). Wow $14.000. Last week, "Rachel Cade" (WB) and "Herod Great" (AA), $4,300.

Paramount (Port-Par) (3,400; $1-$1.50)—"Absent-Minded Professor" (BV) (2d wk). Torrid $15,000. Last week, $15,200.

'Wind' Dominates Cincy, Mighty $20,000; Taylor 10G, 'Silence' Quiet 7G

Cincinnati, April 25.

Oscar encorers and revival of champ "Gone With Wind" are rocketing Cincy film biz currently. "Wind" is adhering to traditional holdouts and turnaways to land town top position on eighth local showing. It's rated wow at Capitol. "Butterfield 8" looms good via Oscar for Elizabeth Taylor at flagship Albee. "Apartment" and "Elmer Gantry," back after Oscaring, loom big as opener of Twin Drive-In's east screen outdoor season. Ozoner's west side, which operates all year, bids for hotsy second week with "Alamo."

Hard-ticket "Exodus" remains sturdy in fifth frame. Newcomers "Fiercest Heart" at Grand shapes fairish and "Angry Silence" and "Young One" combo is so-so at Palace.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; $1-$1.25)— "Butterfield 8" (M-G) (reissue). Good $10.000. Last week, "All Hands On Deck" (20th), $10,500.

Capitol (SW-Cinerama) (1,400; $1-$1.50) — "Gone With Wind" (M-G) (reissue). Wham $20,000. Last week, "Pepe" (Col) (7th wk), at $1.25-$1.80 scale, $9,500.

Esquire Art (Shor) (500; $1.25)—

West End Bright; 'Seven' Boffo 20G, 'Sanctuary' Lush 10G, 'Summer' Hot 16G, '101 D's' Wham $10,500 in 3d

London, April 18.

West End business continues brisk though there are one or two disappointments in the current round. Notable newcomer is "Magnificent Seven," which has been given saturation treatment by United Artists. It is heading for a great $20,000 or more in first session at the London Pavilion.

Another sturdy newcomer is "Sanctuary," which looks to finish its first Carlton stanza at $10.000 or near. "Greengage Summer" in second frame at the Odeon Leicester Square still is brisk with $16.000 or over.

Among the holdovers "101 Dalmatians" is continuing its record-breaking run at 556-seat Studio One with a boff $10.500 in third week. "La Dolce Vita" hit a fine $6.600 in 18th Curzon round. "Ben-Hur" was over $22,000 in 69th Empire week.

"Spartacus" topped hefty $11,-600 in its 20th frame at the Metropole, Victoria. "The Alamo" hit a stout $10,000 in its 25th Astoria week. "South Pacific," which completes its third year at the Dominion this week, finished with a boffo $16,000 in 155th round.

Estimates for Last Week

Astoria (CMA) (1,474; $1.20-$1.75)—"Alamo" (UA) (25th wk). Solid $10.000. Holds until early May, when "Exodus" (UA) follows.

Carlton (20th) (1,128; 70-$1.75)— "Sanctuary" (20th). Lively $10.000 or near.

Casino (Indie) (1,155; $1.20-$2.10) — "Search for Paradise" (Robin) (5th wk). Smash 24,900.

Columbia (Col) (740; $1.05-$2.50) —"Pepe" (Col) (7th wk). Fair $6,100. "Cry for Happy" (Col) follows next week.

Curzon (GCT) (500; 70-$1.70)— "La Dolce Vita" (Col) (18th wk). Tall $6,600.

Dominion (CMA) (1,712; $1.05-$2.20)—"South Pacific" (20th) (155th wk). Great $16,000.

Empire (M-G) (1,700; $1.05-$2.80) —"Ben-Hur" (M-G) (69th wk). Fancy $22,000.

Leicester Square Theatre (CMA) (1,375; 50-$1.75)—"Double Bunk" (BL) (3d wk). Steady $9,800. Second was $10,300.

London Pavilion (UA) (1,217; 70-$1.75)—"Magnificent Seven" (UA).

'Spartacus' Good $10,000 in Mpls.

Minneapolis, April 25.

While holdovers are holding fast at all first-runs, Minneapolis is strictly baseball-minded this session. Barring rainouts, film trade is being left with the dregs of the entertainment dollar. Hardticket trio continue to show life, however, getting a lift from visiting ball fans. "Seven Wonders of World" in second week, "Spartacus" in sixth and "Exodus" in 13th all appear healthy.

Only other offering doing better than so-so biz is the award-winning entry, "Virgin Spring," socko in second at Suburban World. "All in Night's Work" at World and "101 Dalmations" at Lyric, both in fifth frames, shape trim. It's the fifth and last chapter for "Pepe," good after fine run at State. Also bowing out is "Village of Damned," drab at Orpheum. "Cimarron" rates quiet, too, in fourth canto at Gopher.

Estimates for This Week

Academy (Mann) (947; $1.75-$2.65)—"Exodus" (UA) (13th wk). Healthy $8.000. Last week, $10.000.

Century (Cinerama, Inc.) (1,150; $1.75-$2.65) — "Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama) (reissue) (2d wk). Climbing to respectable $10,-500 this round after disappointing $7.500 in first 6 days.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; $1-$1.25) —"Cimarron" (M-G) (4th wk). Fair $4.500. Last week, $4,700.

L'ville Hot; 'Pepe' Lofty $12,000, 'Cinerama' 10G, 'Spartacus' Big $8,000, 6

Louisville, April 25.

Two newcomers are helping things in downtown district this week. "Pepe" at United Artists looks big while "Sins of Rachel Cade" at the Mary Anderson is okay. Oscars won by "Spartacus" will push it up to a big take at the Brown. "All In Night's Work," in fourth at the Kentucky shapes nice. "Cimarron," also in fourth, at the Ohio looms strong.

Convention of American Chemical Society, with big attendance, also helped to liven first-run trade.

Estimates for This Week

Brown (Fourth Avenue) (1,100; $1.25-$1.75)—"Spartacus" (U) (6th wk). Pushing to big $8,000 or close after fifth week's $7,000.

2 Big Pix Help B'way; 'Vita' Record 22G, 'Mein Kampf' Huge 60G; 'Prof.' Socko 146G, 'Impostor' Great 28G

Launching of two blockbusters in the last seven days is helping to brighten the Broadway biz picture in the current round. First really springlike weather in recent days hurt some but an equal portion of rain was a stimulating factor at the boxoffice for this session.

"La Dolce Vita," Italian prize-winning pic, is heading for a capacity $22,100 or close in first week at the Henry Miller, playing on hard-ticket. Pic boasts a considerable advance sans any parties, and looks in for a longrun. "Mein Kampf," the other champ at the wickets, looks to hit a wham $60,000 or over opening stanza at the Rivoli, playing continuous and on popscale.

"Absent-Minded Professor" with Easter stageshow is heading for a socko $146,000 or close in sixth stanza at the Music Hall. This means it holds for a seventh week. "Hoodlum Priest" wound up with a lofty $17,000 in third round at the Astor.

"Great Impostor" finished its fourth session with a big $28,000, day-dating the Palace and arty Trans-Lux 85th Street. "Raisin in Sun" was smash $28,000 or near in fourth week, day-dating the Forum and arty Trans-Lux 52d Street. "One-Eyed Jacks" looks fancy $34,000 in fourth Capitol week.

"Pepe" continued great with $21,500 in 18th session at the Criterion. "All in Night's Work" was okay $19,000, day-dating the Victoria and arty Normandie in fifth round.

"Exodus" still is hard-ticket pace-setter with mighty $46,000 in 19th session at the Warner. "Spartacus" is moving up to a great $22,000 or close in current (29th) round at the DeMille as a result of Oscar awards.

"Ben-Hur" finished its record money-getting run at the State with a big $22,500 in four days of 74th session. This represents an alltime gross mark for any cinema of $3,004,867. "Gone With Wind" out again on reissue, opens a popscale, continuous run at State today (Wed.).

directed by Michelangelo Antonioni, starring Steve Cochran and Betsy Blair, for release later this year.

Yes ASTOR PICTURES, INC.

ASTOR PICTURES, INC.

The immensely successful openings of LA DOLCE VITA in New York and Boston have demonstrated the soundness of Astor's philosophy in marketing international films.

THAT PHILOSOPHY:

- ☐ start with a product of merit, one that can hold up its head proudly.
- ☐ give that product every advantage, give it top support.
- ☐ surround it by knowing exploitation, the kind of publicity campaign, the kind of advertising effort it deserves.
- ☐ do not be limited to a traditional, "by rote" effort . . . dare to be different . . . dare to ignore the hundred voices that insist "it can't be done."

THE PROOF: ☐ In New York, LA DOLCE VITA was premiered April 19th at the Henry Miller's Theatre on a reserved seat, ten-a-week policy. An all-out publicity campaign and a large-scale advertising effort built up a tremendous advance. Favorable critical comment was parlayed with saturation radio and full-page newspaper advertising. Box office queues exceeded those of the most successful Broadway hit. This has become New York's new "hot ticket."

In Boston, LA DOLCE VITA opened at the Gary Theatre on a continuous performance, reserved-mezzanine on-week-ends policy. Advance publicity and advertising effort was comparable to New York. First day's gross established a new house record, exceeding returns from any of the so-called "blockbusters." Business continues "smash."

LA DOLCE VITA will open soon in Miami, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Chicago, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia. It will be followed this summer by:

ROCCO AND HIS BROTHERS, another Festival winning production of great power with a record of exceptional foreign box office success.

Paris

Jacques Bar to Hollywood with director Etienne Perier to try to get Cary Grant to say yes to a first pic in France. Pic however would be a French one though made in two versions for Bar has a deal with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer via his CIPRA org. Bar and Perier have already made "Bridge to the Sun" with Carroll Baker under this setup. Grant story would be called "The Man in the Rolls Royce" and concerns a Yank tv scripter who sees some new characters he is inventing in real life and gets involved in an intrigue which helps him finish his story. Miss Baker would play opposite Grant in this, if he accepts . . . Pol Qentin's adaptation of the hit British play of Terence Rattigan "Ross" will be done at the Theatre Sarah Bernhardt next season with Pierre Fresnay in the Alec Guiness role. Theatre Marignan, which wants to be converted to a film house by owner Simone Volterra, will serve as a pic house during the Theatre of Nations season, April 8-July 10, to show foreign and local pix based on theatrical pieces in conjunction with latter. It will then have to be a partime pic house and also legiter in keeping with municipal rulings . . . British pic "The Criminal," made by Yank director Joseph Losey, getting fine reviews here and in for okay biz at one firstrun house.

Rome

Federico Fellini starts his first film since "La Dolce Vita" soon here in Rome: an episode starring Anita Ekberg in Carlo Ponti's production of "Boccaccio '61," which will also feature segments by other top Italo directors. Fellini will direct own untitled followup feature to "Vita" when he completes the "Boccaccio" bit . . . Dino DeLaurentiis taking a leaf from Yank practice: he's "previewing" (rating cards 'n' all) his latest, "I Love, You Love" for 500 Yank families in Verona (army area) to get a foretaste of foreign reactions to the Allessandro Blasetti item.

Romans still discussing the possibility that Audrey Hepburn may hattan" for Raoul Levy, as announced by French producer recently and—more importantly for local coffers—that pic may eventually be shot in Italy, as planned when pic was originally conceived . . . Jose Quintero here on the q.t. shooting some backdrops and connecting shots for "Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone," using doubles. Main footage was, of course, shot in Britain after Italo authorities refused DeRochemont production permits to location here . . . Stewart Granger shoots "Swordsman of Tuscany" for Jacques Bar and Metro at Tirrenia Studios beginning in mid-August.

Mack Sennett's memory will be honored by a special retrospective showing of his pix at Venice Film Festival in August . . . fest will also publish a book about his work . . . Melvin Frank to Switzerland to discuss with Sophia Loren an Italo-set comedy project to star Miss Loren and Danny Kaye. Panama-Frank project would roll early '62 . . . Announced locally that Mario del Monaco will play Mario Lanza in a color biopic entitled "The Great Mario" . . . Montgomery Clift being pared for role in "Senility," from book by Italo Svevo . . . Mauro Bolognini slated to leave shortly for Coast to discuss project with thesp . . . John Mills announced for lead in Euro International production of "The Valiant," set to start this month in Rome under direction of Giorgio Capitani.

Dino DeLaurentiis "sneaked" the impressive footage of the Crucifixion scene for "Barabbas" lensed during actual solar eclipse before pic's start—to press here this week . . . cameraman Aldo Tonti deserves credit for outstanding technical accomplishment, and sequence will certainly create much word-of-mouth . . . "Barabbas" just under way with Verona Arena mass sequences first on director Richard Fleischer's agenda, with a 40,000 extra call sheet . . . Titanus' "Girl with a Suitcase" is sure as one of Italo entries at Cannes Festival . . . big hassle on for other pix to rep this country at event, with many quality contenders this year.

"Shadows" to be released in Italy by Globe International . . . Henry Lombroso's company also handling "Candide" locally. French-made item had previously been forbidden for export by French authorities . . . Federico Fellini denies he's set to direct "Three Rooms in Manhattan" for Raoul Lecy, as announced by French producer recently Alberto Lattuada paging Karl Malden for lead in "La Steppa," pic he guns in Yugoslavia May 2 for producer Morris Ergas.

Looks like four pix from Italy for Cannes fete: "Ragazza con la Valigia" (Titanus), "Two Women" (Ponti), "Che Gioia Vivere" (Cineriz), and probably "La Viaccia" (Arco). Fest topper decides Italo roster this week during Rome stopover on return from Moscow pic o.o. . . . three pix coming up for Eva Bartok: "Othello, the Accused" (FCC), opposite Mario del Monaco, "The Great Mandarin," and "Lana, Queen of the Amazons". . . Fritz Lang in Rome to negotiate two pix for Serena (Rome) and Omnia (Munich); locations in India, interiors in Rome . . .

Cinecitta may move to area west of Rome between Lake Bracciano and Manziana frequently used already as pic location. Rumors of studio move (the most recent of a series) has already sent realestate prices in area soaring, according to reports . . ."Five Pieces of Maria" is title of proposed Sophia Loren-Danny Kaye starrer being prepped by Panama-Frank, after their Bob Hope-Bing Crosby item (set for London shooting), "The Road to Hong Kong." Sophia Loren also may do "Moll Flanders" from a John Osborne screenplay, with Ponti-Girosi producing.

A festival of Yank indie films may be a feature of this summer's Spoleto Festival of Two Worlds . . . Italians planning a benefit gala preem in Gotham for the 1960 Olympic Games film produced here by Luce Institute for Cineriz release . . . English commentary has been prepped for the occasion . . . are the ads taken by UA in Italian trade publications to announce "Taras Bulba" as a Harold Hecht production intended to dampen announced Italian plans for a "Bulba" production starring Jack Palance? . . . inserts pointedly indicate pic's "completed preparation" and the shooting start of Tony Curtis starrer, as well as its "immediate" distribution by UA and local distrib, Dear Films . . . proposed new Italo film law would eliminate the current 5,500,000 lire-per-pic ($8,856) dubbing "tax". . . Burlesque a flop in Eternal City. "Cavalcade of Burlesque" group walked out on local impresario when he failed to pay . . . Roberto Rossellini may direct a pic in Brazil for a new company called Ital-Victoria Film, based on novel, "Jubiaba."

Luchino Visconti, Vittorio DeSica, Mario Monicelli and Federico Fellini are the directors set by Concordia Films for present-day episoder inspired by Boccaccio's "Decameron" and titled "Boccaccio '70." Cineriz releases, with Fellini episode to start in next few weeks . . . Italo exporters worried over uncertain situation reigning on German market and consequent drop in purchases by that country of Italo pix . . . Simone Signoret, Serge Reggiani, Annie Girardot announced as stars of Marco Ferreri's pic version of Kafka's "The Castle," to start Aug. 15 on Spanish locations as Italo-Franco-Spanish coproduction.

Prosperity note: Dino LeDaurentiis had to plaster the city of Verona full of posters asking for extras to fill his 10,000-man arena scenes for "Barabbas"; even then reaction was slow, though the Richard Fleischer pic is paying Veronans $1 over Roman extra rates, and more Romans may have to be called in after all. DeLaurentiis off to Israel, incidentally, to watch another one of his four current pix, "Two Enemies." start production under Guy Hamilton's direction; David Niven costars with Alberto Sordi in that one. Filmites here are sure Israeli censor has it in for Italo product only: "Les Annees Folles," French feature documentary, was allowed into country unscathed, but some local footage shot to give pic more of an Italian slant was objected to.

Titanus hopes to get its pic version of Tomasi di Lampedusa's best-seller, "The Leopard," on the road by end of summer under direction of Luchino Visconti; Laurence Olivier and Warren Beatty being considered for male leads, while femme spot may go to Claudia Cardinale . . . Geoffredo Lombardo's studio also has plans for "Paradise on Earth," to be directed by Franco Rossi entirely in the States, probably L.A. not decided yet whether these and other planned projects come under the new Titanus-MGM scheme or will be handled separately by the Italo major.

Fono Roma announces it is readying the first six-track stereo sound setup for a Disney Circarama demonstration to be held soon in a special theatre built by FIAT at the Turin Fairgrounds . . . show will be a specially-readied Disney-Royfilm (Rome) production sponsored by FIAT auto works to celebrate the 100th year of Italo unity . . . Jack Cardiff being paged to direct Gina Lollobrigida in Royal Films' "Imperial Venus". . . UA has bought world release rights to Titanus' "Alboin and Rosmunda," which will change title . . . Jack Palance-Guy Madison starrer currently going here . . . Deal set by Titanus' Goffredo Lombardo on recent U.S. trip, during which he also received healthy advance offers for "Girl with a Suitcase," Italy's official Cannes Fest entry.

Vittorio DeSica, after making no films for several years, follows up his "Two Women" (Ponti) and current "The Last Judgment" (DeLaurentiis) with "I Sequestrati di Altona" from the Jean-Paul Sartre work for Ponti. Cesare Zavattini will adapt and script, and Sophia Loren will star, probably opposite J. P. Belmondo; director is also searching for vehicle for Silvana Mangano.

Firstruns Up in Los Angeles

Los Angeles, April 25.

Los Angeles firstruns ran up a great $3,112,074 in 27 situations for first quarter of 1961 in what may be an all-time high quarterly record for local playing time. If pace set for first 13 weeks is maintained and usual ratio adhered to in remaining three quarters, 1961 may wind the greatest in L. A. firstrun history.

Figure is up 8% over corresponding period for 1960, when tally hit $2,872,924 in 26 houses, and same increase over 1959's initial quarter of $2,863,907. Closest first-quarter mark to current span was 1958's, with $2,977,217 take in 30 houses. Highest quarter during 1958, '59 and '60 was third in '58, when sizzling $2,995,417 was reached. Third quarter of '60 pulled $2,924,994.

Record draw is contributable to large number of blockbusters, more so than in past years, with "Ben-Hur," which last week ended its 70th sesh, smashing over a hot $264,600 for period and still holding indefinitely at Egyptian. Biggest grosser for first 13 weeks of year was "Exodus," lofting to a boff $337,903 at Fox Wilshire and booked for indefinite stand. Exclusive showings did phenomenal biz right down the line for period.

"Pepe" soared to $225,128 for 13-week stand at Warner Beverly, and "Spartacus" crashed through for $218,517 at Pantages, where both are skedded to hold. "The World of Suzie Wong" grossed a lush $175,941, in 10 weeks at Chinese, and "This Is Cinerama" reissue a bucko $179,949 during full period at Warner Hollywood. One of the sleeper pix of the year, "Never on Sunday," returned a great $111,835 for full period at small 631-seat Fine Arts, with indications it will go on indefinitely.

Other top-grossers included "The Alamo," running up $162,595 in general release, and "The Sundowners" racked over $128,813 also in general release. "The Misfits" did $98,885 in three sizzling weeks, and "Butterfield 8" $89,873 in three frames. "Cimarron" rang up $64,882 in eight rounds, and "Swiss Family Robinson" $46,329 in two. "All in a Night's Work" did $43,462 in two weeks; "Sanctuary," $38,242 in two; "Cry for Happy," $28,662 in two. "Wackiest Ship in the Army" rolled up $41,484 in three laps; "The Great Impostor," $30,251 in two.

"The Absent-Minded Professor," just starting a run at Chinese, racked up a hotsy $54,559 for first two weeks, and reissue of "Gone With the Wind" started its run at Hollywood Paramount with a terrific $36,000 first week. "101 Dalmatians" also rolled up a big $22,785 for first week of a run. All are holding into second quarter.

Quarterly record for L. A. firstruns for past three full years is as follows:

1st Quarter	$2,872,984	$2,863,907	$2,977,217
2d Quarter	2,540,840	2,287,670	2,539,980
3d Quarter	2,924,994	2,638,560	2,995,416
4th Quarter	2,623,125	2,286,145	2,588,066
	$10,961,943	$10,076,682	$11,100,679

$600,000 Drive-In With Balcony For 150 of 1,600 Cars

By BESS JENKINS

Lincoln, April 25.

Construction of a new $600,000 drive-in featuring a car balcony accommodating 150 of the facility's 1,600-car capacity is underway at Millard, near Omaha. Russell Brehm of Lincoln, one of the three owners, described the new Nebraska outdoor theatre as the largest between Chicago and the Pacific Coast.

It also will be the only drive-in theatre in Nebraska to have twin screens, making possible the showing of two features at one time to provide the customer with a choice of shows.

Brehm and the other two builders, Sen. Roman Hruska and H. S. Gould, both of Omaha, have purchased 80 acres of land between the Western Electric plant at Millard and adjacent to the Interstate Highway.

"Thirty acres or three times the area occupied by our 84th & O Drive-In here will be used for the new Twin Drive-In Theatre," Brehm said.

He indicated the remaining 50 will be developed later as a business shopping centre area, according to present planning.

Completion date for the drive-in is scheduled for June 28.

Brehm noted the July 1 deadline for Interstate completion will put the theatre within 34 miles of Lincoln, too.

The 150-car-accommodating balcony, described by Brehm, is only the third in the U.S., will be constructed in the center of the 30-acre drive-in adjacent to a concession building. He said the concession facility will be 90% glass and feature the latest equipment.

The twin screens will be served from one projection booth, with one being located in the west portion of the 30 acres and the other screen in the northeast corner.

Major advantage of the twin treatment will come to the patron, who can see the picture in a double feature he wants to watch without sitting through the other, Brehm explained.

The three owners already operate the 84th & O in Lincoln; the 84th & Center and the Airport in Omaha; and the 62d & Lexington at Corpus Christi, Tex.

Hruska is a Republican senator from Nebraska and Brehm is a longtime Republican and chairman of the Lancaster County GOP.

Kaye-For-A-Day Bally on Par Pic

Hollywood, April 25.

Usually one of Hollywood's most high-priced properties, Danny Kaye has agreed to a unique exploitation plan on behalf of the Shavelson-Rose Paramount release, "On the Double," in which he will be given away free for a day to a U. S. theatre exhibitor.

Distribution of "Kaye-for-a-day" takes place at 34th annual International Variety Clubs Convention in Miami Beach April 25-29, with exhibs getting a ticket for a drawing to be held immediately after the April 27 screening of the feature. Kaye, who, of course, stars in the picture, will personally conduct drawing and will also function as special guest of honor at the convention.

Exhib winning star must have licensed pic or do so within 30 days to get him. Paramount guarantees he will travel any place in the country to appear when the film opens for the winner. Opening, however, must be subject to Kaye's commitments.

Theatremen in bidding situations who have not yet bid for "On the Double" are not eligible for contest.

Penalties for Soundtrack Piracy

Celler Would Punish Guilty Up to $10,000 Or 10 Years

Washington, April 25.

Pirating and counterfeit labeling of film soundtracks would be made a crime under legislation by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.). Bill primarily is designed to stop the growing disk counterfeiting racket, but its language also encompasses films with soundtracks. Penalties range up to 10 years in prison and $10,000 in fines or both.

It would slap such penalties on those who "knowingly and with fraudulent intent" cause to be shipped—in interstate commerce—or receive "any phonograph record disk, wire, tape, film or other articles on which sounds are recorded" to which fake labels are attached.

A second criminal section would impose the same sanctions on those who ship, cause to be shipped or receive disks, tapes, films, etc. without authorization of the owner of the copyright for the master recording or soundtrack. Similarly, more stringent civil remedies are provided.

A Washington rep of Motion Picture Assn. opined that the Celler measure "plugged a loophole well worth plugging."

Baptists Fling The 'Smut' Charge

Atlanta, April 25.

An editorial dealing with censorship, which appeared originally in the April 13 issue of The Christian Index, official publication of the Baptist Convention of the State of Georgia, was reprinted in The Atlanta Constitution Amusement Guide of April 17 with the comment that "it represents another point of view on the movie censorship question.

Text of the editorial, which appeared under the heading "Films Deserve Censorship?," in full:

"The peddlers of smut, whether in film or print, desecrate the constitution of both the state and nation when they seek license under it to degrade moral standards.

"Atlanta's motion picture censor machinery is under legal attack by distributors of a film banned from Atlanta screens. Movie censorship in Atlanta leaves much to be desired. It is alarming when there are those who would destroy the little we have.

"The movie industry errs when it attributes most of its ills to the competition of tv. It was the industry failure to police itself that contributed largely to necessiy for the popcorn machine to keep open its doors. The prurient novel and the oversexed picture destroy far more than is gained by the fast dollar.

"The movie colony would do well in Atlanta and elsewhere to censor itself instead of resisting the censoring of others. It is a sorry state of affairs to find it turning to courts for relief instead of the camera.

"There are some good movies and they have had a good boxoffice. It is a shame the industry must suffer a black eye for the group which is interested only in the dollar.

"Maybe the industry can police itself. But, we have the idea it could work something out and, if nothing else, let it lend support to censorship by at least a reprimand for those who demand a license for their smut."

Currently under attack in Fulton Superior Court are bans imposed by City Censor Mrs. Christine Smith Gilliam against Lopert Pictures' "Never on Sunday" and "No Room at the Top," whose star, Simone Signoret, won the top feminine acting Oscar in the 1960 Academy Award Sweepstakes.

Elisco Mireles will reopen Rattlers Drive-In at Rio Grande City, Tex. Ozoner was destroyed by a heavy wind storm.

'Party' Censorship

Kansas City, April 25.

Recent appointment by Gov. John Anderson has brought in Mrs. Kitty McMahon to a three-year term on the Motion Picture Board of Review, state censor group.

Mrs. McMahon is Republican vicechairman for Wyandotte County (Kansas City, Kansas), and replaces Mrs. Dorothy Frankovich, Democratic appointee of former Gov. George Docking.

Board is composed of three women appointees and functions in Kansas City, Kansas, to review motion pictures to be shown in Kansas.

End Inappropriate Name; Bordertown Theatres Now Lone Stars Under Ezell

Dallas, April 25.

Bordertown Theatres Inc. has had its corporate name changed to Lone Star Theatres Inc. by the board of directors, executive V.P. Dowlen Russell reveals. The previous name didn't seem appropriate for a company owning and operating more than 40 theatres, mostly drive-ins, in Texas' major cities.

When the company was founded by Claude Ezell and late Bill Underwood in 1940 it was known as Underwood & Ezell. With Underwood's death in 1948 the firm was renamed Claude Ezell & Associates. In 1955 the company was sold to Bordertown Theatres Inc., but in 1958 Ezell's group reacquired the chain. Principal stockholders are Ezell, Ned Depinet and Sam Dembow Jr. Ezell is prexy of Lone Star Theatres; Dowlen Russell, executive v.p.; Albert H. Reynolds, v.p. in charge of theatre operations; Brandon Doak, secretary.

Ezell is a drive-in pioneer, having built the first Texas ozoner over 20 years ago. Once general sales manager for Warner Bros., he was also the originator of "bank night," which helped bring theatres in America through the depression years.

Universal Patterns Two For Detroit Suburbia

Detroit, April 25.

Universal Pictures is launching a multiple-theatre engagement program involving 28 nabes and drive-ins which may have significant effects on future bookings in this suburban-minded city.

First picture to receive the multiple treatment is "The Secret Ways," teamed with "Posse from Hell," opening last Wed. (19). Decision was reached by Universal following the encouraging success in testing multiple billings in this area with the recent showing of "The Great Impostor."

Explanation of the new policy was made at an elaborate luncheon attended by Erwin Lloyd, co-producer with Richard Widmark of "The Secret Ways," and the Austrian and German consuls. Latter were present, along with several Hungarian refugees who have settled in Detroit, because the Heath Production espionage drama was filmed in Austria and deals with the Hungarian revolt against their Communist conquerers.

Other films being lined up to follow the initial multiple engagement are: "The Last Sunset," "Tammy Tell Me True," "The Curse of the Werewolf," and "The Shadow of a Cat."

Doom Empire, San Antonio

San Antonio, April 25.

Empire Theatre, in the downtown section of the city, once operated by Interstate, and lately an indie operation, is slated to be closed and the pace made into a parking garage.

The Brady Building, which houses the theatre has been sold and extensive remodeling is planned. The building will feature a mall and free parking for its tenants.

Pal Off Key West

Hollywood, April 25.

Metro has added fairy tale, "The Fisherman and His Wife," to George Pal's "The Wonderful World of the Brothers Grimm," second Cinerama feature of four to be produced on partnership basis.

Plans call for taking audience on underworld tour of coral forests off Key West as result of recent development of Cinerama underwater process.

Ballyhoo Primed On Assumption Of Dual Shreiks

Universal is heating up a strictly local merchandising campaign for its first horror combo, "Curse of the Werewolf" and "Shadow of the Cat," set for national release this summer. U, of course, will have to split them where exhibs insist (to get around the block-booking taboo), but the push is being geared to tandem playoff.

Phil Gerard, ad-pub chieftain, said the package will be timed with school closings around the country, commencing with Dixie dates in late May.

Idea for the combo was cued by U's earlier success with scarum pix from England's Hammer Films. Latter also turned out "Werewolf," but "Cat" is a Jon Pennington (British) Production.

"From Dry Plates to Ektachrome Film" by C. E. Kenneth Mees (Ziff-Davis; $5.95) is aptly titled. It is the story of photographic research, told by and about the late Mees, for 50 years in charge of the Eastman Kodak research laboratories, which he founded and built to its present lofty state in the field.

A labor of love, the book can prove a valuable text for serious students of photography and to the motion picture technician who requires a detailed background on film and its derivative processes. Here, however, the chief appeal stops. The material, aside from four general introductory chapters that trace the history of photography in laymen's terms, is technical and precise. It is written in a style and language indicating the author's vast personal knowledge of the subject, but general readers may find themselves struggling to grasp some of the more technical points. For the professional laboratory, researcher or educational channel, it should fill the bill greatly.

Mees, with the aid of other experts in individual areas, dissects such processes as the calotype, calling this the ancestor of modern photography instead of the daguerreotype process usually listed; sensitometry, dyes, gelatin, emulsion research, chemicals and other areas that make up photography. Amateur photography is hit heavily, but professional motion picture develpoment is barely touched. Mees notes the principle interest of Kodak has always been in supply film and never in active production.

A general sprinkling of pictures and graphs aids the reader greatly.

'Family Pictures' Highly Commended But Does the Family Stay Home?

Evidence recurrs that domestic euphoria is a tough commodity to sell—that the clamor for wholesome family pictures may be more illusion than fact. In general, when it comes to finding audiences for the "innocents," exhibitors have to do a Diogenes, as witness, among others, the earlier case of Allied Artists' "Friendly Persuasion" (albeit this one is finally turning the profit corner).

Little wonder film-makers evince skepticism by favoring the downbeat themes—the sicko ones making for boxoffice health more readily than the happies. In a current instance, out in Denver, they stayed away in droves from Columbia's "Hand in Hand," tale of two moppets beset by adult-made religious differences.

But the further angle there is to throw into question the efficacy of Legion of Decency film ratings. Clement J. Zecha, pic critic for the Denver Catholic Register, who'd given "Hand" beaucoup support, reported his efforts unavailing. "Yet I received a dozen or more telephone calls (during week 'Hand' was playing firstrun) inquiring about 'All in a Night's Work,' rated A-3; 'Sanctuary,' rated B, and 'Sins of Rachel Cade,' A-3. Also, while 'Hand in Hand' was playing, queries were made about 'World of Suzie Wong,' 'Psycho' and 'The Entertainer,' all B films."

Presuming the inquirers were Catholic, question naturally posed is just how much does the Legion sway the flock?

Further Thoughts

Zecha further notes that he wasn't quarreling with interest in the adult-themed pix, only expressing howcum the family fare gets sloughed when there's such hue and cry for it? "In many cases the persons who are doing the loudest campaigning for family type films," he adds, "are the ones who will not support them when they are booked into a theatre."

Which ought to elicit a hearty "amen" from the film-makers. Makes it tough to combat when they argue, with apparent substantiation, that the boxoffice calls the tune.

But pursuant to his own discussion, Zecha sequels a vox pop comment from a "mother and housewife" deploring out-of-reach firstrun admissions, and suggesting that in this case "Hand" would have fared better with a nabe opening. Her logic, in view of Main Stem economics, seems sound enough: how can a family be expected to turn out if it can't scale the tariff wall?

Her point raises interesting implications both for exhibs and distribution, especially if it's an accurate projection of the national norm viz the family and firstrun admissions.

'X-15' Capital Gain

Washington, April 25.

Rep. James C. Corman lauded Essex Productions' "X-15" on the floor of the House of Representatives. Corman, who is on the science and astronautics committee, asked for other Congressmen to support the picture and "wish it wisdom and inspiration."

Praise came as part of praise going to test pilot Joe Walker, who recently flew to altitude of 32.12 miles.

Howard W. Koch is exec producer of film, with Henry Sanicola and Tony Lazzarino producing and Richard Donner directing.

Levin-Mandell Readying Marine Pilot's Biopic; Hero Now an Ad Exec

Hollywood, April 25.

Irving H. Levin and Harry L. Mandell have secured screenrights to their upcoming indie production effort "The Lou Lenart Story" and plan lensing the pic under their indie Atlantic Pictures banner this fall on a $2,000,000 budget.

Story, dealing with saga of a former Marine Corps pilot, follows his experiences while commanding the first mission of the Israeli "paper air force" (four aircraft) which helped halt advance of Egyptian invaders in 1948.

Lenart, who has okayed format of film, will act as technical advisor. He is presently an ad-exec with the Honig, Cooper & Harrington Agency here.

According to Levin, pic will be lensed on location in the South Pacific, Italy and in Israel with cooperation of the government there. Interiors will be filmed here.

As yet no writer, director or cast has been set, but plans call for completion of these contracts within several weeks.

Levin also stated that conferences are in progress with sveeral major studios (undisclosed) concerning distribution of the film in early 1962. Lensing will be in Technicolor, he said, and will document experiences of Lenart.

Last release for the indie outfit was "From Hell to Eternity" through Allied Artists.

4 SDG Starts For '61 Award Stakes

Hollywood, April 25.

Directors Guild has nominated four pix, released during first quarter of 1961, for annual "Outstanding Directorial Achievement" awards, it was announced by Frank Capra, guild president.

Films and their directors are: "Hand in Hand," Philip Leacock, Doug Hermes assistant; "The Misfits," John Houston, Carl Beringer, assistant; "The Great Impostor," Robert Mulligan, Joseph Kenny, assistant; "The Absent Minded Professor," Robert Stevenson, Robert Shannon, assistant.

Additional films will be selected for remaining three-quarters of the year and final winner will be announced at guild's 1962 awards dinner.

Schell Touts Electronikam

Hollywood, April 25.

American adoption of the Electronikam System—camera technique combining film and TV advantages—would be a boon to actors and directors in motion pic filming, according to Maximilian Schell who recently participated in application of the technique.

The Electronikam process, originating in Germany, uses a combination television and motion picture camera which records the image on film while permitting simultaneous closed circuit tv monitoring and playback of the "taking lens" image.

"The big advantage in acting and direction is the opportunity to see the rushes of the scene on a TV screen immediately afterwards. Errors can be spotted and rectified in the very next take." Schell said.

System received a major test earlier this year in the three-hour Eurovision production of "Hamlet" starring Schell. The $250,000 production was broadcast simultaneously throughout six countries under the Bavaria Films banner for Geisel Gasteig Studios release.

William Morris Agency is negotiating with Continental Films distributors for U. S. release.

Schell is currently in a starring role in the Stanley Kramer production, "Judgement at Nuremberg," for United Artists release.

'Zorro' Character Lift Is Alleged

Los Angeles, April 25.

Walt Disney Productions, Mitchell Gertz Agency, Walter E. Disney and 10 John Does have been named defendants in a Superior Court suit filed by Beatrix Maurine McCulley. Latter is executrix for estate of Johnston McCulley, author and creator of the "Zorro" character.

McCulley suit, which asks $2,000,000 damages and accounting, charges breach of fiduciary relationship, fraud, conspiracy to defraud and unjust enrichment, among other charges, over the use of the "Zorro" character in motion pictures and television. Suit asserts McCulley, who died on Nov. 23, 1958, made a written agreement with Mitchell Gertz over literary rights to "Zorro" and that latter subsequently entered an agreement with Disney on Dec. 1, 1952.

It specifically asks $1,000,000 general damages and a similar amount for punitive damages, as well as an injunction restraining future use of "Zorro" and an accounting of the property and restoration of rights.

Suit was filed by law firm of Levoy, Miller & Salinger.

'SHEPHERD' DRAB 4½G, OMAHA; 'GORGO' $5,000

Omaha, April 25.

Biz continues to nosedive at downtown first-runs, with midweek biz dragging bottom. However, "This Is Cinerama" continues smash in 10th week at the Cooper as a hard-ticket entry. New entry, "Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" at the Omaha is dull. "Gorgo" at State looms only fair in opener. Third week of "Pepe" is drab at Orpheum. Four week of "Cimarron" is shaping trim at Dundee.

Estimates for This Week

Cooper (Cooper) (687; $1.55-$2.20)—"This Is Cinerama" (Cinerama) (10th wk). Looks lofty $7,800. Last week, $8,000.

Dundee (Cooper) (500; $1)— "Cimarron" (M-G) (4th wk). Smart $3,200. Last week, same.

Omaha (Tristates) (2,066; 75-$1) —"Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" (20th). Dull $4,500. Last week, "Giant" (WB) (reissue), $6,000.

Orpheum (Tristates) (2,877; $1-$1.25)—"Pepe" (Col) (3d wk). Drab $5,500. Last week, $8,000.

State (Cooper) (743; $1)—"Gorgo" (M-G). Fair $5,000 or near. Last week, "101 Dalmatians" (BV) (4th wk), $6,000.

'Eichmann' Fair $12,000, Frisco; 'Wind' Hot 10G

San Francisco, April 25.

First-runs here currently are a bit uneven with some long-runs slipping. "Operation Eichmann" is disappointing with a fair take opening week at Golden Gate. However, reissue of "Giant" looms fine in first at Paramount. "Exodus" is rated okay in 11th stanza at the Alexandria. "The Alamo" looks nice in third at United Artists. "Gone With Wind" still is big in fourth at Warfield.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,859; $1.25-$1.50) — "Operation Eichmann" (AA) and "Serengeti" (AA). Modest $12,000. Last week, "All In Night's Work" (Par) and "Trouble In Sky" (U) (3d wk), $8,500.

Fox (FWC) (4,651; $1.25-$1.50)— "All Hands On Deck" (20th) and "Tess, Storm Country" (20th) (2d wk). Drab $6,000. Last week, $8,000.

Warfield (Loew) (2,656; $1.25-$1.50)—"Gone With Wind" (M-G) (reissue) (4th wk). Big $10,000. Last week, $12,000.

Paramount (Par) (2,646; $1.25-$1.50) — "Giant" (WB) (reissue), Fine $10,500. Last week, "Konga" (AI) and "Terror In Haunted House" (AI), $14,500.

St. Francis (Par) (1,400; $1-$1.50) —"Pepe" (Col) (8th wk). Okay $8,500. Last week, $10,000.

United Artists (No. Coast) (1,151; $1.25-$1.50) — "Alamo" (UA) (3d wk). Nice $9,000. Last week, $10,500.

Stagedoor (A-R) (440; $1.25-$1.50)—"Rickisha Man" (Cont) (2d wk). Good $3,000. Last week, $5,000.

Vogue (S. F. Theatres) (364; $1.50) — "Virgin Spring" (Janus) (18th wk) and "Seventh Seal" (Janus) (reissue) (8th wk). Trim $2,000. Last week, $1,500.

Presidio (Hardy) (774; $1.25-$1.50)—"Heaven On Earth" (Indie) (2d wk). Good $2,200. Last week, $3,000.

Coronet (United California) (1,250; $1.50-$3.50)—"Ben-Hur" (M-G) (70th wk). Okay $7,500. Last week, $8,000.

Alexandria (United California) (1,610; $1.49-$3.50) — "Exodus" (UA) (11th wk). Okay $12,500. Last week, $12,000.

DETROIT

National Boxoffice Survey

Trade Perks; 'Professor' Still No. 1, 'Exodus' 2d, 'Ap'tment'-'Gantry' 3d; 'Jacks,' 'Wind' Next

Pictures which figured successfully in the Academy Awards last week are making an amazing dent at the boxoffice this season. Otherwise, the current week shapes surprisingly solid. Combo of "Apartment" and "Elmer Gantry," both from United Artists, is making the strongest showing of the Oscared pix, but "Butterfieeld 8" (M-G), "Spartacus" (U) and "Never On Sunday" (Lope) also shape well.

Pacing the field currently is "Absent-Minded Professor" (BV), which also was champ a week ago. "Exodus" (UA) is holding onto second place, same as last session.

Pairing of "Apartment" and "Gantry" is landing this combo in third position, largely by dint of the Academy Awards. "One-Eyed Jacks" (Par) is winding up fourth. It was fifth a week ago.

"Gone With Wind" (M-G) (reissue) is capturing fifth place. "Pepe" (Col), sixth last round, again is landing this position. "Spartacus" (U) is holding onto seventh spot, via its Oscarings, same as last stanza.

"All In Night's Work" (Par), 11th last week, is finishing eighth. "Ben-Hur" (M-G) is landing in ninth spot. "Never On Sunday" (Lope), a runner-up pic last week, is pushing to 10th place because of winning an award.

"Cimarron" (M-G) will be 11th while "League of Gentlemen" (Kings) rounds out the Top 12. "All Hands on Deck" (20th), "101 Dalmatians" (BV), "Virgin Spring" (Janus), Oscared for best foreign pic, and "Sanctuary" (20th) are the runner-up films in that order.

"Raisin in Sun" (Col), a newcomer, is nice in L.A. and Detroit, and big in N.Y. "Breathless" (Films Around World), which continues smash in N.Y., is okay this week in Detroit.

"La Dolce Vita" (Astor), also new, is capactly in both N.Y. and Boston, playing initial rounds. "Portrait of Mobster" (WB), fairish in K.C., is tall in Boston.

"Mein Kampf" (Col) shapes mighty on initial session at N.Y. Rivoli "Saturday Night, Sunday Morning" (Cont), which is continuing huge in N.Y., looks wow on opener in Washington. "Great Imposter" continues great in N.Y., playing two theatres.

"Hoodlum Priest" (UA), still solid in N.Y. on longrun, shapes dandy in Chi and good in Toronto. "Alamo," also from United Artists, which long has been high on weekly lists, still is doing big to great trade, but mostly in smaller cities currently.

"Rachel Cade" (WB), fine in Pitt, shapes fairish in Louisville and St. Louis. Black Sunday" (AI), just getting started, looms slick in L.A. and good in Detroit.

"Make Mine Mink" (Cont) looks fine in Chi and Balto and good in St. Loo. "Ballad of Soldier" (Kings), fast in N.Y., looms lively in Chi.

Rome, Tokyo, Honolulu Next Spots For Variety Clubs International

Miami Beach, April 25.

Variety Clubs International's 34th annual parley opened here today (Tues.) with chief barker Edward Emanuel forecasting expansion of the showmen's charity organization to include Rome, Tokyo, Honolulu and possibly other spots.

He reported steps already taken to establish a tent in Rome, and plans are afoot to reactivate the Tokyo charter.

Some 1,000 members and wives are on hand for the confab, with h.q. in the Fontainbleu Hotel. A formal banquet on Friday (28) winds up the sessions.

Emanuel said Variety tents are most effective when they have strong women's auxiliaries. Where they are lacking, he indicated, the build up of same should have priority action.

Harking to the postwar decline in the picture business, he said it was because the industry is "sadly lacking in the good old-fashioned commodities — enthusiasm and showmanship. Let's put both to work in our own organization and help permeate it throughout the (film) industry."

Paying tribute to the organization's strong leadership of the past (citing John Harris, Bob O'Donnell, Marc Wolff, Jack Beresin, George Hoover, John Rowley, et al), Emanuel said the big need now, besides expansion, is to organize a new strong core of leadership for the future.

Poche Installed As New Orleans Barker

New Orleans, April 25.

Irwin F. Poche has been installed as Chief Barker of Tent 45 of Variety Clubs International at a banquet at the swank Royal Orleans hotel. Also seated were William Holliday, first assistant chief barker; Kermit Carr, property master, and Carl Mabry, doughguy.

Members of the board are Page M. Baker, Harry Batt, Dan M. Brandon, Gibbons Burke, A. L. Dermody, Gaston Dureau, Isador Lazarus, Mel Leavitt, Ernest A. MacKenna, Emmett Nicaud, Henry G. Plitt, Azzo Plough, Claude Simons and Rodney D. Toups.

Honor guests included film actor Laurence Harvey and director Edward Dmytryk, on location here for filming of "A Walk On the Wild Side."

Sanguine on Summer

Los Angeles, April 25.

Stanley Warner is making improvements in two Southern California theatres, in anticipation of a lush summer, according to zone manager Pat Notaro.

Renovated will be the Ritz, San Bernardino, and Warner, San Pedro. Circuit is looking forward to 27 releases between May and August.

Lombardo Italo Rationale: 'Antiquities' as Standard As American Westerns

Italo spectacle pix have become a standard type of film on the same order as Hollywood westerns, Goffredo Lombardo, prexy of Titanus of Rome, opined in the course of a recent visit to New York.

Taking note of the vast number of spees turned out by the Italian industry last year—"The Tarfars," "Queen of The Tartars," "Fury of The Barbarians," "Revenge of The Barbarians," etc. to name just a few—Lombardo expressed no fear that the bottom was about to drop out of the market, as long as they are made inexpensively enough. Even so, he predicted that there would always be room for "one big spectacle a year."

Titanus, of course, is coproducing Joe Levine's "The Last Days of Sodom and Gomorrah," but Lombardo denies that this is essentially a spectacle. Rather, he said, "Last Days" will be a sort "Dolce Vita" about ancient Sodom instead of modern Rome.

Rothman Hops to Rome

Mo Rothman, exec v.p. of Columbia International, left New York over the past weekend for several days of meetings with Col reps in Rome and will follow this with trek to London for premiere tomorrow (Thurs.) of Carl Foreman's "Guns of Navarone."

After London the head man of the International department will join Col president Abe Schneider at the Cannes Film Festival where the official entries include Col's "Raisin in the Sun," then back to Rome, followed by stops in Germany and Sweden before again touching homebase in Manhattan.

London Strip Scene Puts 'I Love, You Love' Out Of Circulation

Rome, April 25.

"I Love, You Love" (DeLaurentiis) is the latest picture to be yanked from circulation in this country by court order, despite fact that it's regularly equipped with a government censorship via.

Pic, currently showing at Milan's Odeon, was ordered seized by Court of Foggia, reportedly for "obscenity" deriving from a 5,000-frame sequence of a strip in a London nitery. Bologna also carried out order, while situation is still unclear at this writing in other Italo centers.

Noted here that pic was regularly submitted to censor here, receiving visa and a "forbidden to minors" slotting, and that Italian Minister of Entertainfent Alberto Folchi is known to have personally seen pic without raising objections to its release.

U. S. TREASURY STUDY OF SWISS TAX HAVENS?

Hollywood, April 25.

President John F. Kennedy's statement relative to U. S. citizens abroad brought this comment from Herbert Aller, biz rep for International Photographers Local 659, IATSE:

"It was rather gratifying to read the President's statement of position relating to repeal of tax exemptions on income of U. S. citizens living in Canada, western Europe and Japan, as well as the proposal of gradual repeal of deferral on corporation income earned and left in these areas. His statement is rather timely and is indicative of the fact that our destiny as an American nation must be supported by all, economically and spiritually."

Continuing, he said, "I am glad to learn the President is not in sympathy with any privileged classes." He added he had learned from sources he refused to disclose that the Treasury Dept. is now making a survey of Swiss corporations which are caches for some of the pic personalities living abroad, and has dispatched special couriers for this purpose."

Aller, accompanied by Henry Kaiser, AFM general counsel, last week visited Treasury Dept. officials in Washington protesting film personalities making pix abroad "to avoid taxes and American labor standards."

Wild-West Censors

ommended for public exhibition but not prohibited from showing if proper precaution is taken to see that no minors are admitted to exhibit unless accompanied by a parent or guardian. It being the opinion of the board that such exhibit is obscene and generally offensive to public decency."

"E"—Banned from public showing in Abilene, "clearly obscene, offensive to public decency and to the terms of this ordinance."

In addition to plays, floorshows, vaudeville, operas, and musical comedies, the ordinance also gives the board vaguely worded power over books and magazines. A good deal of the ordinance, in fact, impresses N.Y. attorneys as being a classic example of contradictory and confusing statute-writing.

What, one attorney asks, is the difference between the "obscene" pic outlined in the "D" rating, and the "clearly obscene" pic in the "E" rating.

In addition, the ordinance says that it's unlawful to show on the same program with an approved exhibit "a second feature, preview, short subject or trailer or other presentation which if viewed alone would be objectionable" and could be classified as "C", "D" or "E" by the review board. Presumably, this would mean that "second features" would not have to be reviewed in advance along with so-called first features.

In the course of the Abilene hearings last week, Mrs. Tarpley charged that the ordinance's provision that exhibs submit film titles to the board 10 days before opening would probably mean that the board would classify films without seeing them, since Abilene exhibs seldom get pictures 10 days ahead of opening day.

Prem (For) Schary (Nay) in Taped Talk on 'Classification' of Pictures

We must classify our pictures, demands Otto Preminger. Certainly not, counters Dore Schary.

Battle of words between Preminger and Schary on the topical, controversial subject was taped in New York last Saturday (21) for presentation on the NBC-TV network next Saturday at 9:30 p.m. This new segment in "The Nation's Future" series was found by an advance observer to be illuminating, no more conclusive than most such gabfests, but still pitting against each other a couple of forceful, knowing cinematic practitioners capable of incisively ramming home a point without shouting and devoid of sarcasm.

John K. M. McCaffrey, in the role of moderator, provided the backdrop. He noted that cannibalism as in "Suddenly Last Summer" has been among the film themes introduced of late. Going hand in hand with this is the new city law in Abilene, Texas, providing for a classification law and imposing fines upon exhibitors and parents in cases where children are unabiding.

Preminger, whose pictures include the Production Code-nixed "Moon Is Blue," expressed himself as being "unconditionally and forever opposed to state censorship." He argued that film production should have the same rights as the press "but for these rights we must fight" and inherent in this fight is a sense of responsibility.

The producer reasons that the public should be informed as to what pictures are all about, such as the rape angles in his own "Anatomy of Murder."

Prem stresses that this information—this classification—must be given voluntarily by the filmmaker, "for otherwise it would be a violation of our own rights."

Can't Classify Taste

Schary's stance: "I don't believe in classification in films any more than in books, newspapers or television. There can be no classification of bad taste. A picture could carry a label it doesn't deserve. No one person should be given the privilege of saying what is acceptable."

Thus the demarcation line was drawn. Schary and Preminger aver they are opposed to outside censorship of any kind. Preminger contends that anyone offering a picture to the public ought to label said picture as being fit for certain age groups. Schary rebuts that such classification would be "merely a polite step toward censorship."

Preminger, when queried by McCaffrey as to exact classification he had in mind, explained that an adult rating should only mean parents would be apprised of a picture's content and should guide their children accordingly.

Point was offered that certain producers might billboard their product as "adult" simply because of commercial motives, this kind of rating being a boxoffice lure. Preminger contradicted this, saying "nobody makes money by selling French postcards."

No Denial

Schary attacked Preminger's bid for the right to classify because "I think you are trying to be all things to all men."

Preminger winked back: "That is possible."

Also in a light-hearted vein, the matter of "Bad Day at Black Rock" came up. "This was a bad picture," said Preminger, but I don't know who made it." Retorted Schary: "I did, and it got better notices than 'Joan'." (Preminger's "Joan of Arc" was a flop.)

Circuit operator Harry Brandt, who was among the innocent bystanders, was knifed because of certain films in theatres on Manhattan's 42d Street, where Brandt has several outlets. Exhibs sought to get back at Preminger with a crack about the latter's non-Code pix. Preminger responded that parents should see film before they permit their offspring to see them. Producer later said the film-maker should "warn the public" about a pic's subject matter, but should not enforce any rules.

Matter of classification as practiced in England was introduced and an explanation of how this works was asked of Taylor Mills, also in the audience. Mills' report was accepted by Preminger until he asked Mills' identity. Latter said he was with the Motion Picture Association. Hearing this, Preminger kidded, "Then I don't believe him."

Schary and Preminger were in agreement in the matter of film advertising. "Movie advertising is the most dishonest in the world," Preminger submitted.

The Code also was lashed into. Said Schary: "If there is going to be a Code, let there be a Code that works. Otherwise let's abandon it. Everybody will admit hypocrisy in abiding by the letter and not the spirit. Preminger commented that the Code "came by way of the Catholic church and Quigley," referring to tradepaper publisher Martin Quigley.

Prem's Future

idea of roadshowing latter hasn't been entirely discounted.

Screenplay for "Bunny" should be finished next week. Saul Bass, who's worked on several previous Preminger films, again has designed the logo (and will do the titles). Title of pic is embraced by a question mark which is completed by the figure of a smashed Raggedy Ann-type doll. Story, which incidentally is Preminger's first suspense yarn since "Laura" in '42, deals with the disappearance of a three-year-old tot, and all shooting (including interiors) is slated for New York, probably at the Production Centre plant.

Only other projects in sight are the filmization of two more novels —"Side of the Angels," from the Alexander Federov novel (for UA, and in color), and a Pierre Bouille tale, "Other Side of the Coin." As for the stage, no plans there, although Perminger's always open to an interesting property. (He's currently represented on Broadway as director of "Critic's Choice," which Warner Bros. has bought as a Bob Hope-starrer.)

Working through two distributors, he says, is practical for him (and presumably other indie producers) because it enables him to retain a sharper degree of independence and identity. He also makes the point that some pictures plainly are better suited to one company than another.

Festivals a 'Marketplace'

While he's keen on film festivals —as a "marketplace" for reaching opinion-makers (the press)—Preminger says he prefers to keep his pictures out of competition because of disparity in entered product. It just isn't fair, as he sees it, to pit a "big" picture against a shoestringer. Besides, and to reiterate the point, he's much less concerned with awards (he says) than the publicity concomitant with a fest invitation, and the chance to woo the scribes and spread the word globally.

Asked again re his position on classification, Preminger repeated that he opposes censorship in any form, but thinks the best way to head off bluenose encroachments is by self-regulation. He emphasizes parental responsibility, but asserts that the industry has to do its share by at least alerting the public to what it can expect from a film. He cited fact that in most instances, at least, theatres complied with the suggestion that Preminger's "Anatomy of a Murder" be recommended for adults only. He said the same caution was applied to his "Moon is Blue" (which played without a Code seal). In this case, he pointed out, families could easily have been misled by the "innocent" title.

From Cannes, Preminger goes to London where "Exodus" opens May 9, then to Paris where pic day-dates at two houses May 17. Next day it opens in Tel Aviv; and, contingent on future events, it's pencilled in for Algeria next November. Incidentally, all receipts in Israel will stay in that country as a gift to the Weitzman Institute —Preminger's expression of gratitude for the public and official assistance during the filming of "Exodus."

and Andrew Faulds and Edward Cast, as arms of the law, are nicely contrasted, with Griffith being particularly useful as a moody chicken-hearted little drunk. Glyn Houston, William Peacock, Joan Rice, Vanda Godsell and Bruce Beeby are others who contribute telling cameos.

"Payroll" is a conscientious crime yarn which, despite certain flaws and irregularities, keeps the cat-and-mouse atmosphere reliably alive. Rich.

They Were Ten

(Heym Hayu Assara)
(ISRAELI)

Earnest tale of Palestine pioneers. Effective, but limited prospects.

George Schwartz & Arthur Sachson release of Scopus oPductions film by Baruch Dienar. Features Ninette, Oded Teomi, Leo Filler, Yosef Safra, Yosef Zur, Gavriel Dagan, Yisrael Rubinshtein, Nissim Azikri, Amnon Kahanovitch, Yitchik Bareket, Yosef Bashi, Yehuda Gabai, Moshe Yaari, Mashe Kedem. Screenplay, Gavriel Dagan, Baruch Dienar, Menachem Shuval, based on story by B. Dienar. Directed by Baruch Dienar; camera, Lionel Banes; editor, Helea Cranston; music, Gari Bertini. Opened April 17, '61, at the Symphony Theatre, N.Y. Running time, 105 MINS.

A trickle of Jews from eastern Europe arrived in Palestine toward the close of the last century, there to claim freedom and a new life. What happens to a small colony of such pioneers forms the basis for the Israeli film "They Were Ten."

Yarn is an earnest account of frontier hardship, the desperate battle to keep the colony going and bring a desolate land to blossom. Film is competently, if not artfully, rendered, with a specialized theme and content that makes it seem headed for limited play in the United States. Special handling in Jewish population centres, however could yield good runs. Dialog is Hebrew (with some French), with excellent English subtitling.

Pic follows eight men and a woman (a baby comes later, making the tenth of the title) who establish themselves in the midst of a hostile land and hostile Arabs. The adversity of the situation leads to conflicts as nerves fray, and as the settlers stand up to both environment and the Arabs. Ultimately the Jews triumph, and have double cause for celebration because the married couple among them has produced a child. The mother, however, dies soon after of malaria. Her burial coincides with a drought-breaking rain—the symbolic death and regeneration.

Baruch Dienar, who did the original story and produced and directed the Scopus Production, has arranged the tale in rather pat and oversimplified fashion, avoiding exploration of the Arab-Jew antagonisms, and without plumbing the principal characters, settling instead for straight forward storytelling that at moments becomes a bit arch. But at the same time he has contrived a frequenly affecting account of faith and tenacity.

Acting is uneven, but generally effective. Technical credits are all good, with Gari Bertini's score making effective and charming use of some Yiddish-Hebraic folk themes. Pit.

Mexico Lindo y Querido

(Beautiful and Beloved Mexico)
(MEXICAN—COLOR)

Mexico City, April 18.

Peliculas Nacionales release of Cinematografica Latino Americana production. Stars Ana Bertha Lepe, Lola Beltran, Pedro Vargas, Evangelina Elizondo; features Ernestina Garfias, Raul Martinez. Directed by Julio Bracho. Screenplay, Alfonso Patino Gomez; camera, Rosalio Solano; music, Chucho Zarzoza. At Cine Orfeon, Mexico City. Running time, 90 MINS.

Plot of this color musical centers around a foreign femme who comes to visit gay Mexico as a prelude to marriage. She becomes so enamored of the land and her attentive Mexican guide that she forgets all about wedding bells and decides to remain in Mexico indefinitely.

There are plenty of ditties ranging from folklore to popular tunes of the day, interpreted by Lola Beltran and Pedro Vargas in Chucho Zazoza's arrangements which accentuate the animated Mexican music. Costumes and ballet numbers are pleasing. Soprano Ernestina Garfias contributes more classical arias. The principals go through the light story demands without difficulty.

Julio Bracho's direction is sure while cameraman Rosalio Solano handles the color camera adequately. Only downbeat note is perhaps some rigidity in the settings, giving the effect that the vehicle is being presented on a stage instead of the wider film medium. Outside of this, the pic is a fair sort of musical that will click here and in Latin American areas where Lola Beltran's and Pedro Vargas' names are widely known. Emil.

Vive Henri IV, Vive L'Amour

(Long Live Henry the Fourth, Long Live Love)
(FRENCH—COLOR—DY'SCOPE)

Paris, April 8.

Gaumont release of Hoche DA-MA production. With Francis Claude, Daniele Gaubert, Roger Hanin, Bernard Blier, Jean Sorel, Armand Mestral, Melina Mercouri, Nicole Courcel, Pierre Brasseur, Vittorio De Sica, Francis Blanche, Simone Renant, Danielle Darrieux. Directed by Claude Autant-Lara. Screenplay, Jean Aurenche, Henri Jeanson; camera (Eastmancolor), Jacques Natteau; editor, Madeleine Gug. At Ambassade-Gaumont, Paris. Running time, 120 MINS.

Henri IV	Francis Claude
Charlotte	Daniele Gaubert
Conde	Jean Sorel
Ravaillac	Roger Hanin
Bossompierre	Armand Mestral
Ambassador	Vittorio De Sica
Henriette	Danielle Darrieux
Madame Tremoille	Simone Renant
Montmorency	Pierre Brasseur
Sully	Bernard Blier
Jacqueline	Nicole Courcel
Prieur	Francis Blanche

Historical opus is played tongue-in-cheek as title infers. It covers the last year in the life of the 17th Century French King Henri IV who seemed more interested in women than any other aspect of ruling. The bedroom look has some risible moments and a zest of action plus fine production dress for probable good biz here. But it is somewhat too talky for anything but exploitation chances abroad.

Henri IV has a harridan wife but has managed to have a flock of children out of wedlock with his many favorites. He brings all the children up together. He falls for a 16-year-old at 56 and marries her to one of his illegitimate sons who professes no interest in women.

There are plenty of epigrams and a goat-like performance from Francis Claude, as the lecherous king, with some good bits etched by several guest star names. The young couple are stiffly played by Daniele Gaubert and Jean Sorel.

But director Claude Autant-Lara has given this eye-catching color and mounting, and played it like a royal boudoir comedy. Technical credits are fine. Mosk.

Jakobli und Meyeli

(Jakobli and Meyeli)
(SWISS)

Praesens-Film A.G. Zurich release of Neue Film A.G. (Franz Schnyder) production. Directed by Schnyder. Screenplay, Schnyder and Richard Schweizer; camera, Konstantin Tschet; music, Robert Blum. At Urban Theatre, Zurich. Running time, 104 MINS.

Anne Baebi Jowaeger	Margit Winter
Hansli	Ruedi Walter
Jakobli	Peter Brogle
Meyeli	Kathrin Schmid
Parson	Erwin Kohlund
Sophie	Annemarie Dueringer
Doctor	Peter Arens
Maedi	Margrit Rainer
Sami	Fred Tanner
Vehhansli	Max Haufler
Vicar	Franz Matter
Hiechler	Hans Gaugler
Midwife	Hedda Koppe
Maurer-Vreni	Anneliese Egger
Vicar Streng	Bernhard Enz
Court President	Sigfrit Steiner

The second part of a two-part filmization of 19th Century Swiss poet Jeremias Gotthelf's popular peasant novel, "Anne Baebi Jowaeger," is superior in every way to the first one which was released here five months ago with moderate success. Although the subject matter limits its international chances, it looms as an interesting, if specialized arty theatre entry because of the quality of its cinematic values.

In this novel, Gotthelf took an angry stand against quacks and [illegible] poisoning the lives of Swiss countryfolk in the last century and barring the way of scientific medicine. This is exemplified in the story of young newlyweds, Jakobli and Meyeli, who lose their baby, and the groom's domineering mother who, thereupon, secludes herself in isolation, neglecting the farm and causing the family's near-destruction.

Paralleling this central yarn is the story of a young country doctor who tries in vain to break through the barrier of stubbornness and mistrust of his countrymen and dies prematurely.

Direction by Franz Schnyder, who also produced and co-scripted, holds a good balance between the prevailing sombre mood and occasional comic relief. It's a cleancut, tasteful job which avoids lagging spots. An important asset is the topnotch lensing by Konstantin Tachet. Robert Blum's music deserves credit for its unobtrusiveness.

Performances are generally well above par, including some high- [illegible] notably by Margrit Winter, as the mother; Peter Brogle and Kathrin Schmid (Mr. & Mrs. in real life), as the young couple; Peter Arens, as the unfortunate physician and Margrit Rainer, cast as a venomous servant. The actors speak the German language and in Swiss dialect. Mezo.

Viva Jalisco Que Es Mi Tierra

(MEXICAN-COLOR)

Mexico City, April 18.

Peliculas Nacionales release of Producciones Pereda production. Stars Maria Antonieta Pons, Manuel Capetillo. Andrea Palma; features Ramon Pereda, Los Panchos, the Silva Brothers. Directed by Ramon Pereda. Screenplay, Ramon Pereda; camera, Agustin Jimenez; music, Manuel Esperon. At Mariscala Cine, Mexico City. Running time, 90 MINS.

A song-and-dance musical western, with the book revolving around an orphaned daughter of an entertainer (Maria Ponsl, who seeks to become a star, and the son of a breeder of bulls whose dream is to become a torero. Naturally, both are in love. Plot complications concern the attempt by kinfolk to break up the love affair.

Atmosphere is typically Mexican. The highlight is the town fair photographed expertly in color by veteran cameraman Agustin Jimenez, who has trained his lens on the various facets of hinterland folklore at fiesta time. When the pair of lovers get to the big city, there are night club sequences featuring such performers as the Five Latins, The Panchos, The Tex Mex Trio, the Los Mexicanos Trio, and the Four Silva Brothers singing popular numbers.

Manuel Capetillo, who does well as the young man with a dream of torero fame, actually was a bullfighter who almost lost his life some years back when he was gored in the ring. Maria Antonieta Pons lends grace and beauty as the stagestruck young girl.

Although this one certainly will not win any prize awards, it is still the sort of film fare, which, without being original in story, development or technique, still manages to turn out as a tasteful blend of life south of the border. Production shows considerable understanding and compassion for Mexico and Mexicans.

This one should do well in foreign markets because it does give a true picture of life in the provinces. As a western, it does have its "killers," but this is not so important. What the film turns out to be is a rather authentic interpretation of Jalisco gayety as well as the song, laughter and vivacity of Mexico. Emil.

Two Eyes, Twelve Hands

Film from India reviewed in VARIETY Nov. 19, '59, from the San Francicsco film fest, was described by Stef as a "somewhat naive folk-tale" focusing on the two eyes of an idealistic Indian jail official and the 12 hands of six murderers, latter portraying a sort of Greek chorus to the hopes of their jailer.

The jailer, seeking penological reforms, gets permission to rehabilitate the prisoners by letting them work a fallow farm. A villainous food broker, fearing the competition, seeks to wreck the plan. He burns their crops, then lets loose a herd of cattle on the farm. In process of saving his prisoners, the jailer is gored to death by the bellowing herd.

Stef said the pic "has humor, despite its macabre outcome," and offers some excellent performances. He called it "interesting," but limited for U.S. appeal.

Pic preems non-theatrically at Museum of Modern Art, N.Y., tomorrow (Thurs.). It was brought over by Coast importer Ram Bagai of Films of India, who was in Gotham at preview to dicker possible national distribution deal.

Follow a Star

This seventh film in Norman Wisdom's seven-year Rank Organization contract sticks largely to the "fun-and-sentiment formula at which Wisdom is adept and should prove a happy b.o. proposition," Rich reported in his VARIETY review from London Dec. 23, 1959. Pic, being released in the U.S. by Zenith International, opens at the Embassy, N.Y., April 25.

Story line may be "tiny," said Rich, but it gives Wisdom "the opportunity to project his likeable personality." Plot concerns a gullible little suit-presser, Wisdom, who is unknowingly hired to do the singing for a fading vocal star. "Film lacks wit, but has good spirits throughout." Giving valuable performances are Jerry Desmonde and Hattie Jacques. Direction by Robert Asher was called "brisk" and lensing by Jack Asher "neat."

Les Mains D'Orlac

(The Hands of Orlac)
(FRENCH-BRITISH)

Paris, April 25.

CFDC release of Sovic-Riviera International-Pendennis production. Stars Mel Ferrer, Lucile Saint-Simon, Dany Carrel; features Christopher Lee, Balpetre, Felix Aylmer, Mireille Perrey. Directed by Edmond-T. Greville. Screenplay, Greville from novel by Maurice Renard; camera, Jacques Lemare; editor, J. Ravel. At Biarritz, Paris. Running time 100 MINS.

Orlac	Mel Ferrer
Louise	Lucile Saint-Simon
Lila	Dany Carrel
Nero	Christopher Lee
Doctor	Balpetre
Uncle	Felix Aylmer
Landlady	Mireille Perrey

Even with the name of Mel Ferrer, this shapes mainly as a dualer. It is a horror-psycho drama that does not build up the required suspense and is fairly lame in the direction, thesp and interest departments.

Tale was made as a silent German pic in 1924, with Conrad Veidt. It was later remade by Metro as "Mad Love" for Peter Lorre's first Yank pic. Both of these had the feeling of hallucination and terror which is absent in this remake. Maybe scientific advances make this tale, of a pianist who has an accident and thinks his hands have been replaced by those of a murderer executed that day, somewhat old hat.

Instead of playing on the pianist's psychological problems of believing his hands are taking over and turning him into a would-be killer, it introduces a petty magician who finds out and preys on the pianist's penchant and problems. Mel Ferrer can not do much with this uneven role and others are able to do even less. Mounting is lacklustre and dialog listless. Technical credits are acceptable. Hence, this is strictly program fare. Mosk.

La Famille Fenouillard

(The Fenouillard Family)
(FRENCH)

Paris, April 18.

Gaumont release of Cinephonic-Chavane-Fabre-SNEG production. With Sophie Desmarets, Jean Richard, Annie Sinigalia, Marie-Josee Ruiz. Directed by Yves Robert. Screenplay, Jean Ferry, Robert from book by Christoph; camera, Andre Bac; editor, Marie-Josephe Yoyotte. At Boul. Mich, Paris. Running time, 80 MINS.

Mrs. Fenouillard	Sophie Desmarets
Mr. Fenouillard	Jean Richard
Older daughter	Annie Sinigalia
Younger daughter	Marie-Josee Ruiz

Based on a noted illustrated comic book of the turn-of-the-century, this film tries to emulate it by stylized sets, slightly speeded up movement and a general note of satirical fantasy with a big dose of slapstick. It has some clever moments but falls to sustain the humor and it becomes repetitious. This is mainly a local entry, with foreign chances dim.

A stuffy shopkeeping family takes off to see Paris from a small town in 1890 so that the father will develop some worldliness, and thus be able to run for mayor. But they get lost and end up on a ship and visit Brazil, get lost in the Antarctic, hit Japan and come back hereoes.

A slapstick cheese fight and some clever takeoffs on the chauvinistic closemindedness of the time get some laughs, but generally this is a series of revue sketches, and not all are successful.

Director Yves Robert has a flair for putting over a comic interlude but cannot extend it sufficiently enough to build and dominate the film. Actors fit in with the general conception. Technical credits are okay. But this is an extremely specialized entry at best on its attempt to bring back some of the tomfoolery of the silent comedies. Mosk.

Het Mes

(The Knife)
(DUTCH)

Amsterdam, April 18.

Nederlandse Filmproduction Maatschappij production. With Ellen Vogel, Paul Cammermans, Reitze van der Linden, Marie-Louise Videc, Mia Goossen, Hetty Beck, Elly van Stekelenburg, Cor Witschen, Henk Haselaar. Directed by Fons Rademakers; story and screenplay, Hugo Claus; camera, Eduard van der Enden; editor, Han Rust; music, Dan Jacobs. At City Theatre, Amsterdam. Running time, 90 MINS.

This is the story of 13-year-old boy, entering puberty, and jealousy of his mother who has taken a lover (tutor to her son) and friend of her late husband. "The Knife" looks spotty for the export market.

This is the second film produced by N.F.M., new outfit which wants to control continuous film production instead of a haphazard one as customary in Holland until now. The delicate subject has been treated with a mature outlook and is developed by director Fons Rademakers (this is his third pic) in a suitable poetic way.

Film misses, however, a tone of reality as characters and their inter-relation are badly drawn and never become quite real. Though one can see what the director meant this to be, he lacked the vision to make it either an arty item or a touching poetic story. Saal.

NATIONAL Screen SERVICE

A GOOD KIND OF PEACEFUL CO-EXISTENCE

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Hollywood's recent honoring, at age 88, of the great tribal patriarch of American films, Adolph Zukor, respotlighted the arresting historic fact that his first major venture was a foreign-made picture, the French "Queen Elizabeth" of 1912 with Sarah Bernhardt.

The moral may be borrowed for the present occasion. And yet it is not a case of foreign films "resuming" significance in America for foreign films have always infiltrated and fertilized the art in Hollywood, and the Americans in their theatres. Hollywood's debt to the imagination and talent of Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Russia and Sweden is never to be denied.

It is true that there are vividly fresh economic aspects now influencing the foreign-made film as regards the American market. One might indulge in the faceatious remark that today's tide was inherent in an action of the Dept. of Justice in 1950 following an earlier decision of the U. S. Supreme Court.

If divorcement of the Hollywood studios from their circuits had the effect of throwing every American film upon its own unsupported boxoffice merits, all were also then open to fair combat from overseas competitors. True, some years of education of American fans were first necessary. The American markets did not open magically to the showmen of London, Paris, Rome, etc.

Divorcement at first did not stagger the Hollywood producers half as much as did television. While groggily recovering equilibrium eight years ago the studios began to re-dedicate their policy away from the old "quantity" habit toward the new ideal of "quality." There was talk thereafter of "blockbusters," though not all bearing that label proved truly so. Enough to say that fewer and fewer Hollywood features left bigger and bigger gaps in the exhibition schedules of American theatres. All of which helped open the doors to foreign product as never previously.

Blockbusters From Hollywood Still Boxoffice Heart-Blood

In general such blockbusters as come to the screen remain American-made, and hurray for that fact. Hollywood has not disappeared, and will not. But it has already drastically altered character. It's ability to hold up America's end in the world markets is not doubted, though the rivalry tightens everywhere and U. S. percentage-of-rentals is down in a number of countries.

Meanwhile the American theatre operator faces a variety of fairly new vexations. He cannot fill his booking gaps with an endless array of U. S. re-issues, though they often do well. How is his theatre to be kept open while awaiting the promised fewer but bigger Hollywood releases which increasingly are a long time passing from premiere dates and special runs into general playoff? The logic of the foreign film presents itself.

Sheer economic necessity in recent years forced hundreds of U. S. film situations to a new sympathetic interest in imports. And so the revolution is on. Blame the Supreme Court, the Justice Dept., television, bowling alleys, too many babies, too many time-payments, or whatever: the U. S. market has changed mightily. It is now more fluid, showmen more open-minded, more self-admittedly needful of help. Into the vacuum the international film is moving.

U.S. Exhibitors Reluctant To Drop Dead, As Some Advised

U. S. theatre men have been told by Sam Goldwyn and others that there are too many of them. Only the other day Bill Orr of Warners, long the least communicative of American producing organizations, made a subtle point. His company would produce pictures for the public, not for exhibitors. A strong hint of changed status was implicit. The exhibitor is not the secure and courted figure he once was, though he might answer, and some have, that Warners is not what it once was either.

Challenging results flow from the so-called "art" theatres which were the home of the foreign film for a long time. The American major distributors have appreciated a good thing and have borrowed these situations for the careful upbuild of certain American product which might curl its toes but fast if slipped into a giant Capitol or Paramount. But as the art houses have become Americanized, one also observes an increasing number of European releases going into regular circuit playoff.

The oddity of the current global situation expresses itself in many ways and a careful reading of the special text in this edition will prove instructive. Note the bizarre experience of Filipino film importers who have found themselves out-bid in European pictures which later appear in Manila as "American" releases.

Yeasty Is the Word Fitting The Film World Today

"Coproduction" has blurred the old nationalistic distinctions. Moreover a great many American films are made nowadays in Britain, Italy, Spain, France, Greece, or wherever. Enough to say that the term "American" has already, to say the least, lost some of its original force. Not without some cause the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes in Hollywood is bothered by the trends.

To the extent that film market conditions are fluid and old rigid standards obsolete, the market is more internationalized and more free-trading. It can surely be sincerely argued that this is a good thing for the world and for peace. The international film industry, circa 1961, offers an impressive example of co-existence, not unworthy of the attention of statesmen. Nothing is proved "definitively" but it is nonetheless a rather sanguine condition. Meantime many of the blocked current gluts of recent years no longer beset the American Motion Picture Export Assn.

Not that it has been easy for overseas product to break into the American exhibition market. Some stupendous European miscalculations were made along the way. Yet the U. S. is clearly enormously valuable at present to the British, the Italians, the French, the Swedes, the Mexicans. The once-cinematically-vital Germans have moved with perhaps undue caution as to the States and the Russians were handicapped until the last two years by their films being so often heavy with Stalinistic hampaw propaganda.

During the 1950s there was much palaver that only Alec Guinness counted for the British in the States. That sort of statement is now seldom heard. So, too, as regards the once hotly-defended prairie proverb that midwesterners would not tolerate English as the English speak it on their soundtracks. They seem more used to the "mother" tongue now!

No doubt most readers of this special edition will be surprised that the greatest number of feature films entering the U. S. last year, per the N. Y. State Licensing Board, came from, respectively, Hongkong (126) and Mexico (90). A polyglot nation, the U. S. has ready-made markets for all sorts of nationalistic product, including five from Egypt, two each from Cuba and Brazil. Mexico's preponderance in the U. S. over Spanish-speaking Argentina and Spain itself is of interest. Of the 120 features made in the Philippines not one was offered in New York for the large Spanish-speaking market, but the local Filipino dialect may partly explain that.

Unique Status of Bronston, Producer-in-Foreign Land

Not the least wonder-evoking development in recent international filming is the unique example of the American, Samuel Bronston, operating in Madrid for the past several years. He will hit the U.S and world markets this coming autumn with two, not one, epics, the Biblical "King of Kings" and the Spanish-monument-come-alive, "El Cid." A combination of George Washington and a male Joan of Arc, the Cid figure is believed sure fire for the Latin boxoffices especially, while promising much everywhere.

The dynamic national industries of the present time would surely include, after Hollywood itself, France, Italy, Britain, Germany, Russia with a special salute to the remarkable Ingemar Bergmann of Sweden. There is a distinct up-curve of filming activity in Spain, Denmark, Czechoslavakia, Canada, Switzerland, Japan. Poverty and facilities lack naturally countries like Pakistan. Meanwhile co-production scatters talent of all kinds in every direction and we percieve the emergence of new kinds of careers—say, the multi-lingual associate producer or assistant director, the location publicist servicing periodicals of many lands with differing publicity procedures.

Mention ought to be made of a threat to foreign-made pictures in America. There is something of a "family rebellion" against plots premised on "sick sex" characters. Even Hollywooders exist who are capable of advocating measures against overseas product on the spacious grounds of moral menace from alien areas, ignoring conveniently Hollywood's own considerable contribution to weirdie heroics and sadism. If there is a good deal of confusion about what's immoral among America's grassroot citizenry—sheriffs keep raiding nudist films thinking they are striking at deviation—there is nonetheless a good deal of reality to the outcry against certain filmic tales of decadence. European showmen ought to keep themselves realistically informed of this danger.

Meanwhile, bonjour, buenos dios, guten tag, and how have you been since the last VARIETY International Edition?

Chinese Product (From Hong Kong) Big U. S. Playoff

Approximately 220 Chinese language films are brought into the U. S. every year to service the three theatres in N. Y. and four in California which are devoted exclusively to this product, according to the estimate of Wing Liang, head of Sun Sing Chinese Theatre Inc. of New York. Sun Sing operates one house in N. Y. and another in California.

Of the 220 Chinese films imported annually, approximately 210 come from Hong Kong, with the remainder from Formosa. Because the field is such a limited one, most of the exhibs act as their own importers, playing the pix first in their own house and then selling them to their competitors.

In the 12 months ended March 31, 1961, the New York State film licensing board passed 126 Chinese pix for showing in N. Y., an increase of 10 over the previous 12-month period.

NON-AMERICAN AMERICAN FILMS

Frankfurt.

A surprising new trend for American motion picture companies doing business in Germany to offer more and more non-U.S. films has just been revealed in a study of the product here.

First analysis of the 1960-61 playing season reveals that 22% of the films offered by the seven U. S. companies in Germany were other than American films. This is an increase over the 20% of the foreign products that the U. S. majors sold in Germany in the 1959-60 season.

Of the seven firms, 181 releases were brought out, of which 144 were American and 37 foreign. Twentieth Century-Fox had two non-American products, Columbia had 10, Metro 12, Paramount three, United Artists eight and Warner Brothers two. Universal rated as the sole American company with an exclusively American output in Germany.

Six American companies—Fox, Metro, Paramount, United Artists, Universal and Warners—offered only five non-American films during the 1956-57 season, Metro showed exclusively American films, but Columbia even at that period offered an international program.

One explanation of the trend to offering more foreign products is that the American companies are trying to insure around-the-world business and can do so better by offering a varied slate.

Trend, of course, is also to fewer and more diversified films. In the first 10 months of 1960 there were 35 films less imported by the American companies into Germany than in the same period of the previous year, and in the 1959 calendar year the U. S. companies brought in 42 less films than in the 1958 calendar year.

Those Who 'Share' When Theatrical Pix Go to TV

Industry sources have offered a breakdown on how a U.S. producer, who sells his product to television syndication must share the proceeds, after taking into consideration the 40% of gross which is figured as the distributor's cut. It goes like this:

Actors—6%, paid to individual actors pro rata through the Actors Guild.

Directors—2%, to the Directors Guild pension plan.

Writers—2%, paid to individual writers pro rata through the Writers Guild.

Musicians—12½%, to individual musicians pro rata through the American Federation of Musicians.

Craft Unions (IATSE — 9%, with three-quarters going to the industry pension fund and the balance to the industry health and welfare fund.

In the case of an outright sale to tv, an arbitrary 10% is taken as commission and expense, rather than the 40% for distribution.

No Video, Israeli Mad for Pictures

Tel Aviv.

Attendance in Israel is percentually among the highest in the world: in a country of somewhat more than 2,000,000 inhabitants, close to 40 million tickets were sold in year 1960. The number of theatres operating is 220, with 132,000 seats, an increase of 25% in three years. This is explained by the fact that Israel is probably the only, in the Western sense, civilized country without television.

Import data shows a trend from U.S.-made, toward European-made product. Only a few years ago, the overwhelming majority of the pictures shown in Israel were made in Hollywood. Now the European pix all nations put together, have a slight lead now. There are about 500 features unreeled. If the countries are singled out, the U.S. is still very much on the top.

ALL-INDIA MARATHON

Place 5½-Hour Trilogy In 10 U. S. Spots

Indie importer Ed Harrison has so far racked up almost 10 dates with his precedent-setting 5½-hour package of Satyajit Ray's trilogy, "Panthar Panchali," "Aparajito" and "The World of Apu." Most of the dates have been on the West Coast where the Indian pictures already have been played off individually. In San Francisco the trilogy enjoyed a nine-week run.

Harrison will await booking the package in New York until after "Apu" finishes its art circuit break. Some exhibs have eshewed the highly exploitable 5½-hour show to play the pictures separately but in immediately successive dates.

A possibility for the Harrison release sked next year is Satyajit Ray's newest feature which has just been completed. It's "Teen Kanya," based on a group of stories by Indian writer Rabindranath Tagore.

India's Fest Need: Spending Money

By AUSTEN NAZARETH

New Delhi.

Indian Motion Picture Producers Assn., which complains that delegations from this country at international film festivals put up a "sorry show" because of low funds, has asked the Indian Government to foot the bill in future.

Trade body complains that inadequate cash hamstrings on-the-spot publicity at the fests—a very necessary selling ingredient. The association has asked the larger Film Federation of India to take the matter up with the Government. Action is a response to frequent criticisms by filmmakers returning from foreign fests. Cost of print, excise duty, freight and insurance charges, publicity and entertainment costs are listed by IMPAA as expenses involved.

Stars As 'Friends'

Damascus, Syria.

As further evidence of the impact Hollywood stars have upon faraway film fans: when Clark Gable died late in 1960 the sense of bereavement here was something Americans would hardly credit.

By phone and in person the local VARIETY rep, Roger Bower, received 30 "condolences" though Bower had only been introduced, once, to Gable.

Frugal Producers

Vienna.

Frugality of the Austrian producer being proverbial the following incident is illustrative, a director recently wanting two boys to accompany a priest in a scene in a church.

Said the producer: "I have no money for mob scenes!"

[illegible] appeared the producer.

Rise of Cheap 'Significant' U.S. Films

By GIDEON BACHMANN
(President, American Federation of Film Societies)

While attention has been upon the "blockbuster" of asserted multi-million dollar cost in Hollywood, and overseas, there has simultaneously been developing in the United States a generation of newcomers who have been turning out inexpensive "significant" films about which VARIETY and other journals, have already reported. From Europe has meantime come recognition of this "tentative renaissance of filmmaking in the country of its origin." (Nor should it be forgotten that the so-called "New Wave" in France was inspired by an American.)

The new-type of films with which this article is concerned were made, all of them, by non-name directors. These may be mentioned;

"Shadows," $40.000.
"Private Property," $60.000.
"The Savage Eye," $65,000.
"The Shoes," $50.000.
"Pull My Daisy," $20,000
"The Connection," $167,000.
"Guns of the Trees." $10.000.
"The Sun of Jesus," $23.000.
"Satan in High Heels." $90.000.
"Jazz on a Summer's Day" $210,000.

(To which may be added, all clearly under $100.000 budget each, "On the Bowery," "Weddings and Babies." "Don Peyote," "Killing Time" and "Come Back, Africa.")

Some comments on the foregoing surge of fresh viewpoint and talent offers a challenge to many of the enshrined convictions held in the Hollywood studios today.

Put it this way: Over the years, there have become established in the film industry certain traditions, which by virtue of sheer age have turned into axioms. The simplest of these are (1) it takes a lot of money to make films; (2) it takes a pre-sold property to sell films, either star-wise or story-wise; (3) it takes professionalism of long standing to turn out marketable product; (4) you have to give the public what it wants; (5) you must protect your investment by a network of safeguards, preferably by using ideas that have worked before; and (6) it takes a long and tortuous time to "break into films." There are others—for the moment these will suffice.

The new "significant" American films are breaking most of the established axioms. They do not deal in budgets of such properties as to constitute creative hazards. They do not deal in ideas or actors who in themselves would guarantee boxoffice. They are made by people often no closer to production techniques than a 16m camera. They do not set out to "entertain." And they are not conservative in approach to any of the established film-maker-to-audience routes.

And despite these revolutionary departures, these films sell, garner good notices, win awards, and stand up to artistic standards. Clearly then, we are not dealing with a temporary or partial sidestream, but with a major change in the entire process of making and exhibiting motion pictures.

It is absolutely essential that the industry be aware of what is happening, why it is happening, and how it is happening, in order to be able to adjust itself to the new situation. It is quite conceivable—although not proven—that in this adjustment may lie the future of American films and the future of the men who make them.

Ideological and Sociological Backgrounds

Contrary to what is generally assumed, war does not unleash previously shackled creative forces. The generation which survives it generally seeks to rebuild that which has been lost, rather than establish new worlds. It does, however, create upheavals in physical existence, which in turn level established hierarchies in the arts. It is from this equalization and the stimulus it provides the immediate post-war creative movements spring, and Italian neo-realism or French existentialism are therefore the channeling of defeatist-conservative tendencies into creative channels, rather than ground-breaking in themselves. It takes about 10 to 12 years for a post-war generation to give way to a new wave of talents, and thus nothing exciting has been happening in films between 1939 and 1957.

Today we are faced, in the new significant film makers, with people whose roots are culturally post-war. They are not concerned with the past (read: guilt) or with future (read: fear), but with present (read: life). They are able to question freely, and to make their own truce with their own time. For the first time we find that movements exist in all the arts which are truly new, truly searching, truly concerned with reality and the essence of existence. Objectivism in literature, expressionism in painting, "alienation" in theatre—all point towards a coherent stylistic surge in the 60s. No wonder that the cinema follows.

Must We Worry About Things Like That?

Indeed, yes. One of the most important aspects of the change that is occurring in all strata of cultural life is that audiences tend towards the need to be involved, to be part of what is occurring, rather than simply be "shown."

It is simply no longer enough to distract, to take the spectator "away from his daily worries," to force him to negate all that which is brewing in him in favor of a dull insipid escapism. The tables have turned: to "give the audience what it wants" may very well mean to give them something they don't know they want at all, but which meets their true direction and wishes in a realistic manner. Therefore film makers must be aware of cultural trends; they must be sophisticated in relating their product to their viewers' intellectual needs; they must create within the current of the times, within the needs and demands of an epoch bursting out of a two-decade creative void. In short, they must be "with it." The new significant American film makers are.

One of the commonest reactions one encounters in discussing the new significant films is "I have never heard of this title." In the reluctance to accept them as fact simply because their circulation to date is limited lies buried part of the most deep-rooted problem of adjustment. It is true that many of these films have had only limited circulation to date. Many of the ones mentioned at the head of this article have not even been released yet at the time of this writing. Nevertheless they are tremendously important—and experience of the saddest nature has shown again and again that to wait is to lose. Despite their nascent state, these films represent the American ripple in a world-wide cultural development, and as such they must be heard.

The films of which we speak deal thematically with everyday people in everyday situations, heightened perhaps by abstraction and stylization, but essentially as true to life as cameras can convey. In story-construction they have left far behind the theatrical derivation resulting in the tension-climax-resolution type of plot. Rather, they pose problems, and offer no solutions except those the viewer can think of himself. Most of them deal with young people, almost invariably in situations of adjustment (relatively speaking) to a world they did not make. Some, like, "Private Property," exploit contemporary life cunningly for effect, thus falling between the chairs and cheating themselves. Others tackle truth head-on, finding it often changing under their very hands in the film making process itself and adjusting to this in the production. Not all are successful, often a good intention is more evident than ability, as for example in "The Savage Eye." There are no historical spectacles among them (although this is not to imply that historical subject matter could not lend itself to "significant" film making, as has been proven often), no subjects that are not in some way derived from life.

"Shadows," one of the best ones so far, deals with two Negro brothers and their sister, and their relation to the jazz night scene of contemporary New York. We follow them for a few days—a love affair, a fight, much wandering in the streets—vignettes of life seen with a sensitive, selective camera eye, no photographic tricks, no studio shots, not a fake note in the film.

"The Connection," soon to be released and undoubtedly the most significant American film to date (certainly the most unique, creative American film work since "Citizen Kane"), deals with dope addicts in a New York loft—a few hours on a weekday afternoon, the waiting for the man who brings the heroin, its administration, the void that follows. No climax, no resolution.

"Jazz on a Summer's Day," related mostly in style, reports on the Newport Jazz Festival—"reports," that is, in that lost sense of the word which implies the creating of a unity between the shown and the person seeing.

"Weddings and Babies," more traditionally "dramatic" inasmuch as a story line is drawn and resolved, deals with a photographer and the girl he lives with, their daily life, their dreams, the texture of their existence.

"Pull My Daisy" concerns that sterile offshoot of the contemporary creative surge which has been termed "beat." It is an objectivist film, an anti-film in the sense of being non-Freudian, an afternoon in a railroad brakeman's home. Poets, domesticity, words related to life without the intervention of the mind, beer, cockroaches, jazz.

Clearly, the subject matter of these significant films, as well as the manner in which it is approached, differ radically from the concept of "popular entertainment." This is a fact which must be accepted a priori: there is no possibility whatsoever of working on material which will be partially new and partially traditional. The result of such stylistic compromise can only taint the product to the extent where neither the old-style moviegoers nor the new sophisticated audience will go to see it. It is a difficult nut to swallow for anyone used to standards that seem to have worked, in some measure at least, for close to sixty years. But consider these facts:

Who Makes These Films?

"My Daisy" and "The Sin of Jesus" were made by Robert Frank, the photographer, the first with the aid of Alfred Leslie, the painter. "Conncetion" was made by Shirley Clarke, formerly a documentarist, based on a play by Jack Gelber. "Jazz on a Summer's Day" was made by Bert Stern, another photographer. "Shadows" is the work of John Cassavetes, the actor. "Guns of the Trees" is by Jonas Mekas, a film critic. "Satan," "Peyote," "Killing Time." "Shoes" and "Property" are the first feature films, respectively, of Jerald Intrator (short film producer), Harold Humes (novelist), Richard Hilliard (short film producer). Ernest Pintoff (cartoon film maker) and Leslie Stevens (theatrical writer-producer). "On the Bowery" and "Come Back, Africa" were made by independent film maker Lionel Rogosin. "The Savage Eye" by Sidney ("The Quiet One") Meyers, and "Crime and Punishment, USA"—the only one among these films which has seen wide general distribution—by the Sanders Brothers, who previously won an academy award for their theatrical short, "A Time Out of War."

Who are these people? Are there any traits they share? Do they constitute a "school" of film making, or possibly an American "New Wave?" I have talked to all of them, and while they do share certain basic ideas, their similarities are mainly on the level of a common background in a common society, rather than on a personal level. They do, however, share certain attitudes toward film making, attitudes which should be listened to, as they may well constitute the future production criteria. Some of these can be formalized as follows:

A. They believe in film as a form of personal expression.

Similar to workers in other arts, they consider film as individual creative work. In the majority of cases they feel it's a director's medium, certainly that the director is the one most important central influence. Some will go as far as saying that, sure it's a group effort, being, after all, basically a technical craft, which cannot be mastered by one man alone, but they will nevertheless consider the director the creator. In fact, all these films are known as the work of individuals. They reject the interference of producers and "front offices" in deciding what is to be put on their screens, insisting instead that creative freedom be total, and willing to accept the responsibility that goes with this freedom. They further believe that the low budget makes this creative freedom possible, and thus it constitutes not a limitation but an essential creative element.

B. They are interested in making films first, money second.

The majority of these film makers would be making films whether they were making money at it or not. None is oblivious to the concern for financial rationality, but their prime aim is doing what they know to do best and love most, and this attitude cannot help but show up in the passion their films engender in audiences. They have reversed the basic structure of the industry for their films, by having first decided to make films, and then seeking methods to bring their aims about, rather than attempting to make a pile and choosing film making as a method for it. Thus, distribution and exploitation for them primarily are methods for continuation of work, roads to get the financing for their next film, in many cases long planned and scripted before the first is finished. In this way they can remain relatively aloof from the commercial aspects, which enables them to devote themselves almost wholly to their creative work. On the other hand, their maturity of approach is seen in the fact that they are aware of distribution problems and have begun to form units to cope with them.

C. They are involved people.

In many cases they have tried other media first, such as writing or painting, or at least that aspect of the visual-technical arts which can traditionally be handled by an individual: still photography. But they have gravitated to films because it seemed to them to be the technical monumentality of it deter them. They are involved in the general stream of contemporary culture, and for them film is a vehicle, not an aim in itself.

D. They have a rational approach to the film making process.

There have always been people who have felt as passionately about film as the new significant film makers, but these have always been offshoots, tangential artists, avant-gardists in the classic sense, revolutionists who never overthrew any system. Today, a new rationality is pervading the ranks of these men, an approach which allows them to tackle technical problems head on, and to cope with complicated financing and distribution systems in a sensible manner. Much groundwork has been done for them, of course, by the emergence of the independent producer in the industry, but they have learned that lesson and improved upon it by bending rules to fit their needs. Thus for the first time art makes sense in pictures.

How Are These Films Made?

A prime development is constituted by the fact that creative spirits are no longer awed by the difficulty of "getting in"; in fact, the limitations imposed by the problems of "making it" often serve as prods upon which much inventiveness hangs. It is not "fun," they say, to make a film for a million dollars, you can only enjoy working with the type of people you get on a $20,000 production. Development in technique, portability of modern equipment, improvisational methods employed for maximum realism the very spirit that surrounds a work done for its own sake—all these factors alleviate, but do not eliminate, the basic needs: money, people, cooperation, facilities, laboratories, distribution, etc. While it has become infinitely easier to make films, it is not child's play yet. And it is important to analyze the methods employed by significant film men and to draw inferences from these methods for the future of the industry.

A. Financing.

The traditional method for raising money for a film is, of course, through a distributor and its bankers. The advantages are obvious: the money is raised in a single lump, a distribution deal is part of the contract, and (if that's what you are looking for) top properties are more readily available. However, a statement prepared by a group of young film makers recently, lists these disadvantages: distributors are tradition-bound and loathe to experiment, they are star-conscious, they want script approval, they are likely to demand a crew of their choosing, or that the film be shot in their studio, they are likely to ask for the posting of a completion bond and will normally wish to co-sign checks. Most of these strictures, of course are diametrically opposed to the exact thing the new people are trying to do. New methods have therefore had to be found for financing these films.

Willing To Cooperate

Various commercial interests within the industry, especially on the east coast, have shown an amazing readiness to cooperate with the new significant film makers. Whether this is through an understanding of the wider meaning of their work or simply because of shrewd appraisal, remains to be seen. Certainly some immediate reasons for this cooperation are obvious: laboratories on the east coast, set to handle large tv orders, are seeking work now that much of tv production has moved out to the Coast, and are therefore ready not only to defer charges for lab work until returns come in, but in some cases are even willing to utilize their own financial reserves to assist in the raising of second money for productions. The same thing applies to the rental of equipment, although here the supply has not outgrown the demand and it is harder to obtain assistance. In obtaining film stock, it is still necessary to pay cash, for example. Cash is also demanded by sound studios, negative editors, sound mixers, and technical union crews, while actors can sometimes be obtained on a profit-share basis. Screen Actors Guild agreed to let actors work on such productions as long as they will eventually be paid SAG minimums. IATSE is the most uncooperative element. The organizing talent, of course, may or may not choose to be paid salaries, or may decide to function as director-producers and defer monies accruing to them until they are readily available.

B. Syndication approach to financing.

By far the most exciting departure, however, is the syndication approach to financing, a method derived from theatrical practice whereby the production budget is raised by selling shares in the film to one or more investors. This offers some major advantages to the new film makers: (1) the producer is completely free from artistic control on the part of the money interests, (2) he need not put up completion bond (and in fact is not legally bound to finish the film), and (3) he can approach many small investors and raise his money more readily.

In a guide book for independent investors soon to be published by a group calling itself the "New American Cinema," Lewis Allen, producer of "The Connection"

ROSTER OF FRENCH FEATURES

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris.

Ticket sales are off throughout France and production costs are up. Notwithstanding, the number, variety and imaginative quality of French feature films continues with beaucoup de oomph. Costume swashbuckling is staging something of a comeback. S-e-x is not coming back, since it never went away. Here is a rundown of new product, as known at this writing:

"Adieu Philippine" (So Long Philippine) (Discifilms). A "first film" of Jacques Rozier. Concerns two young girls fighting over a man. Breezy techniques and flair may make this an offbeat exploiter.

"L'Affaire D'Une Nuit" (One Night Affair) (Pathe). Wry tale of adultery with some exploitation handles, but being somewhat unsavory outlook is limited.

"Amant De Cinq Jours" (Five Day Lover) (Cinedis). Comedy of manners about a straying wife. It has some bounce and insight. Could be an arty bet.

"Amours De Paris" (Paris Loves) (Pathe). Situation comedy that lacks true wit and invention but does have some okay situations.

"L'Annee Derniere a Marienbad" (Last Year In Marienbad) (Cocinor). Alain Resnais who made "Hiroshima Mon Amour" responsible. Poetic, slow love story bathed in interior thoughts and monologs. Primarily an arty entry.

"Arretez Les Tambours" (Stop the Drums) (Leitienne). Resistance tale of WWII with some good action but lacking the insight for more than ordinary chances.

"Bois Des Amants" (Lovers Woods) (Cocinor). German-French love during war. Only its theme, flat and colorless in characterization.

"Reveille Toi Cherie" (Wake Up Honey) (CFDC). Comedy about a near-miss in adultery. Cheerfully played and done.

"Boulevard" (Pathe). Young boy's fugue which seems somewhat sentimental and uses the boy of "The 400 Blows." Limited chances.

"Bride Sur La Cou" (UA). Brigitte Bardot comedy which 20th-Fox has for the U.S. as "Only For You." Play-off chances due to B.B.

"Caid" (Boss) (Prodis). Fair Fernandel entry in which he is a professor mistaken for a crook.

"Candide" (Pathe). Updating of Voltaire's book to modern times. Taking potshots at contemporary pettiness from the army to bigots. Somewhat revue-like. Still to get an export visa.

"Capitaine Fracasse" (Unidex). Okay costumer.

"Capitan" (The Yokel) (Pathe). Diverting swashbuckler that could be an okay second feature entry in States.

"Ce Soir Ou Jamais" (Tonight or Never) (Rivers). How a couple almost breaks up over a legit show they are working on but manage to stay united. Slim and mainly for distaff appeal.

"Chien De Pique" (Jack of Spades) (Cocinor). A French western with Yank actor Eddie Constantine.

"Chronique D'Ete" (Summer Chronicle) (Argos). Interview with a group of people on how they live. Primarily for special situations.

"Cocagne" (SNC). Fernandel again. Bucolic bit that does not have the flair or bite.

"Coeur Battant" (Beating Heart) (Cocinor). Suave love story that is too precious for anything but specialized chances.

"Cresus" (Gaumont). Pleasant parable with Fernandel. Enough earthiness for arty bookings.

"Croix Et La Banniere" (Cross and Banner). A "first" by newcomer Philippe Ducrest on how a coincidence tries a couple. It is competent. Chancey abroad.

"Les Distractions" (CFDC). Familiar tale of a young man who comes of social age but somewhat too one-dimensional.

"Enclos" (Enclosure) (Clavis). Concentration camp. Downbeat.

"Famille Fenouillard" (Fenouillard Family) (Gaumont). Fantasy about a family's adventures in world travels. Okay programmer.

"Fete Espagnol" (Spanish Holiday) (Felix). Actioner about the Spanish Revolution with support release abroad quite possible since it is neatly done.

"Fille Aux Yeux D'Or" (Girl With the Golden Eyes) (WB). Updating of a Balzac novel about a free-living girl. Solid exploitation values on its treatment and thesping.

"Fortunat" (Cinedis). Soapy tale of the love of a yokel for an elegant society woman when thrown together by the war.

"La Francaise Et L'Amour" (The French Woman and Love) (Unidex). Sketch pic about the various phases of a woman's love life. Exploitable title and material.

"Le Gigolo" (Pathe). Oldfashioned tale of how a young gigolo gets his comeuppance. Mainly exploitation.

"Godeleureux" (Wise Guys) (Cocinor). Problems of love in a youthful milieu cunningly made by Claude Chabrol.

"Gout De La Violence" (Taste of Violence) (Gaumont). South American revolutionaries. Okay actioner but does not live up to Yank counterpart qualities.

"Grandes Personnes" (Adults) (Rivers). Slickly told tale of an American girl's first love among the chic set of Paris. Nets flat in passion or compassion.

"Lola" (Unidex). B-girl who loves life while others around her in a dreary town do not. Uneven, this still has a freshness and keeness in observation to make Jacques Demy's first pic an art possibility.

"Les Mains D'Orlac" (Orlac's Hands) (CFDC). Remake of a German horror pic about a pair of murderous hands sewn on a pianist who loses his in an accident. Mel Ferrer name to help.

"Les Mauvais Coups" (The Hard Knocks) (20th-Fox). Incisive tale of a couple breaking up. Oscar-copping Simone Signoret to help in U.S. art runs.

"Moderato Cantabile" (Paramount). Literary tale of a country matron dreaming of love and almost finding murder instead.

"Mort De Belle" (Death of Beauty) (Lux). Sleek murder story with plausible insights into its sexual motivations. General chances offshore.

"Morte Saisons Des Amours" (Dead Season of Loves) (Cocinor). Talky. Study of fading loves of two couples and their attempts to save them.

"Les Nymphettes" (Thanos). Main appeal in title because of Vladimir Nabokov's book "Lolita." Otherwise it is a lagging teenage love drama.

"Passage Du Rhin" (Rhine Crossing) (CFDC). Venice Fest '60 prizewinner. Two ex-prisoners of war try to solve their post-war problems, one by going back to Germany, another by staying in France. Somewhat rambling and with a predominantly "good German" theme.

"Pave De Paris" (Paris Pavements) (Discifilm). Young girl gone bad and redeemed.

"Peau Et Os" (Skin and Bones) (Pathe). Another first pic. How some fellow prisoners first mistreat and then help a new prisoner who is felt to be innocent.

"Petit Soldat" (Little Soldier) (Beauregarde). Deserter used by French ultra groups and Algerian rebels. Taut thriller with art possibilities but still has no export or local visa due to the theme. Might get it when the Algerian crisis is finally solved.

"Plein Feux Sur Les Assassins" (Potshots at Killers) (MGM). A taut tale of ghosts and killers with playoff chances.

"Pont Vers Le Soleil" (Bridge to the Sun) (MGM). Carroll Baker and a good story about an American girl married to a Japanese diplomat during the last war. Regular Yank distrib in store for this one.

"Le President" (UFA). Jean Gabin starrer. Retired great diplomat whose threatened revenge on an old friend who betrayed him is given up when he realizes time has passed heavy by. An art bet.

"Princesse De Cleves" (Cinedis). Austere 16th century French court life and a tragic love affair.

"La Proie Pour L'Ombre" (Prey for the Shadows) (Cocinor). Sophisticated well made and acted tale of a woman seeking independence who loses husband and lover in the attempt. Superior distaff entry.

"Qui Est Vous M. Sorge? (Who Are You Mr. Sorge) (Cinedis). Good spy yarn about the Russian who worked thru the German Japanese Embassy during the last war. Could get a wide playoff.

"La Recreation" (Columbia). Engaging story of an American girl's initiation into life by a Frenchman. Has Jean Seberg and a fine flair for arties.

"Saint Tropez Blues" (Cocinor). Young love in this brightly amoral resort on the Mediterranean. The "New Wave" threats free love with a more situation comedy air and it could be an okay item overseas.

"Terrain Vague" (Waste-Land) (Cinedis). Stilted story of juve delinquents set straight by tragedy.

"Une Aussi Longue Absence" (Such a Long Absence) (Procinex) is a first pic by pic editor Henri Colpi and has insight into character and a fine dramatic feeling in a tale of an amnesiac who is claimed as a long lost husband. Art possibilities definitely.

"Un Couple" (Discfilms). Mixes satire and a look at a look at a young couple disunited by the loss of sensual interest in each other. Exploitation chances are in store but hybrid qualities limit it.

"Un, Deux, Trois, Quatre" (One, Two, Three, Four) (Doper). 70m color dance opus with four Roland Petit Ballets and Cyd Charisse, Moira Shearer and Zizi Jeanmaire. Has the flair for world market.

"Une Femme Est Une Femme" (A Woman Is a Woman) (UFA). Deft look at a woman's attempts to get her feckless lover to marry her and have children expertly directed by "new waver" Jean-Luc Godard. Art chances.

"Une Soir Sur La Plage" (One Evening on the Beach) (Cocinor). Comedy-drama about a novelist who walks into murder and love in a supposed writing hideaway. Art possibilities.

"Un Taxi Pour Tobrouk" (Taxi For Tobruk) (Gaumont). Four Frenchmen and a captured German brought together in a flight across the African desert during the last war. Adroitly done and acted.

"Vacances En Enfer" (Vacation in Hell) (WB). Actioner about the last war.

"La Verite" (The Truth) (Col). H. G. Clouzot's tale of an amoral girl, played by Brigitte Bardot, led to murder by love. BB acts well and this is solidly carpentered and probable good exploitation art and playoff offering.

"Vive Henry IV, Vive L'Amour" (Gaumont). The gamy life of the French. Okay exploitable handles and production values.

Zazie Dans Le Metro" (Zazie In the Subway) (Pathe). Louis Malle's clever intellecutalized slapstick comedy.

"Les Laches Vivent D'Espoir" (Cowards Live on Love) (Felix). An exploitable item about the love affair of a Negro and a white girl. But overemphasis spoils it. It has Yank actor Gordon Heath.

A Country of Durable Stars

Rundown of France's Screen Names — Rise Of Montand — Survival of Jean Seberg

Paris.

France is traditionally a country of durable stars. One has but to recall the long careers of Bernhardt, Mistinguett, Chevalier and the stalwarts of the Comedie Francaise, et al. There is, of course, an infiltration of new talents, a few owing much to the now-insignificant "New Wave."

In 1960 Simone Signoret made her first film in France itself in some years, "The Hard Knocks." The American girl from Iowa, Jean Seberg, after getting her bangs singed in Otto Preminger's flop American film, "St. Joan," has survived to become something of a pet in the Paris of "Breathless," "La Recreation" and "The Adults." That she has a special appeal to special strata of French has already inspired learned essays.

Meanwhile Yves Montand, the Frenchman from Italy, has been making his marks and a lot of dollars in Hollywood product. The casting has been all the way from unbelievably naive as a stagedoor Johnny opposite Marilyn Monroe and as Mr. Evil opposite Lee Remick. When America first imported Chevalier they allowed him to sing but Montand's vocal talent has been kept a secret to the American film public so far.

Oldtimer Jean Gabin made two in 1960, "Le President" and "The Oldtimers," along with Pierre Fresnay, Noel Noel and Bernard Blier. Michele Morgan had one, and Daniele Darrieux two, with one for Martine Carol. Micheline Presle came back with two and Michel Simon with one while Bourvil did two, Jean Marais two. Fernandel two, Daniel Gelin two.

It was a great year for Charles Aznavour, a singer-cleffer, who hit stardom with three releases. Jeanne Moreau made one, Francoise Arnoul ditto, and comics Francis Blanche, Jean-Marc Thibault, Darry Cowl made one feature each. Fernand Raynaud and Jean Richard did two. Eddie Constantine, the American unknown to Hollywood, after making pix abroad, came back for three French pix. Pascale Petit was in a pair of releases.

Among "waver" revelations Emmanuelle Riva did one in 1960 and Jean-Claude Brialy, Jean-Paul Belmondo and Gerard Blain did two each. The French star of stars Brigitte Bardot, considered a top expert, made "The Truth" and is now winding a comedy "Only For You."

Hopefuls unveiled were Michel Subor in "Le Petit Soldat," Marie Laforet, Dany Saval, Francoise Prevost, Francose Brion, Anna Karina, Daniele Gaubert, Dahlia Lavi, Jean-Pierre Cassel, Perrette Pradier, Lucille Saint-Simon, Bernadette Lafont, Jean Kosta, Marie Jose Nat. But they're still only a handful of real stars.

HOW AMERICAN FILMS FARED WITH FRENCH

Paris.

Of the 121 feature films that brought in more than 50,000 patrons in their Paris firstruns in 1960, 31 were American. This category usually means it repeats more or less around France. French had 59 of these, the Italians 16 and other nationalities 15.

U.S. "hits" were "Solomon and Sheba" (UA) with 448,955 entries, followed by "Some Like It Hot" (UA), then United Artists' Greek-locationed "Never on Sunday," "North By Northwest" (M-G), "The Sleeping Beauty" (BV), "The Nun's Story" (WB), "Pillow Talk" (U), "The Last Train From Gun Hill" (Par), "The Buccaneers" (Par), "On the Beach" (UA), and the Charles Chaplin package reissue of three silent featurettes "The Chaplin Revue" (UA).

Other American product that fared well: "The Geisha Boy" (Par), "They Came to Cordura" (Col), "Suddenly, Last Summer" (Col), a revival of Orson Welles' "Citizen Kane" (RKO), "Operation Petticoat" (U), "The Horse Soldiers" (UA), "The FBI Story" (WB), "The Diary of Anne Frank" (20th).

"Ben-Hur" (M-G) sold 500,000 admissions in its first four months at one theatre. "Psycho" (Par) racked 268,870 followed by "Let's Make Love" (20th), "The Unforgiven" (UA), "The Alamo" (UA), "The Apartment" (UA), "Can Can" (20th), "The Trial of Sergeant Rutledge" (WB), "Bells Are Ringing" (M-G) and "Butterfield Eight" (M-G), with "The Misfits" (UA) also looking to hit big.

REQUIEM FOR FRANCE'S 'NEW WAVE'

[Paris Now Glutted With 'Unreleased' Offbeaters]

France.

Though the phrase persists, being quoted and adapted in faroff lands, the "New Wave," inspired by American example, but popularized by French talk-talk-talk about it, is now a receding echo. Or in the pun: the wave has waved goodbye. It was otherwise in 1958 when the VARIETY International Film Section went into the matter at some length, though not too earnestly.

This publication always suspected that the "New Wave" was more gimmick than reality. It was the scratching sound made by one young on-the-makester massaging the back of his friend. The young men who wanted in suddenly announced their own uniqueness and the obsolescence of the older (and better compensated) directors. Still, in all fairness, some of the cinematic achievements of some of the young 'uns going on to remark that at the moment—

The authentic talents of the "New Wave" have been absorbed but the dregs of the vintage are running thick. In short, the French film market is glutted with first films which were last films and avant garde gestures which cannot get a playdate.

Originally, here in Paris, the first "wavers" were a group of determined highbrow film critics who decided they could make features, too, and proceeded to do so. Francois Truffaut with his "The 400 Blows" and Claude Chabrol with his "Les Cousins" and "Le Beau Serge" won festival awards and public acclaim and showed that a cheap pic sans stars but with unusual treatment and forthright, offbeat themes could earn dough.

Louis Malle came from a pic school with family money behind him for the socko "Lovers" and Marcel Camus, an oldtime assistant, was in on it with the hit "Black Orpheus" plus documentary-maker Alain Resnais with the literary, muted but successful "Hiroshima Mon Amour."

Other critics joined in and in the temporary state of euphoria even staid producers backed newcomers. At one time the gag was that any film critic under 10 could easily make a pic. The publicity inspired stars to demand young directors and the rush was on. But the early bonanza was brief. Soon the public was laying off "wave" pix and exhibs returned to other product.

"Wavers" in general were characterized by their lore soaked up from much film museum attendance and an infatuation with certain contemporary Yank pix, usually those of directors considered only ordinary in their own country. If a few fresh, freewheeling pix resulted a flock of flat ones brought disenchantment.

Exactly 67 firsttimers made features in '59 and '60 and only 30 of these have been released so far.

This past year the top grossers were the oldtimers though many tackled themes and used the approaches of the "wavers." So, in all, the thing did have a tonic effort. Some 47 pix were made in regular surroundings sans studios.

The following is a list of the 67 new pix done after the early "wavers" had made their mark. This chart gives them in alphabetical order with a (U) after the title signifying the pic is as yet unreleased.

Armand, Pierre, Les Piques (The Quiltings) (U); Film producer.

Vierne, J. J., La Fete Espangol (Spanish Holiday) (U); TV assistant director.

Zaphiratos, Henri, Les Nymphettes (The Nymphets); Pic exporter.

As far as VARIETY is concerned, the "wave" is history. It revealed some new talents, both creative and technical, and may have revved up outlooks in Paris.

But there was certainly no permanent proof offered that bright young men, simply because they are young and brash, or contemptuous of their elders, can make successful films on a dare to prove a point.

Cannes Changing, More 'Commercial'; 'Film Market' a Unique Innovation

Cannes.

Regarded by many as the leading prestige affair among all the film festivals, Cannes benefits by being first each spring with the greatest choice of new films. Special invites of outstanding pictures are involved as well as those nominated by the over 30 participating countries.

But the 14th Cannes event, May 3-18, will also concentrate on business facets as well as its art side. For it is now accepted, even by arty competitive film fests that motion pictures are an industry as well as an art form.

For the first time there will be a Film Market section run by the Syndicate of French Film Producers headed by Emile Natan. A special office will get ducats for visiting buyers and sellers as well as arranging projections of films outside the official screenings in two theatres on the Cannes main street. These will be free for film sellers who heretofore had to pay for screenings arranged in various houses with conflicting skeds. Now all will be properly arranged, noted and handed out to the visiting press and film buyers and exporters.

Another important factor is that American filmites have seen the light and realized the prestige and dollars and cents necessities for a good fest showing. This year Cannes director Robert Favre Le Bret worked in conjunction with Motion Picture Export Assn. Continental Paris-based rep Fred Gronich. There was no personal friction this time and Le Bret discussed possible invites and desired pix with the MPEA. No going over anybody's head. And, in turn, the MPEA chose what looks like an unusual official U. S. entry in the Negro family tale, "Raisin in the Sun" (Col).

Of interest, too, is the screening here out-of-competition of UA's "Exodus" on May 3. Then, too, Cannes asked for "The Hoodlum Priest" (UA), another realistic important-themed pic.

Besides the free French visas for pix participating in Cannes, worth about $25,000 a piece plus free remittances in earnings up to $50,000 on each pic, the a sensibly-selected feature can benefit from the publicity from the over 600 scribes, video and radio reporters due at Cannes.

Russia will close this spring's festival with its first 70m pic "The Ardent Years" (Russian Revolution) made by a femme director Julia Solnsteva.

In general the 1961 official entries are mainly in the sociological and psychological categories with a smattering of the comic and epic. Last year's pix were mainly under erotica.

U. S. also has a representative of the indie school of filmakers springing up in N. Y. with the out of competish entry of Shirley Clarke's "The Connection," invited as an honorary entry by the French Federation of Film Authors.

A bevy of top show biz, literary, diplomatic and art French personalities will be flown in specially for the film showing and party and wafted back to Paris the next day. The new Cannes Fest president, Michel Fourre-Cormeray, will maintain a special bar where scribes will be able to meet visiting celebs and filmmakers more easily.

So, on paper, the Cannes shindig looks more than ever promising this year. The jury consists of people who are either film pros or have worked in them. Both the old guard and newcomers in the various international industries will be repped by pix. Now the old bromide can be pronounced, "May the best film win." The fest had to be prolonged two days from its original setup, May 3-16, now running from May 3-18, due to the number of films entered and the desire to avoid crowding and double features.

MIXED NATIONALITIES

Zanuck Parlays British, French, German, Yank Scribes

Paris.

Four authors have been engaged by Darryl F. Zanuck as literary consultants on 20th-Fox's "The Longest Day," by Cornelius Ryan.

Quartet includes James Jones ("From Here to Eternity," etc.), Noel Coward, Romain Gary ("Roots of Heaven") and Erich Maria Remarque.

Pic, to be divided into four sections, has listed authors as follows: Jones, American section; Coward, British; Gary, French; and Remarque, German.

The 14th Cannes Film Fest

By MICHEL FOURRE-CORMERAY

Director of the French governmental Centre Du Cinema and President of the Cannes Film Festival

Cannes.

The 1961, or 14th, International Cannes Film Festival will begin in the resort city of Cannes May 3 with more than 30 nations participating. This festival has taken on a new character in the last two years as the cinematographic art began to show two tendencies. First, new ideas and methods called the "New Wave." Second, changes in the manner of the older, established filmmakers.

It was observable in Cannes in 1959 when three French films directed by three young French directors won the top prizes. The whole world was soon made aware that our Mediterranean shore had been struck by a new wave.

Then, quickly, too fast perhaps, a group of young directors invaded the French cinema. Anxious to look new, producers, distributors, exhibitors, and the public itself welcomed the revolution. The phenomenon became more international; in Great Britain the traditional comedies and detective stories were joined by the "Free Cinema" films with a more intimate, fresher and more tender treatment; in the States some unusual features, made at low cost, were hailed and even made money; and in Italy, where French and Italian names work more and more side by side, there blossomed a new and golden age of film making reminiscent of the "Resorgimento" after the liberation.

The results of a revolution or change can never be completely effaced, but excesses can and must be corrected. In Cannes in 1960 it appeared that filmmakers were not all for the "New" forms of '59 which already seemed like old patterns. Now in 1951 at Cannes we may see a rejuvenation of the revelations of '59 and a reaffirmation of certain truths which seemed evident even before the advent of the "New Wave."

I do not yet know at this writing what films will be presented in Cannes, but I do know that the French cinema today is of a great variety. From a cinema for the "Happy Few," or just a pastime, the French cinema now must and does interest the world. The young film people, conscious of their excesses, and even their exaggerations, still use these arms forged by their impetuosity to treat subjects that haunt the lives of the audiences. The old guard, renovated by the audacity of the new and mounting generation, and finding their old methods outmoded, are renewing their styles, work and subject matter.

In a few weeks Cannes will tell us what are the connections between these diverse tendencies in the rest of the film arts and industries of the world. Cannes will have thus been profitable.

EUROPE STINGY ON PUBLICITY

Foreign Films Seeking N.Y. License

The New York State film licensing board at Albany reviewed a total of 652 foreign-made features and shorts in the 12 months ended March 31, 1961. Of this total, 525 were features and 127 were short subjects. The following is a breakdown on the first 17 countries. Comparable 1959-60 figures, when available, are shown in parentheses.

10 Year Paris Boxoffice Data: Of Top-Grossing 60, 22 From U.S.

Paris.

Looking back over the top grossers in Paris firstruns (usually a good index for France) during past 10 years: 22 of the 60 features are American. This is about the usual average.

Biggest was "The Bridge on the River Kwai" (Col) which attracted 642,985 patrons in its Paris run alone. Next came DeMille's "The Ten Commandments" (Par) with 526,305, followed by "War and Peace" (Par), Charlie Chaplin's last Hollywood production, "Limelight" (UA), "The Greatest Show on Earth" (Par), "Around the World in 80 Days" (UA), the first C'Scope pic "The Robe" (20th), that perennial reissue pic, "Gone With the Wind" (M-G), "Solomon and Sheba" (UA), Alfred Hitchcock's "To Catch a Thief" (Par), "From Here to Eternity" (Col), "Roman Holiday" (Par), "Moulin Rouge" (UA), "Some Like It Hot" (UA), Walt Disney's "Cinderella" (RKO), Metro's "Ben-Hur," still in its first run here, Jules Dassin's Greek comedy "Never on Sunday" which United Artists backed, "Samson and Delilah" (Par), "Sabrina" (Par), "Quo Vadis" (M-G), "The Man Who Knew Too Much" (Par), "Ivanhae" (M-G).

Late Cecil B. DeMille ran away with audiences via three features on the list, while William Wyler, Billy Wilder and Alfred Hitchcock each had two. Add Federico Fellini's film depicting decadence in Rome "The Sweet Life", the exploration documentary, "Lost Continent," and one Russo pic, the Cannes prizewinning "Flying Cranes."

Of French product, several have already played the States. Most did not repeat these their home successes. Many have yet to get a Yank release. Sacha Guitry's "Versailles," was floppo stateside and Roger Vadim's "Les Liaisons Dangereuses 1960" still has no export visa except for Denmark and Japan.

Fernandel's "Don Camillo" pix did not click. Jacques Tati's "Mon Oncle" did well. Marcel Carne's "The Cheats" has yet to play the States. "The Big Families" nosedived in the U.S. and "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" was an okay exploitation item while "Diabolique" was a sturdy hit.

"The Lovers" did well in America although Ohio arrested a couple of managers showing it. Fernandel's "The Cow and the Prisoner" has no takers yet as "The Baron De L'Ecluse."

"Gervaise" did well in the U.S. as did "Rififi" and Tati's "Mr. Hulot's Holiday."

As to two costumer epics on Napoleon: one is bought but not released yet by 20th-Fox, namely, "Austerlitz," while Guitry's "Napoleon" has yet to be contracted.

"Michael Strogoff" and "Lucrezia Borgia" were okay playoff items while "The Perfectionist" flopped. Rene Clair's "Les Grandes Maneuvers" did so-so, and Jean Renoir's "French Can-Can" did not make it. Clair's "Night Beauties" did well while two Eddie Constantine starrers, "Yours Devotedly Blake" and "Women Get Along," have no overseas takers."

Andre Cayatte's "Justice Is Done" did not fare too well in spite of solid reviews and "Delivery Boy" has aroused no interest among Yank distribs. Two present hits, "The Truth," H. G. Clouzot's Brigitte Bardot starrer, and Cayatte's "Rhine Crossing," have not played the U.S. yet though the former is due soon.

They Boo But Pay 60 Money-Makers

Paris.

The top French grosser of the 1960-61 release season is far and away H. G. Cluzot's drama "The Truth" starring Brigitte Bardot which is expected to pay off over a million bucks in France alone. Drama of youthful uneasiness and murder is Miss Bardot's strongest acting role to date.

Next was "The French Woman and Love," a series of sketches by seven top directors depicting aspects of love.

Andre Cayatte's story of two prisoners of war, "The Rhine Crossing," followed with the swashbuckling "The Yokel" with Jean Marais. "The Old Chaps," a garrulous comedy with Jean Gabin, was also big as ditto the updating of Voltaire's "Candide" by Norbert Carbonnaux, and Roger Vadim's vampire pic with lesbos undertones "And Die of Pleasure" (Par).

Comedy of adultery, "One Night Affair," of Henri Verneuil was in ditto Louis Malle's zany comedy "Zazie in the Subway." A Fernandel starrer "Cresus," a Fernand Raynaud comedy "The Sheep," and "The Gigolo" came next in boxoffice impact. Eddie Constantine moved back for grosses in another thriller parody "How She Is," and Bourvil scored in an occupation tale "Fortunat."

Marcel Camus' second feature on Brazil adventure "The Pioneers" did okay biz as did Albert Lamorisse's "The Trip in a Balloon" and Edmond Sechan's "The Bear" followed by Francois Truffaut's second pic "Shoot the Pianist."

The Italian film "The Adventure," of Michaelangelo Antonioni, though booed at the Cannes Festival, was a top grosser in France as well as Federico Fellini's "The Sweet Life" and the Swedish montage pic (Edwin Leiser tracing the rise and fall of Hitler, "Mein Kampf" also showed well.

UNIT PUFFS VERY HARD TO PLANT

Paris.

Despite the spread in recent years of American productions (and producers) to Europe and the enlarged number of American-trained publicists on overseas location, there remains a basic conflict between a unit man, anxious to develop stories, features and photo breaks, and his regular European-based superior. The difference in two terms is this:

1. PRODUCTION PUBLICITY
Versus
2. RELEASE PUBLICITY

In general the orthodox mentality of the resident European showman favors focussing energy upon the picture going to market, at the actual time of release. This is in part, but not wholly, because European publications swap editorial text page for page with ad copy.

In general the American newspaper or magazine sells ads separately. If a publisher "understands" that he is expected to be sympathetic to news stories, this is not a matter of cold-blooded trade. European publications give the advertiser a contract "credit." Thus, a distribution-minded European film showmen with a credit of, say, 10 pages in a given periodical may be reluctant to have an eager-beaver American unit publicist knock off any portion of his text on behalf of a picture still shooting in the studio.

In short, Europeans and Americans do not share the same views. In the States the trend for many years has been to get publicity in the works almost from the first day the cameras roll, or the star signs.

Shifting Stress

The business of publicizing films has always been a mixture of trying to get boxoffice results while also making an impressive show of clippings for the boss. While the producers stayed home in Hollywood the logic of this procedure naturally favored American newspapers and American magazines.

During the past several years, with more and more American independents plying their trade in London, Paris or Rome, the publicity emphasis has shifted. European news media, although considerably tighter for space than their U.S. counterparts, now are as sought-after by the film people as any publication in the States.

There's pressure now to get "breaks" in the European press, combined with the natural competition set up via the much larger number of Yank films going before the cameras overseas. Publicity chiefs of some of the major U.S. outfits in Europe always have been —and emphatically still are—distribution minded. It's their job to sell the finished product at the moment of release. This is what

Changing Facts In France

Paris.

Characteristics of the 1960 film year here in France included these salients:

1. A new Government fiscal policy toward the medium.

2. Tighter censorship, echoing political unease due to the Algerian War.

3. Continued drop in film theatre attendance.

4. Bigger grosses for clicking films on higher admission scales.

5. Sharper audience discrimination favoring the good product but making things worse for the mediocrities.

New governmental scheme on Film Aid works out to cut Aid over the next seven years, to finally have it on a credit instead of handout basis by Jan. 1, 1968. Exhibs were immediately cut off from film aid while producers keep getting it on a tapering basis. Payments on prestige pix are expected to be kept up after '68. Theatre squawks were somewhat tempered by a slight delaxation and cutting of their take to feed Film Aid coffers.

Film attendance fell in 1960 but at a slower rate than in previous years. For example, releases attracting over 100,000 patrons in Paris firstruns showed fewer getting more people. In '57 61 pix got 10,884,- 938 entries with a.v.p. 178,551 per pic, '58 got 10,253,485 with 186,427 per pic, '59 9,513,552 with 190,271 and '60 9,215,002 but with 214,163 per pic.

Many Like Paris' Noon-7 P.M. Day; Who Can Say Between Tea & Wine Or Other Traits of Studio Crews

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris.

There is a tendency among those who have made many features in many different lands to sell small difference, once the kleig lights go on. In any event it is difficult to evaluate or measure differences between temperament in one culture or language and another. It is probably true that Greeks are "eager to please" and Spaniards "anxious to learn" and that Danes are "competent and obliging." Or other broad generalities.

As to French crews, there are mixed reports. If you don't speak French, undoubtedly it's a terrific handicap for the Frenchman is not above letting you suffer from your ignorance. The outsider in a studio here may feel an outsider because he is precisely just that. It's hardly remarkable, though the technique of ignoring you may be characteristically French.

In a French studio as in a studio anywhere there are the harrowing waits between takes, the tedium of the actors in costume and greasepaint. Frequency of coffee breaks and/or tantrums are not anything which can be reduced to statistics. Many Americans and others from sundry cultures have expressed appreciation for French crews who start late but do not flinch when the shooting runs late.

The English "shop steward" is probably far more of a dictator than will ever be found in a Parisian studio. Whether tea is more obsessive to the English grip than wine to the French grip is not provable either way.

Some Yank showmen feel that Paris has a fine thing in the noon to 7:30 shooting sked. It allows for easier nights, French actors working in legit as well as pix, and some extra time for directors to get things organized for themselves.

Experienced Yanks are in demand as foreign producers try for that American knowhow and suppleness in technique that made the U. S. the most important international product extant. But Americans point out that in its heyday Hollywood absorbed the best film talents of Europe and still does. So it is one film world.

Yank pix are still predominant in western world marts even if they have slipped in some spots as local competition gets tougher. It is argued here that any good pic helps all pix, as long as the public goes to the movies.

An important facet to European production is that practically all studios are in the cultural capital of each country—be it Rome, Madrid, Paris, London, Berlin, Stockholm, Copenhagen, Athens. This allows for closer contacts between all arts, and permits easy access to actors who can make features as well perform for video and stage. The rising production in New York City is pointed to here.

One important difference between European countries lies in the union or syndicate setup. In Great Britain, says one local producer, he once could not make an essential important shot because the working day was over. In Italy or France it could have been done but not in Britain. Also there is more leniency in using non-actor types in the Latin countries and in different crafts pitching in to do others chores to get things done in a pinch.

But these are only national idiosyncrasies which do not make the film producing centres too different from each other.

Sketch-Form Pix Liked in France

Paris

After the sock biz racked up by the French sketch pic, "The French Woman and Love," these separate story pix seem to be coming back into vogue after an eclipse of several years. Some local pix critics are also fighting in print for better and more distribution of Yank musical pix which they feel have been declared bad money-makers and not for general public tastes by the exhibs, but not the patrons.

"Woman," produced by Metzger and Woog, played to over 350,000 spectators in its first-run and has gotten second top money this season. It deals with different passions and ages in woman's eternal search for love with seven episodes done by different directors and a flock of stars. Now, Gilbert Bokanowski is doing "Famous Loves," based on historical love affairs with only one director, Michel Boisrond.

As "Woman" treated virginity, childhood, first love, adultery, "Famous Loves" will delve into infidelity, vanity, rivality, criminal love, pure love, etc. So far, the stars signed are Simone Signoret, Dany Robin, Jean-Paul Belmondo, Annie Girardot, Edwige Feuillere, Yves Montand and, perhaps, Brigitte Bardot.

As for musicals, exhibs claim only two really made money, "An American in Paris" (M-G) and "King and I" (20th). Some had some specialized okay runs, "Funny Face" (Par), "Bells Are Ringing" (M-G), but were not of the claibre for big first-run chances.

Falloff in foreign take for these musical epics has cut down the number of such type pix because big costs need an international pull to pay off. But critics feel that it exhibs got behind these films with good pub campaigns, instead of looking upon them as hopeless, they could break through and get a big audience. They point to the biz now being racked up by pix which were originaly pegged as arty and specialized, and not much use for the big money and regular houses.

Critics did nipups over "Bells," which did only okay biz and are blowing their horn for "Kismet" (M-G), which finally made a small first-run here after five years. But exhibs still do not seem convinced. They point to the "Can-Can" (20th) and "South Pacific" (20th) as doing poor biz here. It may be up to "Porgy and Bess" (Col), "Pepe" (Col) and "West Side Story" (UA) to try to swing exhibs around in favor of musical pix again.

Europe Yawns; Tunepix Off

As the world grows smaller and the international market looms larger to U. S. motion picture makers, Americans are singing and dancing with increasing infrequency, at least on film.

A current survey shows only two film musicals on tap for release this year—Warner Bros.' "Fanny" and United Artists' "West Side Story." If you add 20th-Fox's 70m reissue of "The King and I," this makes a grand total of three song-and-dancers definitely set for 1961.

Significantly too, these are all adaptations of successful Broadway shows, as were both of last year's musical releases, 20th's "Can-Can" and Metro's "Bells Are Ringing." Not since Metro's "Gigi" (1958), has a major company gone out on the limb for an original musical property. "Gigi," of course, pointed a rather bitter moral: despite ecstatic reviews and a carload of Academy Awards, the picture earned less than $4,000,000 in the domestic market.

Must Click Domestically

And if a musical doesn't strike it rich in the domestic and English-speaking markets, it's highly unlikely to strike it rich in the other territories. The one exception to this rule has been Samuel Goldwyn's screen adaptation of "Porgy and Bess," which reportedly is doing a great deal better abroad than it did at home. But, then, "Porgy" is more of an opera than a musical comedy or musical drama.

Upcoming slate of musical fare—all legit adaptations, plus one remake—include the now-shooting Universal "Flower Drum Song" and Disney "Babes in Toyland," along with such projects as WB's "Gypsy," 20th's "State Fair" (with the original Rodgers & Hammerstein screen score supplemented by a couple of new numbers), Warners' "Music Man," 20th's "The Sound of Music" and UA's "Irma La Douce." Jerry Wald also has tentative plans to produce "A Tree Grows in Brooklyn," though substituting a new score for the one featured in the original Broadway show. These releases would extend well into 1962 and maybe even 1963.

Clearly the good old days of original screen musicals—"An American in Paris," "Seven Brides for Seven Brothers," "Meet Me in St. Louis," "Hans Christian Andersen," etc.—are gone, principally because of the economics of the world market, but perhaps also because of our penchant for the kind of musical in which songs and dances are so closely integrated into the plot.

A generally accepted rule-of-thumb today is that approximately 51 or 52% of the total gross of a U. S. film comes from abroad. Of that 51 or 52%, between 15 and 30% is earned in English-speaking territories abroad. Thus the musical film has a market potential of about 60 to 65% of the 100% enjoyed by the more easily dubbed and subtitled adventures, comedies and dramas.

While U. S. screen musicals can be smashes in English-speaking areas (the Magna-20th-Fox "South Pacific" is one of the biggest things ever to hit Britain), they invariably suffer in such important markets as France, Italy and Germany, where the films must be dubbed for general release. The perennial question which the distribs ask themselves is "How much do we dub?" Just the dialog? But what about the songs, when they are an integral part of the story? The dubbed dialog-titled song compromise is usually unhappy for all concerned. When "The King and I" went out in France, problem was solved simply by cutting out most of the song numbers.

Had "The King and I" been a more old-fashioned, less "integrated" musical, the result might not have been the heresy it certainly was.

Considering the usually vast expense and the proportionately greater difficulty in making a good screen musical, Hollywood's inclination to go along with the presold Broadway property is understandable. However, as has been proven several times in the past, a Broadway hit musical, by the time it reaches the motion picture theatre, may not only be presold, but oversold, so that its score is old hat to the public. Nevertheless, the bigger the Broadway hit, the bigger the price the film companies are willing to pay for the rights.

Small % of Music

While the majors have been generally eschewing musical fare, they have, at the same times been turning out a steady number of comedies-with-music (and sometimes dramas), wherein the music, usually a quite small proportion of the total footage, has been quite incidental (and easily clipable). Such were "Say One for Me" and "High Time," two recent Bing Crosby starrers, and the Marilyn Monroe-Yves Montand "Let's Make Love." This is the era when the greatest musical performers Hollywood has to offer—Crosby, Doris Day, Elvis Presley—do just about everything but what comes naturally.

Ironically enough, though the screen musical is at the lowest ebb in Hollywood history, filmmakers are using music more and more throughly in promotion of films. Thus, while 20th-Fox casts song-and-dance man Montand as a bootlegger-rapist in "Sanctuary," the same company promotes a straight naval epic, "Sink the Bismarck" to boxoffice glory with a rollicking title tune recorded by the late Johnny Horton.

Even a pic like American International's horror film, "Black Sunday," has its own soundtrack album. There's a lot of film music in the air, even if there aren't many musicals.

Color & Wide Screen

Paris.

Color in French films was lessened in 1960 but the use of widescreen processes went up.

Six films were made in color to the 12 of '59 and '58. Six were done in scope and color to the six and seven of '59 and '58, while 12 were made in black and white and scope over the two in '59 and the five in '58. This came to 12 pix in color for '60 to the 18 and 19 of previous years, with 18 pix in scope to the eight and 12 of the last two seasons.

As to the Belgians

Brussels.

Belgium is not a big producing country but it is notably a film-consuming market. The United States accounts for 41% of some 450 films reaching the kingdom annually. France is the second biggest supplier.

Negatives are dubbed in both French and Flemish. By international agreement about 80% of the prints for exhibition in Belgium are processed in Belgian laboratories.

France's Film Dimensions

Paris.

Following data covers film season, 1960-61:

Production: 124 French or French-majority participation coproductions, plus 41 with French-minority participation.

Process: 9% in color; 15% in widescreen.

Investment: Total outlay, $15,950,000. General cost, $202,000 for all-French films, $290,000 for co-productions.

Releases in France: Total 398 features. France, 104; 29 coproduction with minor French participation; 215 dubbed imports of which 99 from U. S., 37 from West Germany, 35 from Britain, 25 from Italy (54% from Common Market countries).

Theatres: France has 5,830 hardtop film theatres; of which 1,289 are in communities of 100,000 or more.

Average admission price: 40c.

Attendance: 344,600,000 for gross of $124,487,000.

Export: At least $15,500,000 was collected by French films. West Germany was leading market with $1,700,000. Belgium ran second with $1,420,000. Switzerland took $802,000 in French films.

Continuing the productions of non-conformistic and powerful stories, believing that there is much room for non-conformism and that people are much more afraid not to conform than being forced to conform, immediately after completion of Arthur Miller's A VIEW FROM THE BRIDGE preparations for the production of EPITAPH FOR AN ENEMY will be activated.

One basic reason why this film will be made can be phrased best in these words . . .

> . . . The noise of the machines of war do not drown out the stronger sounds of love between human beings . . .

World War I was the background for DEVIL IN THE FLESH, and we will show this same theme in EPITAPH FOR AN ENEMY with the background of World War II. (June 7, 1944 in Normandy . . . "D" DAY PLUS ONE)

Youth is not made for war, and even war shall not prevent youth from pursuing their true destiny . . . love.

It's as piteous and ironic, as funny and as tragic as warfare itself. I think Baxter's mission is reported with as great control as Hemingway used in his account of Jordan's work on the bridge in FOR WHOM THE BELL TOLLS.

Siritzkys, Paris Handlers of Films, Argue Trend Strictly to 'Adult'

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris, March 7.

Sammy and Jo Siritzky, who through their distribution company, Athos Films, feed French offbeat and mainly foreign pix into eight specialized firstruns on the Champs-Elysees, maintain that the excellent biz racked up by Michael Antonioni's Italian pic "L'Avventura" (The Adventure) is no fluke but an indication of the general public's desire for more adult fare for their filmgoing.

This is the picture which was booed at the Cannes Festival and considered anti-commercial yet drew 127,960 patrons in its first at two small seaters and is racking up good biz all over France in a dubbed version.

"Avventura" delved into the impossibility of lasting emotions and love among the Italian Milanese upper sect. Siritzkys also point to the worldwise biz of the French "Hiroshima Mon Amour," the literary tale of a love affair of a French woman and a Japanese on the background of memories of the Atom Bomb and the occupation of France. At one time this release would have been considered too specialized for anything but arties and it is now getting full-scale general distrib here and in most western countries.

Siritzkys can only feel that audiences want more probing, deeper films. Ingmar Bergman's "The Virgin Spring" is turning out a better biz affair in its dubbed version in the provinces that it did in Paris.

Paris still keys overall biz but out-of-town French audiences are also beginning to give dough to offbeaters. A mordant, macabre Hispano pic "El Cochecito" has also come in for solid reviews and biz and a new Antonioni Italo pic "La Notte" (Night) also kicked off for solid opening biz this week.

Siritzkys are now looking for unique Yank indie fare for distrib here and already have John Cassavetes' "Shadows" set and are dickering for Shirley Clarke's "The Connection."

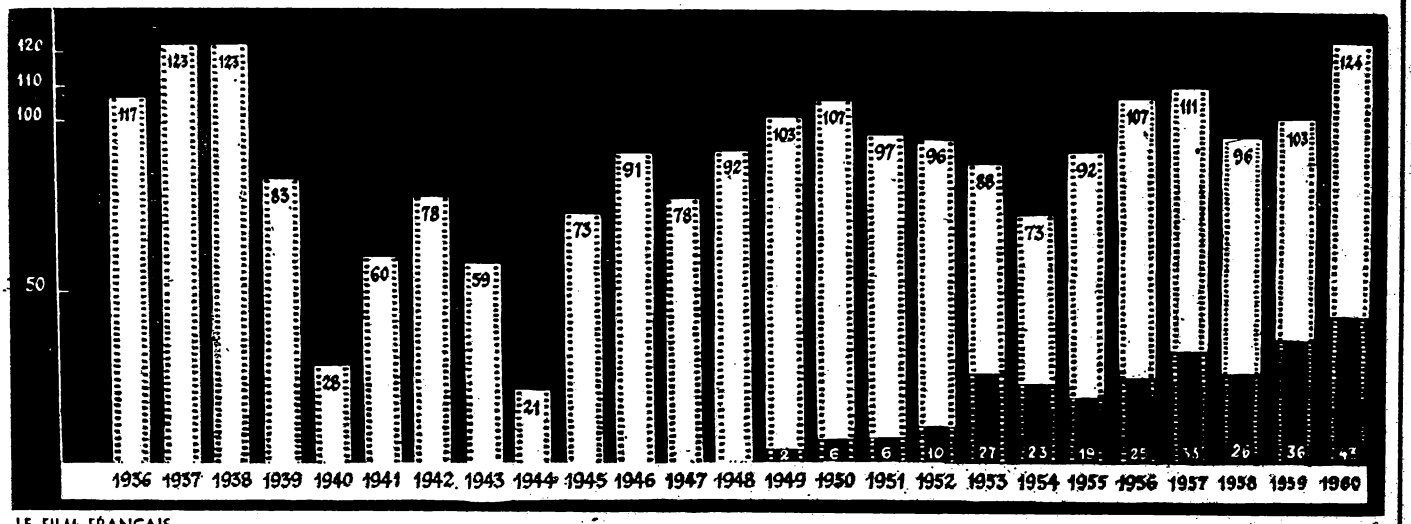
Rise of French Co-Production

(SHADED FIGURES)



LE FILM FRANCAIS

FIRST IN WORLD-WIDE PASSENGER EXPERIENCE

The time: February 8, 1919. The place: Le Bourget Airport, Paris. The plane: a Farman "Goliath." The event: the first scheduled international passenger flight in history! And when the "Goliath" touched down in London after a two-and-one-half-hour flight, the company to be known as Air France had pioneered a new concept in transportation. A concept that led Air France to similar "firsts" in Africa and South America...and ultimately made it the world's largest airline. Since 1919, fantastic changes have taken place in every aspect of air travel. Swift Air France jets speed to the far corners of the world. Passengers relax in luxury...enjoy gourmet French meals. And they enjoy the two hallmarks of every Air France flight: experience and dependability. Which is why Air France is the world's largest airline, with a 42-year record of flying experience and service. New Booklet: Write Air France, P.O. Box 113, New York 10, New York, for a 52-page illustrated booklet, "Air France, World's Largest Airline." AIR FRANCE JET they're mentally and physically geared to do.

Stingy Publicity

The eager-beaver production publicist from the States who thinks the European press is waiting for his handout material discovers very soon that the "sell" is twice as tough in Europe and that U.S. publishers are much more receptive market for "basic" publicity copy.

It comes as something of a shock to the production man that his own American distributor is anything but enthusiastic about his efforts to capitalize on news or personalities connected with the film before the cameras. Complaint on the part of active "unit" men is that the distributor doesn't understand his problems and won't lend a helping hand.

What's not generally appreciated is that the European system of handling publicity creates a very uncomfortable situation for the distributor who's now asked to help produce those large tearsheets that bring producer praise.

In most countries, and this is particularly true here in Italy and in France, the distributor has a contract with a newspaper or a magazine. He agrees to take out so many ads in return for which the publication makes available a given measure of "free" film publicity. If those pages are used up for production material, they're gone and no longer available comes time to publicize the release of a picture.

There's also the additional feeling on the part of the distribution official operating in Europe that, if too much appears during production, the papers won't go for the material which is eventually needed to give a release a proper send-off.

The whole U.S. attitude towards production publicity differs quite radically from that of the Europeans although—in this respect—the Continentals are beginning to copy Hollywood. Basically, European producers begin to take a publicity interest in their films only when time comes for release. This is changing partly because so much American money is flowing into European production and partly because U.S. distributors have been screaming for more and better information about the pictures which they are called on to handle in the States.

The European press, from the big publications like Epoca and Paris Match on down, generally resists the idea of production publicity. Certainly—and this is partly due to space limitations—it is not open to the type of amusing trivia which endlessly fill the pages of American newspapers. The Europeans are primarily star-conscious and there is a tiresome variation of pictures and stories on Gina Lollobrigida, Sophia Loren, Brigitte Bardot, etc.

Venice Film Festival Ideal:

Something New, Different, More

By DOMENICO MECCOLI

(Director, Venice Film Festival)

Venice.

I have before me a small collection of newspaper clippings. They contain articles written by competent and influential people, chosen from among many thousands. All speak of the Venice Film Festival, but each is characterized by a different point of view from the next, often in contrast or even at completely opposite tangents. That which one sees as a plus factor the other sees as a defect, where one sees pink the other sees black. I'm referring of course to fundamental questions, regarding the very purpose and scope of the Venice Festival, which ever since its second edition (1934) calls itself the Exhibition of Cinematographic Art.

So heated a discussion, which every year co-involves five or six-hundred journalists from all over the world is in itself proof of the interest engendered by the Festival. Rene Clair said last year: "The Venice Mostra is an institution which we have all reasons for defending and respecting, within our means, because it not only is the oldest (festival) of all, but also because it is the most glorious and important one in the history of cinema." But every institution, no matter what its past merits, must renew itself, and this is just what Venice tried to do five years ago, in substituting indiscriminate participation of features with preselected participation, so as to better characterize itself as an artistic event.

Venice Recognizes Change In State of the Cinema Art

This innovation has originated much misunderstanding. Critics of it have not paid sufficient attention, I believe, to the truth constituted by an evolution in the taste of the public, followed by a consequent evolution in the film industry. Some time ago, for example, I was reading that while 30 years ago Manhattan had only three or four art theatres, now there are over 20. In Italy, a company which switched its release program to an accent on art films with the formula: "better films for better audiences" has enjoyed a considerable commercial success. These and other examples prove that the abyss between quality films and commercial films has to a large degree been bridged.

In any case, the quality film, the film which speaks to audiences in a new language and with new ideas has a duplicate function: (1) it keeps alive the interest and curiosity of the public; (2) it continuously stimulates the renewal of filmic creation. It therefore has a guiding function whose benefits are felt in the future, strengthening the industry. In the current situation of crisis, this is a battle common to all film industries. Never as now have the interests of the various industries been so interdependent: because the success of a film, no matter what its flag, reflects beneficially on other films, because it binds the spectator to the film theatre, or brings him back if he has been lured away.

The purpose of the Venice Film Festival is just that: to stimulate quality production, and to contribute to its success by pointing it out to a vast international public. The very date of the Festival (Aug. 20-Sept. 3), its position as the last Festival of the summer season, project the Mostra not towards the past but towards the future, place its accent on anticipation rather than conclusion.

Tomorrow's Criteria Are Stimulated by Example

Producers cannot but recognize the fact that, by helping Venice to help the qualitative progress of the motion picture, they are working for tomorrow's industry. Those therefore who desire the same levelling formula for all film festivals, and who therefore are in principle against the Venice formula, have perhaps not sufficiently evaluated the circumstances, or have been distracted by marginal aspects and occasional unavoidable errors present in all formulas.

Not long ago, in Italy, one of the top executives of an American major company asked me: "But what sort of pictures do you want in Venice anyway?" I answered: "Films which have something new, something different, something more." It could have seemed a rather vague formula, but he understood it perfectly. The problem lies in bringing it to life. And the misunderstandings arise when one wants to see in the Venice pre-selection committee an instrument created in opposition to the film industry rather than the instrument of collaboration it instead wants to be.

This is something I will never stop repeating. During more than 25 years as a film critic and member of various international juries, my constant interest in the problems of art as well as industry, have convinced me that collaboration and cooperation is the key to everything.

The regulations of the 22d Venice Festival therefore underline this need, this desire for collaboration which, in order to be truly fruitful, must be reciprocal, in the respect of creative freedom and without prejudices of any nature, without limitations alien to the interests of cinema.

Also, in the general interest of cinema, it is necessary for collaboration to be extended in making the Venice Festival an event, a meeting place—with the widest possible range—of producers, directors, actors, journalists, a "showcase" of all that which is alive, vital and qualified in every country, to be put forward in defense of its own prestige.

On the other hand, the Venice Festival is not only made up of the competition for the "Gold Lion of Saint Mark" and the other prizes. This race is merely the climax. But other and more numerous films of varied type are presented in a special "Information Section," intended to help round out the picture of world film production. To help develop cinema culture, the so-called "Cultural Section" is set aside for retrospective showings of historic character. This year, one of the "retrospectives" will be dedicated to that genius of the comic film, Mack Sennett.

Furthermore, from July 13 to 22, Venice will spotlight such international events as the Festival of Films for Children, the Festival of Documentary Films, the Festival of Art Films, the Festival of Newsreels, all with study sessions and debates. These are events which have always attracted the attention of all specialists, but this year we intend to do something more. Especially the Children's and the Documentary Festivals will have a wider impact, and we will underline their importance with appropriate events. But, here again, ultimate success will depend on the cooperation it will be possible to obtain.

This is what the Venice Festival offers to the motion picture, in the frame of an enchanting city unique in the world.

Italy's Film Associations

Associazione Nazionale Industrie Cinematografiche ed Affini (ANICA)—Overall industry association charged with supervision and negotiation of industry problems—with sole exclusion of exhib sector—both nationally and internationally.

Unione Nazionale Distributori Film (UNDF)—National film distributors union, part of ANICA, handling national release problems of member companies, which include Yank outlets in Italy.

Unione Nazionale Produttori Film (UNPF)—National producers organization under ANICA, deals exclusively with problems pertaining to production sector.

Gruppo Nazionale Produttori Cortometraggi ed Attualita—Grouping of Italian producers of documentaries and newsreels. Part of ANICA.

Unione Nazionale Cinematografo Formato Ridotto—Deals exclusively with 16m problems on national basis, under ANICA.

Gruppo Nazionale Produttori Film Pubblicitari—Grouping of Italo producers of advertising films, both for theatre and tv use. Part of ANICA.

(NOTE: Officially, Italian film industry comes under the Italian Ministry of Tourism and Entertainment, headed by Minister (1) Alberto Folchi, with (2) Renzo Helfer and Gabriele Semeraro the 2 Undersecretaries for Entertainment directly responsible to Folchi. In turn, Nicola De Pirro's "Direzione dello Spettacolo" (Entertainment Office) is responsible to Helfer and Semeraro on all entertainment matters, including films, while heading several other subdivisions charged with general supervision, in Italy's state-subsidized industry setup, of such various pic activities as production, importation and export, etc., as well as the many other subsidized and semi-subsidized sectors of the Italo film industry picture—Ed.)

Remembrance of Booms That Fizzled Tempers Italians' Film Euphoria

Rome.

The Italian film industry is riding the crest of another wave of production. Others, cognizant of the short life of previous booms here are tempering the local euphoria with words of caution.

But for the moment, at least, the field belongs to the optimists, and theirs are valid arguments. Feature production reached a new high of 196 during 1960, but more point with pride and satisfaction to the inroads made by Italian films on the local market, where they have gained from five to 10 percentage points, to the surge in exports which zoomed during the past year, and to the rise in quality, as witnessed by the rash of festival and critical kudos garnared by Italo product throughout the world in the past twelve months.

What are the ingredients of local success? A multitude of factors with know-how and adaptability; Rome's geographical location, within reach of the most disparate—and colorful—backdrops for productions in which novelty of setting and authentic locales are musts; the availability of trained and willing masses of people and/or horses; a climate which allows for a long exteriors season; attractive partnership offers and tax advantages for stars and producers, also due to the fairly liberal Italian film aid legislation; the stimulus of Italian quality film which have finally found a public at home as well as abroad (see "La Dolce Vita" — rated strictly an art houser at completion but now bearing for the all-time Italo record, with similar echoes from France, Germany, and Britain); and, last but certainly far from least, the export boom in epic pix in the biblical-mythological belt.

Ironically, it was an American, Boston's Joseph Levine, who almost singlehandedly triggered the current Italo renaissance by parlaying the locally-made "Hercules" into a multimillion dollar item and showing the Italians the way to export success. "Hercules," which in similar or other form or guise has been remade dozens of times since, set the pattern and sent Italian producers scurrying to the U.S. and other countries in search of pro-production deals and name stars, just as it brought and continues to bring U.S. and other foreign buyers to Rome in search of product and cut-in pacts.

Most Italian and Yank majors and minors have in past or present joined forces at one stage or another of the production game to co-produce, option, or buy Italian films. Thus Dino De Laurentiis and Paramount, 20th and Galatea, Titanus and Metro, UA and Titanus, etc., and more recently the new pacts linking Metro with Lux Films, De Laurentiis with Columbia, Moris Ergas with Columbia, Titanus with Joseph Levine, Levine with Lux. Upcoming among others, is a new partnership (3 pix per year plus options) linking Paramount with Galatea Films. The trend is still up.

Will this Italian attempt to rival Hollywood ("by joining Hollywood," as one observer noted) pay off, and if so, will it last? Opinions are divided, as divided in fact as those concerning a closely related problem, namely how long will the boom in strong-arm spectacles last.

Strong words of caution come from an experienced and authoritative observer as Eitel Monaco, head of the Italian industry organization, ANICA. The time has come, Monaco feels, to pull in the reins and curb local production expansion before its too late. "We certainly don't want to top the 200 feature mark in 1961!" he adds. Action would mostly involve elimination of fly-by-night production and similarly minor speculative efforts resulting in "useless" pix which no longer fit the revised international pic industry trend. For it's an acknowledged fact in Italy as well that the "also-ran" filler tyve picture is doomed, and that more money is being made by fewer pictures: the better ones.

Monaco admits that the curbing process, which he has advocated for some time will not prove an easy one, but he hopes to see it through, among other things, with the enforcement of an "ANICA Seal" which would presumably guarantee a pic's production and quality standards as well as—as heretofore—its censorial aspects.

Foreign Imports Into Italy Drop

Rome.

The total number of foreign features imported into Italy dropped during 1960 for the third year in a row. Particularly hit, once more, were Yank imports, which sank from 215 in 1959 to 181 in 1960.

Remaining country-by-country totals more or less held at 1959 levels. Other figures show: Argentina, 1; Austria, 2; Czechoslovakia, 5; France, 24; West Germany, 36; Japan, 5; Greece, 2; Britain, 45; Yugoslavia, 1; Mexico, 11; Poland, 4; Spain, 5; Sweden 8; Russia 7.

All told, 1959 saw 357 pix entering the country, as against 337 for 1960. Slack was more than compensated for by the 40-odd pic rise in Italo feature production in last twelvemonth.

ITALY'S GALLOPING CINEMA

By ROBERT F. HAWKINS

Rome.

Italian production continues to ride the crest of the wave. The local market has in the past year been a big windfall for home product, and new export horizons have opened, both for quality product and for the spectacular genre. Some local showmen are asking themselves how long the boom will last (there are signs of audience fatigue with spectacles; a second video channel is upcoming here in fall; etc.)—but most others are going right ahead with plans for another big production year, one which from the looks of things will at least equal 1960's total of 194 produced features.

Here, with the usual reservation due to still-fluid program plans for many Italian companies, is a run-down of local productions, current and future:

AMBROSIANA Paolo Moffa's company follows up "The Last Days of Pompei" and "The Revolt of the Slaves" with "The Revenge of Maciste," to star Gordon Scott, followed by "The Great Thirst," from the novel by Hans Ruesch; and "Mission to Venice" for which producer is-paging Ray Milland.

ARCO FILM Alfredo Bini's outfit, which began with a winner, "Il Bell'Antonio," has followed up with another sure festival contender by same director, Mauro Bolognini: "La Viaccia." Currently shooting, "L'Accattone," first pic l[illegible] Pasolini. Future: "D'Amore si Muore," and "Metello," from the novel by Vasco Pratolini, to be directed by Gillo Pontecorvo ("Kapo"). Bini has also formed a co-op group for series of pix, which includes directors Mario Monicelli and Luigi Comencini, and writers Age and Scarpelli. Also on Arco agenda: "The New Angels," by Guerrini and Gregoretti.

ATLANTICA Marco Vicario's company had a b.o. winner in "The Slave of Rome." Now starting: "The Great Gladiator," followed by "Scipio Africanus" and "Divine Comedy."

CHAMPION Carlo Ponti made "Two Women," the DeSica-directed Sophia Loren starrer under Champion banner, will follow up with another Loren item in combo with Maleno Malenotti: "Madame Sans-Gene." Among many other plans are "I Sequestrati di Altona," with DeSica directing.

CINERIZ Giant slate for Angelo Rizzoli's firm. Ready for release is Rene Clement's "The Joy of Living," while company plans call for a fourth in "Don Camillio" series, a new "Count of Monte Cristo," "Dreams Die at Dawn," "A Dog's World," "The Woman Around the World," and a new pic by Federico Fellini whose "La Dolca Vita" was this company's biggest grosser. Cineriz is counting on Renato Castellani's current "The Bandit" as a sure Festival contender during the year. Now being cut.

CEI-INCOM Sandro Pallavicini recently took over reins of company and is shaping its production-distrib policy. Plans to be announced shortly. Busy also in other fields: shorts, etc.

CINO DEL DUCA Recent Italian productions for this French-headquartered company include "Il Sicario" and "Le Baccanti." Other plans being shaped.

CONCORDIA New company combines production savvy of Carlo Ponti and Antonio Cervi. Major project of moment: "Boccaccio '70," directed by Vittorio DeSica, Federico Fellini, Mario Monicelli, and Luchino Visconti. Others: "La Noia," from the A. Moravia bestseller; "L'Arialda," from play by Testori; "Leon Morin, Priest." Budgets already top $4,000,000.

DEAR FILMS Robert Haggiag's company, heretofore mainly occupied as exclusive releaser for UA in Italy, now partnered in such production ventures as "El Cid," "Lolita," "Jessica."

DE LAURENTIIS At least three pix for Columbia release: Richard Fleischer's "Barabbas"; Guy Hamilton's "Two Enemies," with Alberto Sordi and David Niven; Vittorio DeSica's "The Last Judgment"; plus several other projects of major import and international scale. Such recent releases as "Crimen," "Tutti a Casa," "I Love, You Love," and others have also placed DeLaurentiis in the very top b.o. positions in this country.

DOCUMENTO Gianni Hecht Lucari's company has "Laura Nuda" and "Unexpected" ready for release, and is prepping several more, including "Disorder," "Black Soul" (Anima Nera), "The March on Rome," and "The Castaways of the Lost Island."

DONATI-CARPENTIERI Twin company toppers recently wound "Joseph and his Brethren" and "Maciste in the Land of Cyclops," will shoot "Maciste at the Court of Genghis Khan" in Hong Kong exteriors soon.

DUILIO Duilio Coletti, who produced and directed the successful "Under Ten Flags" for Dino DeLaurentiis (and Paramount), is now completing "Black City," starring Ernest Borgnine and Keenan Wynn under a similar deal. Duilio also is readying a couple of other projects for imminent start, including . . .

FAIR FILM Mario Cecchi Gori's plans include a pic for Dino DeLaurentiis: "The Italian Bandits," directed by Mario Camerini; Luigi Zampa's "Sentence of Death"; and "La Ragazza Miliardo."

FCC Alfred Jacob's firm is embarking on a series of co-productive ventures from its Rome base: "The Girls . . . Won't Wait," to be directed here by "Rosemarie" director Rolf Thiele, is likely first-off, followed by "Othello, the Accused." A Mario Lanza biopic, "Mario the Great" with Mario del Monaco in the lead as part of an exclusive pact linking tenor with FCC, and several others.

FEDERIZ is the name of the company formed by Rizzoli and Fellini. It will produce the new Fellini pic for Cineriz, and is planning a Mother Cabrini biofilm, with John Ford a probable director.

FONO ROMA Headed by Giulio Sbarigia, company has developed from a lab and distrib operation into a rounded organization now producing pix on its own: first off, "The Siege of Troy," a Steve Reeves starrer.

JOSEPH FRYD Long in import-export, Fryd is now branching out into production on own and/or in participation, has several properties in mulling stage.

GALATEA Busy on series of productions together with Lux and Vides, including "Giuliano," "An Italian Divorce," "One Day a Lion . . ." Lionello Santi's outfit is about to sign a deal with Paramount for production in Italy, beginning with "The Iron Man," starring Sidney Poitier. One of busiest sales-companies (abroad) for Italian producers, plans also include large number of pix on own, still to be announced.

GLOBE FILMS likewise turning to production on own under new policy set by topper Henry Lombroso. First pic on own was "Ambitious Girls." Upcoming are "Around the World in 80 Nights," "The Long Trail," "Chewing Gum and Spaghetti."

GLOMER Enzo Merolle's company has ambitious plans for this year: "Pontius Pilate," which Irving Rapper would direct; and "Malayan Magic," a feature documentary.

ILLIRIA Rodolphe Solmsen now partnered with Giorgio Agliani on a new pic to follow up his (UA-released) "Warlord of Crete": "Mutiny of the Desperate Women."

LUX FILM One of the pillars of the Italian industry. Just completed two pix with Tiberia Film: "The Wastrel" and "Horatii," former with Van Heflin, latter with Alan Ladd. Also partnered with Vides and Galatea on series of upcoming pix.

MALENOTTI follows up success of "Savage Innocents" with "Madame Sans Gene" (Sophia Loren), co-produced with Ponti, as well as "Italian Woman and Love," "Julius Caesar" and others, all to roll in Malenotti-Ponti's new Tirrenia Studios at Pisa.

MAX PRODUCTIONS Ottavio Poggi has specialized in spectacles for the International market, plans several more including the current "Nefertitis, Queen of the Nile," with Jeanne Crain and Vincent Price, and upcoming "The Black Pirate," with Price and Riccardo Montalban. Also on agenda: "Venus of the Pirates."

ROYAL FILMS Guido Giambartolomei has just completed "The Mongols" (Anita Ekberg-Jack Palance), now launches "Imperial Venus" on a $2,500,000 budget, with Gina Lollobrigida in the title role: also plans a "modern" Anita Ekberg starrer; a pic with Sylva Koscina (who's just signed an exclusive pact with Royal); and a big spectacle probably set in Yugoslavia.

SPA Achille Piazzi slating a new biceps epic to follow his current "Hercules Conquers Atlantis": "Hercules vs. The Vampire," to co-star Christopher Lee and Reg Park; also plans "Trip to the Orient," directed by Romolo Marcellini, and pic directed by Dino Risi based on F. Carpi's "The Swiss Cows."

TITANUS Goffredo Lombardo's company has just formed a new outfit with Metro for production of pix in this country (six in 3 years), but will also continue on its own, plans pix to be directed by such directors as Visconti, Zurlini, Rossi, Pietrangeli, Petri, and others. Currently embarked on big-scale item, "Sodom and Gomorrah" (directed by Robert Aldrich and starring Pier Angeli, Stewart Granger, Anouk Aimee, and many others, pic co-produced with Joseph Levine's Embassy Pictures.) Also on immediate slate: "Alboino and Rosmunda."

VIDES Franco Cristaldi has announced one of the company's most ambitious programs ever, in addition to pix currently in work as Lux-Vides-Galatea co-productions: "Salvatore Giuliano," "An Italian Divorce," "One Day a Lion . . .," etc. Upcoming are such items as "The Titans" (for UA release?), "Black Spartacus," "Marco Polo" with J. L. Belmondo, "Samson and the Giants," "Letter from Rome," "Day by Day," "Desperately," and others.

ZEBRA Morris Ergas' firm has deal with Columbia to release several pix. Currently winding "Vanina Vanini" under Roberto Rossellini's direction, stars "La Steppa" in Yugoslavia in May under Alberto Lattuada's direction, also has a deal with Mauro Bolognini for a pic, "Senility," with Roberto Rossellini for "A Woman a Day," among others. Zebra produced Italy's 1961 Oscar contender, "Kapo," as well as "General della Rovere," "Adua and her Friends," "Thou Shalt Not Kill." May produce a Susan Strausberg starrer, "Una Vita Violenta" (A Violent Life) from book by P. P. Pasolini.

San Remo's 19 Top Earners

Rome.

Out of 1,401 shown in Italy during the 10 years leading from January 1950 to September 1960 some 19 Italian-made features topped the billion Lire mark (roughly $1,600,000). These all-time winners are to receive a special "Premio Miliardo" award at ceremonies to be held soon in San Remo. They are:

"War and Peace" (DeLaurentiis).
"Tomorrow Is Too Late" (Amato).
"Tormento" Titanus).
"I Figli di Nessuno" (Titanus).
"Anna" DeLaurentiis- Ponti).
"Don Camillo" (Rizzoli).
"Bread, Love and Dreams" (Titanus).
"Bread, Love and Jealousy" (Titanus).
"Bread, Love and . . ." (Titanus).
"Giuseppe Verdi" Malenotti).
"Don Camillo" (Rizzoli).
"The Return of Don Camillo" (Rizzoli).
"Don Camillo and Peppone" (Rizzoli).
"The Most Beautiful Woman in the World" (Malenotti).
"Tempest" (DeLaurentiis).
"Europe by Night" (Avers).
"La Dolce Vita" (Amato-Rizzoli).
"The Great War" DeLaurentiis).
"Ulysses" (De Laurentiis).

These boxoffice winners are the product of eight producers: Giuseppe Amato, Dino DeLaurentiis, Renato Gualino, Fabio Jegher, Goffredo Lombardo, Maleno Malenotti, Carlo Ponti, Angelo Rizzoli.

Eight Italian and two French directors were responsible for the winning pix, to wit: Alessandro Blasetti, Mario Camerini, Luigi Comencini, Federico Fellini, Alberto Lattuada, Rafaello Matarazzo, Mario Monicelli, and Dino Risi; plus Julien Duvivier and Leonide Moguy.

MAGIC 'COME-ON' WORDS

Italy's Penchant for 'Night' and 'Nude' in Titles

Milan.

Title trends are nothing new in the film industry, and many companies have in fact owed their success to the exploitation of b.o.-rich veins, but situation, to some observers, is coming to a head in Italy.

It all began (again) with pic called "Europe at Night," documentary feature of lensed nitery numbers which became an instant success here, and was soon followed by "The World at Night."

In another vein, local product has recently been epidermically dubbed "Nude Laura," "Nude Odyssey," "Nude every night," "Naked Youth," "Nude for the Devil," "Naked every Evening" and, of course, there's been the Metro import, "Go Naked in the World."

Italo Pic Biz In A Mood to Kid Jutty-Chin Era

Rome.

Italian films are digging into the recent past with a vengeance in the most recent pic trend in a trend-prone industry: items set in the Fascist years, from the early twenties up to the liberation.

A good dozen such items are currently shooting or are on upcoming company rosters, and the end appears nowhere in sight; scripters are said to be looking frantically for some untouched theme or period touching on the "ventennio" (literally, the 20-year era). Material consists of a few spoofs, some documentary feature montage items, but the main accent at the moment is on the dramatic-heroic approach.

Such pix, naturally, are not new to the scene, and many of the early postwar classics ("Open City," "Paisan," "To Live in Peace," etc.) dealt with Fascist times. A ten-year forgive-and-forget period followed, during which few such items were made (Francesco Maselli's "I Sbandati" was one exception). Renewed interest followed the 1959 Venice click of Roberto Rossellini's "General della Rovere." This was followed by several others, including Rossellini's own "Era Notte a Roma," "That Long Night in '43," "The Tank of September 8th," "Violent Summer," "Two Women," "Back Home," and "Kapo" and "The Hunchback," the last two touching the subject indirectly.

Currently, two pix in the Fascists-vs.-Partisan manner are in work here: "Un Giorno da Leoni" (One Day a Lion) produced by Vides-Lux-Galatea, and "Tiro al Piccione" (Pigeon Shoot), latter starring Jacques Charrier. Mel Ferrer has just completed a starring role in another partisan pic, "Legge di Guerra." And there are many more to come, according to recent announcements.

Mussing Up Mussy

First of all, "Mussolini," a feature documentary being prepped by Galatea. Then such items as "I Fascisti" (The Fascists), "La Marcia su Roma" (The March on Rome), "Giacomo Matteotti"—concerning a martyr of the Regime, "Cronache del '22" (Stories of 1922), "La Ragazza di Bube," "Le Rose del Ventennio" (Roses of the Fascist years), and, slated for an October start, Rossellini's "Giovinezza, Giovinezza," from the w.k. blackshirt marching song.

Trend has caused some unfavorable reactions, predictably from neo-fascist groups (who occasionally raise a fuss at pic preem) in this country, but also from observers in the German orbit, who feel that uncovering past sores (with regard to German occupation, etc.) can do no good in the common-market European sphere of things.

Local observers are likewise wondering if a recent hassle involving the Italian government with RAI-TV, the local telenetwork, might have an influence on these pic projects as well in "toning down" the portrayal of the blackshirt era. Incident concerned a new tv series called "Tempo di Musica" (Music Time). After a first show which showed a very satirical approach to depiction of Fascist foibles, government intervened and asked that barbs be dulled. This was done, and to such a degree that local pundits are now wondering if the same will happen to pix touching on similar subjects.

Sam Marx Due in Rome

Hollywood.

Sam Marx, who is associated with Sam Jaffe in Italian production of "Damon and Pythias" for Metro global release, will produce two pix in Hollywood on his own after he completes "Pythias."

For the time being, Marx is casting and seeking director for pic to be made abroad. He leaves June 1 for Rome with film skedded to start Aug. 1 at Titanus or Cinecitta Studio.

Titles for both American pix are set but until scripts are finally worked out Marx will not disclose them.

HALF-OF-ITALY'S STARS ALIENS

Milan's Film Market

[The Growth of MIFED]

By DOTT. MICHELL GUIDO FRANCI

Milan.

April 12th, 1961 marked the start of the third session of that original venture which is the International Film, TV-Film, and Documentary Market of Milan, whose symbol—"MIFED"—has already garnered the practical support and open consensus of the film world.

VARIETY has already spoken of the MIFED, announcing not only its birth (April 1960), but also illustrating in detail its program, its technical organization, its range of expansion, its general and particular achievements, its promise of future development.

I am particularly grateful to the publication, which in Italy is considered the most important in its field; and which not only in Italian professional motion picture circles merits such widespread sympathy —for having offered me this welcome opportunity to illustrate, for its International Film Annual, some of the facets of our event which this spring takes place in coincidence with another great international event: the 34th Milan Trade Fair.

I must first of all reassure those who have yet to get a first-hand look at MIFED: there is no danger that the flurry of activity which surrounds the Fair with masses of visitors and exhibitors (of 120-odd categories of products and raw materials) will disturb the MIFED setup or its clients. True, the Fair boasts—or did in its last three editions—over 13,500 exhibitors and over 4,000,000 visitors; but the MIFED will not be disturbed by these unusual totals, set as it is in its own building where functionality and comfort are linked to other constructive and organizational details which defend its tranquility in an ideal manner.

In its "Meeting Center" and its "dependance," where 10 projection rooms are in operation, the MIFED is organized on the lines of a club, where only recognized producers, buyers, and sellers are admitted and where these people—in full equality of nationality, language, customs, doctrines, or filmic technique—have at their disposal all the modern needs designed so that harmonious working conditions can help achieve practical results in the most perfect manner and with the least possible expenditure of time and money.

This practical formula, which I consider original, is that which has given our "film, TV-film, and documentary market" its first elements of success. The formula is a simple one: to consider and treat exposed film—the condensed result of materials, ideas, technique, and work—as a product, or saleable matter, in its own right.

And the proof of this success is given, as always, by the comparison of figures for the first three sessions of MIFED: those for April, 1960, those for October, 1960, and those for the meeting which is currently under way. Here are the highlights:

	April '60	Oct. '60	April '61
Total participants:	174	243	165
of these, Producers:	63	73	79
others (buyers, sellers)	111	170	86
Films entered:	411	337	over 1,000
Participants by Continents
Africa:	4	3	3
America:	6	10	5
Asia:	7	8	31
Europe:	156	222	126
Oceania:	1	—	—

(Note: figures are partial for 1961; note major rise in attendance by Asian companies: rise in total of films shown, etc.)

I am pleased to tell readers of VARIETY at this point that this undisputed numerical progression has been followed—and this is noteworthy—by a similar qualitative rise; to such a degree that some of the major firms have found it necessary to "enter" their best productions while these are still in work. This spring session is noteworthy also, thanks to the unprecedentedly large number of Asian representatives, now over 30.

These men of Asia—together with the many others from all Continents—may have another special reason for their trip to Milan: they will have found in operation in the Palace of Nations, adjacent to the MIFED, a new initiative which one might say constitutes the compendium of all the mercantile activities which gather at this giant Milan Fair. This compendium, which we have called "International Trade Center," will function as catalyst of any and all human activity which has as its purpose the meeting of men intent in developing a relationship of exchange: be it in the field of art, of culture, of business, of tourism, etc.

It is my wish that the participants in the third MIFED—and with this wish I salute the readers of VARIETY also on behalf of my staff—will want to participate as well in this "social compendium" constituted by our International Trade Center, and will want to draw from it, not only for their particular professional interests, the creative force deriving from all initiatives which tend towards a better understanding among men.

Italy's B.O. Powerhouse Talent: Loren, Sordi & Federico Fellini

Rome.

Sophia Loren, Alberto Sordi, and Federico Fellini are respectively the Italian actress, actor, and director with the most drawing power in this country, according to a recent local survey of key-city first-run figures for 1960.

Top spot was rated by Miss Loren for b.o. results here of "Two Women" and "Bay of Naples." She was followed by Silvana Mangano ("Five Branded Women" and "Crimen"), Gina Lollobrigida ("Solomon and Sheba"), and newcomer Claudia Cardinale ("Girl with a Suitcase" and "Bell'Antonio").

Alberto Sordi was walkaway winner of the male race with four pix in the top brackets ("Gastone," "Crimen," "Tutti a Casa" and "Il Vigile"). Runner up is Vittorio Gassmann ("Crimen," "La Cambiale," "Il Mattatore"), followed by Marcello Mastroianni ("La Dolce Vita," "La Notte," "Bell'Antonio"), Nino Manfredi, Walter Chiari, Renato Rascel.

Federico Fellini's "La Dolce Vita" placed him well ahead of Luchino Visconti ("Rocco and his Brothers") as top-drawing director. Micheangelo Antonioni was number three with two pix, "Avventura" and "La Notte," followed by Vittorio DeSica ("Two Women"), Mauro Bolognini, Luigi Comencini, Luigi Zampa, Antonio Pietrangeli, Gillio Pontecorvo, Carlo Lizzani.

Noteworthy and key to changing taste of Italo public is the fact that all of the "top ten" directors have been known as qualiy filmmakers closer to the arty fringes than to the purely commercial pic. Many of them in fact have previously been highly praised by critics without ever having had a big boxoffice winner on their hands.

ENGLISH AS BIG BUSINESS ASSET

Rome.

Over 60% of the name players starred in Italian films during the past year and a half were foreigners. This startling statement is made here by the weekly, Giornale dello Spettacolo, after a careful perusal of credit lists for 1960 Italian films and including this year's roster to date as well.

English-language thesps (British and American) hold a leading 39.6% of the starring positions, followed by Italians (38.1%) and Frenchmen (22.3%).

Situation, which has understandably irked the local acting contingent, is the direct consequence of Italian producers' recent (and successful) bid for world markets, as well as the indirect result of a severe shortage of male and female talent in this country. In the male sector, dearth is so severe that the few top names are overworked: i.e. Marcello Mastroianni has made six pix in the past year, is backed solid for some time to come.

Generally speaking, Yank or British imports have taken over leads in biblical-mythological spectacles, or in some cases in "big" international items of more modern themes, such as "Under Ten Flags." The French stars, instead, are mostly imported for roles in modern quality pix, often directed by Luchino Visconti, Mauro Bolognini, Valerio Zurlini, Alberto Lattuada, etc., in which they play Italians and thus make up for the shortage of up-and-coming local talent to fill the roles.

Some recent imports from France, often for several local pix at a time, have been Alain Delon, Gerard Blain, Jean Marc Bory, Jacques Perrin, Jean Sorel, Jean Paul Belmondo, Samy Frey, Laurent Terzieff, Jean Claude Brialy, etc., matched on the distaff side by such names as Jeanne Moreau, Yvonne Fourneaux, Pascale Petit, Katherine Spaak, Jeanne Valerie, Mylene Demongeot, and many more. Total of 14 male and 18 femme stars have come from France in past year and half.

English-language contingent, however, is as noted the most numerous: some 55, the local compilation says, including actors, actresses, and "muscle men" who have cashed in on the current biceps rage. The following are some of the femme names who have recently made the trip: Joan Collins, Elaine Stewart, Chelo Alonso, Rhonda Fleming, Debra Paget, Jeanne Crain, Linda Cristal, Haya Harareet, Virginia Mayo, Sylvia Sims, Tina Louise, Ziva Rodann, Bella Cortez, Vera Untes, Barbara Belgeddes, Jayne Mansfield, as well as such semi-permanent Romans as Anita Ekberg and Ava Gardner.

Led by a trend-setting Steve Reeves, the muscle brigade has included Mark Forrest, Mickey Hargitay, Brad Harris, Reg Park, Bob Mathias, Ed Fury, Gordon Mitchell, Gordon Scott, Lex Barker, with others arriving seemingly every day.

What are Italy's "exports" in talent? With the exception of a few major and minor players exchanged with France and Spain on coproductions with those two countries, local talent which has made a name for itself abroad is all in the well-known category:

Quality Releases Feel Italo Censors Worse; Sexploitation Pix Untouched

Milan.

Censorship has undoubtedly been one of the biggest topics of 1960-61 in the field of Italian cinema, and the situation, which has reached a head in recent months with the seizure of several pix and with the trimming of innumerable others, is seriously worrying Italo pic toppers.

Trimmed down to bare essentials, the Italian film industry has in the past year been attacked from three sides: the government censorship office, the Italian courts (mostly here in Milan), and the Catholic Church. The last-named triggered one of its sharpest campaigns for pic morality after the release early in 1960 of "La Dolce Vita," and has continued along similar lines ever since. The Italian courts later stepped into the picture, banning several pix for the entire country, allowing some to be released later after cuts had been made. The Italian government entertainment office, finally, exercised its usual control mechanism by ordering cuts and/or refusing release permits to pix deemed immoral or violating one or more of the Italo taboos which include such disparate factors as nudity offense to police, harming national sentiments, or those of the army, church, etc.

Oddly enough, though often threatened, "La Dolce Vita" came through the censorship battle unscathed and went on to become Italy's biggest critical and boxoffice success of the postwar era. Not so its successors. "Rocco and his Brothers," despite a Venice prize, the Italian film critics award, and the Foreign Press Assn. kudo, was yanked from its Milan first run and held for weeks until some cuts were made and a "new" censorship device—the darkening of certain sequences so as to make details undistinguishable—imposed.

Others Clipped

"L'Avventura," Michelangelo Antonioni's Cannes prizewinner, likewise came a cropper here in Milan: seized for alleged "immorality," released after (relatively few) cuts. Ditto "I Dolci Inganni" (Sweet Deception), Alberto Lattuada's study of adolescent love, though this item was seized while already in third runs and held up for five months until some 100 feet were elided (including, sez director, a key sequence). Two more pix have been stopped in subsequent runs in Milan (and court edict is valid throughout Italy), but these are still held up: "Giornata Balorda" (Crazy Day) and "Labbra Rosse" (Red Lips).

The government censorship group, which ironically had passed on all the above pix before Milan courts ordered them seized (thus provoking pleas for a coordinated and authoritative single censor system), but had on its own exerted authority in nixing a release okay for the following pix: "Morte di un Amico" (Death of a Friend), "Ragazza in Vetrina" (Girl in Showcase); "Laura Nuda" (Nude Laura); "Odissea Nuda" (Nude Odyssey); "Il Gobbo" (The Hunchback); "Il Carabiniere."

Of these, "Amico" and "Gobbo" were later okayed after some modifications. "Vetrina" is said ready for an okay as is "Odissea," while "Laura Nura" and "Carabiniere" are still held up. Last-named reportedly will have to have several scenes re-shot and release, originally slated for last Easter, is now expected this fall.

In addition to these, here are only some of the titles of other Italian pix involved in censorial hassles of major or minor import: "Adua and her friends"; "Letters from a Novice"; "Il Rossetto" (The Lipstick); "Kapo" (excessive violence); "La Notte" (The Night); "Fantasmi a Roma" (Ghosts in Rome); "Giuseppe e i suoi Fratelli"; "L'Assassino"—in which all inference that two characters were police informers was reported ordered eliminated.

Dassin Protests

So much for Italian films, which this year have proved the choicest targets. There have been fewer (or at least less clamorous) incidents involving Yank features or those from other countries. "Never on Sunday" was trimmed, and director Jules Dassin threatened to have cut pic yanked and re-submitted for censorship, claiming 21 minutes scissored made pic "unrecognizable."

"The Third Sex," from Germany, was not granted a license, as was the case with "Thou Shalt Not Kill," Autant-Lara's Yugoslav-shot pic said to be anti-militaristic. The birth sequence from Ingmar Bergman's "Threshhold of Life" was ordered out (all Bergman films have been rated "unfit for minors" here), while director Andre Cayatte violently protested some cuts (nudity) in his Venice Grand Prix winner, "The Passage of the Rhine," even flying in from Paris to state his case.

Likewise trimmed were "Love and the Frenchwoman" and another French-made: "Les Annees Folles," though not in Franco footage but in Italian scenes (of Fascist years) added to this documentary recap of twenties and thirties, scenes which are said to have been felt of trouble-stirring potential in this country. Vice-versa "Candide," which had previously been banned for export by French authorities, is about to be released here.

The above sampling of major cases indicates how serious the problem has become. (It's especially irksome to observe here that recognized quality pix have been hardest hit, while openly sexploitation items have been virtually untouched) and why the industry is determined to reach a rapid and definitive solution which will avoid repetition of these hassles and above all eliminate the unpredictable way in which regulations are applied.

Currently being studied by the government is a proposed new censorship law which however has pleased few and is said unlikely to be passed. Industry orientation, said to have some government support (but considerable opposition from the influential Catholic Church) is towards self-censorship. ANICA topper Eitel Monaco, who plans to coordinate move with a general strengthening of his industry association via elimination of fly-by-night producers and enforcement of an ANICA seal, personally favors the German self-discipline scheme, hopes to be able to pattern local one along those lines.

Italians Strong; U.S. Films Dip

Rome

A non-final look at the seasonal b.o. figures for Italy shows that Italian product has continued to reinforce its position, mostly to the detriment of Yank imports, which in 1960 dropped another 2% to a new-low 48% of the local market, more than matched by a 4% rise for Italian pix.

This season, four out of first five, five out of first 10, and seven out of first 20 top-grossers are Italian, though the undisputed leader, "Ben-Hur," is of course Yank-made (ironically, it too was shot here).

In the distrib race, Dino DeLaurentiis and Metro are nip and tuck for the first position, though the Italo releaser is far ahead on a per-pic average. Number three belongs to another local firm, Titanus, well ahead of Dear Films which releases mostly UA product, 20th-Fox, Cineriz, Paramount, Warners, Ceiad-Columbia, and Universal, to wind up the first 10.

National totals find the U.S.A. in the lead, closely followed by Italy. Yank position will probably be firmed by end of season via currently-building figures, while Italo product is traditionally down-trended after Easter holidays, with only a few more big local-makes due before summer hiatus.

Upsurging Italy And Its Further 'Growth' Factor

By EITEL MONACO
(President, A.N.I.C.A.)

Rome.

The Italian Film Industry has in the current season confirmed the fact that it is in a phase of full expansion and development. Last year saw the largest total of feature films since the war go into production: 194 features were in fact started in our studios, as against the 163 of the previous year.

Of the 1960 total, 82 films are coproductions between Italian companies and those of nations linked with Italy by coproduction agreements. Other important features have been produced with the technical, artistic, and financial participation of the American industry. An interesting and important recent development characterizes the relationship between the Italian and American cinema: the creation of a new company thanks to the participation of two major firms, American and Italian respectively, for the production of films in Italy.

During 1960 moreover, Italian theatres have grossed 120 billion Lire, as against the 116 of the previous year and the 110 billion of 1958; the spectator total appears stabilized at about 750,000,000 per year; with these figures the Italian market has attained the first place in Europe.

But the foreign market has likewise given good results during the past year for the Italian cinema: over $30,000,000 earned by Italian product on various world markets, with 3,661 export contracts, as against 2,752 for 1959.

Question

A spontaneous question arises: what factors have determined such a vast difference in the economic development of Italian production, distribution, and exhibition as compared to that of so many other countries? Without doubt the principal merit must go to the recognized talent of our best writers, directors, and technicians, not forgetting for a moment the courage, the spirit of initiative, and above all the ability of our producers to create trends and types of films, often very different from one another, frequently new.

But all these different elements alone could not have created such favorable results, had they not been supported by wise and farseeing policy; for the policy of the Italian film industry has in fact always been directed along two main lines, both healthy and fruitful: free competition and international collaboration. Competition between exhibitors, in building and modernizing an ever greater number of theatres; open competition between distributors of Italian or foreign films, as well as between the producers themselves, fighting against the protective quota policies of so many other nations, while maintaining alive at home the continuous stimulus, for our own producers, of the best of foreign production. International collaboration, therefore, pushed to its full capability, be it with the support of coproduction or other forms of paired production (more than 500 features coproduced in ten years), be it with a liberal interpretation of the regulations relating to the recognition of a film's nationality.

Tax Barriers

Much more sparkling results might have been achieved if our industry had not had to face a series of obstacles along the way: first of all excessive taxation: while we were awaiting a second, substantial reduction of the various taxes which hit admissions to the tune of about $50,000,000 per year, we were recently faced with the threat of a fourth tax on admissions for a total of about $10,000,000: then we have had new and grave troubles concerning censorship, due to the contradictory and antiquated character of the regulations which still control the censorship of our films. The battles in this sector have been hard, and have had only favorable aspect: the recognition which is finally taking shape of the maturity of our film people in substituting the slow, complicated, and uneven approach of administrative and political organs, with a serene and constant effort towards self control by producers, distributors, and authors.

The year 1961 will be a decisive one for the economic future of the Italian industry: for before the end of the year a solution must be found not only for the problems of taxation and censorship, but also a new and organic legislation must be approved for the industry, a new law which will remain in force at least until the end of the transition period in the application of the Rome Pacts on the European Common Market, that is to say until 1969.

In the past few days, I have sponsored and presided over a general assembly of the Bureau International du Cinema. I felt it appropriate to point out once more to all the absence of true understanding, or even of a minimum of coordination between the various national and international Associations representing the various sectors of the film industry. Now that the modern means of communication and diffusion have reduced to a minimum the distances between nations and continents, it is absurd to believe that such major problems, for example, as that of the competition of Pay-TV, can be attacked and solved by the individual industries, or even worse, by the various sectors of each nation's film industry.

It is incredible how slowly this necessary international coordination between the various branches of the film industry is proceeding, while our direct antagonists, from radio to television, from mass tourism to the spread of motorization, are already reaping the profits of concrete and permanent international agreement.

The friendship, the esteem, the direct collaboration which for years have linked me to the American film industry allow me now to suggest a few points of benevolent criticism to that industry. For one, it should participate more actively in the work of the international organizations; it should have less fear of eventual conflicts with the well-known clauses of the United States' anti-trust legislation, and without in any way violating the competitive relationship existing within the world film industry, it should participate in a positive manner in the eventual efforts to defend the cinema from the disorderly and over-rapid invasion of other forms of entertainment and communication. How is it possible, for example, to establish a balance between the filmic and the video exploitation of filmed material, if this relationship is not studied and disciplined on an international level? Faced with State monopolies which control two thirds of world television, and the technical links—on a global level—of the various television stations, how is it conceivable that the relations between the motion picture and television be left up to the competence of the various national associations concerned, or events of the individual companies?

These are some of the question marks I have set forth in the recent Milan meeting of the B.I.C., and to these queries I hope to find an answer from the major exponents of each nation's film industry —an answer suited to the seriousness and urgency of the problems which have risen on the global horizon of our industry.

Yanks Top Aliens At Rome Own B.O.

Rome.

Yank talent copped all the top spots in a listing of drawing power of foreign stars and directors in Rome during 1960.

Shirley McLaine (who incidentally also won the acting prize in the 1960 Venice Film Fest) walked off with highest honors thanks to two pix: "Apartment" and "Can-Can," followed by Elizabeth Taylor for "Suddenly Last Summer." Third place, sez the local sheet, went to Dorothy MacGuire for "A Summer Place."

Male sector was dominated by Tony Curtis ("Who Was That Lady?" "Operation Petticoat"), Glenn Ford ("Gazebo," "It Started With a Kiss"), and Jack Lemmon ("Apartment"), followed by Frank Sinatra ("Oceans 11," "Can-Can"), Burt Lancaster ("The Unforgiven"), Yul Brinner ("Solomon and Sheba"), Cary Grant ("Operation Petticoat"), Paul Newman ("From the Terrace").

Alfred Hitchcock was rated top draw among foreign directors for "Psycho," with Ingmar Bergman runner-up with "The Seventh Seal" and "Wild Strawberries." Billy Wilder rates number three position for "Aapartment," followed by David Miller with "Midnight Lace," Andre Cayatte ("Passage of the Rhine"), Mark Robson ("From the Terrace"), Henry Hathaway, and Joseph Mankiewicz.

'MINORS FORBIDDEN' RATINGS UP IN ITALY

Rome.

Almost twice as many features were "forbidden to minors under 16 years" in Italy during 1960 as in the previous year. Totals for 1960 show 135 pix out of 496 examined were placed in the nixed category for a percentage of 27.21%. Of this total, 83 were foreign-made and 52 Italian. In 1959, only 77 features were judged unfit for minors.

An even more severe opinion of pic moves, comes from the Italian Catholic Film Center (CCC), which judged some 444 features during th past year, finding only 24 viewable by all. Other C.C.C. slottings include 16 pix for "all, with reservations"; 117 "for adults only"; 99 for "adults, with reservations"; 94 "discouraged for all"; 94 "excluded for all."

I film presentati da Hollywood (da «Ben-Hur» a «Venere in visone» a «Spartacus») hanno decisamente influito per la conquista del primo posto (oltre 5 miliardi), superando così la produzione nazionale che segue con quattro miliardi e 783 milioni. D'altronde osserviamo anche nel la graduatoria di distribuzione l'avanzata della produzione americana: la MGM e la 20th Century Fox si sono insediate rispettivamente al secondo e al quarto posto. La graduatoria relativa al rendimento medio dei film vede sempre al primo posto la Dino De Laurentiis con 158 milioni, cioè più del doppio rispetto al rendimento dei film delle altre aziende di distribuzione.

Rome, Feb. 14.

An unprecedented $17,000,000 four-film production program will be launched here within the next 30 days by producer Dino DeLaurentiis (this week voted top producer of 1960 by Italy's film critics), who thus lays claim to the role of No. 1 independent producer in the world. Believed here this is the biggest production schedule ever attempted by a European filmmaker. Four pix, three of them English-speaking and the fourth multi-lingual, are specifically intended for the world market.

First item is "Barabbas," budgeted at $10,000,000 with 100 speaking parts, 30,000 extras and five Hollywood "name" actors about to sign for leading roles. DeLaurentiis was expected to leave for N. Y. this week to personally jell deals as well as conclude a worldwide distrib deal with Columbia Pictures. "Barabbas" will also have some of the largest sets, including a huge reproduction of the city of Jerusalem. Story deals with a thief who was pardoned when Christ was crucified, and what this pardon did to the thief's life. Richard Fleischer directs.

"Two Enemies," listed as an "unusual World War II story," stars one of Italy's leading actors, Alberto Sordi, plus a top Hollywood name yet to be announced. Pic is to be directed by Guy Hamilton, with locations in Israel and Italy.

"Black City" is the third film on the DeLaurentiis slate, to be shot in Naples under the direction of Duilio Coletti, who recently made the popular "Under 10 Flags" for the same producer. This deals with the man who set himself up as King of Naples in the 1860's. It stars Ernest Borgnine.

No less than 131 star names from Hollywood, France, Britain, and Italy including Fernandel, Jimmy Durante, Ernest Borgnine, Simone Signoret Jack Palance, Alberto Sordi, Anita Ekberg, Vittorio Gassmann) will appear in an ambitious picture "The Last Judgment," directed by Vittorio DeSica from a screenplay by Cesare Zavattini. Locations in Naples, Rome, Switzerland, France and the U. S. are slated for this production, which tells of the reactions of various peoples around the globe to the news that the next day is to be Judgment day.

NOW IN PRODUCTION:

Directed by Luciano Salce. Screenplay, Salce, Maccari, Scola, Baratti, based on play by Maurice Hennequin and Paul Bilhaud; camera, Enrico Menczer; music, Armando Trobajoli; editor, Roberto Cinquini. At Metropolitan, Rome. Running time, 105 MINS.

Rome, Nov. 2.

Fragile but highly amusing bedroom farce, with many saleable points, will make this a surefire entry at home and of good export value for certain markets where its piquancy can be exploited.

Story is one of those intricate affairs involving miraculous Chinese pills whose aphrodisiac effects are soon noted on the various denizens of an Italian resort hotel. It gets plenty of laughs, thanks to a well gagged script, nicely paced direction by Luciano Salce, and risible performances by Nino Manfredi, Vittorio DeSica and Mitchell Kowal. Male audiences will find Sylva Koscina and Jeanne Valerie must-see added attractions as faithful wife and French mistress, respectively.

Technical credits, including Armando Trovajoli's functional musical scoring, are good. Hawk.

New Faces — Britain's Got 'Em

By DICK RICHARDS

London.

Only an optimist, an idiot or an agent (or, maybe, an optimistic, idiotic agent) expects new screen talent to just spring up. But without some new thesping prospects each year a nation's commercial chances are as bleak as Elvis Presley at the Met. It's good, therefore, to be able to signal that Britain has dug up some fresh, potentially profitable film talent.

The contract list, which took a sharp nosedive 12 months ago, is still on the slide. (See separate list herewith.) More and more artists prefer to "go it alone." More and more companies are cautious of saddling themselves with expensive thesping stock except on a strictly picture by picture basis. This time last year 45 film artists held solid contracts. Now, it's shrunk to 38, with 15 performers having been shed from the overall list and eight newcomers welcomed into the uncertain field.

Associated British, with 15 artists as against 14 last year, is the only company that seems interested in keeping a solid little knot of talent on which to draw. Its lost Peter Arne and Alan White, but added two young actors who have yet to make their marks, John Lee and John Turner, and a foreign glamor-puss, Elke Sommer, who gets her first chance in a comedy called "Don't Bother to Knock" which stars Richard Todd, the "old reliable" of ABC's contract actors. Just after the war Rank's organization had around 120 contract artists, but year after year has retrenched. The names of Susan Beaumont, Beverly Brook, Anne Heywood, Donald Sinden and Norman Wisdom are missing from the roll-call, which means that Rank has only a contract list of six names, all male, consisting of Dirk Bogarde, Kenneth More, Eric Portman, Michael Craig, Keith Michell and Peter Finch.

This tendency for actors to prefer taking a freelance chance stems largely from the fact that new, exciting and profitable international film frontiers are opening up and the artists are getting a kick out of the prospect of one-picture deals in Hollywood and the ever expanding production realm of the Continent. Looking back, many young actors and actresses have seen that the coveted long-term contract, with all its security and weekly pay-check, has put the kiss of death on their careers, thanks to them having been shoved into poor pix and stodgy roles. They've been unable to tell their employers, blithely, to go take a running jump into the Thames.

As to Susannah

Among girls, of which Britain is sadly lacking in stellar values, her most often tagged as "The-Girl-Most-Likely-To-Succeed-In-1961" is a fresh-faced, wideeyed, blonde named Susannah Yorke. She is just 20, married and can speak French, Italian and Spanish, an asset nowadays in building up an international screen career. She had stage experience in stock and pantomime and has got away to a top start in pix. First, a stint in a Norman Wisdom film, then she played a smallish, but effective role as Alec Guinness' daughter in "Tunes of Glory" and then sailed into "Greengage Summer," starring opposite Kenneth More. At the Royal Film Show More introduced her sincerely as "a girl with undoubted magic star quality."

The only real doubt about young Miss York is her dedication of purpose. Asked how she faced the prospect of being a star she is quoted as saying: "I don't know about being a star. I don't even know whether I want to be an actress all my life." Some eager, yearning starlets would regard those remarks as rank treason. However, to be launched in Guinness, Wisdom and More films as an intro to the business has the smell of star success for Sweet Sue. We'll wait. We'll watch. We'll wager.

Among the other newish femmes who sound likely entries is Mary Peach. She's another blonde, a round-faced young South African who was signed up on a seven-year commercial tv contract, which failed to jell. But she made a most useful impact with Peter Finch in "No Love for Johnnie," and producer Betty E. Box and director Ralph Thomas, who made that film, have put her under a personal seven-year contract. Miss Box and Thomas are shrewd operators and, though it's early days to nominate Miss Peach as a marquee name, she's a sound gamble.

The Mills Girls

Hayley Mills, the "Pollyanna" moppet, was mentioned last year in this equivalent piece as an undoubted future star and the prediction can be repeated with glib confidence. She seems unspoiled, has a natural instinct for thesping and has the advantage of guidance from her parents, actor John Mills and playwright Mary Hayley Bell. Hayley's elder sister, Juliet, has an equally bright future. She has long been tied up in the profitable legit chore of "Five Finger Exercise," followed by "Peter Pan," but now she's embarking on films by playing Michael Redgrave's daughter in a new comedy. Then there's Billie Whitelaw, another recruit from television. Miss Whitelaw is an older, more mature actress than the gals already named, but in film after film, "No Love For Johnnie," "Mr. Topaze," and half-a-dozen others, the intelligent Whitelaw personality has hit the jackpot.

Unfortunately, it doesn't take long to run the rule over the rest of the young available distaff talent. Love for the theatre is, temporarily, holding back the film careers of such useful aspirants as Maggie Smith, Elizabeth Sellars, Vanessa Redgrave, Dorothy Tutin and Mary Ure, though the latter is noticeably showing more interest in pix since her click in "Sons and Lovers."

Pert Wendy Craig, a slim redhead with a subtle, brooding talent, has also been lengthily tied up with the legit stage, while the film studios have been screaming for her services. Soon, however, she gets her chance in a forthcoming film with Susan Hayward and Stewart Granger and, if her latent ability stands up to its promise, should soon be up among the leaders of the new blood.

One K. O. for R. R.

Rachel Roberts scored a knockout triumph in "Saturday Night and Sunday Morning," but hasn't yet followed it up, being apparently content with appearing before the newspaper cameras as the constant dinner companion of Rex Harrison in various parts of Europe. Joan Plowright, another biz British prospect, following "The Entertainer," has also been busy in other ways, what with "A Taste of Honey" on Broadway and a marriage.

Looking back on last year's report Heather Sears, Virginia Maskell, Janette Scott, Gwen Watford and Maxine Audley have made no real progress since then. This is particularly disappointing in the cases of the Misses Watford and Audley, who have style, charm and wit, but apparently no savvy in grabbing the roles that hit the headlines and establish careers. For some time Sylvia Syms has been Britain's hottest juve and continues to be one of its most dependable investments, but this year her career will have to take a slight recession on account of a date with Ol' Man Stork.

Liz Fraser, tagged last year as a bright, light comedienne in danger of being type-cast as a wiggly, goodtime blonde, has been. Finally, there's Shirley Anne Field, who for some time has been better known as lens-fodder at film previews than on the screen, is now being taken more seriously. This is due to promising appearances in "Saturday Night And Sunday Morning" and "The Entertainer," and this could be Miss Field's year of arrival.

So mark down the names of Susannah York, Mary Peach, Billie Whitelaw, Wendy Craig, Mary Ure, Hayley Mills and Shirley Anne Field as the potential tab-buying bait among Britain's young actresses. Always providing someone gets around to writing some screen parts for British women.

Finney & O'Toole

The two male names most talked about are Albert Finney and Peter O'Toole, neither of whom rated two centsworth of gum this time last year. Finney is a cocky, determined, nonconformist, stocky actor who is something of a problem boy. He hit the jackpot with that by now well known film, "Saturday Morning Etc." He could have played Lawrence of Arabia in Sam Spiegel's desert epic, but he argued at being put under contract. He could be playing the title role of the film "Billy Liar," but the company to which he was committed for the film failed to land the rights. So he is still playing "Billy Liar" on the stage. But when he resumes his onslaught on the British film scene he's going to be a name with which to reckon.

Meanwhile, O'Toole has taken on the film role of Lawrence, and this could steer him swiftly upward. O'Toole is another of the now fashionable "don't-give-a-damn-for-the rules" school of British actors but he stood out in smallish roles with Aldo Ray in "The Day They Robbed The Bank Of England" and with Peter Finch in Walt Disney's "Kidnapped." He's certainly one of Britain's obvious bets. Richard Harris is another virile, slightly undisciplined actor who has made a hit in "The Long And The Short And The Tall." He's contracted to Associated-British and casting director Robert [illegible] rates him highly. Another newish young man is Ronald Lewis, who is now making his first Hollywood pic and should be a more than useful British asset if he gets the full Columbia treatment.

John Mills, who appeared to good effect in "The Long And The Tall" and "The Sandowners" is a young Australian who is also worthy of watching in the immediate future. Unfortunately a long tv series has claimed Patrick McGoohan, an actor who is not unlike Richard Widmark, and has everything it takes for stardom. But he'll be back.

The Standbys

Britain still has a reliable bunch of male steadies. Dirk Bogarde, Peter Finch (though the long "Cleopatra" layoff can't have done his progress much good), Richard Todd, Stanley Baker, Laurence Harvey, John Gregson, Richard Attenborough, Jack Hawkins (who is rightly hoping that "The Spinster," with Shirley MacLaine, will further spread his fame), Kenneth More and Alec Guinness. These are all gradually getting the international treatment which must boost their value in homegrown pictures.

But the comedy scene is perhaps the most interesting. Peter Sellers, single-handed, has probably done more than any other British actor, not excepting Guinness, to promote British films in the States. But Sellers is at the crossroads of a highly lucrative career. He is now accepted as more than just a fine character comedian. He is a very sensitive, subtle actor with an innate gift for producing perceptive smiles, as well as yocks. But the chances are that he is making too many films and turning a shade too distractingly to offbeat, serious characters.

Sellers directed himself in "Mr. Topaze" and, for the first time for quite awhile, was on the receiving end of some nasty critical blasts.

In the writer's view these were uncalled for especially as Sellers told VARIETY: "I hadn't intended directing 'Mr. Topaze,' but, by the time we were set to start we hadn't found a good enough director who we could afford.' Now Sellers says that though he is still interested in directing he will never be the helmsman again on one of his own. If Sellers sticks to acting he'll become an even bigger stellar draw, but the subjects of his next few films have to be decided very seriously.

Up From Video

Two top television comedians plunged into films during the past year. Charlie Drake, the half-pint sized extrovert, didn't fare too well with his first film, "Sands of the Desert," making the fatal mistake of hogging too much limelight at the expense of his acting colleagues. But he is far from discouraged, and rightly so. Tony Hancock didn't make this error in his first film, "The Rebel," and he was mostly acclaimed. But it is his next one, now in an early state of preparation, which will decide Hancock's chances of becoming one of Britain's screen "greats," as most people hope and anticipate. That goes, too, for Max Bygraves, whose earlier efforts have been so-so, but who is setting much store by his latest, "Spare The Rod" Terry-Thomas' screen future looks to be set fair, though, if he has his way, he will gradually abandon out-and-out comedy in favor of character roles such as [illegible] played by Sellers. That could be risky.

Anything can happen, of course, from Metro-British's bold decision to get the names of Spike Milligan and Eric Sykes on the contractual dotted line. Their eccentric sense of humor, which started with Peter Sellers and Harry Secombe in the Goon Show on the radio and telly and has now switched to the bigger screen could start a new, revolutionary form of film humor. Or, of course, it could flop with the dull thud of a layabout in Skid Row. Time, alone, can answer that one.

Running a critical eye over current and upcoming talent there need be no cause for depression in the British film camp. True, there's not much outstanding, blazing film genius to report over here, but how much is running loose anywhere else in the world of the cinema? Britain must be satisfied with its few talented and profitable crumbs and patiently and rationally use it whenever it is available from the theatre, television and foreign pix.

Anyway, we've always got the "Carry On" gang of trained imbeciles to keep the Union Jack flying in the States and earn a few bucks.

Ban Homo Pix In Canadian Province

Edmonton, Alta.

Alberta's board of censors banned four films and cut scenes from many U. S. and foreign releases in 1960. The banned films were "Suddenly Last Summer," "Smiles of a Summer Night," "Bramble Bush" and "The Third Sex."

Col. P. J. A. Fleming, chairman of the board, gave the following reasons:

"Suddenly Last Summer" (Columbia): "Although homosexuality may be suitable for some men and women, it is not fit for teenagers who make up so large a segment of the movie audience. The homosexual in the film uses his mother and a beautiful cousin as procurers and ends up being cannibalized by his victims." The board considered this made "a depraved and thoroughly shocking theme."

"Smiles of a Summer Night" (Ingmar Bergman — "The film claimed to be a comedy of love and marriage. This picture was found to be lewd, dissolute and licentious. It possibly reflects the social structure in a country (it was filmed in Sweden) where the welfare philosophy has been carried to new heights, but applying contemporary community standards, it completely disregards the moral code of this country by glorifying, excusing and presenting as desirable, promiscuous sex relations."

"Bramble Bush"—"Before denying approval, the film was discussed from every aspect with the aim of bringing it within the bounds of decency, discretion and good taste and so soften the propaganda impact of medical implications (euthanasia) involved. The board, however, could not reconcile itself to the pervading hopelessness, philosophic temper, and unrestrained, super-charged sex, which are dominant keynotes of this film."

"The Third Sex" (German)—The board found that the topic of the picture—homosexuality — coupled with seduction and prostitution, was condoning one evil to save another. The board could not accept the responsibility this picture could make on the morality and ethics of young people.

The board viewed a total of 1,015 first-print 35 m. and 70 m. films, and 1,267 16m films. Of the 35 and 70m films, some 467 scenes were cut from 123 films. Included were 108 scenes from 29 British films; 15 scenes from two American-Italian films; 28 scenes from six French films; 36 from six German films; three from one Italian film; 10 from one Italian-Spanish film, and 248 from 74 U. S. movies. No films were clipped to eliminate political propaganda.

The censors viewed 678 American, 146 British, and 44 Italian films.

The board rejected one 16m film from Germany. It made 14 cuts from seven British films, five deletions from two French films and 121 from 34 U. S. and Canadian films.

British Shop Stewards:

Tea For All But Overtime Optional

By HAROLD MYERS

London.

Tea up!

Ask any Hollywood producer or director who has never worked in a British film studio and he will fondly imagine that this cry is heard around the floor at odd intervals of the day interrupting production and generally delaying things.

Is it fact or fiction? Admittedly the British studio technician—just like all other 50 million Britons in this island—are tea addicts. The morning and afternoon cups of tea (affectionately known locally as "a cuppa") are part of a way of life. That goes just as much for the cast as for the plasterer, for the producer and director as for the electrician and carpenter.

The tea trolley in a British studio is just as familiar a sight as the coffee and soft drink trolley to be seen in Hollywood and, for that matter, in studios throughout the world. Yet it is completely erroneous to suggest that all work stops for tea. It is a myth that has gotten around over the years but with very little foundation to it.

More substantial, however, are the theories expres-ed overseas about the British shop stewards. In the main they are tough characters but have a tough job to do. Inevitably some are more understanding and sympathetic than others. Some believe it is their function in life to see that agreements are adhered to down to the last letter. Others believe that agreements should be observed basically in spirit. The majority hold the latter view.

Mr. Shop Steward

The British studio shop steward is probably a tougher nut than his opposite number in Hollywood, and there are a variety of reasons for this. Firstly, British studio employees are probably more union conscious, due to the history of recurring crises that have beset the British film industry for several decades. Booms and depressions have followed one another for the past 30 or 40 years and there is hardly an experienced craftsman in the studio who at one time or another has not been a crisis victim.

Since the end of World War II, many British studios have gone drak and production has suffered many cutbacks. In the early 50's, unemployment among studio workers reached an appalling level and thousands drifted out of the industry because there was no prospect of making a living in it. Inevitably a great deal of talent was lost for ever, but that was unavoidable in the circumstances.

So there is this historical background for tough unionism but an even more significant feature is the fact that with few exceptions, there is little continuity of employment. Technicians, like artists, are hired on a picture-to-picture basis. When the film is in the can they are out of a job until another assignment comes along.

So there is this historical background for tough unionism but an even more significant feature is the fact that with few exceptions, there is little continuity of employment. Technicians, like artists, are hired on a picture-to-picture basis. When the film is in the can they are out of a job until another assignment comes along.

In these circumstances, therefore, one can understand, though not necessarily agree with, the studio worker who declines to put in overtime on the theory that by doing so he would be hastening his own unemployment. Furthermore, the exceptionally high rate of income tax in the U. K. is little incentive to anyone to put in long periods of overtime as the Treasury takes too big a slice of the extra earnings.

Probably more than anything else it's this question of overtime that piques the employers. If a producer or director wants his unit to stay behind or to put in extra time at weekends, he has to go cap in hand to the shop steward for permission. And if the steward gives the thumbs down to the request—as does happen quite often—there is just nothing that can be done about it. The employers may pay the salaries but it is the steward who will decide whether their pay packets are to be temporarily swelled by extra work. Such refusals have occasionally put the producer behind schedule or involved a substantial waste of time the next morning in getting set up to film. That is just about the biggest complaint the producers have against the stewards. Some regard it as a form of dictatorship and resent it very strongly.

With the advent of television and particularly the rapid growth of commercial tv in the United Kingdom, most of the unemployment slack has been taken up, but those who are loyal to theatrical and film production still face the hazards of casual employment.

Oddly enough, while many Yanks believe that the British shop steward is someone to be avoided like the proverbial plague, the volume of American-financed production in Great Britain has grown considerably over past years. Metro have their own studios at Elstree and a steady volume of British production. 20th-Fox, Columbia, Paramount, Warner, etc., are all high on British production and the U. S. majors between them account for a substantial slice of the total volume of British pix made in any one year.

So the shop steward probably is not bad after all. There was one case a few years back when a Hollywood director was making a film in Britain and, like everyone else, on the floor, he had to hold a ticket in the local union. When the time came for the unit to elect its shop steward he asked whether he would be permitted to attend. He was not only allowed into the meeting but ended up by being voted into the shop stewardship. The director concerned is John Ford who at the time indicated that he regarded the appointment as a singular honor.

Another typical anecdote concerned Carl Foreman when he was completing "The Key," his first film under his own Open Road banner. At the end of shooting there was a little get together for the crew and the occasion ended with a presentation to Foreman by the unit. He says that he cannot recall anything comparable ever happening in a Hollywood studio—certainly not to him.

Dual Programming Rated 2d Best In Gt. Britain; Policy Encourages Inferior Features, Sez Boulting

By ROY NASH

London.

They were screening "Gone With the Wind" at a cinema in Britain's industrial Midlands—and, after the show some of the customers asked the manager why there was no second feature.

This story—told at a Birmingham branch meeting of the Cinematograph Exhibitors Assn.—spotlights a controversy which has been rumbling around for years in Britain's film industry, but has now been sparked into a fresh blaze of argument as a result of a recent edition of BBC Television's program "Picture Parade."

Roy Boulting, producer-director with his brother John, of such first feature hits as "Private's Progress" and "I'm All Right, Jack" went on the program to discuss second features with Arthur Steele, film critic of The Birmingham Mail. Both agreed the standard wasn't high enough and later Boulting went on record with this broadside: "The industry as a whole has to decide whether it is going to go on encouraging the production of second features to build up its programs or whether it will be better to give audiences one feature and a supporting program made up of good shorts." He also suggested an organized quiz of cinema audiences to find out whether second features were wanted.

Response to the tv program suggests they are not. The second feature bit brought in about 1,000 letters from viewers, biggest number ever received by the program and 88% of them gave second features a thumbs-down. The remaining 12% said they wanted second features, but didn't like the ones they were getting.

Few sections of the film industry would agree that this is indicative of feeling in the country as a whole. The general view is that the British, with their long-established love of value for money, still like a three-hour program which includes two long pix.

Hard-ticket shows like "The Nun's Story" or "South Pacific" can get away with a short or two only in support, although the "Wind" story shows that they risk complaints. In London's West End, too, a single pic program is the rule at first-run houses, while in some parts of Scotland where canny managers have reared the customers to expect a proper parsimony in running-times first-feature only shows arouse no adverse comment.

But almost anywhere else the audience demands a two-course cinematic meal and the industry's caterers are finding this increasingly difficult to supply.

Trouble really springs from Hollywood's decision to give up making B-pictures. Well-made, if not always very exciting as film art, these detective story series, family sagas and westerns were popular here. British filmgoers grew accustomed to starting their evenings' entertainment with an hour or so of Charlie Chan or the Jones Family and now they can't get out of the habit.

But, with the Hollywood supply cut off, British producers find their supporting program a problem. They can show reissues. They can try Continental pix, either dubbed or subtitled. Or they can depend on British-made "seconds" of which there are not nearly enough to go around, although, considering the harsh economies of the present situation, it is surprising there are so many.

Rental Range

It is generally agreed that any producer exclusively engaged on second features who spends more than $50,000 on one of his pix will be lucky to get his money back. At these prices, star names in the acting, writing, directing and technical departments just aren't available. Hence some of those complaints about quality.

But it is too perilous for second feature-makers to risk a bigger budget when their pictures are sold at flat rates—from, say, $7 for a three-day run in a small hall to, perhaps, $140 for a week's showing in a big one. One outfit, Archway Films, which had been turning out "seconds" for ten years, has temporarily gone out of production until it sees a chance of a better return for its money.

Says Archway topper Arthur Gelardi: "To make any real money, one is dependent on overseas showings and the trouble with the British second feature is that it has little appeal abroad."

But second features can be turned out profitably by larger outfits with a first feature program to help bring in the coin. One of these is Anglo-Amalgamated which along with its blockbusting "Carry On" series and other first features, turns out 12 to 15 second features a year. Some of these are hour-long thrillers from a backlog of Edgar Wallace stories owned by the company. Others are half-hour featurettes based on Scotland Yard cases.

The Wallace series costs around $70,000 a picture and the Scotland Yard skein around $28,000 each. They are turned out in a week or ten days by a special unit, which include, a liberal sprinkling of young talent, and, according to Anglo-Amalgamated topper Nat Cohen, yield a pretty profit from home cinema showings with a possibility of nifty overseas tv earnings later on.

Over the next two years Anglo-Amalgamated will spend $5,600,000 on a program of "worthwhile second features," Says Cohen: "We need as many as we can get."

Roy and John Boulting have also experimented recently in turning out what they call "superior second features." Back in the 1930's they entered the industry via the second feature route with a little number called "Consider Your Verdict," which they made in eight days for $5,180. They had to spend a bit more than that (in gold coin around $84,000) on "Suspect," first of their "Superior seconds." A neat Secret Service thriller, with a name cast—Peter Cushing, Tony Britton, Ian Bannen, Virginia Maskell—the pic has been well received by the critics, although not yet released for general showing.

Says Roy Boulting: "John and I were prompted to try to improve the quality of second features by the poorness of some of the supporting films one sees today. Frankly, we think that these substandard films are keeping people away from the cinema and we were afaid that our own first feature pictures might suffer from sharing the bill with them."

Meanwhile the whole question of second features has been discussed by the Joint Committee of the Five Associations, representing all the trade organizations of the industry, which has decided that the matter is one for the producers to settle.

There the matter rests for the moment, apart from a protest from British Film Producers Association President Arthur Watkins who has protested at what he considers a spot of buck-passing. Affirms Watkins: "This is an industry matter and it is up to the industry to reorganize the problems involved budget-wise and every-other-wise."

Reluctantly the British Concede Chap From Boston Shows Audacity

London.

"Let's do a Joe Levine."

That has become a standard in the terminology of British showmen ever since the Boston pioneer came to London little more than a year ago and startled the local industry with his ideas on promoting "Hercules Unchained." Yet, to date no one else has succeeded in "doing a Levine." Some have done a "quarter Levine," or even a "half Levine," but no further. His startling and expensive technique has so far not met a complete challenger.

It was in the early Spring of last year when the mild-mannered Levine came here and calmly proclaimed that he intended to spend a minimum of $168,000 on his campaign to launch "Hercules." True, the budget looked unimpressive alongside his million-dollar promotions in the United States, but it was sufficiently substantial to arouse British skeptics, not a few of whom thought it was an arrogant and extravagant method to sell a spectacular, if trashy, exploitation picture.

What happened subsequently is now history. The saturation technique which Levine had perfected earlier in his sledge-hammer approach in the United States, made just the identical impact in Britain. Though the release was vigorously panned by most of the critics here, the public responsed to the challenging drum-beat, to establish "Hercules" as the champ of the year at the b.o. wickets.

In actual cash terms, the amount of coin that Joe Levine set aside for his campaign was just about double any previous budget; but, as in the States, he was also going to use double the number of prints (subsequently upped to treble) to get the cash benefits of his campaign with the minimum of delay. Among the snide remarks that this evoked, with a germ of truth or logic to them, was one to the effect that he wanted to see the money rolling into the payboxes before word-of-mouth could break the spell for the entire project.

Coin Cannily Spent

Though the budget was a hefty one, the money was spent with utmost caution. Nothing was left to chance. Levine became the first Yank producer-distributor to embark on a countrywide tour and he held a series of meetings with theatremen in all key provincial cities. Regional meets were held with representatives of the Associated British circuit (the chain which was subsequently to play "Hercules") and with the independents, and the campaign was adapted to suit the needs of each area. It was a case of taking advice from experienced men on the spot, and resulted in mutual respect. It also yielded something more significant. One expert has estimated that the personal efforts made by regional managers garnered an addition half-a-million dollars worth of publicity which contributed to the eventual record gross.

One lesson which was learned from these round-table meetings was that British showmen prefer sincerity to blah, cautious restraint to over-confidence. That sincerity was demonstrated in one small way when, at the end of each sesh, the specially prepared campaign books were always collected and taken back to the theatre, whereas in America Levine found they were often left behind on the table.

Other 'Epics' Follow

There have been many criticisms of Levine's methods, and one of the more substantial beefs complained that he had done serious harm to the industry he served so enthusiastically by luring the stay-at-homes to see a film of indifferent quality, and thus not encouraging them to return to the cinema in a hurry. Be that as it may, he has undeniably set a standard for showmanship and encouraged other producers to set their sights higher and think big.

Since the saturation playoff of "Hercules," a number of comparable spectacles, including some Steve Reeve starrers, have gone the rounds in the United Kingdom, and though they've done well enough at the boxoffice, not one has approached the million-dollar plus gross racked up by Levine. There is, presumably, a moral or lesson in that.

Many yarns have been circulating to describe Joe Levine's generosity and humanity. There was one little instance in Manchester when he insisted on sharing his hotel accommodation with the publicists accompanying him on his tour, rather than have them go to another hotel. Another gesture is particularly typical. Levine announced some time back a showmanship contest with two prizes (one for an ABC manager and the other for an indie) of an all-expense trip to the United States. The winners will be announced shortly, but meantime he has quietly left instructions that they are also to be presented with a complete set of baggage, just in case their own suitcases are not adequate.

RATIONED & RATIONAL FESTS

British Film Censorship Today

By JOHN TREVELYAN

(Secretary of the British Board of Film Censors)

London.

It has been suggested to me that readers of VARIETY would be interested to know something about present problems in film censorship in Britain. Our job is always full of problems, but I will try to pick out some of the high-spots.

First there is growing criticism of the increase in "X" certificate pictures, the pictures that children under 16 are not allowed to see. It is true that there has been a considerable increase. In 1955 the number of pictures put in the "X" category was 35. In 1958 the number was 71. Last year, 1960, the number was 98. We may well get over 100 this year. The reason for this is largely that there seems to be a growing demand for the type of picture that is attractive to the young movie-goer. A recent survey has shown that 67% of the average cinema audience in Britain are young adults aged between 16 and 34. This is significant and supports the view that the family-audience has largely disappeared. Middle-aged and older people are staying at home and getting their entertainment from television.

The "X" category was introduced 10 years ago to make it possible for adult movie-goers to see pictures that this Board would not like children to see. There have been a good many really good "X" pictures, but some people have used the category to make pictures of a sensational and exploitable kind, and it is these pictures that have produced criticism. There have also been some continental "X" pictures that have exploited sexual themes more frankly than most British or American pictures. Much of the criticism is made by people who have not seen the pictures, but have got a bad impression of them from their titles and from sensational publicity. When the principal theatres in a small town are all running "X" pictures, and the hoardings and theatres are covered with this kind of publicity material, even reasonable people get the impression that the film industry is selling pornography, sex and violence to the younger generation. We cannot control this since film publicity and exploitation are not censored in Britain, but the industry recognizes its dangers and is trying to do something about it.

No 'X' in U. S. A.

Of course in the United States there is no category system, and therefore no "X" certificate. But film-makers reasonably enough want to make pictures on adult themes. This is possible within the limits prescribed by the Code, but the Code usually makes it difficult for a film-maker to go as far as he could if he had the protection of an "X" category. As a result we get a fair number of American pictures which, though basically suitable for our "A" category, contain some material, usually dialog, that we would like to eliminate. Sometimes this is difficult to do without damage to the picture's artistic or entertainment value. So we either have to put the picture in the "X" category or take the risk of criticism by passing it in the "A" category. If such a picture has to run with an "X" certificate some distributors, appreciating that its "X" attraction is not strong, tend to step up the publicity to overcome this, and this gives the public the impression that we are overgenerous in what we allow children to see. We think that the best solution to the problem would be to sub-divide our "A" category so that pictures that approach the "X" level are classified "AA," and pictures that approach the "U" level are classified "A." This would provide a strong warning to responsible parents when they see a picture classified "AA." At the same time a picture classified "AA" might well attract the young audience that likes "X" films more than if it had just the present "A" classification. This proposal is now under discussion with the municipal authorities in Britain which have legal powers of censorship. Their approval is needed before it can be introduced.

Censor TV, Too

Censorship of television has been much in the news. Most people seem to think that there is no censorship of television in Britain. This is not true, but television censorship is dealt with internally and not by an outside body like the British Board of Film Censors. I do not think it would be a good thing if one censorship board controlled both the films and television, but I do think that both forms of entertainment should adopt roughly the same standards. This will doubtless be one of the matters to be discussed by the Government Committee on the Future of Broadcasting. It is less important for there to be roughly the same standards in censorship of plays for the live theatre since the theatre audience is much smaller than the movie theatre audience or the television audience, and is largely adult.

Violence on the screen continues to give us more trouble than sex. British audiences accept a fair degree of frankness in sex-scenes, especially in pictures that are covered by our "X" certificate. But excessive violence always produces criticism that is dangerous for the industry. The strongest criticism is focused on pictures showing juvenile violence, and we try to keep this off British screens as far as possible. A picture showing juvenile violence or menace may have a good moral, but this is of less weight to a young audience than the attraction of the violence shown. We do not wish to intensify our problems of juvenile delinquency and will take no risk with this kind of picture.

In our censorship we have no book of rules, or Code, to work on, so we can consider each picture on its merits. There is therefore no automatic solution to any particular problem. I believe that this is the most intelligent form of censorship.

Attendance Off, Theatres Close, But ABC in High

London.

An alltime record for the company was revealed by D. J. (Jack) Goodlatte, managing director of Associated British Cinemas, speaking at a May Fair Hotel dinner to honor the champion showman within the organization. He said the company had taken in more money at the boxoffice this year than ever before despite the closure of theatres and the drop in attendance. The record results, he said, will be confirmed when the corporation's annual report and accounts are published later this year.

Chairman of the dinner, William Cartlidge, assistant managing director of ABC, commented on the growing vandalism in cinemas and said that to help theatre managers, extra emergency lighting was being arranged which could be switched on at moment's notice to pinpoint the main areas of disturbance.

The managers, he said, had a difficult job in endeavoring to blacklist offenders without driving away the innocent. It was their job to retain the goodwill of the teenagers because without their patronage the attendance figures would be seriously affected.

Cartlidge revealed that 12 months ago he tried to get a major circuit to join them in a scheme designed to stamp out hooliganism in cinemas in the London areas, particularly on Sunday. Unfortunately, the circuit concerned thought they had no problem.

TOO MANY BRING CATCALLS & BOOS

By ARTHUR WATKINS

(President, International Federation of Film Producers Association)

London.

Are there too many film festivals? For some years this question has been causing concern to the International Federation of Film Producers Association.

Not because we want to do anything to prevent a country from organizing a film festival which is usually a lot of fun as well as an event of artistic and commercial value.

No, our worry is that if the number of festivals continues to rise there may not be enough festival films to go around and, inevitably, the quality of festivals will go down.

At the moment about 20 festivals are held every year. Suppose this should go up to 30. The result, I feel, would be that the organizers would have the greatest difficulty in finding the required number of films of the high standard a festival should demand. Perhaps there just isn't enough talent in the world to make them.

Heavily Scheduled, Year Of Fests Starts Pronto

Then there is the problem of the delegations. Consider the festival year. It starts in January with Mar Del Piata (Argentina) and Punta Del Este (Uruguay). Then in February comes Oberhausen (West Germany, for short films) and, in March, Cartagena (Columbia). In April, there is Valladolid. In May, comes Cannes and, in June, Beirut and Berlin. July has four festivals — Vancouver, San Sebastian, Locarno and Moscow, which is assuming increasing importance. August sees another four—Montreal, Edinburgh, Stratford (Ontario) and Venice. September brings Cork. In October, there are London and Trento (Italy) and, in November, the year winds up with San Francisco and Mexico City.

Any film producer who agreed to serve as a delegate to them all would be so busy globe-trotting that he would hardly have any time left to produce films.

The answer to both these questions, surely, must be to keep the number of festivals down. We of the International Federation want to maintain quality, both of films and of delegations, and yet be fair to everybody.

After a lot of discussion, our Council decided that any rationing scheme administered from the center just wasn't practical. It would involve, in effect, saying to countries "No festival for you this year."

Hesitate To Curtail The Pioneering Events

But it would be no use our asking festivals like Venice, Berlin or Cannes to suspend all operations for one year because the whole organization of these festivals is geared as an annual event. The organizers start planning next year's festival almost as soon as this year's festival is finished. Hotel reservations, travel bookings, tourist propaganda—everything is worked out on an annual basis.

Therefore, if we wanted to operate a central rationing scheme, we should be left with a rather arbitrary selection from the other smaller festivals. And who could decide which of them should be asked to drop their festivals? Not, I think, this Federation.

Instead we decided that a reduction in the number of festivals could only be achieved satisfactorily by an agreement among the festival organizers themselves.

We have let them know our feelings on this. While none of them has replied by saying "What a good idea—we're dropping our festival next year"—we have not received any protests and we hope that some voluntary rationing

LANGUAGE FILMS IN BRITAIN

By DAVID KINGSLEY

(Chairman and Managing Director, British Lion Films)

London.

There is a new internationalism in films today—and it presents new challenges to the major distributor.

Two-way traffic in films develops rapidly; and in Britain it means an ever-increasing flow of foreign language films for our theatres. Thus, our biggest challenge is to achieve the widest possible distribution for them—in a market that is accustomed to films in its own language.

We start with one great advantage. There are, in Britain, no import restrictions on foreign films; and the specialized theatres which show them are generally obliged to show only a 10% quota instead of the basic 30% that applies elsewhere. But clearly the selling and promotion of foreign language films in the United Kingdom calls for specialized handling—and from the outset, we have appreciated this. The proper exploitation of these films, I believe, calls for a two-pronged approach.

First—a specialized department to launch, promote and exploit them in the art houses of the big cities. In this way, existing markets can be carefully nurtured and, wherever possible, extended. At British Lion, we have achieved considerable success in this field by establishing such a special department directly responsible to the General Manager.

The second essential for the proper exploitation of these films in Britain is the kind of sales organization that only companies of the level of British Lion possess. For it is only through such an organization that successful foreign language films can achieve the full-scale follow-up that ensures their proper commercial exploitation. There is in fact a steadily increasing market for foreign language films in Britain—but not, it is important to note, in dubbed versions. The British public itself has quite definitely rejected them.

As to Lip-Sync

The reasons for this are simple. A public that is accustomed to British and American films with complete lip-synchronization is not prepared to accept the illusion-defying process of dubbing. There are very few exceptions. One of them is our own "Battle Inferno"—a German film that achieved very considerable success in a dubbed version, largely, I think, because of the great popularity of action war films in this country.

In general, however, we believe that a film of great artistic merit with appeal to the specialized audience, is far more acceptable in a sub-titled version. Even the exploitation film rarely succeeds when it is dubbed.

In this connection the handling of "La Dolce Vita" is of special interest. In Britain, it opened with tremendous commercial success in its sub-titled version. This is a success which would probably have eluded the film had it faced the critics' undoubted hostility to dubbed films. But will this success behind it, wider exploitation of a dubbed version may well become possible.

As with all of our distribution activities, we believe that our first duty is to the producer whose film we are selling. With foreign language films, we fulfil that duty by aiming for the widest possible commercial distribution and extending the markets beyond their conventional limits.

We do this by selecting our films with great care, by preparing them for our theatres with respect for the film-maker's intentions—and by the most active pursuit of every commercial opportunity.

Today, there is no doubt that the frontiers are extending for the foreign language film. With specialized service and constant contact with the exhibitor, we believe it is now possible for such films to achieve success in far wider fields than the "art house."

New Sunday In Canada

Ottawa.

First commercial Sunday moving pictures in Canada outside the Province of Quebec were shown April 9 in four northern Ontario theatres. Three of them are in Timmins, one in Cochrane, both mining towns.

Toronto will have its first screenings April 30. This revises decades of deadly-dull Sabbaths in Ontario following a citizens referendum in 1960.

British Contrast: Poor On Paper, Not Bad In Fact

By HAROLD MYERS

London

The vital statistics of the British film industry continue to reveal surprising contradictions. On paper business could not be worse. In fact pictures have rarely done better.

Taking 1948 as the peak postwar period, paid admissions today are roughly one-third of what they were. In 1948 tickets sold at the b.o. every year were in excess of $1,400-000,000. Today they have slumped to 520,000,000, a modest 10,000,000 a week. Theatres have closed at an alarming rate and others have been converted into more prosperous dance halls and bowling alleys. More than 1,600 theatres have shuttered since the beginning of 1955, of which 149 subsequently reopened. In the same period 43 new theatres had been built.

Contrast that bleak statistical background with these results.

"South Pacific" has just completed its third year prerelease engagement at the Dominion, Tottenham Court Road, and, now in its fourth year, is still taking an average of more than $16,000 a week.

(2)

"Ben-Hur" has completed more than 16 months at the Empire and is still averaging close to $20,000 a week. It could go on almost indefinitely but is faced with the problem of finding a satisfactory new home when the Empire is converted into a dance hall later in the Spring.

(3)

Cinerama has been a fabulous smash at the London Casino for almost seven years. Not one program has run for less than a year and some for considerably longer. The current attraction, "Search for Paradise," which has barely been in for a couple of months, is more than maintaining the average.

(4)

A comparative newcomer in the blockbuster stakes is "Spartacus," which is now in its sixth month at the Metropole, Victoria, and seems well set for a healthy engagement. The same more or less goes for "The Alamo" at the Astoria, although the latter is skedded to end next month to make way for "Exodus."

It's generally said and correctly accepted that the London West End does not represent the country at large. True. But figures for general release adequately substantiate the "back to the theatre movement" as a nation-wide development and not purely as a central London freak.

Only this month, for example, a new all time record for a London release engagement was set up for Walt Disney's "British film," "Swiss Family Robinson," in its first three weeks on the Odeon circuit it grossed just a shade under $400,000, putting it a handsome

'So. Pacific' Starts 4th Year in London Cinema

London.

Last Friday (21), "South Pacific" started its fourth year at the Dominion, Tottenham Court Road, where so far it has been seen by nearly 2,250,000 who have paid about $2,800,000 at the boxoffice.

To celebrate the third birthday and start of the fourth year, Magna Pictures has invited London teaching hospitals to take part in a draw to share $2,800 prize money for their nurses.

There also was a special birthday performance for 1,700 nurses who are normally on night duty at their hospitals. Kenneth More presented checks of $1,400, $840 and $560 to nurses of the prize winning hospitals.

Though the film has completed its third year and only just entered its fourth, 20th-Fox insists on referring to it as a fourth anniversary, presumably because the picture had played the Dominion Theatre on April 21 for four consecutive years.

British Contrast

$70,000 ahead of the previous Odeon champ, "Doctor in Love."

Almost at the same time on the rival Associated British circuit, Tony Hancock's first starring film, "The Rebel" has also just completed a record breaking engagement which looks to be close to $350,000. Both are remarkable achievements, and both are films which were given "U" censor's certificates, meaning, of course, that they are films fit for all the family to see. Possibly there is a moral in that, somewhere.

It is not without significance that, with a considerably smaller advertising budget, "The Rebel" outgrossed "Hercules Unchained" on which Joe Levine invested more than $160,000 for his saturation campaign last year, as well as "Saturday Night and Sunday Morning" and "The Long and the Short and the Tall."

Another interesting development within recent times has been the growing popularity of foreign language pix in Britain. The English, notoriously poor as a nation of linguists, have never taken kindly to either dubbed or sub-titled films and have preferred to take their film entertainment the easy way by choosing either British or Hollywood made features. Now, largely as a result of a long term pioneering effort by some of the long hair critics, the foreign language import is beginning to make quite an impact and has resulted in a very healthy offshoot of the more conventional side of the business. There are today a batch of companies specializing in importing foreign language films and, correspondingly, an increase in the number of theatres which play such imports as a regular policy. Gala Films, with its various international tie-ups, was one of the first to see the financial possibilities of foreign film exploitation and now have a countrywide chain of theatres in which to show such product.

Though the foreign language film rarely gets a circuit release, earning prospects have jumped substantially within the last 3-5 years. It is particularly significant that one of the U.S. majors should have acquired British rights to Italian "La Dolce Vita," and put it on at their West End showcase in a sub-titled revision. Not so long ago such a presentation would have been strictly for the arties.

One inevitable result of such a development has led to soaring prices for foreign films. Having once tasted British sterling and discovered that it blends very successfully with either French francs, Italian lire or United States dollars, the majority of foreign producers have decided they would like more. As a result asking prices have doubled and trebled within a matter of months and there is a genuine fear that some worthy pictures may be priced out of the country if this persists. There is obviously room for adjustment on both sides and doubtless a compromise will in due time be reached.

It is just about a year ago since the British industry was freed of admission tax and the relief granted in last year's budget was not only welcome but timely. It is sad to have to report that much of the benefit of that belated concession has now been swallowed by diminishing attendances. But without it more cinemas would have gone dark and more British pictures would have been in the red. There is still plenty of room for improvement, but, surprisingly, still scope for making a million. Two astute British showmen, for example, Nat Cohen and Stuart Levy, have shown that with their incredible "Carry On" series. They have hit a formula, which not only provides them with modest priced hits for the domestic market, but they are raking in the shekels from all over. In the last year even the United States succumbed to the appeal, and "Carry on Nurse," as one example, is destined for a US gross exceeding $1,500,000. Seeing that the picture cost $200,000 to make in the first place and grossed more than $850,000 domestically, that is pretty good gravy.

What Do You Hear From London?

By GERALD PRATLEY

London.

In spite of the mournful note about falling attendance there is no depression among film makers. Everyone I met was cheerful and full of enthusiasm. British companies are tremendously pleased with the growing prestige and commercial success of their films abroad, especially in the states.

London is a co-production centre these days for Anglo-American features. You are likely to meet as many Hollywood producers and stars here as British ones, many of them, like Stanley Donen, seeming to be most at home.

The large amount of American money being poured into productions here does not appear to arouse any resentment or fears of domination by Hollywood companies. The reason being that native British production is more than holding its own and flourishing along its characteristic lines.

Production falls roughly into four types: comedies, horror, social stories and what might be described as The Royal Court anti-Establishment films, the latest being "A Taste of Honey" which Tony Richardson is preparing to direct. There are so many "Carry-On" inspired comedies about that the players are going around in circles.

The awareness of social problems is prominently stated in Basil Dearden's "Victim," about the blackmailing of a distinguished lawyer (Dirk Bogarde) who is thought to be homosexual . . . "No Love for Johnnie" with Peter Finch is about politics . . . "Flame in the Streets" deals with a mixed marriage between a white girl and colored boy, played by Sylvia Syms and Johnny Sekka. "Wind of Change" concerns a white boy's hatred for the colored people presently moving into London in ever-increasing numbers.

"Lolita" is being filmed on a closed set, with Kubrick filming about a minute a day. "Everything has to be right about this film for Kubrick" said a studio rep . . . James Mason, Shelley Winters, Peter Sellers and Sue Lyon of the players seems perfect casting. James Harris hopes to get David Raksin to write the score.

Production Chatter

Three first-time directors at work: Bryan Forbes with "Whistle Down the Wind" being filmed on location in Lancashire under producer Richard Attenborough with young Hailey Mills . . . Jose Quintero with "The Roman Spring of Mrs. Stone" at Elstree with Vivien Leigh . . . and Peter Sellers with "Mr. Topaze."

Quintero would like to film "Long Day's Journey Into Night" if the present movie "turns out all right." Vivien Leigh looking forward to her world-tour with the Old Vic Company. Peter Sellers will not make any more records for the time being. Feels he exhausted that part of his career.

Farewell Bergman . . . Hail Antonini! the new idol of the highbrows with "L'Avventura," accompanied by long articles of praise in the journals. "La Dolce Vita" a colossal success . . . so also is "Saturday Night and Sunday Morning."

Victor Hoare of Lion-International still persevering with the inventor of a new compatible wide-screen system for which Michael Powell's long-delayed ballet movie "Honeymoon" is the guinea pig . . . Rudolph Mate editing his "Lion of Sparta" at Pinewood stopped long enough to regret that "film making for most of us is no longer the art is was" when he photographed Dreyer's "Joan of Arc." It's become "too expensive" . . . Young director-writer Sidney Furie from Canada had some caustic things to say about the Canadian government's failure to impose some kind of quota for native films and encourage home production during past years. "British and American companies take out all their profits and there's nothing left for production at home. As a result, the world's screens are empty of the Canadian image."

Lawrence Bachmann waiting for stories at MGM-British studios and offering hope for the unusual ones. Milton Holmes tried everywhere in vain to get his "A Matter of WHO" into production with Terry-Thomas and finally succeeded with Bachmann. Alex Nicol providing the American interest. Also at MGM is Arthur Kennedy providing the same interest for "Meet Miss Marple" with Margaret Rutherford, based on an Agatha Christie thriller.

Ronald Kinnoch at MGM still amazed at the astonishing success everywhere of "Village of the Damned." Incidentally the picture did not have the hypnotic eye effects in the prints shown in the UK. If they had, it would have been given an X certificate meaning out of bounds to children. So they left out the effects and settled for an A . . . Frank Godwin highly pleased with Richard Todd's first independent film, a comedy in color entitled "Don't Bother to Knock" . . . Producer Hugh Stewart pleased with reports from India and China of the popularity of Norman Wisdom comedies adding "and I haven't the faintest idea of what makes a Chinaman laugh" . . . but Norman still yearns for recognition in the US and hopes it might come about with his forthcoming UA film "There Was a Crooked Man."

Jack Clayton is back at work with "The Innocents" which is the new title for "Turn of the Screw" . . . Why the change? "For Obvious reasons I should think" replied Deborah Kerr . . . screenwriter Jack Davies had been to see "It Started in Naples" which started as a story by him and Michael Pertwee many years ago as a picture for Gracie Fields. He was quite taken by the skillful changes wrought by Melville Shaveleon and Jack Rose in turning it into a Clark Gable film!

Rising young actress Billie Whitelaw resting at home from overwork. Manos Hadjidakis, Greek composer whose score for "Never On Sunday" has brought him World-wide fame, has scored Fox's "The Lion of Sparta" . . . Jules Dassin in town before going back to Greece to film the life of Pericles . . . Anyone else for those good old badden times?

White, Coloured and Hindu Theatres Boom; South Africa Important Distribution Point

By EVELYN LEVISON

Johannesburg.

While the general economics in South Africa showed a downward trend in 1960, cinema distributors and exhibitors here report no drastic slackening of their trade. Racial crises, such as the demonstrations at Sharpeville and Langa, and events of national importance, viz. the Referendum, had a temporary adverse effect on boxoffice receipts, but with the restoration of calm in the first instance, and a general acceptance of the republican issue in the second, business rapidly reverted to normal.

For the first time in nearly 20 years, a rise in the price of cinema tickets, affecting three of the four major companies operating in South Africa, came into force in September of last year. This increase, applying only to Friday and Saturday performances, brings the price of seats in the majority of first-releases houses to approximately the same level. With the exception of His Majesty's ($2.10 top) and the Pigalle ($1.19 top), seats at main houses in Johannesburg range from 38c to 71c during the week, and from 45c to $1.05 on Fridays and Saturdays. Despite the rise, week-end shows at both first-release and suburban houses—where prices are proportionately lower—continue to attract capacity audiences. In the large centres, two fixed-hour performances daily, three on Fridays and four on Saturdays are usual for first-release houses; in the suburbs one performance nightly with two matinees during the week are the general rule. Cinemas throughout South Africa are closed on Sundays.

Usually Sold Ahead

Advance booking, European style, is available for all evening screenings and in the case of popular pix, Saturday performances are usually sold out before doors open. On eve of public holidays "midnite matinees" are well-patronized.

African Consolidated Theatres, largest and oldest of the four companies, originally founded by I. W. Schlesinger, now controlled by Spyros P. Skouras, and distributors of United Artists, Paramount, Warner Brothers, Universal, Allied Artists, J. Arthur Rank, and British Lion productions, lost one of its big central houses in Johannesburg last year when the Plaza was demolished to make way for a skyscraper office block.

Empire Films Ltd., importers of British and Continental picture, kept the number of first-release houses in this city to eight by opening The Pigalle, new deluxe intimate theatre which in spite of its higher-than-the-average prices is doing excellent business. Catering definitely to luxury trade, The Pigalle is situated not in the usual city cinema area, but slightly to the north in Braamfontein, fast becoming the centre of Johannesburg's live theatre. Braamfontein has the advantage of offering easier parking and being closer to wealthy residential suburbs whence it draws the bulk of its patrons. Pigalle seats only 600.

Following Pattern

Encouraged by the success of the Pigalle, William Boxer, managing-director Empire Films, is building similar-type houses in Cape Town and Bulawayo (Southern Rhodesia), both to be opened later this year. Negotiations for two further theatres, one in Pretoria, and one in Salisbury, the Southern Rhodesian capital, are well under way. By the end of 1961, in the Union of South Africa alone, this company, which opened shop in Johannesburg in 1951 with one theatre, The Monte Carlo, will have four houses in Johannesburg, one in Durban, one in East London, two in Pretoria, and five in Cape Town. Pix are imported from Norway, Germany, Japan, Sweden, Italy, France, Britain, America, Russia, Spain, and on occasion, India.

A further sign of confidence in this country's expanding film industry is the opening (April 11) of a $700,000 Cinerama Theatre in Johannesburg. Financed by Drama Entertainments Ltd., a syndicate of business and professional men, the theatre is one of three in the world designed specifically for the showing of Cinerama films. Seating 991 in an auditorium claimed by the managing-director and architect, N.I. Fink, to be acoustically perfect, with an 80 x 28 ft. image, and 18 speakers for flawless stereophonic sound, the theatre, which took six months to build, embodies all the latest in Cinerama devices. "This Is Cinerama," the first film to be released, is expected to draw audiences from all over the country. Price of seats varies from 91c to $2.10.

'Ben-Hur' Top of '60

Biggest money-spinner of 1960 was MGM's "Ben-Hur," which by arrangement with African Consolidated was screened in Johannesburg not at the Metro Theatre, but at its 1,240-seat His Majesty's. "Ben-Hur" ran for eight months in Johannesburg and three months at the Metro in Cape Town.

As from March of last year, MGM took over distribution of Columbia Pictures in Africa south of the Equator. This is the distributing area covered by all four companies, extending to Uganda and Kenya in the North, and including South West Africa and the Portuguese territory of Mozambique. "Pal Joey" and "Me And The Colonel" did well among initial Columbia releases. Lined up for screening within the next few weeks are "Once More With Feeling" and "Song Without End," both expected to attract healthy b.o. returns.

Prominent among pix doing better than the average 2-3 weeks which is normal run at most city houses were Warner Bros.' "Summer Place," United Artists' "The Apartment" and "Solomon And Sheba," the Associated-British comedy, "School For Scoundrels," and the Unifrance-Unitalia glamour pic, "Europe By Night."

Rise of Drive-Ins

A steady increase in the number of drive-in cinemas during the past year has brought the total in the country to over 50, of which 16 are clustered round Johannesburg and nearby mining towns. Newest addition to the ranks in Johannesburg itself is the Top Star, perched on an old mine-dump overlooking the city lights. In many rural areas screens stand up in isolated stretches of open veld, erected well beyond town boundaries where land is cheaper. To country-bred South Africans, accustomed to travel, distance is unimportant. Some drive-ins are owned by Fox, a few by independents, and a growing number controlled by Inrybelange, a combine with headquarters in Pretoria, government blessing, and ambitious plans for expanding its activities, particularly outside the big towns.

In al frescos on the outskirts of the larger centres, there are usually two screenings nightly—a family show at 7 p.m. and a later session with possible certificate restrictions at 9 p.m. Children under the age of 10 enter gratis in adults' autos.

Despite counter-attractions of sunshine and sport, children in South Africa are keenly pix-minded. Saturday morning shows, matinees, and early evening Saturday performances lure big juvenile audiences. Unless a film is given a certificate imposing age restrictions (these can be from 4-12, 4-18, and even 4-21, though this is rarely imposed and the most difficult for cinema managers to apply) children can attend performances unaccompanied by an adult.

Releases with age restrictions, currently, include UA's "Never On Sunday" (4-18) in its sixth week at His Majesty's, and a big hit: Warner Brothers' "Girl Of The Night" (4-18), and an Empire Films release at the Monte Carlo—"Lovers Of Montparnasse" (4-12).

Press Helpful

Newspaper advertisements do much to boost current and forthcoming flicks, ads appearing usually on leader pages. In Johannesburg dailies, cinemas command top positions in six columns, the drive-ins another two. Average ad varies from one to six inches, though important new offerings are frequently heralded by much more. Press critics tend to be severe in the big centres, but unlike their drama colleagues, have not the power to kill the attendances. Sunday papers give useful publicity. Both sponsored and non-commercial services of the South African Broadcasting Corp. air show biz features which offer advance publicity to outstanding pix.

Except in the Cape Province, where many country and suburban cinemas admit both Whites (downstairs) and Coloreds (upstairs), there is no mingling of Whites and Non-Whites in picture-houses. Non-Whites houses are open to all sections of the non-white community—Coloreds (half-castes), Blacks, Indians and Malays—but according to geographic situation, each cinema tends to serve predominantly one specific race group. In the African townships, audiences are made up almost exclusively of the Bantu peoples residing there. In Durban, which has a large Indian population, two cinemas screen only product from India, which have little appeal to other sections. Principal cinema in Durban frequented by Indians is the Shak Jehan, a luxury house owned by Raja, wealthy Indian merchants, where admission charges are on a par with first-release White cinemas. Another Indian combine, founded by A. I. Kajee-Moosa, controls a chain of Avalon cinemas through Natal, Cape Province and the Transvaal. Asians are interested in the entertainment business, and with their keen natural sense of finance, are usually successful.

Very few cinemas are owned by Africans, though some houses controlled by Whites or Indians have African managers.

The standard of comfort and entertainment in Non-White houses is on a par with their White parallel. Either air-conditioned or mechanically ventilated, seating is comfortable, sometimes more so than in small suburban cinemas in White areas. Prices are considerably lower than White equivalents, ranging from 15c. to 46c. For Indian pix, more costly to import, prices may be jacked up to 70c top. Children are admitted for 7c. All prices, as with White cinemas, include tax. Most houses have two shows a day, the afternoon performances proving the better attended, since transport presents problems for patrons relying on buses or trains. All types of pix released for general exhibition are shown, censorship chiefly directed at those stressing excessive violence or sex.

Most popular films with Africans are religious epics such as "The Ten Commandments" and "The Robe." Every Easter Monday an old French movie depicting the life of Christ has been screened continuously throughout throughout the day at one non-White house in Johannesburg for the past twenty years, and never fails to attract capacity audiences, hundreds invariably being turned away. Next in popularity are rock pix—particularly if starring Elvis Presley, a top favorite with Bantu cinemagoers. Biggest misfires are heavy dramas, tense situations more often than not invoking loud laughter. The average African does not seem to mind at what point he enters or leaves a picture, is apt to get excited as action peps up, and frequently gives vent to his emotions by talking back to the screen. As opposed to Blacks, the tastes of Coloured audiences is very similar to that of Whites. Chinese attend White cinemas.

Old Hokum Bucket Full As South African Studios Busy

Johannesburg.

Film production in South Africa, while still limited, has made greatest strides over the past 12 months. S. A. Screen Productions (controlled by Fox organization) has taken over from African Film Productions the 50-year-old Killarney Studios, with the result of much increased activity. Apart from two weekly newsreels, one English, one Afrikaans, Screen Productions are now turning out four Afrikaans-language features a year, plus documentaries and advertising films. These features, aimed at rural areas with their large percentage of Afrikaans-speaking filmgoers, are usually heavy dramas or unsophisticated comedies. New Afrikaans versions of old standbys like "Charley's Aunt" and "Daddy Long Legs" have proved surefire hits.

Film director Pierre de Wet has some 18 productions to his name. Gordon Vorster three, for which he has written his own stories. Vorster's dramas have introduced several new screen personalities, but top comedians still remain favourite de Wet discoveries, Al Debbo and Frederick Burgers. A Killarney pic takes an average of three months to complete. When released, it goes on circuit for about four years, playing practically every spot in South Africa where there is a cinema, or even a hall.

Jamie Uys, who has several Afrikaans successes to his credit, is now teamed up for an English picture with the British combine, Warwick Films. This is "The Hellions," a South African type Western now half completed, produced by Harold Huth, directed by Ken Annakin, and featuring British stars Richard Todd and Anne Aubrey. Supporting actors and extras totalling nearly a thousand have been recruited locally, and have taken over the little Transvaal town of Brits for most exterior shots.

"Tremor," an English-language pic about men trapped in a Rand gold mine, and starring British-Canadian actor Robert Beatty, has just been completed, Dennis Scully directing.

Also in the country presently is a Continental unit making a German pic, "Hot Land," a tale of dope and diamond smuggling. Imported stars are Michael Cramer and Italian actress Brigette Corel.

Advertising films (locally called Filmlets, or Filmads, the first made by Screen Productions, the second by Alexander Films, and running from 40 seconds to 2 minutes for Cinemascope "specials") are big business, being screened everywhere as a prelude to the program and during the intervals (All shows have intervals when ice cream, popcorn, cold drinks and candy stations in the foyer are in action). The biggest national and international marketers make use of this sales medium, and productions have achieved a high standard, some of the longer presentations winning awards at the International Film Festival at Cannes.

Japanese Theatre Patronage

Tokyo.

Following is a theatre-attendance chart for Japan:

Year	No. of Theatres	Attendance (in millions)	Per Capita Attendance
1935	1,508	185	2.6
1940	2,466	405	5.6
1945	1,237	211	2.9
1950	2,410	580	6.9
1955	5,184	885	9.9
1956	6,123	994	11.1
1957	6,865	1,099	12.3
1958	7,595	1,127	12.3
1959	7,400	1,088	11.7

Of the 7,400 theatre count at the end of 1959, 4880 houses show domestic films exclusively, 850 exhibit only imports, 1422 houses program both Japanese and foreign films, 38 theatres screen only newsreels and shorts while 210 houses are devoted to other assorted fare.

The 7,400 theatres had a total of 3,269,000 seats with 223 houses having more than 1,000 seats. Theatre count of larger cities was: Tokyo, 560: Osaka, 300; Nagoya, 131; Kobe, 89, Yokohama, 87; and Fukuoka, 76.

U.S. Decline, 1959 and 1960

Tokyo.

The b.o. slide of American pictures in Japan continued in 1960 with receipts for the U. S. majors during the first 10 months of the year showing a decrease of $1,212,500 as compared with the same period of the previous calendar annum. The falloff follows in the pattern of the last five years.

Comparative distribution receipts for U. S. majors listed below include earnings of newsreels and shorts as well as features. Figures for UA include receipts earned by Republic (they're now merged in Japan) and RKO totals include earnings of Disney product, which distributes through RKO of Japan. Figures are from Jan.-Oct. inclusive.

	1960	1959

Israeli Film Features' Urgent Need: Craftsmen, Showmen, and Markets

By JOSEPH LAPID

Tel Aviv.

It bothers the Israeli that they have not achieved more progress in making feature films. The aftermath of the coming of Otto Preminger is the sardonic complaint that the country that could create the "Exodus" story for history could not create it for the screen. This may be another way of grudgingly granting that what is lacking is know-how.

Meditating on the subject of how to make a b-2 film, Israeli pundits crack that first you make 100 pictures to learn the technique. And yet the parallel with Hollywood is too pretentious to stand up. The comparison which makes more sense is, say, Sweden, a small country, too, where a disproportionate number of films have become global commodities. Again there's the significant matter of a talent: Ingmar Bergman's.

What the Israeli "film industry" needs are good craftsmen. But such chaps have a real weakness for money. And you don't have money to pay them unless you sell your product. You can't sell your product if not made by craftsmen. Hence a vicious circle which even the United Jewish Appeal can't lick.

Self-Critical

Self-criticism, as every Russian knows, is the only way to improvement: Israeli film makers are far from satisfied with their own work and are striving for better. The first signs of real improvement were shown last year. Three features were made entirely by Israelis—script, director, actors, laboratory, etc.

Unfortunately the first one, "Rachel" is a runaway in the contest for the worst picture ever made. The second one, "They Were Ten," while acceptable, is far from being fully satisfying. The third one, "I Like Mike," a comedy, is quite delightful and often funny. Say it's not worse than many a "B" made in Hollywood. True, by Israeli standards its costs were disgraceful: nearly $100,000, a sum which a small country like Israel cannot recover since the chances for finding a big market abroad are rather slim. There is, however, some curiosity value in every Israeli pic shown abroad, especially in the U. S., but this is not enough to base a profit upon.

The two bigger Israeli studios—"Geva" and "Herzlia"—are therefore trying to make the best of a world-wide phenomena: coproduction. Countries like France can provide technicians, directors, even actors. And they will use the modern and cheaper Israeli facilities, the colorful scenery and sometimes quite monotonously shining Israeli sun. They will make good use also of the "movie-law" which provides government help and subsidies to producers. There is a special department in the Ministry of Commerce and Industry to help. The exchange rate for every dollar invested in pic-making in Israeli is 40% above the regular official rate. This is, certainly, the main incentive for foreigners. Beside that, the Israeli partner in the co-production will receive a government-backed loan and tax cuts.

Not The Cheapest

Israel is more expensive then the three countries where many co-productions are made: Greece, Spain and Yugoslavia. But then, Israeli living standards are in general higher then in those countries—from hotel equipment to the technical assistants, who not only speak English, but mean the same things as you do.

Presently a French-Israeli co-production is in the making in the Negev desert: the "Ten Desperate Men." And negotiations for a couple of other co-productions are under way with French, Spanish, Polish and—Persian producers. (In the Persian case, the Israelis are supposed to provide the know-how—a topsy-turvy affair!)

Finally great efforts are made to convince foreign—especially American—producers, that it is worthwhile to shoot their own pics here. They will get official help—blocking roads for instance, by the police.

"Exodus" was the test case. Though its budget was never disclosed it is clear that it cost much less than any of the big b.o. hits of the last season. Preminger, who is locally rated a difficult guy, praised the Israeli highly. He ought to.

Shooting soon starts on an Italo-American production: "The Two Enemies" previously named "Two Colonels." The pic, made by De Laurentis and Columbia will star David Niven and Alberto Sordi. Also Stanley Kramer will, in all probability, make "Glorious Brothers" in Israel.

Foreign producers are helped here not only because they bring in hard currency and boost the tourist trade by advertising the scenery, but also because they help to build up the local industry. Preminger for instance hired five young Israeli directors as his assistants. Naturally this was excellent experience. Ditto for some assistant camermen who worked under an American chief.

Israeli studios are well equipped, though small. There are some first-rate stage actors around. What Israel needs is a producer to invest and a director to make something of it. Any Irishman in Hollywood to volunteer?

'TARZAN' OFFSETTING GERMAN DELINQUENTS?

Frankfurt.

In the Kaiserslautern area it's been charged that gangster films have started a junior crime wave, but in the same area it's just been countercharged that "Tarzan" pix have offset the bad effect of the crime films.

Recently a band of young robbers calling themselves the "Al Capone gang," attacked and robbed elderly persons, creating a miniature crime wave until arrested. The Kaiserslautern area was aroused. Some groups were formed to combat the American gangster films that allegedly motivated the youths.

But now, it's been revealed that another band has been formed, with the opposite ideas in mind, as a result of the American pix. Headed by 18-year-old Harald Hauck, there is a new group called the "Tarzans." Members of the club follow the motto of "hear, see, help!" and are committed to do at least one good deed a week. They meet Wednesdays, and have to report to the Chief Tarzan what they have accomplished.

Sweden's 'Virgin Spring' Win Appeasing Bergman Coterie, But Importers Still Rap Oscar

The awarding of the best foreign film Oscar last week to Ingmar Bergman's "The Virgin Spring" should go a long way towards appeasing Sweden's film industry, which in earlier years was miffed when the Academy Awards consistently overlooked Bergman, but it will spur a renewed fight on the part of foreign film importers and distribs this side to get the Oscar rules changed, or, at least, supplemented.

The Bergman win also has the effect of pushing back the U. S. release date of Kingsley International's "La Verite," the Brigitte Bardot starrer which was the unsuccessful French nominee for the foreign Oscar. If "La Verite" had won, Kingsley was ready to put the pic into immediate release to cash in on the award.

Now, distrib is holding "La Verite" back until July, and may even wait until fall to put the picture out. Not only are those judged better business seasons, but the time lag will also erase that slight, but perhaps meaningful, stigma attached to a pic which has not taken the top honor.

Along with "La Dolce Vita," "La Verite" is regarded generally as one of the biggest potential foreign language grossers of 1961.

As was predicted by VARIETY about a month ago, the Bergman win has New York's importing fraternity wagging their heads in "I-told-you-so fashion. During the last three years, the Oscar-winning foreign language entry has always been the only one of the five nominees which has been in commercial release in the U. S. prior to the Academy of Motion Picture Arts & Sciences voting. This was true of "Black Orpheus" in 1960 and "Mon Oncle" in 1959. (This year's Mexican nominee, "Macario," was playing in Los Angeles but did not open till after the nominations.)

Through the Independent Film Importers & Distributors of America, the importers will renew their efforts to get the Academy to supplement eligibility to rules to include as potential nominees all those foreign language films which have opened in the States during the previous calendar year. Under the present setup, each film producing country can select one pic, from which group five final nominees are selected by the Academy.

Meanwhile, the final two nominees for this year's language Oscar still remain unsold in the U. S.—Yugoslavia's "The Ninth Circle" and Italy's "Kapo." Films Around the World reportedly was interested in acquiring "Circle" some weeks before the Oscar ceremonies but balked at the terms being asked. Distrib felt that because of "Circle's" stiff competition for the award (vs. "Spring" and "Verite") the best way to promote the pic was to put it on the market before the Oscar announcement and drumbeat it as a "nominee." It seems too late for that now.

BOXOFFICE TAKE IN AN AVERAGE TOKYO WEEK

Tokyo.

The following chart lists the weekly average receipts (excluding taxes) for Tokyo foreign film situations, including the 12 roadshow houses operating during the tabulated period and three general release chain of seven theatres each. Figures are based on first six months of 1960. Figure for Theatre Tokyo is far above normal expected biz for the house, but was beefed up by the run of "Ben-Hur" which opened during tabulated period.

Situation	Weekly B.O. Average
Toho:

Syria: Films & Popcorn & Ads

By ROGER BOWER

Damascus.

The film screen dominates popular entertainment here in Syria though in summer the International Fair looms large with the masses. A check for 1960 discloses that American product took about 75% of the playing time. Arabic features, produced in Cairo, accounted for the second largest quota, 15%. Italy came third with 5% of the market. Runners-up included Japanese, German and French product.

Arab taste runs mostly to action and or sex. If there is an historical background, that's a plus. Pictures such as "Some Like It Hot," "This Earth is Mine," "Home From the Hills," "Young Philadelphians," "A Summer Love," "Operation Petticoat," "Pillow Talk" and "Blue Angel" were hits, while, for example, the British-made, Oscar-winning "Room at the Top" barely eked out five days. Showmen thought it a great picture, but not enough voltage for the Arab taste.

Other foreign films that were strong at the local b.o. were the Italian films "Giant of Marathon" and "Night of Lucretia Borgia," and the German films "Tiger of Bengal" and "Torch of Love." Russian films haven't been exhibited here in two years, and for obvious reasons there have been no English and French entries.

The home product from Cairo does well even though technique still needs improving.

What about '61? Showmen feel that the Italian product will move up from 5% to press leadership of the American films. The office of Zachariah El-Taher, which handles the Italian films, is gearing its operation to this hunch. However, USA films remain best bet because of the variety of offerings plus their "action."

Here's an irony: in emulating the example of American-made Biblical spectacles like "10 Commandments" and "Ben-Hur," the Italians are not making it easy. For religious reasons these "Christian" epics cannot be shown in Moslem Syria. Hence Italy is multiplying the number of films not suitable here.

Meanwhile there are promises from Egypt of upgrading the Arabic features as to overall craftsmanship, camera, sound and lab work particularly.

Love 'Mahraleen'

Damascus fancies "Mahraleen Munrow" very much despite her marriage to the Jewish playwright Arthur Miller and her resultant boycott in Egypt. Esther Williams is another femme favorite with the Arabs as is Rita Hayworth. Richard Widmark and Gregory Peck may well be the top fave among the male stars.

Incidental intelligence on cinema in the mid-east: The matinee performance is around noon, though many houses open at 10 a.m. There (government and business offices close at 2 p.m.) For a good picture the three good houses for top prices are at 3, 6 and 9 p.m.

They don't exactly queue up for tickets here but rather assault the boxoffice, if a hit is current. Ticket seller has a chart of the house for each performance. He tells you what's left, you make your choice and he crosses of those locations writing the seat numbers on either end of your "laundry" ticket.

There are no reserved seats in the orchestra except for two to four rows raised slightly above the hoi-polloi. Recently this writer was the guest of a big wheel to see "The Mating Game." He happily announced he was able to secure two of the best seats in the house. These were in next to the last row of a huge balcony. Center of course. As far as can be determined the Arabs figure you get the best view of the outsize screen from there. Except for the climb, maybe they have something.

A show consists of the feature film, the Arab World newsreel and about 15 minutes of commercials. First comes the newsreel, then the commercials. You get about 10 one-minute films in color advertising about the same type of product that you see on tv at home. Some are in animation, all well done. They have either the hard or soft sell depending on the product.

Noting the absence of a cartoon, I asked why, seems that the Damascus exhibitor reasons that if the customers sit still for 15 minutes of commercials, why spend dough on Mickey Mouse?

Popcorn? Of course: Just clap your hands and you'll be served with dispatch. Please have the right change so you don't hold up the feature.

BERLIN FESTIVAL INTO 'BIG 3'

Tax-Relief Prestige Ratings

Frankfurt.

In West Germany, where the Film Classification Board's two designations, "especially outstanding," the first rating, and the second class of "outstanding," mean important tax relief to the theaters, it's just been shown that 21 foreign and two German full-length features won the first rating during the 1959-60 playing season.

But a total of 79 full-length and 18 cultural shorts and films for youth found their way into one or the other category.

Here's how the classifications ran for the major U. S. companies in Germany:

	German Films	Non-German Films	Documentaries	Total of Classifications
20th Fox			1	1
Columbia	1	3	7	11
Metro		7	1	8
Paramount		2		2
United Artists		6	1	7
Universal		1		1
Warner Brothers		4		4

Thus the American companies earned 34 classifications, for the full-length features and the documentaries, including both classifications.

Germans Lag in Self-Promotion; With TV Rivalry, Lack Is Serious

Berlin.

"Television" is the big word in German film circles. Whether producer, distributor or exhibitor —they all feel the inroads of this competitor daily. Some, of course — producers, directors, actors — escaped misery by joining the "devil."

Oswald Cammann, chairman of Assn. of W-Berlin Exhibitors, said: "The competition of television is already bitterly felt. Those who suffer most are the cinemas in Berlin's suburbs. The producers feel it too. But the hearts of many of them are already split because they have already branched out into the television business."

"Attendance figures are constantly on the decline," Camman said. "The cinemas have lost bulk of their former regular family audience. I refer to the families which used to go at least once a week to the cinema. This audience has been lost to television."

"But there is justified hope that the situation will improve when the mass of people has paid off their tv sets. Most of them pay the latter on account and it's psychologically understood that they want to 'amortize' their investment. If they have they may become what they used to be before they bought their tv set: Regular cinema-goers. But we still have to wait one or two years until the people will be financially freer."

Ronald Kahn, an American tv producer here, had this to say: "The tv competition to German film people hasn't really started as yet. It will be felt in 1962. Most of the second programs will not start before the end of 1961. Germany's television will develop into a full-time program in 1962. Cinema owners will then feel tv like they have never felt it before. A local exhibitor told me recently that tv hurts him already quite a bit. I had to tell him that it's only a small pain, it's just the beginning . . ."

As to German film producers, Kahn said that they have only three alternatives: (1) The production of much bigger films on the basis of big-scale international coproductions not dependent on domestic markets only; (2) To create films which Kahn calls "German art films characteristical of being German." These films must be something original. They can be small-budget films; (3) To start producing films for television. "Otherwise, they die," Kahn concluded.

Kahn who finds German television "constantly improving" said that the German producers haven't learned by the mistakes made by their American colleagues. He calls the German film "a closed shop for old men." Also: "German film industrialists, producers, exhibitors, etc. don't know how to merchandise, promote, publicize their product, in fact, they have never learnt it."

Paul Gordon, publisher and tv producer here, said: "I believe in the future of the film industry. The situation in Germany is identical of America some years ago. Television is still a novelty value in Germany. In a few years, the film will regain grounds. Of course, the films have to be good."

Gordon deplored the lack of outstanding German films. He said that most of them lack originality for which he chiefly made the producers responsible. He said that too many still stick with domestic market and tastes. But there are improvements, he added. At least they have given up those terrible 'Heideschnulzen,' that's sentimental escapist fare which praises the beauty of the country, etc. Gordon: "They must realize that the story is the thing, even if this or that film of old-fashioned calibre still makes some money.

Choked Off, Theatres Of Berlin on Decline As Capital Echoes Politics

Berlin.

According to latest statistics, the city of W-Berlin about 2,200,000 inhabitants) has 253 cinemas of which 232 are members of the local Assn. of Film Theatres. A local house is normally considered in okay shape if about 50-60% of its seating capacity is used. Overall situations run barely 35% at present. A tough situation is evidenced by the fact that about 40 cinemas are up for sale. But there are only few buyers. And latter are mostly newcomers to this branch (and don't know the score) or people (refugees) from the East who want to build here a new existence. Many of them fail. Several cinemas here have recently closed their doors. More shut-downs are expected.

But, in all, the local cinema situation is still not as tough as in some West German cities. This is explained by W-Berlin's position as an isolated city. The W-Germans have the opportunity to spend lengthy weekends outside their hometowns, while W-Berliners are forced to stay within their homegrounds.

Oswald Cammann, chairman of the Assn. of Film Theatre here, explains that downtown houses are still best off, while the little nabe houses in city's outskirts are especially hard hit. However, some art houses, even in the suburbs, are doing—thanks to a regular, more fastidious audience—quite well.

On the average, a W-Berlin cinema ticket costs 1.40 D-Marks (35c) moderate in comparison with other territories. But admission can hardly be upped in financially handicapped Berlin. Incidentally, a W-Berliner went averagely 28 times to the cinema in 1960.

Next to television, exhibs' strongest competitor, the heavy amusement tax (20%) is still the biggest problem for showmen. (This tax is eventually—down to 14%—lower if the respective film has been declared "valuable"—or "particularly valuable"—by the West German film classification board. The "valuable" tag, which is to foster the artistic film, means tax relief.)

BAUER GRATEFUL FOR YANK AID

By HANS HOEHN

Berlin.

What started on a ridiculously modest budget (not much more than $10.000) and, in fact, was hardly more than an improvised affair, has gradually become one of the three most important events of its kind in the world: The Berlin International Film Festival, which, in 1960, observed its 10th anniversary.

Since 1957 an "A" festival, the "Berlinale," as the local trade calls it, now operates on a 1.000.000 D-Marks ($250.000) budget. The Federal Govt. contributes 300.000 D-Marks to the fete, the W-Berlin Senate adds 350.000 D-Marks, while the rest amount comes from the festival's income (admission, etc.).

Cannes may be a more elegant festival and Venice a more romantic one, and both have a longer tradition to their credit, but Berlin is able to say that it's the most "serious" film rodeo. With less glamor than Venice and Cannes, it is chiefly a business festival and many filmites from all over the world appreciate it as such.

Berlin is not a child of tourist-conscious city fathers. In view of Berlin's position as an isolated city, it's (involuntarily) also a political festival. The fact that many people from Soviet-dominated territories come over, the Berlin festival has been given the byname, "Show window of the West." It gives East people the chance to see western top productions of which many if not most they can never see in their territory.

Berlin has no Lido Beach (as at Venice) and no Croisette (as at Cannes) but Dr. Alfred Bauer, the Berlin Festival chief, calls this even an advantage. Said he: "The lack of attractive tourist's goals is a positive factor because it forces the film people to dedicate themselves to the film." A special big plus is (by all admitted) this festival's organization with which probably no other festival can compete. But that has to do with German "Gruendlichkeit" (thoroughness) which one just cannot beat.

Bauer, 50 now, can say that this festival is "his baby." It was strictly his idea. A former jurist, then a writer (he's the author of the Big German Feature Film Almanac), he carried the idea, back in 1950, via the Berlin Senate to Oscar Martay, then U. S. (HICOG) Film Officer, who later joined the local film branch, and it was the American Martay who made the first financial basis for the preparation of the festival possible.

Festival has grown from year to year. It can't be denied that it met some unfavorable criticism, too, such as last year when journalists complained that too many "little" films had been screened. As to this, Bauer says: "I needn't stress that the festival committee is always anxious to turn down films that are artistically not satisfactory, or at least show them outside competition. If, however, a country insists on showing a certain film as an official entry in Berlin, we have to respect this wish. It's still a minor evil to show a 'little' film than to give the respective nation the brushoff. Berlin's special position as a Soviet-menaced city requires a tact towards those nations which sympathize with free Berlin, even if this generosity goes at the expense of the artistical standard of the Berlin festival."

And he said this: "The jury last year, all noted international film experts, confirmed me in declaring that of the 28 full-length pictures eight were 'far above artistical average,' 10 were average and six below average. This makes 12 above-average films out of 28. I think it's still a very good percentage. At the 1960 Cannes festival, the ratio was, as to the jury, nine above-average films out of 29!"

To class up his festival, Bauer will reduce the number of competitting pix this year: Only two (instead of three) film in competition daily, while a third one will be

Nazi Taint Haunts And, As A Result, Handicaps German Film Industry

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt.

That German producers assiduously avoid the theme of their own divided country, as described in another article herewith by VARIETY's Berlin rep, Hans Hoehn. It has its match-point in the fairly general avoidance of the Nazi past. It is a truism that German boys and girls know remarkably little about the bestial period for the all-too-human reason that their parents cannot explain it or face their own part in it.

There's little doubt that the guilt aspect as to the Nazi episode and the safety-first fixation as to the Communist half of Germany embarrass the development of German films in many areas. Yet curiously enough television has found the courage on occasion which the theatre screen showmen have lacked. The video series in 14 parts, "The Third Reich," was quite candid in presenting the horrors of Hitler to young viewers.

But returning to the broad issue of inhibitions in theatre product, plainly Germany has not yet fully shaken free. Progress has certainly been made Technically the German industry has staged a considerable comeback. But the deepening shadows of television's counter-distractions and the resultant falloff in boxoffice figures are problems which may worsen before they brighten. German film showmen find some comfort in the thought that the United States and Britain have survived television's fiercest blows.

Meantime Germany badly needs an infusion of fresh chromosomes in its artistic veins.

The Stagnant Wave

One actor dubbed the German film output of last year "The Stagnant Wave," blaming the mediocrity of the films on the lack of control producers can excerise over their product. He claimed that features were controlled by "dictatorial film distributors." Church censorship is also a factor. Religious groups have registered strong protests to some topics, per the Italian "La Dolce Vita."

Many in Germany feel that the dearth of talent can in several ways be blamed on Hitler. The most brilliant writers deserted Germany, never to return. One reason not to probe too deeply the Nazi theme is that many Germans who supported Hitler will see themselves portrayed as fools, and will resent the ridicule.

A recent listing of the best films to play in Germany last year included four U. S. products. "The Apartment," "The Fugitive Kind," "Ben-Hur" and "Pillow Talk"; two French pix, "Gentlemen Without Small Change" and "Love Game"; the Swedish "Virgin Spring" and just two German films, "The Brave Soldier Schweyk" and "The Glass of Water."

A recent study of the use of leisure time revealed that 30% of the Germans prefer to read, 24% work in house and garden, 11% indulge in sport, 9% turn to radio and television, and 15% follow "diverse hobbies," including going to the flickers.

Star Wage Freeze

It's reported that the average loss on a German film last year was $85.000, and of course, many of the German stars have deserted the German screen because of the clamp-down on salaries. When the German Producers and Distributors agreed that no German star could be paid over a top fee of $25.000 for a film, that sent quite a few flying.

Curd Juergens, a sure-fire German celebrity, for instance, followed the Hollywood trend of setting up his own production company so that he rakes the profit off the top. He has sworn never to work for a German producer.

German character actor Froebe has moved to France, and a couple of top German stars, Maria Schell and Horst Buchholz, are confining their work to the highly-paid Hollywood studios. Romy Schneider, once the leading German ingenue, has turned to the French stage as an outlet.

And the only up-and-coming German sexbombs, girls like Barbara Valentin and Kai Fischer, have generally been cast in tales about the call girl racket. Germany has not yet put a face, or a figure, on the screen that could be called anything like an equal to the international sex queens: France's B.B., Italy's Sophia and Gina, America's Liz and Marilyn, or even England's Diana Dors.

Bamberger Case

The long sad struggle of German producer Peter Bamberger was recently revealed. The young producer had an idea for an exciting timely pic, "Der Teufel spielt Balalaika" (The Devil Plays the Balalaika), about the war prisons in Russia. He had personally survived six years in prison in Siberia and thought this the time for a penetrating piece about the horrors of life in Russian prisons.

He turned out a script, and had it translated in French, English, and Japanese as well as German. In every land he found a reject. Only after three years did he manage to convince UFA distribution chief Rudolf Thiel and Stuttgart industrialist Heinrich Sauter that it was worth financing.

When he began with the background film preparation, though, another UFA exec felt that the film had little chance of success, and the project nearly fell through. Five months later, the film, turned out on a relatively low budget, was finished.

Bamberger had for three years been unable to find a producer, had been rejected by most of the top German companies, had gotten a turndown from leading German directors and the German bank. The film has now been accorded tremendous critical acclaim. As critic Wolfgang Tschechne wrote in the Hannover Rundschau, "This film was made by young people. What one considers young people. Now we recall Siberia. They look back, but not in anger. They have the understanding and the courage to search for the truth . . ."

But when the backers, the directors, the producers are all afraid of facing the "truth," as Bamberger found, it's pretty difficult for anyone to start a "new wave" rolling.

Berlin Film Fest May Again Be Ignored By Soviet Union Toppers

Berlin.

It's every year the same question: Will or won't "they" (the Soviets) come to the Berlin Film Fest? As to festival regulations, each country with which the Federal Government of Germany maintains diplomatic relations, automatically receives an invitation to the fest.

So far, the Soviet Union, only behind-the-Iron-Curtain country which has these relations with Bonn, hasn't accepted any of the annual invites.

Once the Soviets said that they would come if East Communist) Germany got an invitation also. "This, however, is out of the question," the head of the West Berlin Fest explained.

At a recent press confab on the occasion of the Soviet Film Week here, the first question a local scribe put the Russians was whether they'd come to the Berlin Fest. Alexander Davidow, prexy of Sovexport Moscow, answered: "We haven't received an invitation as yet." Second question: "Would you if you were invited?" His diplomatic answer was "we'd have to discuss that."

However, it looks as though the 11th Berlin Film Fest won't see Soviet participation.

German Inquiry: Must 'Cultural' Shorts Be Dull?

Frankfurt.

Culture-schmulture, what's happening with the documentary film business in West Germany?

When you go to the cinema in Germany, you're never rewarded with a Mickey Mouse cartoon or a musical short to sing along with the bouncing ball. Instead, before the main feature gets rolling, you're subjected to the vivid and gruesome details of how a snake consumes a mouse, you're shown 20 minutes of closeups of Renaissance church windows, or you're exposed to a dreary view of the rigors of life on a remote island in the North Sea.

Reason is simple enough. If any exhibitor shows a "classified" documentary along with his full-length feature, he is entitled to some tax relief. Of course, the enjoyable cartoon features aren't "classified," so they are simply eliminated, and replaced by the type of documentary that the Film Classification Board thinks the folks should view.

Some members of the audience in Germany have complained that along with the ticket they're paying a hefty chunk of entertainment tax—and this enforced documentary film is usually something less than the word "entertainment" implies.

That's the complaint of the public.

But the complaint of the exhibitors is even worse. There just aren't enough of these classified documentaries to go around. Even though a short producer getting this classification is sure to sell his film, the production of documentaries in Germany is falling off. Higher costs have deterred some of the producers, others who have made money have turned to making full-length features.

In 1960, only 254 of these classified culture films were made, a considerable drop from the 314 turned out the year before.

Keen Competition

Several of the culture film producers, queried as to the dwindling output, replied that competition rom foreign countries has been too keen. Foreign producers could afford to sell their shorts at a price with which the locals, who generally have to rely on one market only, could not compete, since in other lands the film had usually played on the home market first, and the added German sale meant more funds with no additional outlay. So some of the local shortmakers went out of business.

And particularly from the Commie-controlled lands, the competition has been too cut-throat, they charged. A land like Czechoslovakia or Poland or Romania is considering the propaganda-value of showing its films on West German screens, and so the Red government often subsidizes the documentary makers, and they can offer their products at exceptionally low prices.

Last year, 372 culture films played on the West German screens, 215 German and 157 foreign, mainly from France, Italy, the United States and England.

Here's how the U.S. majors stacked up, documentary-film-wise: 20th Fox showed 17 culture films of which 10 were German, seven foreign; Columbia offered 15, including five German and 10 foreign. Metro played 18, all German; Paramount had 19, of which 18 were local and just one foreign; United Artists had 27, 19 local and eight foreign; Universal showed 14, including three German, 11 foreign; and Warners had 23, of which 20 were German, three foreign.

Since 522 full-length features were shown in Germany during 1960, along with just 372 cultures, it's obvious that the distributors didn't use the one-to-one ratio, and the same cultural short turned up along with a couple of major releases.

Now the cultural producers complain that some of their own German distributors, like Constantin, are turning toward the foreign shorts.

Few German Directors 'International'

By HANS HOEHN

Berlin.

Of the 70 to 80 Teutonic feature film directors, only a small percentage have achieved "international" recognition. Kurt Hoffmann ("Aren't We Wonderful"), Helmut Kaeutner ("Captain of Koepenick") and Wolfgang Staudte ("Roses For the Prosecutor") are commonly acclaimed as this country's three most prominent directors. Who knows them elsewhere?

Another group includes Rolf Thiele ("The Girl Rosemarie"), Alfred Weidenmann ("Canaris") and now also Bernhard Wicki who succeeded via one (his first) feature film, "The Bridge," in commanding some foreign attention. Not to forget, of course, those oldtimers who returned from Hollywood such as Robert Siodmak, Fritz Lang and William Dieterle who still live on their old names.

Here, in alphabetical order, are some five dozen German film directors and their present status:

Axel von Ambesser: One of the (very few) German directors who can achieve the subtle touch. His last pic, "The Swindler and the Lord," was very charming.

Franz Antel: An experienced man but his directorial talents are limited. His films tend to the routine.

Karl Anton: An oldtimer who doesn't stir attention anymore.

Helmuth Ashley: An ace cameraman who turned director. His initial effort, "The Black Sheep," was promising.

Josef von Baky: A good director. His creations reveal above-average ambition.

Wolfgang Becker: His product is so-so.

Curtis Bernhardt: This Hollywood returnee made "Stefanie in Rio" last year. Nothing special.

Geza von Bolvary: Little heard of him lately.

Eduard von Borsody: One only remembers his name.

Harald Braun: "The Ambassadress" was his last pic before his death (at 59) last year. Once a top director, this film proved a disappointment.

Geza von Cziffra: He still deserves this superlative —the most active in the land. Makes about half a dozen pix each year. Run-of-the-mill productions for the German-language market.

Hans Deppe: Also quite busy. German corn. Escapist fare.

William Dieterle: He made the two-part "Mistress of the World," and "Mardi Gras Confession." Didn't make too big an impression.

Thomas Engel: Average.

Erich Engels: Don't mix him up with Erich Engel, creator of the memorable East German pic, "Affair Blum."—Engels made "In the Name of a Mother" last year, a tear-jerker.

Ulrich Erfurth: His last efforts were German average comedies.

Rolf Hansen: "Gustav Adolf's Page" was his last film after a long silence. It didn't garner many compliments.

Veit Harlan: Reportedly in poor physical shape. Hasn't made a film for a long time. Paid heavy peralty for doing "Jew Suess" at Hitler regime command.

Falk Harnack: Ambition. Also dedicates himself to the stage.

Dietrich Haugk: Young director is hubby of actress Johanna von Koczian who starred in his first two pix, "Heroines" and "Agatha Stop That Killing." His directorial talents were evident in both pix.

Kurt Hoffmann: Country's most gifted film-maker. Succeeded in producing a competent musical, "The Haunted Castle." As he did in his most successful film, "Aren't We Wonderful," this displayed depth with a light touch. His last film, "The Marriage of Mr. Mississippi," a Swiss production, is eagerly awaited.

Georg Jacoby: "Pension Schoeeler" his 228th (sic) directorial job. Oldtimer says "some of his smaller films" aren't even included in the 228. Jacoby has been directing German films since 1912.

Werner Jacobs: Makes pix strictly for home consumption. Nothing for the critics.

Rudolf Jugert: Once one of the more noteworthy German directors, his abilities are hardly evident any longer. Concentrates on sex pix.

Helmut Kaeutner: One of the Big Three. Boasts an imposing list of credits but his last films weren't fully convincing. His last one, "Black Gravel," hasn't been released here as yet.

Werner Klingler: Another man with a U. S. passport. The much talked-about (subjectwise) "Fountain of Life" was his last film. His direction doesn't command particular attention.

Leopold Lahola: A new name to the German directors' scene. His "The Devil Played the Balalaika" (not shown here as yet) is supposed to be very good.

Fritz Lang: His name means still plenty around here. His last film, "The 1,000 Eyes of Dr. Mabuse," received varied reviews but was a substantial box-office contender.

Wolfgang Liebeneiner: Rather active pic creator. Expert directorial hand is evident. But his items are more for home consumption. "Ingeborg" and "The Final Chord" are among his recent efforts.

The Marischkas: There are quite a few members of the (Austrian) Marischka dynasty active around here such as Ernst Marischka ("The Student-Prince"), Georg Marischka ("Peter Voss, Hero of Day") and Franz Marischka ("Hit Parade 1960"). It's hard to distinguish between them since everyone only follows the "German escapist" pattern.

Paul Martin: He sticks, now as before, to musicals. Latter's foreign prospects are zero.

Paul May: "Soldier Station Calais" was his last effort. He, the creator of the "08/15" series, knows his trade. If supplied with adequate material, a director beyond German average.

Kurt Meisel: An actor who occasionally turns director. "The Red Hand," an average thriller, was his 1960 effort.

Hans Mueller: One of those who makes features of the seen-and-forgotten type.

Eric Ode: ditto.

John Olden: "Frau Irene Besser" was his last pic. He's more successful as a tv director.

Gerd Oswald: Son of the unforgotten Richard Oswald, he made two pix in Germany: "The Day When the Rains Came" and "Royal Game," latter this country's entry at last year's Venice festival. He's an ambitious man but (as with his screenplays, too) hasn't quite convinced local critics as yet.

Harald Philip: His forte seems to be war pix. In "Penalty Battalion 999" as well as in his "Division Brandenburg," he achieved convincing war mood and hard-hitting realism.

Hans Quest: Another actor who frequently hops on the director's wagon. No major credits.

Arthur Maria Rabenalt: Once one of the better known German film directors. Still quite busy but just average now.

Geza von Radvanyi: One of the many Ex-Hungarians who make films in Germany. Once lauded, has been on the decline these past years. He's directing now "The Giant Wheel," a remake of "Four Poster," for Berlin's CCC.

Akos von Rathony: Made such pix as "Mrs. Warren's Profession" and "Beloved Swindler." Hasn't achieved here particular prominence as yet.

Gottfried Reinhardt: Has already a handful of German pix to his credit but German critics yet to "hail" his talent. His "City Without Pity," Kirk Douglas starrer, is awaited.

Harald Reinl: Several pix last year. Nothing special.

Juergen Roland: A tv director who made a couple of theatrical pix within the last months. Shows talent.

Wolfgang Schleif: Continued making pix starring Freddy, such as "Freddy Under Foreign Stars," "Freddy and Melody of Night" and "Long Is the Way," stout money-makers in the land.

Rudolf Schuendler: Actor-director who's also kept busy. Lately with pix starring Willy Millowitsch, popular tv comedian.

Robert Siodmak: "School Mate" was his last German pic which was not as good as hoped. But of all the oldtimers who returned from Hollywood to Germany, Siodmak can be acclaimed as the most successful and convincing one.

Wolfgang Staudte: His films are always above German average. His "Kirmes" impressed last year's Berlin Film Festival, his "Last Witness" is this country's contribution to the 1961 Cannes fete.

R. A. Stemmle: No directorial activity lately. Writes scripts. Wrote one for Ronald Kahn's vidtape pic, "Concerto For Combs," among others.

Rolf Thiele: One of the more interesting German directors, in fact, one of the best ones. Keeps intending to achieve something off the cliche. His last vehicle, "Don't Shoot At Angels," hasn't been shown here as yet.

William Thiele: Another returnee from Hollywood. Made here "The Last Pedestrian" and "Sabine and Her 1,000 Men," both no attention-getting pix.

Will Tremper: A former journalist and screenwriter, "Escape to Berlin," marked his bow as a director. An imposing debut. Next on his list, "The Russians Are Coming," a satire.

Gustav Ucicky: Once one of this country's top directors. Lost prominence but still active. "The Heritage of Bjoerndal" was one of his last (Austrian) pix seen here.

Fritz Umgelter: Active in both tv and cinema field. More prominent as a tv director.

Paul Verhoven: Now production chief with UFA.

Alfred Vohrer: Made with "Until Money Departs You" his first adult film after a series of pix revolving around teenagers. Not too convincing.

Alfred Weidenmann: A talented director whose pix, however, vary. His last film, "Sacred Waters," a Swiss-German production, hasn't come to Berlin as yet.

Helmut Weiss: Mostly comedies, for the domestic taste.

Bernhard Wicki: His first film, "The Bridge," won him international acclaim. He's a very ambitious director. His second feature, "Miracle of Malachias," has stirred considerable attention even long before completion. (Due for release in summer.)

Frank Wisbar: Continues making war pix. His last efforts were "Night Fell On Gotenhafen" and "Factory For Officers." Although not fully convincing, he too belongs to the more noteworthy German directors. Wisbar's passport is American.

Franz Peter Wirth: A former tv director who has made half a dozen pix within the past two years. "Heroes" still rates as his best.

Eugen York: Nothing heard of him lately.

B.O. Up Despite Germany's 5-Day Week, Bullish TV

Frankfurt.

Even though the film business in West Germany has been hit a low blow by the country's 5,000,000 television sets and by the newly-introduced five-day week, which sends the country's 50,000,000 residents scurrying out on the highways instead of into the theatres, plenty of optimists are still around to open new houses.

Latest theatre-nose-count showed that 95 more houses were doing business in 1960 than in the previous year, with a total of 6,884 exhibitors offering 2,800,000 seats.

Included in that count are 443 wandering exhibitors, who set up the screen in different areas and often follow the fairs that attract thousands of tourists to a section. About one fourth of the houses are in towns with less than 5,000 inhabitants, and play four or less times during the week.

During the year, 145 houses shut down, but 240 new ones opened, to account for the new total of 6,884.

Berlin Fest Growth

shown outside competition. When this reporter interviewed him in March, he said: "I'm convinced that we are going to have better films than Cannes." In all, there are four categories of pix being shown at the 1961 Berlin festival: (1) Competitive films submitted by the nations, (2) Competitive films invited by the festival, (3) Noncompetitive films invited by the festival, (4) Special screenings, trade shows, etc.

A retrospective show will honor the Japanese director, Akira Kurosawa, of whom six pix, including "Rashomon," "Seven Samurais" and "Ikuru," will be shown. Kurosawa, incidentally, will attend the fest at which his "The Bad Sleep Well" will be running as official Japanese entry. (Kurosawa reportedly gave Berlin preference to Cannes.)

Another highlight will be the handing out of David O. Selznick's 11th Golden and Silver Laurels via a special ceremony. This marks the second (the first was in 1954) time that the local fete has provided the background for the Selznick prize ceremony. Selznick will come to Berlin for the event. Selznick wrote Bauer that it's the first time he attends an international film festival. Also Eric Johnston will be coming to Berlin. Johnston promised Bauer to grant him full publicity support of the Selznick event via his MPEA publicity apparatus.

Always one of the most difficult enterprises is to get stars for a festival, Bauer said. Every year, he contacts about 100 foreign stars, but only a small percentage has time to accept the invitation. Bauer said that he's particularly grateful to the Americans as to festival assistance. He cited such names as Walt Disney, Stanley Kramer and Eric Johnston.

Walt Disney hasn't ignored any Berlin film festival so far. Each year, ranging from "Cinderella" in 1951 to "Jungle Cat" last year, he submitted a full-length film to Berlin. In 1958, he personally came to Berlin. Kramer had his "Death of a Salesman" running in Berlin in 1952, "The Defiant Ones" in 1958 and "Inherit the Wind" last year. Eric Johnston was here nearly every year. He, incidentally, received the (German) Federal Cross of Merit for his outstanding contributions to the German-American relations in the film field.

One of Berlin's specialties are the open discussions, lectures, etc. which run here under the title, "Forum." Also noteworthy is the wireless simultan setup in the festival cinema: Reviewers are given the chance to follow the dialog in foreign movies via special earphones. Translation is in three major languages.

Reflecting upon the previous ten Berlin film festivals, Bauer called the 1959 festival his best one so far, while 1958 showed the best product. There's no doubt that the "Berlinale" also helped Berlin's position as a film-producing center.

STUDIOS FULLY OCCUPIED

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt.

While the West German film industryites were crying in their good German beer about dwindling boxoffice receipts, at least one group in their midst could still whistle a happy tune. Throughout the country, "sold out" signs were up in the film production centers for the year of 1960. The booming television industry, with its need for more and more films, and the co-production influx brought about by the Common Market meant more work in the production studios than ever before.

For the studios, there was no talk about a "crisis" in the film industry. They were occupied to just about 100 percent.

Television films meant most of the work for the Munich studios. While German and foreign producers made 30 full-length features at Munich's Geiselgasteig studios in 1959, the number had dropped to 17 in 1960. But television took the rest of the space and time.

The features made at Geiselgasteig during 1960 cost considerably more than the average $75,000 that making a black and white film expends in West Germany, though, and the accent on better movies meant longer production schedules and more space used at the studios.

The Gloria film production centers in Munich-Baldham were busy turning out films for the theatres in 1960, but at the Charlton Studios two-thirds of the output was for television.

At Hamburg, there was so much film and television work that the Real Film Studios in Hamburg-Wandsbek expanded into nine separate halls and it's planned to add two more huge stages this year. The studios figured that they split their time about half and half between producing films and television shows last year.

Hamburg Activity

The number of feature films turned out was eleven at Hamburg, just the same as the count in 1959, but the number of television films made at the same center was 35—three times as many, but since most were shorter and less detailed, shooting time on each was briefer. Among the output from Hamburg last year was the full feature-length "Lysistrata," the Fritz Kortner production for television which caused a giant scandal early this year. The film was labelled too sexy and too one-sided in its anti-war theme, and several television stations refused to show it. Capitalizing on the ban, the television film was also offered in film theatres, thus being one of the very rare productions to be viewed in both media.

The smaller studio group in Bendestorf by Hamburg concerned itself with about a dozen films last year, in addition to television productions, and commercial films for showing on television and in the cinemas.

Business was booming, too, in the West Berlin production centers with the three huge complexes of UFA in Tempelhof, CCC in Spandau and Pichelsberg's ARCA.

UFA's seven studios, including a music production center, turned out 14 films. Two major television productions involved the use of two studios for three months, and the UFA group also accounted for two light productions for television and 60 synchronizations.

The UFA wheels emphasized that the quality of their productions had improved, citing an increased number of "worthy" classifications handed out by the West German Film Classification Board.

Twenty movies were made at CCC during the year, including six for CCC, five for ALFA and nine from other firms. Commercial films for television were made at the location, along with major television productions, so that the studios were occupied about half and half with film and television work.

Television and commercials for that medium occupied all the space at the recently-restored ARCA Studios.

Goettingen also reported a complete sellout of its space last year. Seven movies, of which four were for Deutsche Film Hansa, kept the group busy. And in 1961, the Goettinger studios expect to be rushed to keep up with the work of the Frank Wisbar Television Production Corporation, which Wisbar founded last July.

Some of the other motion picture producers, too, found that their fancy was turning in the direction of tele. Both the newly-fused UFA-Film Hansa Corporation and Bavaria announced considerably expanded plans for television. UFA announced at the time of the merger last November that it would concentrate on television, with the combined group offering 30 films, of which 20 would be German productions, and of course continuing with the UFA newsreels.

And at Bavaria, the bosses promised "richer" productions, for both media, for the 1961-62 calendar.

Not Even A Handful Of W. German Pix Tackled The Most Disturbing Subject

By HANS HOEHN

Berlin.

The Germans' No. 1 problem remains their divided country.

It has led to an endless series of complications and countless human tragedies, ten thousands of split families, more than 3,000,000 refugee Germans who fled the Reds. But of the drama inherent in all this hardly anything has ever been turned into a film.

Of about 1,200 features turned out by W-German producers within the past 10 years, only four dared tackle this important subject: "Postlagernd Turteltaube" (To Be Called For Turtel-Dove, 1952), "Weg ohne Umkehr" (No Way Back, 1954), "Himmel ohne Sterne" (Sky Without Stars, 1955) and the recently released "Flucht nach Berlin" (Escape to Berlin).

The main argument of domestic producers is that such films don't pay off commercially. They regard the divided Germany angle as "boxoffice poison." Their argument has support inasmuch as the three first mentioned films were financial disappointments. The fourth pic, "Escape to Berlin," has just been released. Its commercial prospects are uncertain at this writing.

This reporter asked a number of W-German filmites why they ignore their country's most important subject. Nearly everyone used the "boxoffice poison" phrase.

Helmut Kaeutner, one of Germany's top directors, who made the previously mentioned "Sky Without Stars" in 1955, said that he doesn't want to deepen the gap between West and East Germany. He opined that such a film would contribute to make the dispute worse.

Alfred Vohrer, another director, had this to say: "The commercial risk is too big. On the other hand, I think that the Federal Government should finance such a film."

Producer Artur Brauner, the powerful CCC boss, said: "If it's on television, the public may still be willing to see it. But it wouldn't be interested in seeing this problem on the cinema screen." Incidentally, it was also Alfred Hitchcock who said (when he was here last year) that political films of any type just don't lure the big public anywhere. Carol Reed's "The Third Man" was a rare exception, he said, but this film was essentially a thriller.

Personal Fear Factor

Will Tremper, the director of "Escape to Berlin," said that not all who refer to the "boxoffice poison" angle meant it honestly. In some cases, there is, no doubt, also personal fear. Fear, in this case, means security. One never knows what the future may bring, these people may say. There are not few who categorically avoid any political subjects in films.

A West German film about the present West-East German dispute contains already involuntarily anti-Commie ingredients. That's a factor which, no doubt, not few take into consideration. Along this line, it may be interesting to recall an incident which Tremper had when he made "Escape to Berlin." He needed for this film a railway train and applied to Federal German railway authorities. Latter, however, didn't like the idea after hearing that "Escape" is an anti-Commie pic. "They told me," Tremper said, "that they couldn't do it because such assistance would annoy the Communist railway authorities in East Germany." Tremper called them "cowards" and said: "The East German Defa is getting every help it wants from its authorities. But we West Germans encounter difficulties because our authorities are afraid." Tremper ultimately then applied to the Federal Press Chief in Bonn who intervened with the Federal Minister for Traffic Affairs and finally got the train he needed.)

Outsiders' Tries

It might be noteworthy that quite a few films that concerned these German problems were of foreign origin or directed or financed by foreigners: The Soviet blockade of Berlin (1948-49) was a topic of world interest. An American, George Seaton, came to make, for 20th-Fox, a film about that "Big Lift." Sir Carol Reed picked the divided Berlin angle for his not too successful film, "The Man Between." It was Victor Vicas, an American, who directed "No Way Back," one of the four W-German films that realistically touched the German East-West problem. It was an American firm, Unexcelled International, which financed the film, "Escape to Berlin." Michael K. Schwabacher, president of Unexcelled Int'l (Zurich), called "Escape" an important film due to the fact that it shows what's going on behind the Iron Curtain in East-Germany. American money, incidentally, was also involved in the 1954 film, "No Way Back." Coproducer then was Stuart Schulberg's then Trans-Rhein-Film.

Reflecting upon the past years, there has been a growing number of W-German films of social-critical calibre and films which, in satirical form, poked fun at the socalled "Wirtschaftswunder" (economic boom), corruption, former Nazis in top positions, etc. This gives evidence of the fact that domestic producers have become much more courageous as to topical themes. But it is—in a democratic country — only "convenient courage," at least here in comparison with those few who dared tackle this country's foremost problem, the divided Germany.

Over in East Germany, Defa sole producing outfit there has been turning out within the years a lot of pictures that revolve around the East-West German problem. But, directly or indirectly, the productions of the State-owned Defa followed only one line, that of the party.

LAUGHS AT HIS CRITICS

Germany's Corn Comic Thrives Despite Roasts

Berlin.

Willy Millowitsch is, according to a reader's poll of a big German weekly, currently Germany's most popular tv star. His "Schnaps" song was one, if not the, surprise hit of the season. Hardly known to German moviegoers some years ago, he's now making one film after another. Artur Brauner hired him for his upcoming remake of "Robert and Bertram" in which he'll portray Bertram. His tv programs (from Cologne) will be continued, possibly even multiplied, despite mediocre reviews.

"Banal," "tasteless," "provincial," "How can one laugh at such junk?" is what scribes say about his video shows. And Millowitsch: "It's not my fault that the critics can't laugh. But they can be assured that I'm able to laugh whenever I read their reviews!"

Millowitsch is, no doubt, a phenomenon. He has a following in this country normally only due to an idolized film beau. The people love his zany stuff. His producers know that and the result is that his salaries are climbing and his pic, tv, stage and record offers on a constant upbeat.

Artur Brauner Starts 2d of 'Dr. Mabuse' Films

Berlin.

A number of interesting pix are in preparation here. Artur Brauner (CCC), busiest producer, soon will start shooting "Return of Dr. Mabuse." But it's not 70-year old Fritz Lang (the man who made "Mabuse" famous) who'll direct the new "Mabuse" feature pix, but Harald Philipp. Latter, a rising German pic director, made two good war pix in 1959. "Penalty Battalion 999" and in 1960, "Division Brandenburg."

Melodie-Film's "One Prettier Than the Other," Heidi Bruehl starrer directed by Axel von Ambesser, has been completed. Next melody feature is "Only the Wind."

Dr. Herrmann Schwerin (Fono), producer of "The Bridge," one of Germany's most successful postwar films, is still making "Transport," a war theme also, but has already plans lined up for his next film, "The Lamb." Hans Oppenheimer, co-owner of Arca here, is prepping "Comrade Muenchhausen," a political satire.

German Failures Of 1960

Frankfurt.

Nobody's ready to be struck out yet, but the West German film industryites note that they took some pretty bad hits last year. In a compilation of woes, it was noted:

—The Mannheim Culture and Documentary Film Week, which had been presented nine times, was cancelled.

—The "Film Forum," a critical newspaper founded by the film clubs, went out of business.

—The "Association of Film Clubs" was unable to hold its annual conference, and held instead only one work-day meeting in Essen, at which no particularly outstanding ideas were revealed to cope with the dwindling theatre business.

—Father Werner Hess, long active in the West German film industry and film spokesman for the Protestant Church of West Germany, resigned from that post and took a spot with the Hessischer Rundfunk Television in Frankfurt.

—The Culture Ministry complained that there were no especially outstanding problem films concerning the crises facing the young Germans today.

—The Children's Film Prize of 1960, awarded to an exceptionally good film for children and young people, was not given this year because of no suitable subject.

—The Children's Film Center, a project long under discussion, was still not founded.

Only hope was that 1961 would be a better year for the filmites.

FILM PRODUCERS OF WEST BERLIN

By HANS HOEHN

Berlin.

Of the about 100 West German feature pictures turned out last year, more than half were made in West Berlin. Same applied a year and two years ago. This is a remarkable fact taking into consideration West Berlin's difficult position as an isolated city which, after all, creates quite a few problems and drawbacks. But Berlin's big plus, of course, is its tradition. Somehow, it has remained the German film metropolis. German producers who have a soft spot for Berlin, say that this city has "an ideal film climate" and act accordingly.

Production activity was on the decline last year, but this decline was less felt in Berlin than in Munich, Berlin's strongest competitor. Not to forget, of course, that West Germany's two most active producing units have their headquarters in Berlin: CCC and Kurt Ulrich.

Here a rundown of West Berlin's film producing units and their present status in alphabetical order:

AERO-FILM A small outfit headed by 30-year old Raphael Nussbaum who came along with his first feature ("Blazing Sand") last year. No other film since then but Nussbaum said that he has "some projects in preparation."

ALFA-FILM A daughter company of Artur Brauner's CCC which concentrates on smaller pix while CCC takes care of productions of bigger calibre. Alfa's 1960 lineup included such films as "Until Money Parts You," "O Sole Mio" and "Fountain of Life," among others. Outfit continues being busy.

ARCA This company ran into financial troubles last year and faced a complete collapse. A remake of "Bombs On Monte Carlo" which Gero Wecker, the Arca chief, produced in collab with a Gallic unit, was responsible. This stemmed from an accident to the pic's star which caused an interruption of production, and the bankruptcy of the French unit.—Hans Oppenheimer, an art dealer, acquired two-thirds of the shares of Wecker's Arca-Atelier GmbH, a studio company here, earlier this year. Oppenheimer, who produced the German pic, "We Cellar Children," intends to participate in Arca's film production. Next Arca production uncertain at this hour. The Arca studios, two stages, are often used by tv outfits.

BEROLINA-FILM Company seems to be more dead than alive at present. Its last films were "Blue Butterfly" and "Merry War of Captain Pedro," both 1959 productions.

CCC (Central Cinema) Here we have the most active film producing company in the land. It's a one-man enterprise, Artur Brauner, with more than 1,000 pix to its credit. CCC's 100th film was "Das Riesenrad" (The Giant Wheel), a remake of "Four Poster," starring O. W. Fischer and Maria Schell. Last year, Brauner produced more than 20 films which possibly made him Europe's busiest producer of the year. Lineup of CCC productions included such domestic money-makers as "Soldier Schwejk," "Grounds For Divorce: Love," "Marina" and "The 1,000 Eyes of Dr. Mabuse." It's dubious whether Brauner will stick to his mammoth production of pix. He recently said that it doesn't pay off any longer. Incidentally, Brauner belongs to those German producers who have already branched out into tv business. He has expanded his local CCC studios from seven to nine stages. Studios are also being erected in Zurich with Swiss partners. He also intends to build studios in Israel. A big additional income for Brauner, easily one of Europe's wealthiest filmites, is renting his facilities to domestic and foreign guest companies.

CINELUX A smaller company which is still active if on a modest basis. At present, Cinelux is producing a film ("Tender Skin in Black Silk") in collab with Contact-Pandora in Paris.

DELOS-FILM Company's last feature dates back more than four years now. Delos is manufacturer of advertisement pix and spots for television.

EICHBERG Its trade emblem still appears in the trade press. But nothing heard of this unit lately. The old (Richard) Eichberg died several years ago.

FONO-FILM This company, headed by Dr. Herrmann Schwerin, produced last year one of Germany's commercially and artistically most noteworthy postwar pics, "The Bridge," a contender in the 1960 Oscar derby. Film won Bernhard Wicki (his bow as a feature film director) international acclaim. Schwerin produces only one film per year but he always aims at producing something special. His current production, "The Transport," which has also a war theme, is anxiously awaited. Pic stars Hannes Messemer who, incidentally, will direct (his directorial bow) Fono's next one, "The Lamb."

FRITZ GENSCHOW Genschow is a producer of youth films for television of which he turned out 26 during the 1960-'61 season. He's also director-producer-author of stage productions of children's Programs. Genschow is also city's most prominent "children's uncle," via his "Uncle Tobias" radio (RIAS) series. He also used to dedicate himself to full-length theatrical fairy-tales. He gave up the latter because of the socalled Youth Protection Law. This law, which excludes kids below six from going to the cinema (even if escorted by adults) in W-Germany, made him lose bulk of his former audience. He hasn't given up hope that this law will be altered some day.

PETER GOLDBAUM Goldbaum, who resides in Switzerland, makes about one "big" pic a year, a high-budgeted production with one or two big marquee names. He's doing well. His last film, "Gustav Adolf's Page," which starred Liselotte Pulver and Curd Juergens, however, wasn't as successful as his previous efforts. Goldbaum believes in his "one-big-pic-a-year" theory and is known as a film producer who hates tv.

H-D-FILM Owner of this, Hans Deppe, has given up his production activity. He's directing features for other companies. Yet director is still quite busy. But his films are merely for home consumption.

INTER WEST Wenzel Luedecke, the boss of this company, hasn't produced a feature film for a long time. Several projects failed. Luedecke, however, has no financial worries. His Berliner Synchron is one of the busiest dubbing outfits in the land. Luedecke's interests also concern video such as the purchase and dubbing of U. S. tv films.

MELODIE-FILM One of the financially best situated companies around here. Peter Schaeffers, who owns Melodie in collab with Aldo von Pinelli, heads also one of Germany's most successful music publishing firms. Melodie's films, about 3-4 per annum, are of musical calibre. Last year, Melodie produced the third Freddy (top recording star in the land) film, "Freddy and Melody of Night," costarring Heidi Bruehl, most popular among the young German recording chirps. Miss Bruehl is also star of Melody's recently completed pic, "One Prettier Than the Other," which company made for UFA Film Hansa. Schaeffers has several projects in prospect.

STUN-FILM This outfit was founded last year. Its initial film was "Escape to Berlin" which Will Tremper (his directorial debut) directed. "Escape" was financed by the American Unexcelled Chemical Corp. and its Swiss affiliate, Unexcelled International, Zurich. Stun-Film is a subsid of the latter. Stun-(Film), incidentally, stands for (Michael) Schwabacher, president of Unexcelled International, Tremper and Unexcelled. Stun's next project is a satirical pic, "The Russians Are Coming," which also Tremper will direct. Outfit will eventually branch out into the tv field.

UFA Company's 1960 output included such films as "Mardi Gras Confession," which William Dieterle directed, "Stefani in Rio," done by Curtis Bernhardt, and "Le passage du Rhin," latter a French-German coproduction. Last November, UFA and Deutsche Film Hansa, top producing and distributing company in Germany, amalgamated. It's now a distributing company called UFA Film Hansa. UFA, divorced from distribution, concentrates now on production, including newsreels and its big theatre chain. At this writing, it's rather quiet with UFA. Company may be called a "sleeping giant" will wake up before too long.

KURT ULRICH Next to Brauner (CCC), the most active German film producer. At least 10 films each year. But Ulrich is one of the few domestic film producers who hasn't branched out into the video field as yet. He's a successful man and cleverly succeeds now in turning out more fastidious (artistically speaking) pix. His "Last Witness" has been picked as Germany's entry at the 1961 Cannes fete. His "A Man Goes Through the Wall" brought director Ladislao Vajda the 1960 Lubitsch Prize, "Roses For the Prosecutor" collected several domestic awards, to name some examples. Ulrich is often described as "the man with a good nose" in the German film biz. In fact, he's a surprisingly successful man and, incidentally, one of those very few domestic producers who are financially absolutely independent.

ULTRA For several years, Alfred Vohrer, one of the Ultra heads, had been directing teenage exploitation pix for his own producing outfit. He's now directing pix for other companies. His last directorial efforts were "Until Money Parts You" (Alfa-Constantin) and "Dead Eyes of London" (Rialto-Prisma). The Ultra enterprise includes a dubbing setup which is kept busy with the "German versions" of U. S. films. Ultra's last dubbing efforts included "Elmer Gantry" (UA), "Savage Eye" (City), "Magnificent Seven" (UA), "The Juggler" (Col) and "Alamo" (UA). Ultra's dubbing outfit is part of the huge Mosaik Labs here which includes such dubbing firms as Simoton, Rondon-Film, in addition to Wenzel Luedecke's Berliner Synchron.

Fewer Tinters, German Exhibs Squawk

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt.

West Germany's film exhibitors are kicking about the reduction in the number of color films that are being turned out by their own producers.

While the Americans apparently realize that color is one lure which television can't yet offer to the European audiences, and are hence increasing their color film output, the German color picture production is dwindling.

Statisticians note that for the 1961-62 season, the seven American firms of 20th Century-Fox, Columbia, Paramount, MGM, United Artists, Universal and Warner Bros. are offering 93 color films and 75 black and whites in Germany.

Of the 126 German films headed for the silver screens, though, only 41 are in color. That's a considerable drop from the 43 out of 106 German films in color in 1959, 54 out of 115 in 1958 and the all-time high of 77 out of 107 in 1957.

"Times are tough enough for us without adding all those black-and-whites," according to one German exhibitor. There is as yet not even any talk of color television here, and the theatre owners feel that the added plus of a color film might help them in a time when they need every possibly assistance from their own picture-makers.

It's estimated that making a color film adds about one-third to the price. But, add the experts, some of the best money makers in Germany in the last couple of years, "Das Wirtshaus im Spessart" (The Guesthouse in the Spessart) and "Helden" (Heroes) would probably have drawn considerably less business if they had been more simply done in black and white.

The two-color medium of course adds downbeat emotion to some films with somber themes. "Die Bruecke" (The Bridge) the oft-awarded German film about World War II, for instance, would not lend itself to color.

"The Americans apparently realize our plight more than the German film-makers do, because about two-thirds of the new pictures from the States are in color," the exhibitor added.

"This seems like judgment on the part of the German production people in keeping costs down."

On the other hand, the German production experts are citing the coming season as one with accent on "fewer but better films."

Dr. Herman Schwerin, vice president of the Assn. of West German Film Producers, has just announced that's the theme for the upcoming calendar. He noted that the film industry is handing the West German government about 120 million marks—about $30,000,000—in entertainment tax every year, an amount that the industry feels is excessively high.

On the other hand, the entire German film production for the new year will cost just about the same figure.

With the necessity for trimming costs in every direction, he noted that the accent will be on good scripts and better films generally.

TINT FILMS OFF IN GERMANY

Berlin.

Local statistics reveal that the percentage of color films in the W-German film production has been on the decline ever since 1956. It was 64% in that year and 63% the year thereafter (1957) and only came up to 29% last year. Here exact statistics:

1950	82 features	1 tinter	(1%)
1951	60 features	8 tinters	(13%)
1952	82 features	7 tinters	(9%)
1953	104 features	15 tinters	(15%)
1954	109 features	27 tinters	(25%)
1955	128 features	40 tinters	(29%)
1956	123 features	78 tinters	(64%)
1957	107 features	67 tinters	(63%)
1958	115 features	54 tinters	(47%)
1959	106 features	43 tinters	(41%)
1960	97 features	28 tinters	(29%)

Berlin Film Fest Golden Bears

Berlin.

Here's the Grand Prix (Golden Bears) history of the Berlin Film Festival:

1951: The Grand Prix for the best dramatic film went to Leopold Lindtberg's Swiss feature, "The Foud in a Jeep," while the public voted Disney's "Cinderella" as best entry.

1952: No prize. Only a public poll which saw the Swedish "One Summer of Happiness" as victor.

1953: No prize. The public picked the Gallic "Wages of Fear" as best film.

1954: No prize. The public picked England's "Hobson's Choice" as best film.

1955: No prize. The public chose the German CCC production, "The Rats," directed by Robert Siodmak, as best film.

1956: Festival organizers called this an ideal year—a Grand Prix (Golden Bear) was handed out and the public voting system was still used. The Bear went to Metro's "Invitation to Dance," while the public chose "Before Sundown," another CCC production, directed by Gottfried Reinhardt, as best film.

1957: Saw end of the public system. The Assn. of International Film Producers let the festival people know that the public poll has to be dropped if Berlin wants to be an "A" festival. The Golden Bear was given to United Artists' "Twelve Angry Men."

1958: Swedish Ingmar Bergman feature, "Smultronstallet," walked off with the Golden Bear.

1959: "Les Cousins" from France was the victor.

1960: Spanish entry, "El Lazarillo de Tormes," took top award.

GERMANY'S EXHIBITION TOTAL, 1960: 522 PIX

Frankfurt.

There were 522 films played on the German screens during 1960, including 98 strictly German, 12 German-foreign co-productions, 16 Austrian, 175 American, 54 British, 49 French and 49 French-Italian, 34 Italian, six each Swedish and Japanese, five each Danish and Russian, four Danish and Mexican, and three each from East Germany, Switzerland and Yugoslavia, and one each from the following — Netherlands, Finland, Greece, Hungary, Israel, Argentina, India and Australia.

That proved to be six more than found playing time in 1959. However, there were nine less German re-releases in 1960 than in the previous year, and the United States offered 27 less pics in Germany than it had in 1959. The French-Italian co-productions showed an increase of 25 over the previous year, though, and there were 12 more films from Italy, showing the first new increases of the European Common Market.

German Self-Censorship Board checked a total of 2,812 pictures and of these, 2,794 were okayed. The Film Classification Board tagged 625 films with a special classification, 118 with the top rating of "especially outstanding" and the other 505 with the "worthy" rating.

Of those getting into the top category, six were German and 25 were foreign productions. Those in both listings mean that the exhibitors are entitled to certain tax relief.

Types of Films

Another study showed a drop in adventure and wild west films, down to 78 from the previous year's high of 109. And to counteract that was a rise in "heimat" films, corny stories of homespun life in the simple villages, long a German favorite form of sentimental movie theme. Heimat films increased from five in 1959 to a lucky 13 last year.

Criminal films, too, increased from 80 in 1959 to 84 in '60. Youth problem films fell, though, from 27 to 13. Cultural films and films concerning literature dropped from 66 to 25, musicals dwindled from 42 to 30, and war films were sliced in half, from 31 down to 16. Comedies, though, remained quite constant, 77 in 1959 and 78 in 1960, and films concerning immorality were also about the same, 24 in 1969 and 23 in 1959.

Pain In Spain About Italy

Measures Taken to Equalize Spain In Use Of Its Talent and In Playdates Within Italo Accord

By HANK WERBA

Madrid.

Spain is taking a much tougher film attitude towards its Italian partner on the question of exploiting Spanish features in that market and has every intention of alternating a situation in which Spain has played a secondary role as co-production partner in the long and active association these two countries have enjoyed.

Evidence of this new attitude is to be found in the new Italian-Spanish film agreement which became provisionally effective March 1st but still subject to final adoption by the respective governments.

Motion picture ties between Spain and Italy were critical late last October when the director general for cinema, Munoz Fontan, condemned discriminatory preference for Italian directors in Spanish-Italian coproductions. Only 21 directors as against 47 of their Italian counterparts had been assigned to Italian-Spanish co-ventures. And he threatened to withhold approval of any further co-projects unless Spanish directors were hired, and a proportionate equilibrium restored.

Lack of Talent

Spanish producers replied, to no avail, that the Italian film industry rated very high on the world scene and had plenty of talent to back its position, whereas Spain offered only a half-dozen directors to choose from. They contended that these six were not always available and that the Italians would not settle for less.

The new accord now limits co-productions to groups of six. After the first group has gone into production, each succeeding group will be closely checked to assure Spanish film authorities that the contribution made by coproducers in both countries from the standpoint of investment, cast, directors, and studio-location schedules are thoroughly balanced.

Italian tendency to exploit the bargain-basement values of below-the-line production costs to be found in Spain, is now limited since the pact sets up a permanent commission to guarantee that Spain's full participation.

Penalty for Italy

The new agreement penalizes Italian failure to back Spanish product in the Italo market. The penalty is a reduction of Italian film imports from the annual quota of 30 to the new quota of 25. Italy will be allowed a supplementary quota of five pix in subtitled versions, but non-dubbed films have little or no value here. Spain helped Italy swallow this bitter pill by adding a clause calling for a series of incentive license possibilities. Nothing concrete is mentioned, but the inference left is that Spain will accept more Italian films when the Italian market shows some signs of commercially absorbing Spanish product.

Where the Spanish-Italian agreement marks a new departure is in the division of box-office receipts. The pact clearly stresses an equal and proportional sharing of profits in all countries where the coproduction is released. This replaces the customary pattern of dividing the world market into two exploitable sectors in which one coproducer abandons complete jurisdiction to the other. Going even further, the pact now stipulates that box-office benefits even in Italy and Spain will be shared by co-producers in both countries according to the proportion of investment made.

While the coproduction investment ratios of 30-70%, 50-50% and 70-30% remain unaltered, another new wrinkle in the current pact makes it possible for the first time for Spanish coproducers to invest a maximum of 20% of the Spanish budget into a co-project in old cash. But this type of co-production financing must also fall in a balanced ratio within each group of six co-projects.

Another step ahead is joint acceptance that a coproduction can be completely achieved in one or the other of the two given countries. However, if a group of six coproductions are filmed entirely in Italy the succeeding group of six would be shot in Spain.

Despite the principal of utilizing foreign technicians normally working in either of the two countries and the contracting of international stars and technicians of proven reputation.

3-Way Coproduction

One interpretation Spanish producers put on the new agreement is that it facilitates three-way coproductions with a third country now enjoying a coproduction relationship with both Spain and Italy. And it is also the understanding of Spanish producers that their minimum investment in such a three-way project can, with special permission, be reduced from the present 30% minimum to a 20% minimum contribution in the venture. Such a development will finally give Spanish companies an opportunity to participate in tall-budgeted projects destined for the world market.

The new pact reflects Spanish government and film industry awareness that the Spanish film market (still unemcumbered with tv competition and featuring the highest number of hardtops per population anywhere) is lucrative enough to warrant hard bargaining. Also underscored is local determination to encourage the slow but steady maturity in film production in obtaining an equitable work load for Spanish film talent in all future coproductions with other countries besides Italy.

Arg. Film Week in Caracas

Buenos Aires.

Napoléon Ordosgotti, public relations officer for Tropical Film and Cine Venezuela, has been completing details for an Argentine Film Week in Caracas, Venezuela, at the Teatro del Este May 24-30, and a day later in Maracaibo. F. Taurel, national delegate for the Screen Institute, has promised support.

A 15-member delegation from Argentina will travel to Venezuela for this film week. Ordosgotti has booked 23 local pictures for Venezuelan showing.

DANGER OF FALSE OPTIMISM

By JOAQUIN AGUSTI

(President of the Spanish Distributors Assn.)

Madrid.

An American friend of mine, a person well-known in international film circles, recently asked me to state the current position of distributors in Spain, and in particular the future of the companies associated here with the Motion Picture Export Assn. The opinions I advanced, though personal and relative, might be of interest to members of the film industry generally.

Cinema in Spain is experiencing the same difficulties that occurred in other countries when film popularity dropped below its peak. For all the obvious reasons, such as television and rising cost of living including installment - buying', Spain has suffered a considerable regression at the boxoffice. Faced with developments over which he has no control, the distributor must revise his thinking, review costs in general, re-study buying methods and financing, request tax relief and adopt a plan of mutual support now that the cinema's Golden Age is past.

Also, the distributors should come to some definite agreement with the producers and exhibitors so that together they undertake a widespread campaign not only to reduce costs in general—but to promote and expand public interest in film entertainment.

None of this has yet been done. There has been considerable agreement reached recently among the distributing companies, but despite common acceptance of policy, few practical measures have resulted to justify optimism. Distribution circles today reflect a definite pessimistic outlook.

Uncertain Outlook

Existing facts reveal more than 300 imported films of the last three years as well as Spain's own product are waiting in line for premiere dates in Madrid and Barcelona, key centers for the normal release of a picture. If we add to this number the coming allocations for 1961 import and dubbing licenses, it becomes evident the distrib situation is not a hopeful one. His investments are enormous and recuperation, in many cases, extremely doubtful. The economic situation, for the moment, is very uncertain in our branch of the industry.

Quotas for import and dubbing licenses continue to exist in Spain. These quotas are fixed in agreements between the Spanish film authorities and the corresponding official authorities of other countries with exception of the agreement between the Spanish government and the MPEA—the only signed pact between Spain and private industry of a foreign nation.

Proportional allocation of these import and dubbing permits is made among distributors based on seniority of the company, the number of employees of each distributor, the number of films each company has imported during the last three years, the number of Spanish pictures distributed and taxes paid. In general, an effort is made to allocate rationally and fairly, in spite of a system that is not fully perfect. All distributors legally established in Spain can participate in this allocation system within the qualifying scope already specified. There is no discrimination against any one of the companies associated with MPEA.

American film majors frequently contend that the Spanish government wants to force their affiliates out of business. The answer they get—honest because grounded in reality — is that the government has no such desire.

Charges have been levelled at Spanish authorities and against Spanish distributors for pursuing a nationalist policy. The truth of the matter is that the Spanish government, without opposition from Spanish distributors, has been giving the same consideration to MPEA companies as it has to all Spanish companies. This cannot be termed a nationalist policy.

MPEA has always claimed extra privileges for its member companies via special agreements that gave more licenses to them than to Spanish companies equally important in size, influence and marketing organization. This position is neither just nor reasonable.

At least 10 Spanish distribution companies, at the present time, can cite the same arguments advanced by MPEA on behalf of its companies to demonstrate equal investment release scope and established interests. This is the situation and, quite honestly, there seems little possibility that this situation will change substantially. It is indeed doubtful that the affiliated companies can get added license consideration through possible increase of the American quota, without a sizable and loyal counterpart action related to the expansion of Spanish films in foreign markets.

This is the only course to follow; there is no other. MPEA optimism at the moment is mistaken optimism that could turn to pessimism in a relatively brief period of time.

If Patriotic Protection Is Wanted—

[Spaniards Will Provide It]

Madrid.

The Spanish film producer has, for many years, been the beneficiary of one of the most patriotic systems of state protection. By law, the film exhibitor must devote a considerable portion of his annual screen time to local features. The distributor in Spain is compelled to release one Spanish film for every four foreign films imported and, to round out the all embracing state-aid program, the Spanish producer is granted a subsidy based on classification that returns to him from 25-40% of his budget and, in rare cases where the film is designated "national interest," a 50% rebate on his budget.

Though classification and subsidy play a vital role for Spanish film producers there has been little public information available on this aspect of state aid. A complete statistical chart of films classified and subsidized appeared in publication for the first time recently and this document offers an analytical insight into Spanish film production for 1960.

The first step in classification procedure is producer submission of his budget to the classification board. The classifiers invariably find these figures disproportionately high and come up with what is known as "approved cost." It is on these final figures that a subsidy rating is officially awarded. Keeping this mechanism in mind, an examination of films classified during 1960 is enlightening.

Coproduction Falls Off; Aspects Of the System

Of the 68 films classified last pear, 51 yere nationally produced and 17 were coproductions. The decrease in coproductions, particularly with Italy, is explained by the rigid insistence of Spanish film authorities on air-tight fulfillment of percentage participation by each of the coproducers.

These 68 films were produced by 49 producers out of 130 officially inscribed in the sindicato's producer association. This total includes 20 new film-makers added to the rolls during the past season and also accounts for ten economically-wrecked withdrawals.

Where the classification document really shines is that it shows budget figures submitted by the producers and what happens to these figures after the classification commission decided what the final budget will be prior to awarding a subsidy rating. Statistics strikingly indicate that government estimates of production costs throughout the year were 31% lower than figures submitted by producers. The total peseta production outlay of $6,900,000 presented by producers last year became $5,300,000 in the hands of official classifiers. In 1959, the classification board cut producer budgets 46%.

How much is the average Spanish producer investing in his films? According to official figures, 78% of Spanish features last year each cost between three and six million pesetas ($50,000 - $100,000) to produce. And 16% of Spanish product cost between six and nine million pesetas. Compared to the year before, Spanish budgets show a tendency to increase in the five to seven million peseta class and decrease in the seven to nine million peseta class. Based on producers' figures, the average film last year cost 6,892,000 pesetas to produce ($110,000). Based on budget figures the classification board approved, the average Spanish film was brought in last year for $78,000.

Average of $25,000 Per Feature in Govt. Subsidy

With statistics available showing that government subsidies last year came to slightly more than one hundred million pesetas ($1,700,000), the average subsidy per picture came to 1,500,000 pesetas, or $25,000.

In a country where box-office receipts are a closely guarded secret, distributor information reveals that the average Spanish picture earns 2,300,000 pesetas (circa $40,000) in the home market. This, combined with the average subsidy of $25,000, leaves the producer in the red by about $50,000 if he accepts his own figures or about $15,000 if his compilation is based on government budget figures.

The immediate conclusion is that the Spanish film industry is not self-sufficient in its own market. To make up for the gap, Spanish producers urgently require foreign earnings to the tune of one million dollars a year, and according to the Foreign Currency Exchange Institute, this has not been the case to date.

To remedy the situation, a government decree recently promulgated a medium-range credit plan to Spanish producers, offering credits up to 60% of budget for producers armed with a minimum program of three film projects a year. The credit system hopes to achieve a concentration of established producers and stimulate them to turn out product that will not only compete with American pix at home, but which will at least find a substantial market footing in the Spanish-language world.

At home in Spain, there is already a well-defined producer campaign to secure further state protection by having the government reduce the number of dubbing licenses for foreign pix or, more radically, completely withhold authorization to dub film imports. Such a move in the Spanish market is also being supported by Argentine and Mexican producers whose product gets little screen time here in competition with American films. Sub-titling is common practice in Argentina and Mexico. The introduction of its principal in Spain would produce a bonanza for Spanish producers and automatically provide a rich market for Latin American film fare—but would go a long way to destroy America's restored and unchallenged supremacy in Spain.

There are no signs that such a move is lurking around the corner, but there are many Spanish producers who feel that such measures, added to the combined state-aid mechanism, would give Spain its first taste of a genuine film industry and, simultaneously, the assurance that local film product could at least be amortized in the home market.

Christ Tale On Small Budget

Madrid.

At a time when Hollywood is taking credit for biblical film productions costing millions and more millions, Spain has borrowed a Hollywood star to produce a bible film-tale for little more than peanuts. Completely unencumbered with complexes as to "Ten Commandments," "Ben-Hur," and the mighty "King of Kings," the latter actually made in Spain last year by producer Samuel Bronston, a Bilbao film maker is actively readying his small-dimension saga for early release.

Produced by Tre Films, "Milagro a Los Cobardes" (Miracle for Cowards) depicts the crucifixion of Christ as seen from the viewpoint of 40 contemporaries, all cured of one affliction or another by the Great Healer. Pledged to defend Christ in his hour of need, they succumb to fear and cowardice.

Hollywood actress Ruth Roman recently completed her role as the Mother of Ruben, a young carpenter whose sight Christ restored and who alone accompanies Christ to Calvary. Ruben is played by Javier Escriva, a young Spanish actor who successfully debuted two years ago as Father Damien, the Leper Priest in "Molokai" and who starred last year in a semi-religioso, "The Unchained Prince." Manuel Mur Oti is directing from the screen play by Manolo Pilares. Remaining cast includes Paloma Valdes, Leo Anchoriz, Carlos Casaravilla, Ricardo Canales and Manuel Diaz Gonzalez.

Exception made for the tab Ruth Roman will pick up for her role as Anna, the production will cost about $100,000. Most of the film will be shot on a single sound stage at CEA Studios and a single set approximating a Jerusalem street square artfully constructed for innumerable scene changes.

San Sebastian Film Fest Faces Many Practical Organizational Hazards

By HANK WERBA

Madrid.

No one is expecting miracles at the San Sebastian International Film Festival this year. In fact, it would be a surprise to no one if this baby brother among the four major festivals accredited by the International Federation of Film Producers' Associations (FIAP) fared worse than it has in the past.

One of the two principal reasons for the pessimistic outlook for 1961 is that San Sebastian is a victim of dates. Annually, festival-hopping filmites and film commentators just barely manage to span closing ceremonies at the Berlin fest and inaugural rites at the Basque ocean-side resort city. This year, to make matters gloomier, the July 8-17 Spanish festival will be sandwiched in at both ends by the infinitely bigger and more spectacular Moscow Film Festival.

The second reason for doubt is that San Sebastian is being guided by a brand new festival director, Francisco Ferrer, who was brought in last November to replace his veteran predecessor, Antonio Zulueta.

The incoming fest chief admitted that one of his principal tasks was to organize and run a festival within the modest budget allocated by government film authorities, Unespana film producer, the municipality of San Sebastian, the regional tourist organization and the expected box-office intake. His main complaint is the lack of cooperation anticipated from San Sebastian hotel owners, but this has been chronic for years.

Retrospectives

Few organizational or structural changes of any importance are foreseen. The dignified but aging Teatro Victoria Eugenia will continue as showcase for competing film entries and the adjacent Hotel Maria Cristina will again be taken over in part for delegates and guests. Ferrer has already announced three "retrospective" series. The first is dedicated to Mexican director Emilio Fernandez, "El Indio," the second will revive ten years of festival-prized Japanese pix and the third will bring back the pioneer screen images of Georges Melies.

The San Sebastian Fest appears determined to accent films for children and has numerous activities outlined, not only to unreel tot product from as diverse a geographical area as possible, but is also staging post-festival forums to study and hypo this area of film production.

There will only be two main juries this year—one to name the best film, actor and actress; the other to select the best Spanish language entry. Ferrer fully realizes he is taking on a thankless job with an inadequate budget in the face of slackening festival interest generally and in competition with four European fests (Moscow included), that might very well relegate San Sebastian to a permanent spot in the minor leagues.

BARCELONA REMAINS LIVELY FILM BURG

Barcelona.

Barcelona has traditionally been a good show town, a colorful seaport, long the commercial dynamo of Spain. This may be less true since the Civil War and the resultant strengthening of the central authority in Madrid; but even so there is a characteristic "pep-and-go" here and the town rejoices in half a dozen legitimate theatres, a lavish and stylish opera house, the Lirico, a cultural ornament singularly lacking in Madrid, though the capital.

Herewith a rundown of the cinemas of Barcelona and the immediate booking area:

First Run Situations

Coliseum, Windsor, Tivoli, Novedades, Kursaal, Femina, Astoria, Cristina, Alexandra, Atlanta, Arcadia, Alcazar, Borras, Diagonal, Capitol Metropol, Bosque, Atenas, Vergara, Dorado and Comedia.

Second Run

Adriano, Alondra, Arenas, Albeniz, Alborada, Avenida, Balmes, Bonanova, Cataluña, Cervantes, Cine Comedia, Chile, Delicias, Espanol, Excelsior, Florida, Gayarre, Goya, Granvia, Iris, Liceo, Lido, Malda, Manila, Maryland, Miria, Moderno, Mundial, Nuria, Palacio del Cinema, Princesa, Principal, Proyecciones, Ramblas, Rex, Rialto, Selecto Spring, Tetuan, Triunfo, Verdi, Versalles.

Spaniards Tepid Television Fans

Barcelona.

By now television sets have been sold profusely and you can find them in homes of Spaniards who are not rich, because with a small down payment and another small payment weekly or monthly possession is obtained. Perhaps it's because Spain's weather is generally fine, even winter nights. In any event the tradition of "going out" for shows, theatres and pix remains.

Every now and then, there are football games from 9-11 p.m. and on television. Yet the stadium is full to the last seat and thousands standing to follow the game. The same thing happens with opera. Opening nights are televised and a good narrator helps you to follow the plot, the theatre sells to capacity just the same as opera is a favorite spectacle in Barcelona which never fails and always fills the house. The social part of the opera audience cannot be shown on tv, therefore you must go if you want to know what a night in the opera really is.

Spanish programs are perhaps not too good. On Sunday night the program Gran Parada is superior, but only once a week. People enjoy tv when it is a question of news or public events such as royal weddings, arrival of important people, football games abroad, things which are impossible to go and watch personally. No old or new films are telecast here, an exception being some silents for children.

Such is the situation at this moment after more than three years of television. Film men need not worry.

Spain Lacking Boxoffice Data; Exhibs Object

Madrid.

Almost everyone in Spain's film industry, except the exhibitor, is in agreement that the present system of unpublicized boxoffice intake is doing the industry itself immeasurable harm. Criticism of this state of affairs has been levelled for years and, even though the critics have found a sympathetic ear in most government film bureaus, no solution has yet been advanced to remedy the situation.

However, there is a current drive by both producers and distributors to work out some compromise for making boxoffice figures available—if only within the industry, itself. The remedy recommended will compel exhibitors to submit b.o. secrets to the Sindicato Nacional del Espectaculo, where this information will be quietly passed along to other industry branches.

Exhibitors have always contended that no Spanish industry is called on to make its bookkeeping a matter of public record, so why single out exhibs to set a precedent.

Distributors and producers, on the other hand, strenuously maintain that the current failure to disclose boxoffice grosses is a threefold blight on the entire industry, in that:

1) No distributor ever really knows how his product has fared. 2) It hinders the establishment of the only valid state subsidy to producers, which film-makers contend should be pinned to boxoffice success, rather than current, arbitrary classification and 3) no rational tax bite can be levied on the industry as a whole until the final boxoffice phase of film receipts is brought to light.

Barcelona Still HQ for Distribution; 'Protection' of Firstrun Situations: Three Months, or Full Season

By JOAQUINA CABALLOL

Barcelona.

Unintentionally proving the thesis of this special edition of VARIETY, the business of distributing films was organized in Spain by Frenchmen. In 1905 Pathe Freres of Paris opened a big exchange on the Paseo de Gracia under Louis Garnier, a clever operator who survived here until World War I.

The Pathe Exchange was the model. Gaumont came later on, also opening offices in the Paseo de Gracia with one Huet as director. For a very long time these two firms with two Spanish renters, Gurgui and Verdaguer, who followed their footsteps, were the only ones in the market. Exhibitors used to go to these exchanges to book product and one may say that they made their own prices, they just took what they wanted and when they did not like a pic they would just say to the booker: "You can eat it yourself." It was no use arguing, the market was well provided with plenty of French, Italian, German, Danish silents and once in a while some American westerns. In short, there existed more celluloid than cinemas.

Cinematography was considered a shabby sort of art and nobody took it seriously. Except for some big Italian "epics" like "Last Days of Pompeii," "Quo Vadis" and "Cabiria," Spanish audiences preferred the French production which had comedians like Max Linder and Ricadin, and in the long features starred actors and actresses of the Comedie Francaise.

Gradually interest broadened, new houses were opened in nice districts and going to the movies became a habit. More exchanges begun distributing European material as there then did not exist any Spanish production. American serials starring Pearl White, Francis Ford and Eddie Polo made audiences rave. Film renting was on its way as a business.

Universal First

About 1922 the first American company to open its own exchange in Barcelona was Universal. Next were Paramount, Fox and Metro. Finally came Warner Bros., Radio and Columbia. The presence of the American exchange in Barcelona changed the organization of film renting absolutely. The French booking system which all the Spanish distributors had put into practice was left behind and the Form system started, much more complicated in some ways as more people were needed, but in the long run everybody has accepted the American way.

Exhibitors have continued going to book at the exchanges, those from out of town generally on Mondays. However, the first runs, preferential second run and subsequent runs are by contract and these agreements are settled as soon as the list appears at the beginning of the season. As a rule the exhibitors have a chain of theatres, first, second and third run, so that the contracts are settled early in the season. There is no point here in being a solo theatre owner, because exchanges are not interested in one house. What they want is to place the material soon and in good hands.

In some cases two or three exhibitors with one house each join together and are able to book conveniently.

Although the first run is only in one theatre, the town being big and distances long, in a few instances a first run is given to three cinemas at a time: per Montecarlo, Niza and Aristos, all three in Barcelona, but miles apart. Astoria and Cristina, in different districts, are likewise coupled.

"Protection" of first runs over subsequent exhibitions is at least three months and in cases like "80 Days," "Commandments," "Ben-Hur," "Spartacus," etc., second run does not come before another season.

The most important distributing companies have the H.O. in Barcelona and in the same building there is the branch office here, with exchange manager, bookers, travelling salesmen, office staff, shipping, etc.

All distributing offices have their agencies or representatives in the most important cities, Valencia, Bilboa, Sevilla, Murcia, La Coruna, etc.

Except from some Spanish companies lately founded in Madrid, all of Spain's distribution is from Barcelona. In Madrid the exhibitor does not visit the exchange to look or contract, but the manager or booker must go to the theatre to offer his product.

From Spain the Wail Of a Migratory Press Agent: 'Taint No Snap, Chums'

By HALSEY RAINES

Madrid.

The migratory, boundary-hopping international film press agent has his uses in today's global picture-making. He may on occasion produce a bottle of schnaps or a bit of prized bric-a-brac brought in his luggage because he must travel light. But one of the appreciated uses of the American-in-temporary-residence is that he can be made scapegoat for the turndowns which French, Spanish or Italian publicity courtiers are reluctant to perform in their own name.

All foreign productions and co-productions are besieged by chums wanting to set up stars, directors, producers and whatnot for oil portraits, sketches, photographs, interviews in depth on the leading lady's sex life and so on. However preposterous some of the requests, the native in charge is hesitant to hurt anybody's feelings. Hence the location unit publicist from the U.S. is a blessing. Blame him. Clothe him in an absolute authority and make him the author of all denials. This allows the gracious native to remain gracious. The rejected requester and he may lift a few while agreeing what muggs they send over from the states.

The Yanqui ballyhooligan can also be a useful dolt to have about when there is an absolute need on the part of a director, star or producer to let off steam, and when blasting away at some local hanger-on who didn't comprenez Americano would only be a waste of time and verbiage.

But there are more specific instances of how the roving scribe can now and then be of some minor utility. In Madrid during filming of the current James Hill feature, "Once a Thief," a close-up was required of Rex Harrison reading the European edition of the Herald Tribune, and the one provided by props had apparently been carried off by some English-studying spark or gaffer. I happened to have a copy in my coat pocket and thus made my contribution to international amity. Useful, that's what.

On another occasion on a Greek island, a scene was being made for Stanley Donen's "Surprise Package" with Yul Brynner required to display an American passport. But suddenly there wasn't any with the hotel base an hour away. The writer extracted his own with the feeling of pride that might come to a previously snubbed no-catch-anything coon-hunting dog, and turned it over.

Lowdown on High Finance

One of the hazards of the have typewriter—will travel p.a. is that he may accumulate a disproportionate amount of odd currencies and then run into a bear market in turning them over for dollars or sterling. A prime personal example occurred when, working on "Our Man in Havana" in Cuba, one check after another was blithely cashed into "dollar-even" Cuban currency. When the time came to turn the excess Havana frogskines into American ones, it was suddenly discovered that The Liberator had decided to frown on this sort of thing. So the Cuban cash went back to New York where it was turned into American greenbacks at a 60% discount. There have been no such extreme examples of somersault economics since then, but one of the points for the traveler to keep in mind is that British banks have an abnormally dim interest in Greek drachmas or Yugoslavian dinars. Unhappily, however, the decision to stash away one's traveling savings (should there be any) in a few worth-while purchases can produce some dismal results. Hearing that the Aegean factory of Icaros was second-to-none for a particular kind of hand-painted pottery, I spent last drachmas in buying three packing cases full of highly decorative plates, vases and pitchers. These were to go by direct shipment to London, along with cameras, lights, and wardrobe, but a British fog grounded everyone in Paris and after a crew of exhuberant French porters had heaved everything from the plane to a Channel train, the purchases arrived home in jig-saw fragments.

The true expendability of the American location publicist was aptly illustrated when during the making of Carl Foreman's "The Guns of Navarone" it was determined that such a character would probably only be in the way during the three-week meanderings of a fishing craft loaded with actors, technicians, cables, camera equipment and navigators. The p.a., therefore, had to find another small boat and follow around the larger vessel while film sequences were being made, using spyglasses to observe the action and having for company only a Greek doctor, with an obsession for backgammon, and a cumulative neurosis about the infrequent demands made on him for first aid treatment.

One of the most common types of mail received by the limping touter is the letter in which great envy is expressed at his opportunity to sample the world's playgrounds and culinary delights at someone else's expense. Since the p.a., like everyone else on location, works six days per week and often uses the Sabbath to catch up on undone holdovers, he is generally far more familiar with the inside of his hotel room or the back of a Mitchell camera than with any other sight, and he may at the end of two or three months quail in mortal terror at the recurring ochre-tinted boiled egg and the wispily mauve lettuce salad that continue to plague him on location luncheons. It should be noted that there is a stirring exception to this rule in the person of the roving British location caterer Phil Hobbs, but he can cover only one set of stomachs at a time.

At the end of a picturesque trip to the Aegean, the Dardanelles, or Transylvania, however, the p.a. can carefully peruse the several guide books he has stuffed into his luggage on departure from New York or London, and thus form quite a good idea of the most memorable spots in the locality he has just visited.

Anyway, the traveling publicist, still seems like an ingrown nail, to be a part of the increased ocean-hopping of American co-producing picture companies. Vilified by some, tolerated by others, he clutches his pocket-size Italian, Spanish or Greek dictionary in one hand, his banged-up suitcase in the other, and sets out on fresh travels. The destination may be a cold and bleak little seaport, an arid stretch of desert, or the snow-clad Dolomites. But, who knows, the next time it might be exotic Hong Kong, or glamorous Rio, or else gay Paree. Meantime the drive for "native settings is on, the local dealers in kroner, rials, escudos, and rupees cheerily accept the advent of the visiting Americans, and the p.a. will probably continue to go along until IBM concocts a mechanical traveling gadget that will turn out his copy and captions more dexterously, and permit his erstwhile employers to sack the publicity operator for good.

SPAIN 'DISCOVERS' INGMAR BERGMAN

Madrid.

Experimental presentation of "The Seventh Seal," first Ingmar Bergman picture in Spain, was labelled a boxoffice success after a 10-day trial run at Palacio de la Musica.

Owners of the showcase placed ads to note that attendance increased from 65% capacity on the first day to 94% on the tenth and last day.

As a result, Bergman distrib Chamartin will send the "The Seventh Seal" back to the Palacio after current run of "Pepe." Hit debut of Bergman in Spain has distribs scrambling for the Swede's past pix such as "Smiles of a Summer's Night" and "Wild Strawberries."

Peseta Hardens; Dominicans Buy A Large Factor

Madrid.

The film peseta is no longer the unofficial bargain currency it used to be. What's more, U. S. film producers are faced with a film peseta shortage.

A year ago, unlimited frozen pesetas were pegged at 80-$1, while the official rate was listed at 60. The reason cited was the heavy accumulation of blocked pesetas or "B" account pesetas representing 70% of the annual American film take in the Spanish market. Also, the film agreement between Spain and the U. S. A. clearly limited de-blocking of "B" account pesetas to motion picture activities only.

This year, government acquiescence to peseta-dollar financial deals outside the film realm has been a big factor in emptying film peseta vaults, with a consequent strengthening of the film peseta at 72. The biggest exchange deal was made by the Order of Dominicans who bought up 150 million pesetas. This particular transaction alone made it possible for the American companies to convert almost half of their yearly blocked peseta earnings. The textile industry also helped American film companies de-block.

Though the blocked peseta has always been considered a debt on Spanish economy, the Spanish film authorities do not favor an over-liberal approach to unlimited de-blocking. U. S. frozen film accounts, they feel, encourage American film producers to undertake large-scale activity in this country. They contend that when blocked pesetas are scarce and when the American producer finds the film peseta rate 40% less attractive than it was last year, it could be expected that Yank film-makers will take their cameras to other foreign areas where economic advantages are brighter.

At San Juan Bosco the Prizes Illuminate Spain's 'Official' Taste

Madrid.

The annual San Juan Bosco film awards in Spain constitute a fairly accurate barometer of official attitude toward film-makers. Sponsored by the Sindicato Nacional del Espectaculo, the cash awards for the best in all branches of the industry are decided by a jury drawn in good part form the Sindicato, with some ministerial representatives and including a minority of film professionals.

Strikingly evident this year was the calculated disregard of the young, talented new generation of filmmakers appearing on the scene loaded for bear against screen "conformism."

Among laurels this year, the best film award reflecting Spain's moral, political and religious institutions went to "La paz empieza nunca" (There Is Never Peace), another standard item on the Civil Wan. Sharing main honors with "Paz" was "El principe encadenado" (The Unchained Prince). Runner-up prizes went to "The Boat From Bilbao," "Green Harvest" and "For Men Only." Veteran director Rafael Gil was named the best director and best acting performances for last year went to Marujita Diab and Tony Leblanc. "Police Car 091 Calling" was voted the best script.

But what about "El cochecito?" Directed by youthful Madrid-based Italian director Marco Ferreri? It won the Critics Award at the Venice Film Festival last year and was considered eligible for one of the principal festival awards had it been cleared by Spanish authorities as an official entry. "Cochecito" is the only Spanish film to register box-office success on the Continent this year.

Another film completely lost in the San Juan Bosco shuffle was "Los chicos" (The Delinquents), official Spanish entry at Cannes last year. Carlos Saura made his bow as director with "Chicos" and film observers here felt that his debut offering merited some recognition from Spanish award jurists since "Chicos" was the film industry choice to represent Spain at a major international film festival.

Directors like Ferreri, Saura, Borau, Patino and Sumer, together with screen writers Azcona, Sueiro, Camus and Leonardo Martin face an unenviable futre in an industry padded with government hurdles and controls and where film officialdom regards this Spanish new-wave as more of an embarrassment than an asset. The newcomers, however, disregarded in their own backyards, take comfort in the fact that new cinematic blood can make the grade with recognition from other countries. This was the case with Juan Antonio Bardem and Luis Berlanga some five years ago when they shared the major Venice Film Festival award for the best films shown that year (Barden for "Calle Mayor" and Berlanga for "Calabuch").

The new-wavers are not able to make their way with conformist home product for a home market. Spurred on by new-wavers in France, Italy and the United States they bithely ignored (and were in turn ignored at) the traditional San Juan Bosco celebration this year and are setting their sights on adult filmfare for foreign consumption.

'Adult' Theme Emphasis Costly for Americans On Spanish Permits

Madrid.

Hollywood's swing towards "adult" films in recent years has lengthened the list of Yank releases banned by the censor from Spanish screens. While some can be salvaged judicious pruning or story-dialogue changes in dubbed versions for local exploitation, the list of films unable to clear the censor barrier includes many that were spawned for grownup moviegoers.

Some American managers in Spain select and release only those titles that are considered safe and their companies suffer no casualties. Generally, however, the Yank companies find that their hit entries back home are incompatible with local esprit but have such mighty box-office potential that the attempt to release here must be made.

United Artists this season lost "Fugitive Kind," "Some Like It Hot," Inside The Mafia" and "Tunes of Glory." UA never bothered to submit "Never on Sunday," "Elmer Gantry" or "Inherit The Wind."

20th Fox had to scratch "Rains of Ranchipur," "Farewell to Arms," "Compulsion," "Best of Everything," "Intent to Kill" and "Seven Thieves." Up for censor review are "Girl in the Red Velvet Swing" and "From The Terrace."

Par's "World of Susie Wong" and "Blood and Roses" were also rejected. Metro only lost "Butterfield 8" while Columbia failed to enter its box-office potential, "Suddenly Last Summer." Allied Artists failed with "Saipan" and "Hell to Eternity" but both pix are up for reconsideration by the censor appeal board.

Censor rejects aren't eternal. Many of the films lost will be resubmitted one or two seasons away. After all, "Love is a Many Splendored Thing" (as an example), couldn't clear for five years but was one of the brighter marquee billings during the current season.

Spain, Argentina & Mexico 'Unite'

By HANK WERBA

Madrid.

One of the most significant developmefits in the Spanish film industry is taking shape around the figure of Don Quixote, unifying symbol of the major Spanish-language film producing countries now drawing together in intimate and coordinated collaboration within the Union Cinematografica Hispanoamericana (UCHA).

What was once a dream of Uniespana (Spanish Producers Assn.) has now become a common program shared with film producers' associations in Mexico and Argentina to solidify policy and efforts and operate as a single force in the mighty geographical chunk constituted by the Spanish-speaking world. In addition, UCHA will also constitute a phalanx offensive to gain a foot-hold for Spanish-habla product in all of the lucrative film markets in the United States, Europe and the Far East.

Joint strategy has only been recently put on paper. UCHA will make its first coordinated appearance at the Cannes Film Festival with a unified press, publicity and promotion onslaught. The three founding member nations are also gearing to step up Film Weeks throughout Latin America behind an appeal for support of Spanish-language product.

However, what UCHA has in mind—its far-reaching goal, is to stimulate Spanish-language co-productions. Here, the aim is to stimulate dual and tri-nation investments for film features that will enjoy nationality and consequent state protection in each of the respective countries and make it possible to up budgets for film-making with an international flair. The recent co-production agreement between Spain and Argentina and the cordial semi-official relationship between Spain and Mexico (still without diplomatic ties is bringing UCHA closer to the three-cornered-hat setup it hopes to achieve.

Temporary President of UCHA is Attilo Mentasi, Argentina's most important producer. Oscar Brooke, recently elected member of the Mexican Producers Association, is Vice-President and Uniespana's David Jato is filling in as Secretary-General.

The Hispano-American Film Union is welcoming all branches of the industry to come into the fold. Membership is open only to the representative bodies in each branch and not to individual companies.

While Uniespana chiefs are readily aware that it is simpler to join together than it is to stick together, the feeling in Spain is that the film industry is finally veering toward its natural common market.

SPANISH COPRODUCER FOR NEXT LOREN PIC

Madrid.

Carlo Ponti-Maleno Malenotti film partnership has taken on a Spanish coproducer for Sophia Loren's next starring vehicle, "Mme. Sans Gene."

With the announcement that Jose Luis Dimildos' Agata Films had signed with Ponti-Malenotti, came the information that half the projected five-month shooting schedule will be filmed in Spain.

1st Puerto Rico Pic Set

Mexico City.

Puerto Rico's first film, delayed for about a year, is definitely set to go before the cameras in April, according to Damian Rosa, head of Puerto Rico Film Productions, in this capital to finalize deals with Mexican director Ramon Pereda who will direct. Leads of film, "Romance in Puerto Rico," will be played by Maria Antonieta Pons and Dagoberto Rodriguez, as well as entertainers known to the island republic. Shooting will be in Puerto Rico.

Rosa said this is first picture being made on island with Puerto Rican capital. He hoped that success of the initial venture and development of Latin American markets, will interest foreign capital to invest in future productions.

SPAIN'S MOST MODERN FILM STUDIO AND LABORATORIES

Theatres Plus Screening Spots

[In East Germany]

Berlin.

There are now 1,438 cinemas in the Soviet-dominated part of Germany. In addition, there are 2,148 socalled "Spielstellen" (screening spots) which are associated with film houses. The East German film scene is divided into 15 "distributing districts." Here they are (in brackets the number of "screening spots"):

Rostock	57 cinemas	(174)
Schwerin	39 cinemas	(214)
Neubrandenburg	45 cinemas	(209)
Berlin (East)	80 cinemas	(4)
Potsdam	90 cinemas	(166)
Frankfurt/Oder	61 cinemas	(116)
Magdeburg	134 cinemas	(161)
Kottsbus	79 cinemas	(139)
Halle	186 cinemas	(164)
Erfurt	80 cinemas	(171)
Suhl	88 cinemas	(81)
Gera	59 cinemas	(148)
Chemnitz	178 cinemas	(146)
Dresden	137 cinemas	(137)
Leipzig	125 cinemas	(118)
	1438 cinemas	2148)

With the exception of a few houses in East Berlin, East German cinemas either belong to associations that are "owned by the people" or are under trusteeship of authorities.

Number of cinemas in West Germany amounts to about 6,900, with a seating capacity of 2,844,000.

1926-1927 Film Season In Russia; 23% Self-Admitted 'Propaganda'

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

In the VARIETY issue of Aug. 17, 1927, under a streamer "Russians Great Advance" there appeared an arresting digest of the upsurge of film production in the Soviet Union for the 1926-27 season. This was, of course, not long after the Bolshevik revolution itself and the civil wars which followed the liquidation of the monarchy and the ousting of the mild Socialist regime of Alexander Kerensky.

Strangely enough the 1927 account speaks of the abolition of "state control" over film studios. Whatever splitting of hairs that then implied. The significant statistic was that the USSR had settled down sufficiently to turn out some 250 features. People didn't quite comprehend how Communism worked back then and the VARIETY tale, somewhat naively, expressed surprise that control of film distribution was "monopolized strangely by Sovkino."

There were then three cinematic associations in the Soviet Union. Sovkino, Maschrabpom-Russ and Goskino.

Not only had 1926-27 seen a greater number of features, but the quality was better, said the VARIETY story. Some 51 films were shot in the five Moscow and two Leningrad studios. Using Russian rubles, of whatever value they then possessed, the production costs for the season amounted to 2,565,207 to which negative costs added 523,524 rubles. The practice was to make 50 prints of each feature.

The biggest studio at the time was in Leningrad, with three stages, floor space of 1,451 square meters. There is mention, unclear today, of "290 projection apparatus," presumably part of the gear at that particular studio and laboratory.

There was talk of a Moscow studio planning 23 films, of which seven would be, shades of Hollywood, "super-films." The personnel to make the 23 features was listed as 10 scenic directors, 15 assistants, 10 operators, 8 directors, 370 electricians and grips, a strange imbalance, as it now seems.

Social-to-Classical

Russian production of 1926-27 was classified as 56% "social," 23% "Soviet propaganda," 11% "historical" and 10% "classical literature."

Goskino, organized in March of 1926, was apparently a specialized studio making films for the Red army. Of some 45 pictures 11 "demonstrated military instruction" and 13 were "artistic."

Data on film theatres in the USSR that season identified Kiev (443,000 pop) as possessing 11 houses of 3,995 seats. Odessa (317,000 pop) ran to 15 cinemas and 6,361 seats. Rotof-on-the-Don was getting along with four theatres with a population of 236,000. Moscow and Leningrad each boasted four film theatres with a capacity of 1,000. Russian theatres mostly were under 500 capacity.

'Rational' Festivals

scheme will be worked out eventually.

Meanwhile we are going to be much stricter in our rules concerning festivals and, of course, the International Federation will not give its approval to any festival which does not comply with these rules.

We have already recommended that festivals should not last longer than 12 days. In no circumstances, we feel, should more than two films be shown in any one day. Neither should the contribution of each participating country exceed two films.

We have also decided to limit to a maximum of four not yet chosen the number of festivals which should be permitted to restrict entries to films not shown outside their country of origin.

The selection of juries is another matter that concerns us. We should like to see more discrimination in the way in which they are chosen. I don't want to mention any festivals in particular, but we have not been entirely satisfied with the composition of the juries at some of them.

We feel there have been too many boos and catcalls greeting festival jury decisions. We should like these decisions to be received with satisfaction.

At some festivals there has been evidence of political influence and intrigue behind the scenes. We want to see an end of this.

There has been a failure on the part of some festivals, too, in making sure that all film entered were free of import and tax restrictions when subsequently commercially shown in the country.

Naturally we don't expect the festival organizers to give practical effect right away to all the decisions we have reached and the views we have expressed. We have agreed to be flexible about 1961. This is a transition year, but we look forward to a big step towards solving all these festival problems in 1962.

Subject to the over-riding proviso that the number of festivals should be reduced, I still think that a properly organized festival provides a splendid shop window for the best productions of cinematic art.

They also provide a valuable meeting-ground for the best minds of the world's film industries. They are an exchange mart for ideas as well as for films.

In these days, too, when films are facing so much competition from television, a festival is a useful way of reminding the world that the cinema is still in business.

I am not talking about the ballyhoo frequently associated with festivals—the parade of starlets, the obvious stunts. This kind of thing is of no value except to the companies boosting the starlets concerned. It is forgotten as soon as the festival is over.

Rise Of The 60-Year-Old Czech Film

[Prague Now Makes 30 Annually]

By JAROSLAV BROZ

Prague.

The rising shortage of feature films in the United States following the divorcement situation, the fragmenting of production to single pictures rather than blocks sold en masse has "softened" the American market for foreign film product. Starting with so-called "art" houses but broadening to more general theatres, foreign-made films have penetrated the American situations, with an accelerated pace in the past five to 10 years. Even product from far away indeed, Russia, Japan, India has found acceptance.

Evidence suggests that after a period of exclusion the films of the U.S.S.R. have made a considerable progress in the States during the past three years or so. Why then, it must be asked here in Prague, have Czechoslovakian films not found an outlet in America.

Our Czech features must not be despised. They have attained a high artistic level. The evidence of their international public appeal and human touch is abundant. They have been well-recognized at film festivals, not alone in Europe but in other continents. There is a commercial value in them.

There is inherent drama in certain of the Czech films, telling poignant tales of the sufferings in the country under German occupation. Of these Alfred Rodik's "Ghetto Terezin" stands forth for its power.

Do not forget this simple historic fact: there has been a film industry in Czechoslovakia for 60 years. Granted it was little known or noted until after World War II. Some of our talented personages went to other countries to pursue their careers.

Cite the directors Karel Lumac, Gustav Machaty or Karel Anton; and actors Anny Ondra, Hugo Haas and Jiri Voskovec; or cameramen Otta Heller, Vaclav Vich and Jan Stallich. Such people worked between the two world wars—and after 1945 too—in Germany, France, England and even in Hollywood. But films made at the Prague Studio did not penetrate into other countries through the channels of international film trade till the end of the last world war.

(Director Machaty's film "Ecstasy" with Heddy (Kiesler) Lamarr was an exception and the reason why this film became a world sensation were not only its film qualities.)

The world, and at first especially Europe, started to show a livelier interest in Czechoslovak films only after May 1945, when following the liberation of the country and the regaining of independence of the Czechoslovak Republic films were nationalized and the whole film business made into one enterprise. Czechoslovak films are represented now for international trade by Czechoslovak Filmexport.

It took the Czechoslovak film production another 10 or 15 years to overcome its yesterdays and for a new generation of film workers to appear. We have now directors Jiri Krejcik, Jiri Sequens, Zdenek Brynych, Vojtech Jasny, Karel Kachyna and others as a driving force in the studios. These young people, via their enthusiasm, got hold of even some of their elder colleagues and teachers (Otakar Vavra, Jiri Weiss, Elmar Klos, Jan Kadar and others) to inspire them to unfold all their creative talents.

With the gradual extension of the yearly production to 30 feature films, and this number is to increase in the future, more variety of subject and treatment could be included. The fact that this policy of production was correct has been proved by the favorable results achieved by Czechoslovak cinematography at international film festivals in the past three years.

Besides the pioneer work of director Karel Zeman, whose science-phantasy "Invention of destruction," based on a novel by Jules Verne, won awards at a number of international film festivals, especially at the International Film Festival at Brussels in 1958, where this film was awarded the "Grand Prix," Czechoslovak pix have surprised the world by several other film [illegible] Juliet and the Darkness" of Nazi occupation deserve to be mentioned first—the Czech film "Romeo, Juliet and the Darkness"—similar to the "Diary of Anne Frank" and much more intimate in its treatment, made by director Jiri Weiss, and "Mr Higher Principles" by Jiri Krejcik as well as the psychological drama "Wolf Trap" based on a novel by Jarmila Glazarova, again directed by Jiri Weiss, a film about the life of youngsters in a big city.

"Awakening" by Jiri Krejcik, director Brynych's topic drama on counter-espionage; "Skid," director Vladimir Cech's tale about the fate of soldiers of the Foreign Legion; "The Black Flag," which was shown with great success in the German Federal Republic, director Milos Makovec's treatment of the story of people in Bohemia during the Seven Years War; "The Lost Ones," a story of three deserters who pay with their lives for their revolt against war, and many others may be cited.

This small selection of outstanding Czechoslovak films of the last three years could be extended to cover several others, which would also be suitable for successful showing in cinemas abroad including the United States. After the series of new Polish films which have in the last three years penetrated to the world's film market it may now be the turn of Czechoslovak films, which, like their Polish counterparts, are high in artistic quality and in deep emotional content, truthfulness, and mutual understanding of human nature. Czechoslovak films have [illegible] gained a right to a place among those national film industries which have to be dealt with on the international market.

Russia's Aim: 200 Yearly By 1965

'Humanity' Rises In Character Delineation as Stalinist Propaganda Fades

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris.

Commonly the western countries, and their film industries assume that the Russian film is co-extensive with the Soviet society, following on the Red revolution of 1917. This is not accurate. One is reminded in Jay Leyda's definitive book on Russian cinema, "Kino" that prior to the Marxist revolution there was a Russian film industry.

It follows that the character of Russian films changed drastically with its Bolsheviki masters in control. Nonetheless the historic precedents must not be overlooked.

Leyda's list of pre-revolutionary films display a definitely developed industry with several film adaptations of books by Dostoyevsky, Dickens, Tolstoy, Gogol, Pushkin and others.

Semi-Human Anyhow

One Russo director, Yakov Protazonov, bridged the gap from Russo to Soviet cinema and made a film of Checkhov stories and primarily "The Forty-First," a tale of the love between a revolutionary miss and a White Russian officer which treated the man in a sympathetic light, and this in 1927. It is true he was finally killed by his sweetheart. Remade in '56 by Grigori Choukrai, story won, of all things, a prize for best "original scenario" at the Cannes Festival though it was from a book and a remake. It was one of the early Russian films to show emotional thaw. Personalized and human characterization began to appear, after Stalin, with better psychological motivation. Real life began to be treated without the cloud of party interpretation.

This drift was even more evident with "The Flying Cranes" which won the Grand Prix in Cannes in '58 and went on to do solid biz in France and other countries. Then came "Don Quixote," a solid retelling of the classic, "Ballad of a Soldier," and more filmings of pre-Soviet Russian classics of Dostoyevsky, Tolstoy, Gogol, Kuprin and others. A Soviet Film Week in Paris in April, 1959 turned out to be a critical and attendance hit and displayed that the Soviets at last were sending films abroad that had a "New Look" about them.

Heroines were becoming more svelte and lookers, they loved men passionately, not only tractors. And though propaganda in the form of revolutionary and worker hero arche-types were still prevalent, there was generally more humanistic interest in everyday character dramas, plus big-scale epics and action films.

There has been a limited, if definite Russian film breakthrough into world marts. Future festivals will tell if this trend will continue. Moscow's own Film Festival in 1959 allowed Western observers to take a closer look at the Soviet film setup and outlook. There was a glimpse of a seven year plan of building new theatres and studios. The aim: 200 features annually by 1965 over the present 120 to 130.

The general low pay of Russian film workers and stars as compared to the west was noted as well as the fact that it was still a seller's mart. Even so USSR pix could still be "unpopular." The Soviet aim was to make money, too, as well as give people knowledge, propaganda and entertainment.

The Russian film has a long way to go to reach its great period of the '20's and 30's when such names as Eisenstein, Pudovkin, Dovzhenko and others implied the unusual in films and techniques. With the increased cultural exchanges Yank pix are going into Soviet theatres and vice-versa. VARIETY's International Film Edition, in years ahead, ought to tell an engrossing story here.

DEFA's Position

Berlin.

DEFA, the East German state film monopoly, celebrates its 15th anni next month. It was on May 17, 1946, when the Potsdam studios were formally handed over to the company by the Russians.

In its earlier days, DEFA concentrated on pix dealing with the Nazis and its first postwar film was Wolfgang Staudte' "The Murderers are Amongst Us." Other subjects that followed included "The Captain of Cologne," "Operation Teutonic Sword" and "The German Story."

More recently, the East Germans have been developing the principle of coproduction, not only with other countries behind the Curtain, but also with the West, and particularly Sweden and France. Its first coproduction with the Russians is now on view, and another is in the works.

The DEFA setup at Potsdam includes newsreel, documentary and animated studios, and a film and tv college where new recruits are given practical training.

MEXICO EYES FOREIGN MARKETS

U.S. Market For Mexican Pix

Mexico City.

A Spanish language market buildup in the United States also has adherents. As a matter of fact, Cimex, through its American subsidiary distributorship is engaged in development of exhibition of films in such Spanish population centers as Los Angeles, Chicago, New York, etc., as well as the entire southwestern area.

While no accurate figures can be obtained on receipts, reputed returns are said to exceed $3,000,000, and some sources claim $5,000,000 rentals and more annually.

It is most probable that the lower figure reflects more or less the true picture. If Cimex can push it to $5-million (U.S.) in Spanish houses throughout America, a considerable part of current financial difficulties here in Mexico would be dissipated.

Intermittently Festival-Minded

Mexican Product Competed 23 Years Ago — Not Ready in Time, Missing Cannes This Spring

Mexico City.

Mexico is not going to shun international festivals this year. In fact, is readying strong material for European and Latin American events, and expects to garner some prizes. Only bypass this year has been the Cannes event, and this because picture selected could not be processed in time.

The republic has been participating in international film fests for 23 years now, ever since 1937, when "Alla en Rancho Grande" copped an award for cameraman Gabriel Figueroa in Venice. Since then Figueroa, top cameraman here, has won other first prizes for his excellent camera technique.

While Mexico has not made any great record in international events, the republic has been singled out for honorary mentions as well as some top prizes. And, in general, the product sent in competition has shown that Mexico's movie makers, when they put their minds to it, can turn out product on a par with the best offered by the world's industry.

From 1937 to 1947 there was a blank decade and it was not until the latter year that Mexico again sent another film to Cannes. This one, "The Pearl," starring Maria Elena Marquez, Pedro Armendariz and directed by Emilio "Indio" Fernandez, again gave Figueroa a prize for photography as well as special honors for the film.

At the 1949 Belgian fest "Salon Mexico," with Marga Lopez and Rodolfo Acosta as stars, was Mexican entry. This was followed up by participation in the Venice and Cannes fests, with pictures being the outstanding "La Malquerida" (The Unloved), "Pueblerina" and "Maclovia." In these the winning combination of Fernandez-Figueroa also won accolades as well as outstanding work of Dolores del Rio, Pedro Armendariz in first; Columba Dominguez and Roberto Canedo in second and Maria Felix and Pedro Armendariz in third.

Other Entries

Another skip to 1953 and again a Cannes recognition of the Figueroa talents, this time in "La Red" (The Net), starring Rossana Podesta, Armando Silvestre and Crox Alvarado.

In 1957 deceased singing star Pedro Infante, in a dramatic role in "Tizoc," with Maria Felix in female lead, turned in what was to be best performance of his career under direction of Ismael Rodriguez. This picture was official entry at Cannes but the unofficial "Los Olvidados," directed by Luis Bnuel also received special mention.

Rene Cardona's version of Tom Thumb, named "Pulgarcito" in Spanish, won the first prize in the juvenile division of the Venice Festival in 1958. The following year Mexico again took prize in same event with "The Smile of the Virgin," this one produced and directed by Roberto Rodriguez. Mexican entry at Cannes "Rehearsal for A Murder," did not receive any special singling out from judges but picture was cited as better than average of its type and has since done good business in foreign markets.

"Madhouse" received special mention at the Quito Festival in 1958, as did Santa Claus in the San Francisco fest in 1959, with "Nazarin" sent to Cannes in the same year.

Last year "Macario" starring Nacho Lopez Tarso and Pina Pellicer had these two principals winning the grand prize for acting at the San Francisco event, and launching them in active careers with international overtones. This year "Macario" is an entry for an Oscar in the foreign category. Picture was directed by Roberto Gavaldon and produced by the government's Clasa Films with Gabriel Figueroa again cameraman.

Tito Junco, who played lead in "Shadows of the Leader," controversial film showing revolutionary figures as less heroes than greedy, conniving opportunists, won acting trophy at Karlovy Vary. Powerful political interests have withheld exhibition of the picture, after a very brief premiere, despite its artistic and technical merits. At this writing it seems that the Technical and Manual Workers Section of the Union of Film Production Workers, which produced film, with Julio Bracho directing, has succeeded in getting an exhibition permit again and picture is scheduled for reappearance at the Roble Theatre.

Mexico's juvenile entry at Venice last year was "Little Red Riding Hood," again directed by Ricardo Rodriguez. Picture was also entered at Mar del Plata and won the Roble Leaf, one of the awards at the festival.

This year "Simitrio" won first prize for Spanish dialogue films at San Sebastien. And while "La Cucaracha," received acclaim at the Mar del Plata event it received no trophy.

There is great hope for the Bruno Traven "White Rose," film, which treats in part of the Mexican oil expropriation, with this one scheduled for the Berlin fest. Other product is being carefully marshalled for all other international events and this year the feeling is high in Mexican film circles that quite a few awards will be won by the republic.

In a brief recap of festival entries, as well as the pattern of general production in Mexico, there is one outstanding fact: time and time again star elements are the same and in photography it is Gabriel Figueroa who is the stand out. Some industry observers say that this rigid pattern, with reliance on old standbys, especially in star ranks, is chief reason for so-so showing at festivals and troubles at the boxoffice. Not that performers and other elements are not skilled and capable. But injection of new talent is deemed as essential in the evolution of a new and vital picture industry in the republic.

Recent stipulations by the Film Bank for stronger scripts, and a sayso also in casting and selection of technical talent, has been reflected in a few good pictures made late last year and in the early months of this year. The fate of these at international fests will soon be decided.

REALISTIC STEPS ALREADY TAKEN

By EMIL ZUBRYN

Mexico City.

Alarmed by growing competition in what has been the traditional Spanish language market for Mexican motion pictures, both officials and producers here are searching for ways and means to hang on, reconquer and develop new business in Latin America, the Caribbean area and Spanish language houses in the States.

Coincident with plans of action now in various stages of development is an ambitious project to broaden the American market, perhaps through general release of English-dubbed national films deemed suitable for universal release. There will be no flood of Mexican pictures in the United States and Canada (or Britain), but such federal officials as Jorge Ferretis (of the Film Bureau), Federico Heuer (Film Bank) and Salvador Amelio (heading up the Cimex distributorship that supervises release of national product in America and Europe) are confident that at least a dozen, and possibly more, pictures a year could be sold in dubbed versions in English speaking areas.

Respect Shown 'Macario' Heartening Mexico

As a matter of fact these gentlemen, as well as production ranks, have been greatly heartened of late by the honor bestowed on "Macario," a sensitively-produced film invited to participate for an Oscar in the foreign division. The picture is also in release in American art houses and officials here are already planning in terms of broader release with dubbed in English sound.

Mexico has been thinking internationally for several years now, but no major program was instituted until the present drive. Apart from "Macario," Mexicans have readied "La Cucaracha" and several other carefully selected films for art house release with subtitles.

Amelio, who is the heart of the present bid to crash the American market, has said that dubbing in English will await boxoffice results of present American exploitation of the initial pix. He is highly op-

Hotel, Tourist Reps Get Behind Mex 4th World Review of Film Fests

Mexico City.

It now appears that Acapulco will not be displaced for a provincial city as site of the fourth World Review of Film Festivals after all. Although production elements are still cool to the festival idea, reportedly because of the slighting of national product, Jorge Ferretis, Film Bureau chief, and also on the organizing committee of the event, specially flew down to the port resort for a combined business-pleasure trip recently.

Ferretis has received reassurances of hotel and other tourist elements that they will back the fest to the full this year. And in a bid to boost boxoffice receipts, the federal official has finalized plans for a radical reconstruction of the San Diego Fortress.

Innovations will include a relocation of the screen and improvement in seating setup. There will be a limited reserved-seat section as well as an intermediate section and a popular-priced area. Boxoffice prices probably will be 80c to $4.

Ferretis revealed that he had upped his assistant at the Film Bureau, Miss Carmen Baez, to post of coordinator of the fest. Opposition forces to the festival, chiefly disgruntled production elements, allege that they will oppose celebration of the event because it persistently bypasses Mexican product.

Mexico Checks Other Latin Lands; Coin Freeze Crimps Cuba, Venezuela

Mexico City.

With all the divergent viewpoints, the Mexican industry has not yet formulated a major plan to pull it out of its present deficits and in-the-red operations. Perhaps "quality" is the answer, with a careful selection of stories. For the fact is that Mexican picture production elements, from scriptwriters to talent, directors and cameramen can and do produce brilliant, heart warming stories on occasion. It all sums up to the old saying that when they are good, they can be very good indeed; and when they are bad—fill to suit!

With the European and American markets still to be exploited to the full, the Mexican industry has been receiving a series of major setbacks in Latin American areas that have hurt it hard. There have been exchange freezes in Cuba, Venezuela and other republics; the political unrest, and the fact that exhibition picture throughout Latin America is spotty.

Peliculas Mexicanas, which handles Mexican product in Spanish speaking areas has been hardest hit by all this, is pressed for cash, and urgently needs at least $2,000,000 (U.S.) to continue operations and finance new production. As this is written there is unconfirmed rumor that the Mexican Government will come up with the requested cash. In film circles there is grim talk that the State must put up coin or production may face threat of paralyzation.

A Peliculas Mexicanas study of the Central and South American markets shows conditions spotty and uncertain. For example, Venezuela, traditionally a good market for Mexico, exhibited a total 86 pictures. But distributorships have backlogs of 145 films (these including those already shipped, in laboratory processing or shooting) awaiting release, including a substantial amount of Hollywood products.

In Peru, Bolivia and Ecuador a total of 82 films were released in 1960 and 153 are awaiting exploitation. Puerto Rico, where Spanish idiom is on the decline, premiered 42 pictures and has 206 available. Cuba, a dead duck market, showed 43 films and has a pile up of 182.

Central & South America

Central America, heretofore a very good market for Mexico, released 72 films and has 142 awaiting exploitation. Colombia exhibition totaled 89 films last year and has 158 films in cans warehoused.

Brazil, Argentina and Chile are relatively small markets, with import limitations resulting in screening of around 35 pictures annually. Argentina is an upsurge market for Mexico with both nations recently agreeing to exchange 25 films a year. And in Uruguay Mexico placed 39 pictures in 1960.

All the above figures provided by Pel-Mex representatives in the respective market areas.

As for the Pel-Mex financial structure, Blas Lopez Fandos, head of the official distributorship recently revealed it has $4.240.000 dollars tied up in unreleased films, and has a paid-in capitalization of $2.000,000. The distributorship also has a heavy investment in movie houses in Latin America, with this somewhat over $2.080.000 dollars, with chain now coming to 67 houses spread out in Colombia, Venezuela, Spain, Cuba, Uruguay, Ecuador, El Salvador and Brazil. Not all of these are owned outright, with only approximately 30 houses in this category. The rest are houses leased on long term basis to insure outlet for Mexican product.

Lopez Fandos, despite the black picture of the moment, is bullish about the future and stoutly maintains that the Spanish language market is the backbone of the national industry. And he is backing up this statement by planning to build a new house in Colombia after the "economic crisis" is resolved. He said that the Cine Mexico in Bogota, built by Pel-Mex several years back, has produced excellent returns.

Pel-Mex is also dickering for the purchase of six additional houses in Central and South America, with these located in Guatemala, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Colombia and Brazil. This apart from future construction plans of new movie palaces by the distributorship which plans to build up a Latin American circuit, within the next few years numbering over 150 houses throughout the area.

Fandos is the Spanish language market dynamo. And his opinion is that Mexico should cement this market before spreading her wings to other areas of the globe. He is also proponent of big build up of the Spanish language market in the U.S.

New Churubusco Technical Gear

Mexico City.

The government-owned Churubusco Studios, chief production facilities in the republic, are now being reconditioned and modernized to make these the best installations in Latin America. Studios already have over 20 sound stages and there is to be expansion of these although actual work has not yet begun.

However, U. S. and French cameras, lighting and sound equipment, and a color negative copier ordered around two months back are scheduled to arrive here at the end of this month.

This equipment, valued at more than $40,000 (U.S.) is but part of new acquisitions intended to replace outmoded installations. And while there is no official confirmation, Churubusco Studios may soon begin producing its own films, replacing gap created by suspension of activity of the federally-owned Clasa Films Mundiales.

Only other major studio in Mexico is the private San Angel Inn Studios, owned by Jorge Stahl. This has 14 sound stages and complementary facilities and is used chiefly by independents operating on smaller budgets. Rumors of a possible sale to the government have not been confirmed as yet although apparently the project is still under consideration.

But it is Churubusco that is the mainstay of the Mexican film industry. And the government is planning drastic renovations.

Apparently slated to go is an exesore, jerry built "western" set. This was erected with traditional false fronts, wood and carton, replete with a small square, the dusty street for the "stalk," a church, cantina, and so on. This "village" has been scene of around 100 Mexican films and it has gotten so that fans can identify each building, no matter how it is disguised by paint and quick camouflage. Sometimes the saloon dubs as the Mayor's Office, others it reverts to its traditional cantina trappings, and when script calls for it, becomes a general store, court house, or whatever.

The village has served as a set for sites porportedly in Yucatan, or Veracruz, Chiapas or Texas. And now it may serve one more useful purpose, probably as background for a scene requiring a flaming village. For more serious producers, and the government, feel that there should be more striving for authenticity, and more shooting on actual location in natural settings in future production. This even for modest budget pictures.

Churubusco facilities are also used by Hollywood units who go south of the border to make pictures. Only interiors are shot in — sound stages, for majority of scenes in American westerns, thrillers, etc. made in Mexico place heavy reliance on the magnificent in the republic within and without scenery and cloud effects available the rainy season.

Sternly-Enforced Screen Criteria; Mexico Fights Certain 'Realism'; Scripters Tread Nervous Path

Mexico City.

While producer, actor and union el m'ts of the Mexican film industry are unimpressed by the current intensified censorship drive to "purify" the industry, Jorge Ferretis and the Film Bureau censorship division remain adamant. Mexican pictures, and foreign (including Hollywood) must toe the line and present safe, clean and unobjectionable material that can be seen by the entire family.

Even in the "For Adults Only" classification the censor's shears will delete scenes that are considered "too rough" for Mexican cash customers. As these lines are being written, Jorge Ferretis has indicated that the long delayed exhibition permit for Italy's "La Dolce Vita" will be granted. But only after cutting of "raw" scenes. Picture was shown in its entirety at the last World Review of Film Festivals, without one scene deleted. But apparently what is good enough for sophisticated festival audiences is not considered palatable fare for the general Mexican masses.

This does not quite go with personal observations of this reporter over 13 years of residence in Mexico. Some years back, when Mexican producers were minting money through a series of national pictures where featured players (female) were willing to reveal their charms before the cameras, the fans fought to get into picture houses to see the naughty films. Which were by naughty only as to camera angles of disrobed women, done rather artistically, as a matter of fact.

And in recent times, whenever there is a Brigitte Bardot film, or a saucy Italian slant on marriage or the sinful life, police have to come out to control the fans. It has always been thus.

Morbidity & Cruelty

Most recent subject of Film Bureau censor troubles is plaguing producers Jose Luis Celis and Roberto Figueroa, who acquired exhibition rights in Mexico for the German made "Brave Night." Exhibition permit has been pending for months and chances are that it will only be shown, if ever, in a very emasculated version.

Apart from morbid, too sexy, over-cruel and realistic themes, in national and foreign productions, Mexican censors are particularly touchy about themes that allegedly show this nation, its peoples or national heroes in an unfavorable light. This has been basis for the ban against shooting John Wayne's "The Alamo" in Mexico, and for the denial of an exhibition permit for the picture.

Six Soldierettes

Another outstanding case was the recent difference of opinion between Mexican producer Jose Bolanos, his American coproducer Ed Gottlieb, and the man of cinematic morals, Jorge Ferretis. Not-yet-made picture, the disputed "La Soldadera," has been in project for long years. Official turndown was based not so much on "distortion" of history but a "too realistic" presentation of the truth with actual occurrences in script highlighting marijuana smoking female soldiers, their lewdness, nude scenes and so on.

Ferretis said that it was "not convenient" to present "garbage" for public view, even when this was inspired by bona-fide historical occurrences. The official stand is that producers of "La Soldadera" wanted to capitalize on startling, heavy impact incidents that should best be forgotten. And that the only motivating force with truth was to highlight sordidness to pack in fans at the boxoffice.

In a talk with one hard-pressed Mexican scriptwriter, an articulate spokesman for his unfortunate confreres, he highlighted the fact that writers are not the but of all official ire and censure, and that the alleged "freedom of expression" in the seventh art in Mexico just does not exist. These are hair-splitting words, but paint the picture exactly as it is. The scriptwriter's point is that their briefs are so tied today that they can only do a certain type of script, with this leading to endless repetitions of the same sort of innocuous theme.

Scripter's Woes

With the squeeze on from official sources, the scriptwriter (who gets say $2,000 U. S. on an average) has to think in terms of a story line that will not be subjected to official objections. And so originality is going by the boards.

The complaint of the scriptwriters is sound, for under today's interpretation of what makes an "acceptable" script, producer and writer must avoid all criticism of public institutions, for example, or the Government. Examples are "Felicidad" (Happiness) which poked fun at bureaucracy and "The Shadow of the Leader," which made a powerful indictment of revolutionary figures showing that these were not heroes but had feet of clay. First film had exhibition permit restricted for some time and latter, too, has been languishing in cans. Under today's ground rules national figures must not be held up to disparagement, heroes not torn down from their pedestals. Nor can actual life in certain segments of the population be presented as it really is. Nor can there be films about juvenile delinquents. Add a long, long list of other taboos.

Reversed State

Our scriptwriter friend put it succinctly by stating "it is no longer a question in Mexico of asking what cannot be made. It is far simpler to ask what can be made."

Scriptwriters south of the border envy their Hollywood, British, French, English and other colleagues. For they have seen strong pictures censuring governments and incidents, and even attacking army, airforce, navy and brass hat policies. In Mexico all of these themes are on the "forbidden" list and the wise scriptwriter is the one who adopts a hands off policy.

There have been articulate voices raised in protest against the growing film censorship in Mexico, from all segments of the industry. Actress Pina Pellicer, for example, courageously put in a good word for "La Soldadera." It may be argued that she was biased for picture ban has robbed her of an especially meaty role, which she told industry friends she would like to do. She went even so far as to seek out Jorge Ferretis personally, plead for an official okay, on basis of small changes in certain scenes and rather strong expressions, which would not have worked much harm to the overall picture pattern. It was no dice, however.

And Miss Pellicer has added a postscript, stating that "even if it is the last picture I make in my movie career, I want to make Soldadera." It might very well be her last, for a flouting of officialdom can be costly to an entertainer. Still, there is little likelihood of any endangering of Miss Pellicer's career, since at this writing the entire "La Soldadera" issue is up in the air. Producers Bolanos and Gottlieb allege they will make the picture outside of Mexico, in some friendlier Latin American nation. But Ferretis has countered this by insisting he will call on "friendly nations" to ban shooting permits or, if picture is made, he will carry the case further and try for a world exhibition boycott. Just how this latter could be achieved puzzles top industry figures in Mexico.

Need Not Cripple

Carlos Tinoco, union official and liaison man with Hollywood in smoothing the way for production activity south of the border, is also very unhappy about the strict censorship trend. It does not help his task any in inveigling Hollywood units to resume production in the land of manana.

The union leade. is a tolerant man, feels that censorship strictures are a necessary evil, but they should not be crippling. He has read scripts of the various disputed films, including "The Alamo" and "Soldadera," and in his opinion found nothing too bad in either, with perhaps a certain crudity in the latter which could have been erased via judicious rewrites.

Sober Mexican industry elements, faced with a tight censorship trend, also insist that no one should be afraid of the truth, and that censorship should not impose its will blanket wise on anything and everything that does not come up to expectations of officialdom. The industry admits the need for censorship, has even made halting moves for self-censorship before the latest overpowering drive began.

In the face of heavy criticism, the Film Bureau maintains its censorship policy, and intends to enforce it. All pictures must provide "healthy" entertainment for the family and, for adults, there must be no dwelling on deviationary themes that might cause harm to public morals, according to the official stand.

And as far as Mexican ideology is concerned, this, and the Revolution, must remain inviolate and not be "distorted" by producer "caprice" seeking to exploit to the full only the sordid aspects of this social upheaval.

'Sordid' Details Crimp Mex Film

Mexico City.

The jinx that has been hounding the making of "La Soldadera" (Female Soldier) for past two and a half years is still operative. After all the hullabaloo about picture going before cameras, Jorge Ferretis of the Film Bureau turned thumbs down on script, categorically said it cannot be made here in present form.

Earlier rumors in film circles had it that Mexican producer Jorge Bolanos, in association with Ed Gottlieb's Centennial Pictures planned to do film without official okay of the Film Bureau. But under current regulations in Mexico this could not be accomplished.

When Bolanos finally turned up at the Bureau, leaving copies of script for approval, Ferretis lashed out (but hard) at "the authentic garbage of the Revolution." The Bureau head said that while picture actually is not defamatory, depicting as it does certain true aspects of the Mexican Revolution, it places far too much accent on sordidness, presents female soldiers as marijuana smokers; has "morbid and erotic" scenes including nudes which are not permitted by Mexican law (one scene has two female principals in a fight where they rip off a lot of clothing) and has far too gruesome realism in scene showing a trooper with his tongue cut out, and so on.

Ferretis said that producers may have been under belief that admittedly true incidents should be passed by authorities. Film Bureau head labeled this an error, stating that there must be a line of demarcation and that, in any case, there are many true life incidents unsuitable for presentation on the screen.

Picture's heavy reliance on many scenes without synchronized sound was also objected to by Ferretis who alleged that this could make possible narration of action in various idioms outside of control by Mexico once negatives leave country.

Ferretis ruled that in present state, script this would not receive an exhibition permit for Mexico, nor an export permit to permit shipment of exposed film to U.S.

Gottlieb, who planed in from Hollywood to initiate picture, said that he would study script with Bolanos and eliminate Film Bureau objections, working closely with Ferretis to achieve this.

Mex Builder Plans Three Nabe Cinemas

Mexico City.

Builder Theodore Gildred has announced plans to construct three nabe cinemas in diversified areas of this city where the population expansion has created shortages. First three theatres will go up in the Santa Mara la Redonda, Lindavista and Peralvillo districts. Gildred said new houses will be 4,000-seater or a bit larger, and on a par with first-runs in decor and conveniences.

Gildred reportedly has plans to invest a total of $4,000,000 in new theatre construction, with the first trio costing approximately $1,200,000. Houses will be turned over to the National Theatre Operating Company on longterm leases.

Mexico Eyes Foreign Markets

timistic that this time efforts will be crowned with success.

It is greatly due to Amello efforts that the lagging Cimex operation, with faulty propaganda and exploitation of Mexican product in foreign areas, is now showing signs of life. There was a ruthless reorganization of foreign branches and wholesale firing of incompetent personnel. But even Ameiio admits that it will take "time and patience" as well as better quality product to win over foreign markets.

Odd note, reported on more than one occasion by Mexican talent, producers, directors and other picture elements traveling abroad, or attending fests, is that oldie quality Mexican product such as "Maria Candelaria," "Pueblerina," "The Net," etc., pictures made anywhere from 5 to 15 and more years ago, are still going strong in European areas. This proves that there is interest in Mexican pictures with foreign exhibitors, however, being generally cool to the ill-put-together, low budget quickies that, unfortunately, form the bulk of Mexican production.

Film Bank's Determined Stand Against Mediocrity

The Film Bank this year has taken a very determined stand on boost in quality by ruthlessly limiting funds it advances, with money forthcoming only to producers who turn up with scripts that are better than those utilized in 7 to 10 day "churros" (quickies). Even so, the money situation is tight, with this outcome of severe financial body blows suffered by the industry as a result of political unrest and exchange difficulties in the traditional Latin sphere of operations.

Federico Heuer of the Film Bank, who began his drive for quality product seriously last year, is also urging producers to invest their own or private capital in picture making. And his argument, not unreasonable, is that a sag in total number of pictures produced need not be catastrophic, as has been predicted by viewers-with-alarm. As a matter of fact, boosting the average number of shooting weeks from three to five, six and more per picture would be "the healthiest trend" in Mexican motion pictures of the past decade. And more carefully produced pictures would have much more chance to garner international coin.

Even Heuer admits that Mexico cannot go all out with international horizons in view. And there is a definite market at home and in Spanish areas for two to three week pictures aimed at the mass populace which does not go in for arty frills, symbolism or heavy themes.

Mex Product Has 90% Edge In the Hinterland

A visit to any nabe house in Mexico where a Tin Tan, Clavillazo, or other low comedy performer goes through his tricks shows the cash customers laughing their heads off at often repeated cliche situations. But these are the situations they, and their counterparts in Spanish areas, best understand. And in the hinterlands Mexican product has a 90% edge over Hollywood and foreign pictures because

(1) illiterate rural dwellers cannot read subtitles and

(2) they are lost children in attempting to follow the intricacies of foreign complicated plots.

They will, however, turn out en-masse for a sexy French film or rare occasions these are released, despite fact they can't read the subtitles. Yet they can, and do ogle the gals.

But Messrs. Heuer, Ferretis and Amelio agree that the home market is not the only one, and for survival Mexico must broaden her horizons. There is much difference of opinion on just how these horizons are to be broadened.

For example, Ferretis, who has clamped down strict censorship on national and foreign product to "protect" the public as well as the good name of Mexico (see Companion Story herewith) is not 100% coproductions as the "salvation" of the Mexican industry.

For over a year now there has been considerable talk in Mexican film circles about coproducing as a means of putting the industry on its feet. Only here, too, matters have lagged, principally because most of offers made by foreign producers have imposed certain market restrictions, insistance on having a greater say in making of picture than Mexicans wish to grant or in general giving Mexicans the short end of the deal financially and artificially.

Ferretis, in a realistic appraisal of coproductions said that bona-fide offers should be considered and pictures made in this manner. But he saw this as not adding much to Mexico's prestige, nor widening foreign markets. His counter-proposal, the hiring of international names to appear in 100 per cent Mexican productions.

On occasion Mexican producers have followed this practice. But here again they have been limited because of lack of coin. They talk here of a "super-production" when the budget is in excess of three millions pesos. This is but $240,000. And although recently several pictures have had budgets going up to $400,000, (U. S. value) the industry is not geared for this type of heavy production expenditure.

Dream of Belafonte As Star With Maria Felix

Recently Ismael Rodriguez contracted Japanese star Tishoro Mifune for a Mexican picture and the Zacarias Brothers hope to interest Harry Belafonte to appear opposite Maria Felix in "Black Music." But high salary demands and percentages take a big bite out of the relatively small Mexican budgets and producers generally allege that hiring of international stars can only be exception, and not the rule.

Ferretis has insisted that the star gimmick, although costly, will open up new markets for Mexican producers, and pay handsome dividends.

More sober industry leaders point to the success of "Macaria," "Simitrio," "La Cucaracha," etc. as relatively low budget efforts which, because of careful story line., good acting.

MEX STUDIO UNIONS PLAN CO-OP PICTURE

Mexico City.

As the Mexican picture industry's production lag causes increasing unemployment, a group including talent and technicians have decided to give a cooperative venture the whirl. Initially deal calls for one film, with Raul Martinez Solares, Fernando Fernandez, Garcia Bezne, Fernando Oses and Jaime Fernandez the rallying spirits in the cooperative experiment. If it clicks, Solares explained, further productions will be planned.

Idea has aroused considerable interest in film circles. Fernandez, partner in the co-op, hopes to make his debut in directing the film, and is negotiating with the director's section of the Union of Film Production Workers to get a favorable greenlight. Picture is set to go before the cameras no later than May.

SWEDEN'S ALL-DEMANDING GENIUS: INGMAR BERGMAN

—Refuses to Leave Homeland—Sticks to $160,000 Budget —Spends More Time Directing Stage Drama Than Films —Stern Taskmaster, Haunted by God-and-Man Theme

By FREDERIC FLEISHER

Stockholm.

In Sweden the film industry consists of Ingmar Bergman. And what else? The "what else" is a topic of complaint to the Swedish critics who object that quality has retrograded to the light and conventional levels of the 1930s. Meanwhile Bergman has continued, a good many pictures by now, to draw international attention to Sweden, to purvey a "staple" product for art houses in America and elsewhere, though the Swedes have been puzzled, and a touch miffed, by the failure of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences in Hollywood to, until now, "recognize" the Bergman phenomenon.

Critics in Stockholm have been screaming for a so-called "New Wave," that supposedly magical current of creativity which started in America, jumped to France, spread from France to other countries and has now, ironically, glutted the film market in Paris with an unprecedented number of finished features lacking release arrangements.

Dr. Bengt Idestam-Almquist, known by his pen-name "Robin Hood," urges that a group of young Swedish film enthusiasts shoot out-of-doors in the spirit of the young Frenchmen and the early Victor Sjostrom.

Others

Meanwhile there are a few new names in Swedish films. Opera stage director Goran Gentele has gained a position on the home market through a couple of comedies. Many hoped that Lennart Olsson, a former Bergman assistant, would bring youth and originality to the screen, but his first film, "Carnival," scripted by 25-year-old Kjell Grede, turned out to be a rather conventional studio production.

As a result of Bergman's reputation abroad and the small number of Swedish films being made, the trade fears that Swedish players will go abroad to make films. During the past year Ingrid Thulin and Gunnar Hellstrom have been filming in the United States while Anita Biork and Bibi Anderson went to Italy to appear in a Yugoslav-Italian production. Max von Sydow may play Christ in George Stevens' "The Greatest Story Ever Told" while Ulla Jacogsson has been appearing in Germany. Alf Kjellin works mostly aboard.

Furthermore Svensk Filmindustri has loaned out photographer Gunner Fischer, who has lensed more than a dozen Bergman films, to a Danish production. Swedish tv hopes Parliament will approve funds to film tv series, which will give the film industry a shot in the arm.

Despite Bergman's world-wide reputation, his films still don't break even in Sweden. Income from abroad allow him to continue to lay golden eggs. Bergman secured his international rep just before the Swedish film industry was dealt crippling blows from television and the large increase of the purchase of cars. In 1956 his "Smiles of a Summer Night" won a special prize at the Cannes Film Festival, which laid the cornerstone to his international renown, which has been snowballing ever since. In spite of this, Bergman says that he still tries to budget each new film to break even in Scandinavia. Although he is delighted over the interest abroad, he realizes that fads are fickle.

$160,000 Budget

An Ingmar Bergman film costs no more than an average Swedish black and white production, which means about $160,000. He shoots for between six to eight weeks, which is normal or a little faster than other Swedes, but he edits with greater care. Bergman is extremely anxious to obtain high picture and sound quality. (As viewers of Swedish films have often noticed, they are often marred by poor sound quality and studio echoes). Moreover, Bergman demands his cast to know their parts almost as well as in a play. In this way, he is able to shoot the sequence most suited to the existing or changing weather conditions. Furthermore, actors are better able to experience the sequence if they are well acquainted with the whole. This also enables to maintain a fast shooting tempo.

Bergman doesn't like discussing his films. While making them he works intensely. When through he nervously awaits opening night. He says his anxiety grows with each new film as he places greater demands on his work. He also knows that audiences and critics become increasingly expectant.

Critic Bengt Idestam-Almquist feels that the Ingmar Bergman vogue is bound to lead to a reaction, but he doesn't view this pessimistically as he feels that Bergman needs to be allowed to work without the burden of his present reputation. Even though Bergman still experiments, Idestam-Almquist believes that the pressure of his reputation doesn't allow Bergman to experiment as much as he should.

Although Bergman's reputation abroad is based on films, he devotes about two-thirds of most years to the theatre. He states that "theatre people should be vagabonds," and with this in mind Bergman has directed in Sweden's five major theatre cities during a period of 18 years. Bergman claims "theatre is my love and the basis of my existence. Through theatre I can create films, but I could never do the reverse. If I ever had to chose between theatre and films, I am convinced that I could live without films." Many Swedes feel he is best in the theatre.

Bergman was born in 1918, the son of a Lutheran clergyman. It was a strictly religious home, but not a happy one and the chill atmosphere of it has left a deep impression on him. The majority of his films should be seen against this religious background which brought into juxtaposition: God and the Devil; good and evil; the decline of spiritualism and the advancement of materialism. In fact, the majority of Bergman's works can be regarded as moralities, the Middle Age plays that personified virtues and vices.

The Bergman family moved to Stockholm in 1924 when Ingmar's father became Court Chaplain. When the son entered the University of Stockholm in 1937, he devoted most of his energies to amateur theatre groups and later staged a number of plays at the Student Theatre and also got a job as an assistant director at the Royal Opera.

It was Bergman's first production of one of his own plays that caught the attention of film producers in 1943. His first job in films was in the screen-writing department of Svensk Filmindustri. He made his screen debut in 1944 when his screenplay "Torment" was filmed by Alf Sjoberg. The "new golden age" of Swedish films had gained its first impetus from Sjoberg, who along with Bergman and Arne Suchsdorff, was going to give the Swedish motion picture industry a respected position on the international scene.

It is generally accepted that Bergman's films have strong elements of autobiography. His disillusioned view may be reflected in fact that he has been married four times. He usually finds that youth with its inner innocence has little to learn from its somewhat destroyed parents and he may look at his own six children in this manner.

On occasion critics have called Bergman "the Strindberg of the screen" with justification. Both have an extremely personal approach to their subjects, their are spiritual searchers, constantly hoping to find God and are fascinated by the middle ages. Strindberg has always been Bergman's favorite author and both Swedes have had a special passion for the Stockholm archipelago.

Bergman flatly denies that he has ever had any literary ambitions, but the evidence to the contrary is quite impressive. He has had five of his plays produced on professional stages and three of these have been published, two other published plays have never been produced and his two radio dramas were printed in anthologies. Furthermore, Bergman has scripted or co-authored most of his films and written three screenplays that were directed into films by others.

Colleagues say he is obsessed by his art. He seldom takes a vacation and periods for rest have usually been enforced by stomach ulcers. Symptomatic for Bergman was when he married his wife, the young couple took a few days long honeymoon to go to the theatre in Gothenburg.

Bergman likes to work with the same casts and technicians. Those who appear in his films often work with him in the theatre. His film groups claim that he has an amazing ability to create a collective feeling in a studio. Many actors and actresses believe that this is one of the major secrets of his screen success. They also comment that he gets a little more out of them than they have to give.

In all cases, Bergman demands concentration and discipline. He strives for perfection. Since his childhood, he has studied lighting, music and editing. And as his confidence has increased, he has aimed at a greater simplicity as he states: "Simplicity, concentration, full knowledge, technical perfection must be the pillars supporting each scene and sequence."

Bergman first became known in Swedish legitimate circles through his productions in small amateur theatres.

When he entered the films he soon became known as a modernist and a revolutionary. He revolted against contemporary art forms and was seeking new ones. Equally, he revolted against the God of his clergyman father. Now, Bergman is the lost son who has returned. He has come to believe in God, but he says he is most grateful that he had something against which to revolt. He also questions the value of many amateur stage groups as he feels it is essential to get a thorough and well-guided education in the aspects of the medium.

Bergman finds little of true interest in the French "wave," which was one of his early and most enthusiastic supporters, and he has gained increasing respect for Victor Sjostrom (Seastrom to Hollywood) and the Russian classics. The spiritual searchings of man have always been a dominate theme in Ingmar Bergman's works. He says: "You can say that I have the same view as the American playwright Eugene O'Neill; that is, all drama that is not about man's relation to God is nonsense."

Rooted in Scandia

Although Bergman claims that theatre people should be vagabonds, he says: "It is very important for a director not to be rootless." He declares he gets stomach cramps as soon as he gets on a plane going further than Copenhagen. This is an important reason why Bergman has not accepted offers to make films or stage plays abroad. Bergman says "I want to work in Sweden where I have my roots. The environment in which I have grown up means a tremendous amount to me."

After completing the shooting of his new film "Through A Glass, Darkly" in the fall. Bergman started rehearsing Chehov's "The Seagull" at the Royal Dramatic Theatre in Stockholm. This marked Bergman's return to the stage after about a year and a half of filming, but it also marked his first stage production in Stockholm in many years. Bergman gained his stage reputation during seven years at the Malmo Civic. "The Seagull" opened after two and a half months of rehearsals and met by unanimous critical praise.

At present, Bergman is rehearsing a production of Stravinski's "The Rake's Progress," which is scheduled to open in the latter part of April. In May, Bergman will edit "Through A Glass, Darkly" after which he will devote a week to making a test film in color as he hopes to make his first color feature in the fall. Bergman has been thinking of filming in color for some time, but he is not satisfied with color quality usually obtained. He wants to be well acquainted with color before filming with it. Bergman and his fourth wife, pianist Kaebi Laretei, will go on vacation during the month of July.

Bergman reveals that he took the title to the new film from the First Epistle of Paul to the Corinthians which reads: "For now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face." Bergman regards his new work as the last part of a trilogy in which "Wild Strawberries" and "The Virgin Spring" were the first two parts. He says: "Step by step I have gained a clearer vision of the problem of reconciliation. In 'The Virgin Spring' I took a definite stand in a medieval disguise. In the new film there is nothing that hides what I want to say."

"Through A Glass, Darkly" takes place during one day and surrounds four people on an isolated island. The four persons are a successful author, portrayed by Gunnar Bjornstrand, his daughter (Harriot Andersson), the daughter's husband (Max von Sydow), who is a professor in medicine, and her younger brother, portrayed by Lars Passgrad, who is a pupil at the Malmo Civic Theatre's drama school. During the film the daughter loses her sanity.

After he had written the screenplay, Bergman says that he showed it to psychiatrist, who had no criticism to make of his portrait of insanity.

Ingmar Bergman says that he hopes he will realize in time when audiences are no longer interested in his works. Then he plans to leave films and theatre and open his own drama school.

If Bergman does not like to discuss his works he is also very annoyed when critics draw parallels between his life and works. He feels that Shakespeare's works are not marred in the slightest by the fact that we know near to nothing about his life.

Denmark's Troubles: Over-Worked Studios & Stars

By VICTOR SKAARUP

Copenhagen.

Thanks in part to the stimulation of television film production, Denmark has enjoyed something of an upsurge though dreadfully handicapped by small studios and lack of actors rating as "stars." Author-director Peer Guldbrandsen attempted last year to cope with the facilities problem by purchasing a large farm outside Copenhagen and converting it into a film production center, under the name of Novaris Films. His plan is to use the new site for two features of his own annually and to rent out balance of shooting time to other producers.

Denmark's film production is very old, as such activity is historically reckoned and it is to be recalled that during silent times, when language was no barrier, Copenhagen studios turned out a stream of features good enough to play extensively in Europe and somewhat on other continents.

Euro-Scan film has just finished its first production, "Ullabella," based on Henning Kehlers' play from the 1930s about a school scandal. Gitte Haenning, 15, an established pop songstress, plays the title role. Gulbrandsen is now making "Lies and the Roaring of Lions," which is most favored by Danish film production—namely light comedy. Kjeld Petersen plays the leading role.

Later Bent Christensen, a locally well-known actor and director, will make his first independent film production here—a film with a philosophical background and starring two actors, seldom seen in pictures, but of the highest popularity on the Danish stage, Osvald Helmuth (who played Doolittle in "My Fair Lady") and Ebbe Rode, who has lately played in "Separate Tables."

But apart from the new Navoris Studios would-be film producers have a hard time to secure studio space in the busy older studios of Nordisk Film, Palladium, Asa, Saga, Arnoe and Flamingo, where the owners most of the year are preoccupied with their own productions.

Dirch Passer's Busy Summer

About the lack of popular stars it can be said that the big names are so tied up that some new producers have had to postpone their plans until the players have open time.

Denmark's by-far-most popular star, big, "lovable" comedian Dirch Passer, played in seven features last year—and this summer he is spreading himself in five. He plays a comedy role as a caretaker in American producer Sid Pink's science-fiction film "Reptilicus," just finished at the Saga studios in two versions: the international one in English, which will be shown in U.S. in the spring, and the Danish one, which has already been preemed at Saga's own big cinema in Copenhagen. The picture tells about a dragon, which terrorizes Denmark. Script is by Ib Melchior, son of Danish-American opera singer Lauritz Melchior. The script for Sid Pink's next production here, "Journey to the Seventh Planet," is also by Melchior. This picture has both American and Danish actors—starring John Agar from Hollywood.

Grand Prix Singer in Film Debut

Palladium has just had a big success with "Eventyr-Rejsen" (The Fairy-tale Journey), about tourists in Italy, Italian-Danish singer Dario Campeotto, who just won the Grand Prix Melody Contest in the TV, had his screen debut in this film. Asa is making a comedy, based on a French play, "Min kone fra Paris" ("My Wife from Paris")—with Ebbe Langberg and probably a French actress in the leading roles. Saga is also making a comedy with Paris as background. Annelise Reenberg is directing and has just returned from Paris, looking for locations.

Nordisk is making the first Danish film directly inspired by television. Popular children series from the Saturday afternoon program, "Circus Buster," has been made into a film by its star, Buster Larsen, and its director Niels Kaiser. This film will present added role not in the tv series, namely a beautiful circus queen, played by Helle Virkner—her first film part since she married Denmark's Foreign Secretary, Jens Otto Krag, a couple of years ago. (Miss Virkner and her husband accompanied the King and Queen of Denmark on their trip through U.S. last year.) Later she will appear in a sophisticated comedy for Nordisk Film.

Producer Henrick Sandberg from Dansk Svensk Film is making his fourth film in the series of military farces, "Soldaterkammerater" (Soldier Buddies). Last year's film has been made in English too, and will probably be shown in U.S this year. Sandberg is also making a picture from the second World War, "Sorte Sara" (Black Sara), about a Danish navy ship which fooled the Germans.

U.S. DOWN IN SCANDINAVIA

By SVEN G. WINQUIST

Stockholm.

They say that statistics can prove almost anything, but one thing is for sure. Figures shows that the influence of American films at the Scandinavian market is on its way down.

Back in the years during World War II, when there were remarkable difficulties for the import from the United States, and when import of feature films from most of the European countries was easier, American product topped the statistics here in Sweden with some 65 to 75% of all exhibited films.

Of course, due to the German occupation, Denmark and Norway saw no American products for English-language films at all. Finland on the other hand stood with one foot in each camp. The country was allied with Germany in fighting against Russia, but neutral in the conflict between Germany and the other Allied countries. This gave as a result that while Finland fought one of the Allies, Russia, there were still films from the other Allied countries shown at the Finnish cinemas.

German soldiers were not "allowed" to watch American or British films, but it was an official secret that Germans were among the most frequent fans for American product. A civilian overcoat and their military cap in a pocket was the trick used to fool the German M.P.

Even this popularity of American films in a time when there were natural difficulties in getting them over from the States to this part of the world to today's dropping popularity of product "made in Hollywood," lie not too many years.

48% Dips to 41%

To show a more recent example, the statistics shows that of all films opening in Copenhagen, Helsinki, Oslo and Stockholm during 1959, there were around 48% American products, while in 1960 the per cent of American products dropped to around 41%. It might also be of value to notice that 1959 was the first year when American films came below 50% of all shown films in the Northern countries. Obviously, the influence of American films continued to drop during 1960. It is too early to say what the figures for 1961 might show, but as far as available figures from the first three months of this year can show, the tendencies continue the way it started.

Of course, since the figures show that there is about the "normal" number of feature films opening at the cinemas here, there must be other countries who are replacing America as film exporting country or countries. If comparing the figures for 1959 and 1960, the statistic shows that countries with growing figures are Germany with 117 films in 1959 against 150 in 1960, France with 139 in 1959 against 159 in 1960, Italy with 51 in 1959 against 60 in 1960, etc., those figures covering the four Northern capitals.

In general, it seems as the film producing countries of the European continent are steadily growing in importance here. An exception seems to be Great Britain who had 208 preemings in 1959 against 197 in 1960. The film import from communist-dominated countries seems to be constant, 38 films in 1959 against 40 in 1960, with main part coming from the Soviet Union. A Chinese film was screened in Copenhagen during 1960, probably the debut for a Chinese picture in this part of the world.

Studio Output Static

Film production in the four Scandanavian countries has been constant during the last two years, as seen from these figures showing the number of domestic feature films shown in each of the countries.

Denmark	18	(15)
Finland	18	(14)
Norway	8	(8)
Sweden	20	(18)

Rise of Norway

Comparing with the situation 15 to 20 years ago, Norway is today producing around five more films annually than it used to, while the figures for Denmark are about the same. Finland has had a period with an annual production of about 30 films while the Swedish production once was above 40 films annually.

The outlook for the trade in Scandinavia seems to be, for all four countries, that while there has been "the shadow from TV" hanging over the trade as a ghost, nobody seems to be so afraid for this ghost any longer. Norway is the youngest TV country around here, and also the smallest one, much depending upon the geographical structure of the country (mountains, etc.).

There has not been heard any stronger complaints from Norwegian exhibitors about competition from television. It may come when the tv net has been built out a little more than now. Denmark was the first of the Northern countries to get tv, and also the first country from which complaints were heard. Danish producers still are unwilling to sell their releases, old or new, to video, but the fear for the medium is not as strong as it has been.

Sweden got a tv net a couple of years after Denmark, and the resistance from the film trade to any kind of cooperation with the air has been and still is very strong. Only exceptionally is a Swedish film shown on Swedish air, and when it happens, it is never any film from any of the "big" companies. Swedish tv usually screens one feature film every week, usually on Thursdays, and usually old American or British product. In 1960 there were some signs of some kind of cooperation between film trade and tv in Sweden. The discussions were dealing with the possibilities that film producers might produce vidpix for Swedish tv.

Finland is the only Northern country in which commercial and non-commercial tv operates side-by-side. There is talk of monopolizing tv, which means only non-commercial stations, but the commercial stations has their concessions to operate until end of 1962 and nobody knows what will happen after that. Finland is also the only of the Northern countries where the film companies allows their old domestic products to be shown by tv.

Star Demands Chill Austrians Who Lag Behind Their German Quota

By EMIL W. MAASS

Vienna.

Austrian film showmen remain remarkable for their lamentations rather than their solutions. Though entitled to export one Austrian-made feature to Germany for every five German-made features exhibited here, the Austrians let this market potential go begging, not manufacturing enough films to fill their own quota in Germany.

Logic would seem to suggest that Austrian film production be stepped up but producers either cannot or will not put up the necessary capital. It is less painful to rant against the foreigners than to risk good Austrian schillings.

Failure of enterprise assumes special significance when it is realized that distributors and the state together put up guarantees amounting to as much as 60% of negative costs. With that circumstance, and the further guarantee of German playdates, the lag does not perhaps compliment the producers who produce so little.

True, some sympathy must be given the Austrian producer caught in today's inflated star-salary situation. If the total budget here runs in the neighborhood of, say, $200,000 black and white and $250,000 color stock the demands of German-speaking actors with international renown stupefies the local imagination in a country of 7,000,000 population. To make this point: asking price for Curd Juergens for an Austrian production is $120,000 per picture, Maria Schell, $80,000 per picture and Peter Alexander, $48,000.

Aspects of The Panorama

Not less than six diagnostic points may be made as to the film industry here.

(1) The government is still aiming to fix the age limit for "non juvenile motion pictures" at 18. At present, Vienna, Lower Austria and Salzburg are the most "generous," admitting freely from 16 years on. Some provinces decided on 17 and up, while the ultra conservative Tyrol, Vorarlberg and Burgenland decided on 18 years up. These one or two years are a decisive boxoffice factor.

(2) A law to go into effect very soon, will prevent children (four to six years) from entering at all. This is an economic factor of some consequence in a poor country with baby sitting prices jumped to 40c an hour. The industry is alarmed.

(3) Though amusement taxes were lowered, a further reduction is asked. It's now on an average of 10% throughout Austria.

(4) The revalue of the German Mark (4.75%) led to endless questions. It's profitable for the landlord studio, a loss for the producers, as most stars only accept German Mark and not Austrian Schilling.

(5) All prints, posters, publicity material used in Austria is made in foreign countries, a heavy drain.

(6) With 250,000 tv sets now in operation, this industry is nearing saturation. Director Friedrich Erban, chief of Wien Film, explained to VARIETY the present situation:

"More than 18 months ago, there actually was a crisis, production and studio both suffering heavily. When I attempted to rent two halls for a very long period to tv, the Ministry of Commerce, as well as other high administrative offices prevented this plan, claiming this would mean the death knell for the film industry. Tv naturally looked around to find a place to build its own studio. They are now doing so on the Kuerzilberg on the outskirts of Vienna. But that does not mean, that tv does not need the already existing studios on Rosenhuegel of the Wienfilm. The Austrian tv system occupies now one hall, the German tv has rented two halls for the shooting of an operetta series."

He finished by saying that now the motion picture industry suddenly wants "peace" with tv—and not a life of continuous competition, something he explicitly tried to avert 18 months ago.

Meantime Wienfilm studios has added a stereophonic sound system to its most modern equipment. Rosenhuegel (4 stages), Sievering (two stages) and Grinzing, all are occupied. Sascha Film is shooting a comedy picture, "Young People Need Love," with Connie Froboess and Peter Weck. Walt Disney will move in in August and September to shoot a "Vienna Singing Boys" picture.

33-YR.-OLD ZBONEKS' 2D FILM-ON-STARLETS

Berlin, April 18.

Edwin Zbonek, 33-year-old former Vienniese film critic, who came to Berlin to show the local press his first feature pic, "Love Hangs on the Gallows," soon will start his second feature, "Germany, Your Starlets." Title was purchased from Will Tremper, author of the highly successful mag series of same name which depicted in an amazingly frank manner the scandals and affairs of German starlets. Zbonek said he'll make the film without name stars. And no starlet mentioned in Tremper's extensive (47 parts) series will be hired. Zbonek writes the script in collab with Andis.

As to his initial feature pic, "Gibbet," which he directed for the Berlin Rex-Film, Zbonek said he felt annoyed about the West German Film Classifications Board which didn't grant "Gibbet" a distinction ("worthy" or "particularly worthy," which means tax relief).

AUSTRIAN SEX BOMB

Senta Berger Looks Set For Discovery In U.S.A.

Berlin.

Whenever this VARIETY chronicler meets Mrs. Elli Silman, an American who reps Music Corp. of America in Berlin and is also Germany's "longest-list" (more than 150 names) talent manager, he asks her who are currently her hottest newcomers. Two years ago, she said: Sabine Sinjen and Judith Dornys, then 16 and (allegedly) 17 respectively, of whom the former has made a good career in the meantime.

Last year, Mrs. Silman mentioned besides Miss Sinjen a new name, Senta Berger. Asked very recently, she revised to: Senta Berger, Loni von Friedel and Ingrid van Bergen.

As to Austrian-born Senta Berger, this starlet is really climbing. Apparently, she's also made an impression on stateside reviewers. VARIETY's Tube (Hollywood), who saw her in Richard Widmark's "Secret Ways," described her as "a delightfully good-looking young European lady" and a "well-proportioned bombshell." A report from Vienna says that Widmark "I didn't expect so much sex in Austria!") will get her to Hollywood.

A German 'Satellite'

Vienna.

On the basis of 12 features annually the Austrian film studios cannot cover the costs of land, gear, staff, etc. A minimum annual turnout of 17 features is required. The recent "slump" must therefore be related to the fact that Austria produced 25 features in 1958 and 27 in 1957.

It is the probably verifiable impression of the Vienna film trade that West German businessmen privately finance most Austrian films. Though these qualify to enter Germany, one for every five of German pictures entering Austria, the statistics have been steadily dwindling.

The situation is complicated by the overall economy and by a dismaying falloff in theatre attendance. Vienna, it is to be remembered, has a majestic statoper and several classic German tongue repertory theatres, all supported by state subsidy and offering bargain rate culture against the cinema.

Don't Despise The Travel Production

By GOTTFRIED REINHARDT

Salzburg, Austria.

It is, of course, in Hollywood's own best interests to make as many pictures as possible right in Hollywood. No one can quarrel with this point of view. Add that, aside from the labor and union angles "runaway" production is bad for managerial morale. Hollywood is at its best when it is at its busiest. As a producer at Metro when that studio had a production schedule of 50-60 features a year, I can well remember the enthusiasm, the excitement, and the high interest.

Yet, a serious distinction must be made between pictures which leave Hollywood production for "runaway" reasons, and honest and thorough coproduction efforts which involve the talent, the skills and the finances of Hollywood and one or more other foreign production centres.

A case could be made, one presumes, for making every feature that is produced in Hollywood. Hollywood's technical genius is equal to re-producing the terrain, the hamlet or metropolis, the landscape of any area from the Pole to the Sahara. And presumably an extra born in Minneapolis could be made up to look like a native of Tashkent. And a good art director and property master could recreate an igloo, a minaret or a Hindu Temple. But there are some factors which go beyond physical similarities.

Recently I completed the production and direction of "Town Without Pity," the Kirk Douglas starring vehicle, a Mirisch Presentation in association with Gloria Films of Germany, for United Artists release.

Gloria Films, one of Germany's most successful production and distribution organizations, supplied below-the-line costs; Mirisch supplied the story and script, the star, American supporting performers, and several key technicians. We filmed in Bambgerg, Forcheim and Erlangen, Germany, the proper exterior settings for our story; we would have filmed interiors in either Munich or Berlin if stage space had been available. Actually, our interiors were filmed in Vienna at Sievering Studios.

There is a healthy aspect to this kind of "Hollywood" production which really never left home. There is much to be said for this kind of across-the-board co-production. I believe that most if not all of the production values: the settings, the German crowds, the roads and highways, the American Army posts in a German setting—these have the solid ring of authenticity.

But of greater importance is the interlocking production financing. Hollywood companies can do much to hold the pre-eminent position they have traditionally occupied in foreign markets by this kind of coproduction and cooperation.

It is a mistake, I believe, to characterize all films which even remotely touch upon Hollywood, or have the remotest kind of Hollywood connection as "runaway productions." Hollywood has been least successful when it has been most insular: There is room for honest coproduction efforts, and the trend should not be stifled—for Hollywood's own sake.

'Expansion' Fears in Switzerland; Many More Swiss Pix May End Automatic Profit Assurance

By GEORGE MEZOEFI

Zurich.

Swiss film production is currently marked by an upward trend, at least numerically, which looks to go even higher when the newly-planned, ultra-modern film studio near Zurich becomes a reality next winter. This new production center, the first of any significance in this country and involving a private capital investment of nearly $1,000,000 (the ground on which the studio is to be erected will be made available by the city of Zurich) will finally take care of a situation long deemed intolerable by local producers. Up to now, interiors had mostly to be "improvised" in schoolhouses, gyms, inns etc. or moved abroad (mostly to Germany) at considerably increased production outlay.

First half of the 1960-'61 film season shows a total of five Swiss releases, with another five-to-seven tentatively skedded through 1961. This is an alltime high for local film production. The other side of the coin, however, is the fear expressed by tradesters here that, with the increased number of Swiss pictures, big grosses will invariably be concentrated on just a handful of the top-quality releases. Heretofore, almost any local film finished in the black from inland rentals alone, due to low production costs and the sparse number of Swiss films which automatically made every one a winner both in the key cities as well as the hinterland.

The quintet of Swiss releases this season includes: "The Man in the Black Bowler Hat," an attempt at satirical mystery-comedy; "Anne Baebi Jowaeger" (1st part), picturization of a popular peasant novel by Swiss 19th century writer, Jeremias Gotthelf; a comedy-fantasy, "The Devil May Well Laugh"; "Wilhelm Tell," a costly color epic about the Swiss national hero, and a Swiss-German coproduction, "Sacred Waters," drama taking place in the Swiss mountain region of Valais and based on a widely popular novel by J. C. Heer. Latter two were made in widescreen and color, whilst former three were in standard-size black-and-white.

All five were reasonably successful financially; least so, perhaps, "Wilhelm Tell," deemed a costly failure by many and mercilessly panned by the press.

Two films now in the can are set for spring release: Neue Film A. G. (Franz Schnyder) production, released by Praesens-Film A. G. Zurich, "Jakobli und Meyeli," part two of the "Anne Baebi Jowaeger" novel, and an Urania-Film (Erwin Dietrich) production, released by Sphinx-Film A. G. Zurich, "Die Gejagten" ("The Hunted"). Latter is a murder-mystery involving a vet police inspector assigned to a murder case. It is directed by newcomer Max Michel and includes in its cast Heinrich Gretler, Claude Farell, Helen Vita, Max Werner Lenz, Robert Freitag, Pierre Dudan and other local players.

Wechsler's Latest

Most important of upcoming projects is the just-finished screen version of a Friedrich Duerrenmatt play, "Die Ehe des Herrn Mississippi" ("The Marriage of Mr. Mississippi"), presented at the off-Broadway Jan Hus Theatre in April 1958 as "Fools Are Passing Through." Produced by Praesens-Film (Lazar Wechsler and Max Dora), it is directed by Germany's Kurt Hoffmann of "Aren't We Wonderful?" and other German hit films, and stars some of Germany's top screen thesps such as Johanna von Koczian, O. E. Hasse, Hansjoerg Felmy and Martin Held, plus local talent. It will probably represent Switzerland at the upcoming Film Festival and be released locally in late summer or early fall. Deutsche Film Hansa, Hamburg, will release for Germany.

Currently shooting is another Praesens production, "Die Schatten werden laenger" ("The Shadows Grow Longer"), directed by Ladislao Vajda from an original screenplay by Vajda, Istvan Bekeffi and Heinz Pauck. Described as "a dramatic story about a girls education home," it stars German players Barbara Ruetting, Luise Ullrich, Hansjoerg Felmy, plus Fred Tanner and Lonl von Friedl. Shooting is expected to wind end of April.

Finally, the first Swiss screen musical, "The Hazy Osterwald Story," is presently preparing for an April start, with location work set at Swiss mountain resort Arosa and Zurich and interiors to be done probably in Munich. Produced by Urania-Film Zurich (Erwin Dietrich) and released locally by Sphinx-Film (Constantin-Filmverleih, Munich, reportedly has rights for Germany), it stars popular Swiss jazz combo of Hazy Osterwald about which the film revolves, plus a string of as-yet-unset guest stars from here and abroad. Original script is by W. P. Zibaso and Stefan Gommermann, and Gottlieb will direct. Swiss release is contemplated to take place between late fall and Xmas.

LOLLOBRIGIDA'S 'VENUS'

Italian Star to Play Pauline Bonaparte for Cineriz

Rome.

Gina Lollobrigida will play Pauline Bonaparte in "Imperial Venus" this fall in a Royal Film production to be shot in Italy and France. Milko Skofic, star's husband, signed pact linking her with Guido Giambartolomei's company for the pic which will be released in Italy by Cineriz. Miss Lollobrigida was present at ceremonies via transatlantic phone link to Hollywood, where she is waiting for delayed start of "Lady L." Producer said he was about to sign a top Yank star for the male lead, and that the director would also be British or American. Both names are expected to be announced shortly.

Conclusion of pact will undoubtedly make local headlines due to fact that Miss Lollobrigida has long been involved in a much-publicized suit against Rizzoli Films for company's continued delays in starting property for which star had been signed, and in view of which she had refused other offers. Noted here, however, that name of Cineriz (Rizzoli's firm) on credits as Italo releaser of "Imperial Venus" indicates that hassle has been settled amicably and that stormy bygones are bygones.

U.S. Shares B.O. Honors With Local Films in Switzerland; 'Ben-Hur' Tops

Zurich.

First three months of 1961 in the five Swiss key cities of Zurich, Basle, Berne, Geneva and Lausanne saw U. S. product sharing top honors with Swiss films. Each had three winners among the 10 top-grossing films during that period. (Winners are based on "estimates" since actual grosses are kept very hush-hush indeed in Switzerland.)

Top spot is held by Metro's "Ben-Hur" although the William Wyler epic was only released in Geneva and Lausanne and is still running in the latter city. It broke all records in Geneva at the 800-seat Alhambra Theatre where an unprecedented 13 weeks' running time was registered. During that time, the picture was seen by 85,000 paying customers (all favors were revoked for the entire run). This constitutes an unheard-of 47% of that city's population of 180,000, whereby it must be noted that children up to 13 were not admitted by censors. Grosses attained 240% of "Gone With the Wind" from the same company.

In Lausanne, although released in a bigger house, the 1,300-seat Metropole Theatre, and the city being smaller (126,000 population), "Ben-Hur" is cleaning up with similar impact and looks sure to set another high. Release in Switzerland's German-speaking key cities Zurich, Basle and Berne is still up in the air due to difficulties with the Swiss Exhibs' Association which is unwilling to let its members accept Metro's terms. Refusal to buy the picture at proposed conditions was voted for in the Association's general assembly last year, and all attempts to revoke the decision have failed so far. Fact that the film nevertheless came out in Geneva and Lausanne is solely due to that exhibitor's (who owns both houses) ignoring the decision on the grounds that he claims to be master in his own theatres and free to negotiate films as he sees fit. He might be in for sanctions by the Association, but, meanwhile, continues to draw healthy profits from the picture.

Other two Yank winners are the Greek-American "Never On Sunday" in third spot, and "The Apartment" (eighth), both from United Artists. Former registered a total running time of 25 weeks in the five cities, whilst the Billy Wilder comedy-drama proved very spotty, with the only real profitable date so far at Zurich small-seater, ABC, where it held for a very good seven weeks' run.

The Swiss contributions are: "An heiligen Wassern" (Sacred Waters) and "Der Teufel hat gut lachen" (The Devil May Well Laugh), a comedy-fantasy, in fourth and fifth position, respectively; and the artistically highly disappointing, "Wilhelm Tell," in seventh spot. All three were released in German part of Switzerland only since the French-speaking section stays aloof of all German or even Swiss-German product. Total playing time of above three features is: "Waters"—19 weeks; "Devil" and "Tell" 17 weeks each.

Dutch Pride Fed: But Woes Remain With 35% Amus. Tax And Video

By HANS SAALTINK

Amsterdam.

Dutch cinema owners are not happy with the present state of their affairs, and are doing all that is in their power to lure back the public. They are, however, not sure what should be done. Publicity is one answer. The Dutch Cinema League has voted over one million Dutch guilders, to be spent in the next three years on paid ads in the newspapers. First advertisements were aimed at parents who were urged to give their teenage children "a night off" . . . in the cinema, of course. Also the slogan was introduced, "Together to the cinema. How cozy."

At bottom of the decline in attendance are both the growing popularity of television (nearing one million sets), and the fact that in some film theatres projection and sound equipment are less than adequate.

For some time—an innovation here—one can buy "gift cheques" at the boxoffice (value: 60c and $1.20, 2.50 and 5 guilders, good for one or two seats respectively), to give away to friends and neighbors, instead of flowers.

For Dutch filmmakers, however, the situation has never been so rosy. Their films are doing quite well at the boxoffice and they have couped some foreign awards of which they can be proud. Fons Rademakers' initial direction of "Village on the River" was an Academy Award nominee, and though he lost the Oscar to the French entry, "Orfeo Negro," the Dutch feelings, were soothed by the fact that Bert Haanstra got an Oscar in the shorts category for his "Glass." Haanstra in the meantime has made two feature films, "Fanfare," a big hit in 1959, and last year "The Case M.P.," a comedy again, based on the nationalistic feelings between the Dutch and the Flemish.

Rademakers, coming from the stage where he was an actor and director, has had rare luck, by Dutch standards. It is custom in Dutch film industry to wait and see what one feature film does at the boxoffice, before starting another. There is no planning roster of a series of films by one producer or company, by which risk can be divided between several pictures of different character and subjects. Everything is staked on one throw.

Only one new company, the Nederlandse Film Productie Maatschappij, has an initial capital which enables it to plan four films in a row. First production of the outfit, stationed in Rotterdam, was "Makkers Staakt Uw Wild Geraas" taken from a popular song, and roughly translated in "Fellers Stop That Noisy Hubbub," a comedy around Santa Claus (Dutch version, he is a Spanish bishop, instead of Kris Kringle, whose name day is fested on Dec. 5). Fons Rademakers directed this pic and it had some success in the weeks before December. Rademakers in the meantime directed the second effort for the Nederlande Productie Mattschappij, a drama called "The Knife," which was shot entirely on location. It is the Dutch entry for the Cannes Film Festival, where it will be tested in an international circle. Dutch critics en masse, liked the film, especially praising the new production firm for its stand not to kneel down to the public but to make an adult film, about the crucial moment in a boy's life when he is entering adolescence. For autumn production the N.P.M. is preparing a thriller.

Got 'Golden Bear'

With not much competition, Herman van de Horst won a Golden Bear at the Berlin Film Festival, with his long documentary "Faja Lobbi" (Fervent Love), which he shot in the forests of Surinam. Van der Horst is readying several documentaries on which he has been working on and off during past years, among them a documentary, "The Swam."

Other film activities to be seen on the film scene in Holland this this year, are those of foreign companies. Most important of these is the realization of "Sil the Beachcomber," years ago a project for Spencer Tracy. Under the new, commercially more attractive title of "Love on the North Sea," the film will be produced by Dino De Laurentiis, and star Annette Vadim and Ernest Borgnine. Last year Italian filmmaker Luciano Emmer came to Holland to shoot his feature about prostitution in Amsterdam, "Girls in the Windows," and though he had police protection and bought protection from the underworld, he ran into some trouble in the red lamp district and one night was pushed into the canal, because by his filming he shunted prospective customers.

Reason for foreign producers shooting in Holland is fact that it is reasonably easy to obtain labor permits, while well equipped studios, the Cinetone Studios in Amsterdam and the Cinecentrum in Hilversum, are available.

Most films, both feature films and documentaries, are subsidized by the Dutch government and the Dutch Cinema League; a Film Production Fund was set up, in which the Government and the League participated to the amount of $122,000 annually. From this fund a producer can ask, and after screening, receive, a guarantee of for instance one quarter or one half of the production costs, which reduces the risk of the producer and make it more attractive to set up regular production. In the few years that the Production Fund is in action, all producers who asked for a guarantee had to take it, because their films lost money, but "Fanfare." The Production Fund must mainly work as a promoter for film producers, to stop hazardous one time efforts, where no one can gain the experience that a continuous film production can offer, and to start quality feature films, like the Nederalndse Filmproductie Maatschappij now tries to achieve.

Drawback of subsidies handed out by Government is, the filmmakers can not talk distribution deals themselves, but have to take up contact with the filmman on the Ministry who, not being in business, may hold up sales with unnecessary redtape, in which way deals sometimes fall through and even can be boycotted by officials.

In the unsubsidized field of advertisement films, Joop Geesink's Dollywood is doing well, building new studios both in Amsterdam and Milan, Italy. His production schedule is not subject to the many hazards feature film producers have to reckon with. Only two feature films are scheduled for this year, namely the above mentioned thriller to be produced by the Nederlandse Filmproductie Maatschappij, and "Salt in the Blood," which will be directed by Charles Frend for Hans Boekman, who some yers ago produced Wolfgang Staudte's Dutch directional effort "Ciske the Rat," couping a Golden Lion at the Venice Film Festival.

Like anywhere else, one of the main trouble that keep the film-industry in Holland from becoming sound and healthy, is the tax, considered to be too high by officials from the Dutch Cinema League. Five cinemas in Delft (72,000 inhabitants) situated between The Hague and Rotterdam) put on a strike at the beginning of this year, closing, in protest against the 35% entertainment tax. The strike fell through because municipal officials only wanted to start talks, when the cinemas opened again.

Sunshine Still, In 1960 Report

Amsterdam.

The Annual Report for 1960 of the Nederlandse Bioscoop Bond (Dutch Cinema League) has the abundant fact that the decline in cinemagoing, apparent since 1956 and worrying exhibitors and managers all along, nearly has stopped. In 1960, 55,435,000 persons visited the cinema, compared with 55,535,000 in 1959, and 69,940,000 in 1956. In the three main cities, Amsterdam, Rotterdam and The Hague, cinema dropped another 1.6% compared with 1959.

Reasons for this drop in attendance in the last few years, are the growth of television (900,000 sets, against 2,650,000 radios), the buying of these sets, motor scooters, and motor cycles on the instalment plan, and the home-loving streak in the Dutch character. Entertainment taxes still are a burden to the running of a film house here, though the average entertainment tax is now 22.2%, but 13 out of 323 cities in Holland still have an entertainment tax of between 30% and 35%.

Holland now has 565 cinemas with a total seating capacity of 266,750 seats. This means that new cinemas are still opened, because in 1959 these figures were 559 cinemas and 263,000 seats.

Less films have been imported, i.e., 399 pictures (top years: 1957 and 1958, both with 507 pix), of which Yank pictures take only 166, a decrease of 59 compared with 1959. Amount of imported German and Italian films also took dip, but French films fared well, with an increase of 13 pictures over 1959, making a total of 64. Russia had 8 imports, 3 better than year before. Included in the American quota are one German, one French, 6 Italian and 19 English films.

More black and white films were shown; color films took only 36.6% of total imports, a decrease of 3%. Also, there were less panoramic films shown, to witness 88 pictures, or 22.1% of all imports.

Coming Up Or Awaiting Release

Buenos Aires.

Argentina Sono Film is planning a comedy with Jose Marrone, directed by Antonio Cunill Jr., from a script by Isaac Aisemberg and Hugo Moser. It will roll aboard the Argentine aircraft carrier "Independencia."

Sono also plans a coproduction with D'Amico of Italy, for which Christian Wolff (of "Third Sex" fame) may be selected for the main role with an Italian director, but most of the action in Argentina.

General Belgano has scheduled "Song of the Gutter" (Cancion del Arrabal) with M.D. Co. of Madrid, employing Marujita Diaz, Carlos Estrada, Maria Luisa Santes, Spartaco Santoni, Felix Fernandez, Paquita Mas, Enrique San Miguel, Francisco Canaro for the musical background. The script is by Emilio Villalba Welsh. Enrique Carreras to direct.

Enrique Faustin is to produce "The Man of the Rose Colored Corner," from a story by Jorge Luis Borges, adapted by Isaac Aisemberg and Carlos Aden.

Angel and Sono Film are to combine to make "Martin Fierro," but production date is uncertain. Alfredo Alcon will play the role of the legendary gaucho.

Mexican producer Sergio Cogan has signed a coproduction agreement with Siluetas for "Lois de la Mesa 10."

Meantime 1960 productions still awaiting release are:

"La Mano en la Trampa" (The Hand in the Trap) Angel, directed by Nilsson.

"The Romance of a Gaucho" (Faustin-Sono), in color, directed by R. Cavalotti.

"Mi Buenos Aires Querido" (International-Navasques) directed by Mugica.

"The Ruffian" (Sono) directed by Daniel Tinayre.

"Son of Man" (Sono) directed by Lucas Demare (and expected to be entered at Cannes).

"Alias Gardelito" (Rio Negro) directed by Lautaro Murua.

"Prisoner of a Night" (Angel) directed by Kohon.

"The Centerforward Died at Dawn" (Pelisch) directed by Rene Mujica.

"Don Frutos Gomez" (Sono) in color, directed by Ruben Cavalotti.

"This Earth is Mine" (Tecuara) distributed by Araucania, in color, directed by Hugo Del Carril.

"Vacations in Argentina" (D'An Fran) in color, directed by Leoni.

"Almost the End of the Earth" (Austral) in color—directed by Scotese.

"A Blonde in Buenos Aires" (D'An Fran) directed in color by Cahan.

"Amorina" (Tecuara), distributed by Araucania, directed by Hugo del Carril.

"Fifth Year of National College" (Vieira Santa Cruz) directed by Blasco.

"Free on Parole," directed by Bettanin.

"Heroes of Today" (Cicio) directed by Enrique Dawi.

(Seven of the 18, or 39%, are in color.)

Arg. Screen Institute Trying To Help Native Prods., Please Exhibs

Buenos Aires.

Under the aegis of Felix Taurel, delegate for the State in the National Screen Institute, efforts have been made over the past two months to bring production and exhibition interests together, and eliminate the prickly hostility existing between them in this country since the Peron regime subjected exhibitors to loss through excessive protectionism for the producers.

Efforts had to be made to get the heavy backlog of native productions into release, without causing exhibs too much damage. After repeated discussions, both sides came up with a proposal to exploit them in double bills at 60%. In addition, three nabe circuits would be set up for native product, over which all local productions will be released in the future. Neighborhood audiences, it's felt, find the local product more acceptable than audiences in the first-run and deluxe city showcases.

This proposal must be approved by Taurel, who has decided to do so only after consulting all parties concerned. This approval would automatically cancel all penalties against exhibs charged with violations of the obligatory exhibition regulations. The proposed system of double programs would allow some eight to ten releases over 180 days, and still enable release of the latest productions.

Biz is generally good in first-runs, with plenty important films attracting patrons away from tele.

Despite the hard-ticket admission of $1.50, "Spartacus" (U) has already held four weeks at the Broadway, and it's difficult to get tickets for it. Melina Mercouri in "Never on Sunday" has made such an impact on Argentines, who look on her as the greatest thing since Garbo, that the pic has held five weeks at the Iguazu, distributed by UA. Having held five weeks in first run at the Gran Rex, "Midnight Lace" (U) is now at the Biarritz in a seventh week.

"Psycho" held two weeks at the Lococo Circuit's Opera, which then moved it to its Suipacha where it is in a fifth round. Ingmar Bergman's "Jungfrukallan (Elga) has broken boxoffice records and is in a third stanza at the Luxor, as is "El Alamo" at the Gran Florida. "Ben-Hur" (M-G) has now held nine months at the Metropolitan, and may catch up with "Gone With Wind" (M-G) records.

WESTERNS STILL CLICKING

Italians Not Exposed to TV Saddle-Weariness

Rome.

Big Easter grosses racked up in Italo keys by "Magnificent Seven" (UA-DEAR), "Alamo" (UA-DEAR), "Cimarron" (Metro), "The Misfits" (UA-DEAR), among others, indicates that the western is still a top favorite with Italian audiences. In fact, it is probably even more of a favorite here than in its country of origin (and there are boxoffice comparisons to prove it). One of principal reasons given for this is that while the U. S. is suffering from severe western fatigue due to continuous video exposure to the genre, there is only one tv-film series ("Wagonmaster") featured regularly by RAI-TV, the single Italo outlet. Also lacking, naturally, are the many Yank theatre westerns, especially the B's and C's, which used to delight local public.

Result has in recent years been a series of above-hopes performances in Italy by several oaters which had previously fared well but perhaps not outstandingly in the U. S. and other areas. This was the case with "Friendly Persuasion," with "The Big Country," and others, down to the recent "Unforgiven," which is currently in the number ten spot in seasonal ratings here.

Other recent big features have been racked up by "Alaska" (20th), and by the above-mentioned "Magnificent Seven," which rates the number nine position at this writing, as well as by "Misfits," "Cimarron," and "Alamo," all still too "fresh" for classification.

Slow Recovery From Peronist Paralysis Marks Film Situation In Argentina

By NID EMBER

Buenos Aires.

Argentina's film industry has made little progress. The reasons are various, as is usually the case. The producers would not, of course, invest their own money. Do they ever in any country? Meanwhile they hopefully awaited the passage by the Congress here of the Film Law, 62/57, under which the National Screen Institute would be empowered to extend credits. There are a few hopeful natures who think the delay in passing the law has been motivated by a hope that producers would get out of their habit of looking to the State.

To the extent that their own capital, or private sources, were involved in recent productions, there may have been some enhancement of quality. There is no question that Argentine features desperately need an artistic surge, call it a "new wave," or whatever. For 20 years under the bony, cupped fingers of the Peronistas all was favoritism, angles and payoff. That never helps "art."

Here as in other lands the mere desire to create implies no access to funds. Typically Argentine is hopelessly addicted to rule-by-boards, appointments to which must never presume qualification.

At the close of 1960, 10 completed films were awaiting release, which had been directed by novices of under 35. Fortunately, there is also a new wave of producers: Nestor Gaffet, Hector Olivera, Kanaf or Simonetti, who are prepared to take risks and follow new ideas, giving sufficient emphasis to good scripts and affording chances to new young directors. It remains to be seen whether the old style producers: Mentasti of Sono Film, Bedoya or Faustin, et al will follow their example.

31 Released During 1960, While 18 More Pending

There were 31 Argentine films released in 1960, while another 18 of that year's production still await release. Of the 31 releases, only two actually hit the jackpot in a big way. These were "La Patota" (Sono) directed by Daniel Tinayre, with Mirtha Legrand. It's been bought by David Films for distribution in Italy ($1,500,000 was paid for dubbing, print-making and publicity purposes) and also for distribution in other countries. This picture was entered at the Acapulco Festival of Mexico in 1960.

"Un Guapo del 900" (Angel) directed by Leopoldo Torre Nilsson, with a new young actor, Alfredo Alcon, was the other big boxoffice hit. Actor's work in the dynamic Samuel Eichelbaum story rocketed him to the very top. He is now in demand for the role of Martin Fierro, in a film version of the Gaucho epic.

Torre Nilsson also directed "Fin de Fiesta" in 1960, from his wife, Beatriz Guido's novel, and this also made a good impact, though not comparable to "Un Guapo."

"Movies on Saturday Night" proved a disappointing contribution from Fernando Ayala, considered one of the most promising directors.

"Shunko," (Araucania), directed by Chilean actor Lautaro Murua, his first direction chore, won the best-Spanish language film award at the last Mar del Plata festival in January, and created sufficient interest to arouse expectations as to his next film, "Alias Gardelito."

Hugo del Carril's "Culpable" followed the traditional Argentine production lines.

"Los le la Mesa 10" (The Pair at Table 10), directed by Simon Feldman, which the then Screen Institute President, Dr. Roberto Christensen, resolutely refused to qualify for obligatory exhibition, though it earned high critical praise, and if given a change probably could have done well at the boxoffice.

Local Prejudice Strong Against Local Product

Local features rarely gross well in the first week after release. Ticket agencies report that ticket orders for Argentine releases are less than 2% of their business, and then only when the picture, after several weeks in a theatre builds word-of-mouth. As exhibitors often lose money when they "have to" exhibit a native picture, they are slow to hold over.

Of other pictures by novices, "Cerro Guanaco" in color, directed by Jose Ramon Luna, had interesting angles, and another show of promise was Enrique Dawi's "Rio Abajo."

The only international award was won by Juan Berend's short "Newspaper," which got the Silver Bear award at the Berlin International Festival. Local short producers all show promise and deserve help, but the only solution suggested is that their product be made obligatory for release in all filmtheatres, with exhibitors paying them a percentage, and this is naturally resisted. They will have to turn their attention to more lucrative possibilities of making videofilms.

Of the 1960 crop, two Armando Bo productions, of the usual nudist type with Isabel Sarli, "India" and "The Devil Created Man," were by many deemed a disgrace to the industry.

The 1960 coproductions did well internationally, and were "Yo Quiero Vivir Contigo" with Germany's Susanne Cramer, teamed with local Alberto de Mendoza, and "From the Appenines to the Andes" (Silvio d'Amico-Argentina Sono Film.)

New young directors are: Enrique Dawi (Rio Abajo), Simon Feldman (Heroes of Today, El Negocion and "Los de la Mesa 10"; David Jose Kohon (Prisoners of a Night); Lautaro Murua "Shunko" and "Alias Gardelito," with producers Nestor Gaffet (Fin de Fiesta), Leo Kanaf (Shunko) and script-writer Roa Bastos, author of "Shunko."

Need to Attract Showmen From Other Republics

There is growing recognition in Buenos Aires that the Argentine film product must find broader outside markets. There is also the problem that tariffs on film studio gear are discouragingly high.

Eduardo Aducci, now unhappily ousted from the Screen Institute, has urged the Mar del Plata Festival organizers to romance distributors from other Latin republics. In consequence of this idea the festival this January was far more realistic as an exchange point for production and business contacts.

Palomino Uson from Peru; Luis Rafael Rossi of Panama; Buan Biederman of Paraguay; Hugo Romay Salvo of Uruguay, Ricardo Bonfin of Brazil; Pascual Cebollada of Spain; Manolo Fernandez of Cuba; Luis Scanapieco and Luis Devilaine of Chile; Carlos S. Plaza Izquierdo and N. Ordaz-Gran of Venezuela, and Serner Katzenston of West Germany, were guests and Argentine product was screened for them twice a day. Substantial block purchases were made for Panama and Venezuela. There will be an "Argentine Film Week" in Caracas during the present year.

Aducci fell out with the industry, however, when he advised it to "internationalize" its product, adapting it to foreign market needs. The producers pointed out that this policy was followed in Peron's time, to avoid the rigid censorship by adapting stories in the public domain, such as "Anna Karenina" or other classics, thereby leading to "decadence."

There is certainly a tendency to select better material, but in general this remains the rock on which the local industry is wrecked. When it was suggested to one young producer that he make a film version of an excellent local novel, he complained the author wanted big money! Yet the author's name alone would bring audiences into the film-theatres.

'Grandiose' Descriptions Of Their True Purposes

Argentinos are somewhat prone to grandiose expressions as to their motivations in entering the film business. All is not sincere which protests sheer artistry. "Self-expression" is more lucid than evident unless one grants that the term covers girl friends with a yen to see themselves on the screen. Plainly what is needed is some blunt-speaking, though it at is hazardous here, as the abrupt unpopularity of the imaginative Aruci, abovementioned, illustrates.

One must acknowledge that a terrible paralysis of initiative during the long chill of Peron has not been lifted, though there is a great improvement in conditions necessary for artistic growth, if not altogether in the economy.

Several affluent producers, mainly Internacional and Sono Film, have agreed to combine forces, setting up "Interson," to represent them both abroad for distribution purposes. This reflects the failure of the plan to set up Uniargentina.

Coproduction deals were also initiated at the Mar del Plata Festival. One will be a triple arrangement between Spanish, Italian and Argentine (D'Amico and Sono) interests. A Spanish-Speaking Film Union (U.C.H.A.) was also revived between Spain, Argentina and Mexico, with the aim of coordinating policies, facilitating co-production deals, combining to submit their product at International Festival, set up award for Spanish-spoken films, edit publications and combine Union policies.

There were only 11 Mexican releases in Argentina in 1960, none of them outstanding, by comparison with 19 Spanish films, which have become distinctly more competitive. Argentina, Spain and Mexico plan to put their cooperation policy into play at the Cannes Festival next May, presenting their entries together, and thus saving expenses.

Producers, exhibitors and the Association of Independent Exhibitors are now getting together to try and straighten out Institute snarls concerning obligatory exhibition of the native product. Exhibitors want guarantees to protect them from loss when exhibiting "dog" product. Provided the new Institute authorities don't gum up the works, it is believed that exhibitors and producers can eventually come to terms.

International Film Festivals

The following is a rundown on the 1961 film festivals around the world. Unless otherwise indicated, these are the fests which have been approved by the International Federation of Film Producers Associations.

Mar Del Plata, Argentina	(Competitive)	Jan. 8-Jan. 17
Punta Del Esta, Uruguay	(Non-competitive)	Jan. 19-Jan. 25
Vina Del Mar, Chile	(Non-competitive)	Jan. 27-Feb. 4
Oberhausen, West Germany	(Cultural films—competitive)	Feb. 6-Feb. 11
Cartagena, Colombia	(Non-competitive)	Feb. 10-Feb. 20
Cannes, France*	(Competitive)	May 3-May 18
Manheim, Germany	(Documentaries—competitive)	May 29-June 3
Berlin*	(Competitive)	June 23-July 4
San Sebastian, Spain*	(Competitive)	July 9-July 23
Vancouver, Canada	(Non-competitive)	July 10-July 22
Locarno, Switzerland	(Competitive)	July 19-July 30
Edinburgh, Scotland	(Non-competitive)	Aug. 2-Sept. 10
Stratford, Canada	(Non-competitive)	Aug. 21-Sept. 2
Venice*	(Competitive)	Aug. 20-Sept. 3
Cork, Ireland	(Non-competitive)	Sept. 27-Oct. 4
San Francisco	(Competitive)	Nov. 1-Nov. 14
Mexico City-Acapulco, Mexico	(Non-competitive)	Late fall

* These are the festivals which the IFFPA has ruled may limit entries to film previously unreleased outside of the country of origin.

Devoted Yank Cinemaddicts

[Or the Pure Love of Films]

By HENRY HART

No material rewards come to those who publish and edit a magazine seriously devoted to the motion picture. In fact, sacrifices of a material nature must be made. But there are rewards of a non-material kind.

Chief among them is the pleasure of meeting people who care passionately about the motion picture as an art, a technology, and a social force. They are as devoted, in this passion, as any addict of music, painting or literature. And their devotion is as self-less.

I shall speak here only of some such whom I've encountered through editing "Films in Review" for America's National Board of Review, founded in 1909. I have met and known many professionals and non-professionals, living and dead, who have shared the conviction that the motion picture is the most dynamic art of the 20th century, and the only art potentially able to deal with the social, intellectual and emotional aspects of the human situation which have expanded so fantastically in the last half century. But here I shall describe, all too briefly, only some of those whose devotion took the form of writing, without pay, for our magazine.

Fondly Recalled

Perhaps the foremost of these was the late Theodore Huff, whose premature death at 39 was a loss to U. S. culture. He was the son of an Englewood, N. J., physician, and at Princeton, where he majored in architecture, he made some amateur films on 16m, including a film version of "Hamlet." He later arranged musical scores for the silent films shown at the Museum of Modern Art, and spent the war years in the National Archives in Washington. Thereafter he taught at NYU and City College, and at the time of his death was casting director at the Signal Corps Photographic Center in Astoria, Long Island.

Huff had an unusual visual memory and could describe scenes and sequences in even minor films he had seen many years before. He had both instinctive and cultivated taste, and beyond those invaluable traits he had artistic and intellectual integrity. He was dismayed by the errors which so easily become fixated in film history, and he spent a great deal of time and energy correcting some of them. Huff used to complain about those who "write about pictures they have never seen." His complaints were gentle, for he was a gentle man, and a gentleman.

An Actor Enthusiast

It was through Huff that I met John Griggs, the actor, who has a little theatre in the basement of his suburban home where he shows, and studies, great films of the past. I think he gets almost as much pleasure out of watching the acting technique of Henry B. Walthall as he does out of performing himself. In addition to his interest in the motion picture Griggs has a lively sense of the American past, and of the habits and customs which formed the American character.

Huff's death brought me into contact with Gerald D. McDonald, the head of the American history section of the New York Public Library, and perhaps the leading authority on the films of the decade 1910-1920. He had been a friend and admirer of Huff's with whom he had often "traded" still photographs of film players, directors and scenes (both had outstanding still collections). It is extremely lucky that one of McDonald's hobbies is the motion picture, for his library training, and his impeccable scholarship, have preserved facts about the movies which otherwise would be garbled in the history books of the future.

Expert On the Swedes

Huff's death also enabled me to meet Charles L. Turner, a professional director of non-theatrical motion pictures, and one of the few informed men in the U. S. on the Swedish film (vide his recent and authoritative 2-part article on Victor Seastrom). Turner used Huff as an actor in some of the films he directed for the Signal Corps, and it was via this that Huff became casting director at Astoria. Turner's interest in, and knowledge of, film history, is unique among motion picture directors.

Everson, His Own IBM

A visual memory is invaluable to those who are interested in film history and, like Huff's, William K. Everson's is a very unusual one. I first came in contact with Everson through a letter he wrote to "Films in Review" about the way bordello scenes used to be handled in Hollywood (the point had been raised by Herman G. Weinberg in a column he was then writing for us). At that time Everson was doing publicity for Monogram's international department here in New York. It wasn't long before his unique knowledge of film history became so recognized that the phrase "let's ask Everson" ended many arguments about film facts. Recently he has been finding, and editing, the films shown on the tv-program called "Silents Please."

Everson is an Englishman and he went to work in London's Film Row at the age of 14 during the man-power shortage of World War II. His passion for movies had led him there, and it was advanced, not destroyed, by his labors in Britain's film exchanges. After he was inducted into the British army he devoted his leaves chiefly to journeys to London to see film classics he had been too young to see when they first came out. After the war he was active in British film societies, and since coming to this country he has become the sine qua non of the Huff Memorial Film Society of New York.

It was through Everson's article "Stock Shots" that I met Edward Connor, a church organist and choir master whose visual memory is complemented by an auditory one. Connor sent us a letter about Everson's article which revealed so considerable a knowledge of film history that I wrote to ask if he would consider writing for us even though we were unable to pay our contributors. He has so written, to the edification of cinemaddicts all around the world. Connor is as gentle a man as Huff, and, like him, is scrupulous about facts. For which film historians of the future will be grateful.

Visual and Verbal

One of the most unique of the motion picture memories I have encountered is possessed by Don Miller, whose memory is not only visual (face, scene, action), but auditory (especially music), and verbal (dates, names, title-changes). Miller knows the release date of almost every important picture from 1930 on, and of many unimportant ones. And their casts, directors, plots, and running times. He wears his erudition lightly, and it was several years before I realized how detailed, and accurate, his memory is. He was cutting films for NBC when I first met him, and is now writing tv scripts. He intends, I believe, to direct.

John Springer's memory for titles, release dates, casts and plots is also extraordinary, as his quizzes about motion picture history in Films in Review testify. Springer is certainly the only movie public relations man who cares as much about past movies as present ones, and the only p.r. who can hold his own with first rate film historians.

One of the most inspiring of the true cinemaddicts I have encountered is George Geltzer, who was born deaf. "Deaf" is a technical term which applies to those who have never had hearing, or who lost it very early in life. This can mean a speech handicap, as well. There are about 12,000 deaf persons in the U. S.

As a child Geltzer was taken by his mother each week to see silent movies. To the deaf the "silents" were a miracle, and they were such a miracle to the young Geltzer that he set himself to find out all he could about them. At the New York Public Library he read the fan magazines and the trade papers, and facts about movies became his lifetime hobby (he earns his living as a linotype operator). Today he is one of the outstanding authorities on the history of the movie serial.

U.S. Major

One day some seven or eight years ago my wife wrote to a man in Virginia whose subscriber copy had been returned to us and in his reply there were some remarks which caught her eye. We wrote to him and from his answer it was clear that he was a sincere and knowledgable movie devote. He has since done authoritative articles for us on Lon Chaney, William S. Hart, Gregg Toland, Tom Mix, Thomas H. Ince, and other subjects. His name is George Mitchell, and he is a major in the U. S. Army Counter Intelligence Corps. (VARIETY excerpted his Ince data in its 55th anni).

I have met many other devotees of the motion picture whom I do not have space to describe. But I cannot conclude this memento without mentioning some names and the disparate areas of life to which they belong: Herbert G. Luft, a refugee now working in Hollywood whose knowledge of the "golden days" of the German film is outstanding; Robert Downing, the actor and stage manager (often in VARIETY) whose interest in the theatre does not exclude an interest in the motion picture; Jack Spears, the executive secretary of the Tulsa County (Oklahoma) Medical Society whose research ability is by no means hampered by his distance from the usual sources; Robert C. Roman, a young teacher in a Bronx high school; Jack Jacobs, who is on the staff of Brentano's in New York; Homer Dickens, a recent graduate of the American Academy of Dramatic Art; Carlos Clarens, a young Cuban who studied architecture and then went to work at the Cinematheque Francaise; Jerry Vermilye, a young actor; Roi A. Uselton, a master sergeant in the U. S. Air Force; Romano Tozzi, the cultured and serious son of a Nw York City art dealer.

Poles Retain Part Of Arts Freedom Gained in 1956

Warsaw.

Poland made its first real impact on the West at the Cannes Festival in 1957 when it showed a new freedom in conception, form and subject matter after its "bloodless" revolution of October, 1956. The first surprise was the pic that copped a top prize at Cannes "Kanal," of Andrzej Wadja, which treated the Warsaw insurrection during the last war with both the Communist forces and the old guard reps as heroes, and even pointed a subtle finger of accusation at Russia's waiting till the Germans wiped out most of the Polski forces.

Since then other Wadja pix and those by new directors like Andrzej Munk, Jerzy Kawalerowicz, Wojciech Has, Jerzy Passendorfer showed that the Polish film had won its right to treat subjects on a human as well as social realist plain. A Polish Film Week, which ran in Paris from April 17-24, confirmed that, if Poland has lost many of its '56 prerogatives and has pulled firmly back into line under Soviet control in the Eastern Bloc, its filmmakers still enjoy a measure of freedom.

Of course most Polish features treat the great topics of the war, the suffering, the terrible destruction and the resistance. But many points are questioned and many go against the Polish penchant for futile heroics. The dean of Polish directors Aleksander Ford has said that the old "court system," which followed rules of a definite social realist cinema, is now forever gone in Poland.

STARTS TO APRIL 15: 48 FEATURE FILMS

Rome.

The 1961 production figures (Jan.-April 15) are as follows:

January starts: 19.
February starts: 9.
March starts: 14.
April (to 15th): 6.

Of above total of 48, 11 are dramatic stories, and another 11 rated as "Adventurous." Comedies follow, with 9 starts; crime pix were next with 5; Musicals—4; then came historicals—3, and Biblical-Mythologicals—3; with "sentimental" items bringing up the rear with only 2 samples.

As of April 15, there were 35 pix shooting for Italo companies. 21 of these were in work in Rome studios or on Italian locations; the remaining 14 abroad.

Cartoons in Work At London, Zurich, Milan, Rome, Prague for Yank

Hollywood.

Expanding his cartoon activities, Bill Snyder (he won Oscar for "Munro") has five units working on new product, in four foreign countries: One each in London, Zurich, Milan, Rome and Prague. Stories, sound track and layouts are prepared in Gotham, he said.

Three of 13 "Tom & Jerry" subjects for Metro have been completed, (Switchin Kitten," "Down and Outing" and "Greek Cat"), five are in production and another five being written in N.Y. and here. While in Hollywood, Snyder has been after writers to build his stable for future activity. Fourth "T & J" "Mouse Into Space" is almost finished. Plan is to deliver one a month starting May.

Additional, indie producer is making 28 "Popeye" subjects for King Features. Al Brodax, formerly with William Morris Agency, heads King Features film cartoon division which has sked of 208 briefies—6 to 7 mins.—to turn out. He's also been here looking for new writers to work on those not being parceled out to Synder.

Group of 10 cartoons based on stories by famous writers, another project, has five Ludwig Bemelman shorties being caricatured from collection "Madeline," namely "Madeline's Rescue," "Madeline and the Gypsies," "Madeline and the Bad Hat," "Sunshine," and "Fifi." "Rescue," "Gypsies" and "Sunshine" are fini. Two of the remaining five are "Anatole" and "The Happy Line."

There will also be two cartoons based on famous western songs, one being "My Darling Clementine."

Additionally there's a feature cartoon subject now being written for Snyder in Italy. It's based on a classic in public domain and will take two years to make, producer revealed.

Vet Par P. A. in Japan Quits

Tokyo.

Toshie Ise, longtime publicity manager for Japan's Paramount office, has resigned his post to launch his own tubthumping outfit. Ise will remain with the Par office as an advisor until a successor is chosen. Long regarded as top man here in retitling Par product with Japanese tags, Ise first joined the company at its Kobe office in 1928.

He was with Eiga Haikyu Kaisha during the war and with the publicity department of the Central Motion Picture Exchange in the Occupation period. Ise rejoined Paramount in 1952, when that company resumed its own distribution here.

Let's Define 'Obscenity'

By MICHAEL F. MAYER

Executive Director, Independent Film Importers & Distributors of America Inc.

One of the chronic charges against films (foreign and domestic) is the loose mounting of the word "obscenity." At IFIDA we hear it regularly—This picture is obscene.—That picture is obscene. They should all be banned.—They must all be "classified," and so on.

While it may be very well, however, for children to play this game of words, in the deadly serious business of entertainment it would seem that a little care and circumspection might be exercised. Just what is this obscenity that the moralists and "holier-than-thou's" always prattle about?

Fortunately, obscenity has been defined by the only proper authority in this democracy—the United States Supreme Court. The definition arose in Roth against the United States, a Supreme Court case in 1957 involving literature. Judge Brennan, speaking for the majority, stated the legal requirement of obscenity which is now the prevailing doctrine. A book (or a film) is obscene if "to the average person, applying contemporary community standards, the dominant theme of the material taken as a whole appeals to prurient interests."

Let's take this definition apart so we have some idea of what obscenity really means (and even more important—what it doesn't mean). (1) The standard is applied to the average person. It is obvious that certain matters may well affect a highly sexed neurotic far more than a normal person. It is the effect only on the normal person that counts.

(2) Contemporary community standards must be applied. A picture of grandma's ankle was obscene at the turn of the century but it isn't now. The standards have changed and society as a whole has managed to survive and perhaps improve. It's today that counts.

(3) The dominant theme of the material must meet the test. This prevents the selection of isolated tidbits of spice or individual scenes to prove a case of obscenity where the total effect is quite otherwise. The obscene theme must be primary and cannot be secondary.

(4) The work must be looked at as a whole. This is the counterpart to the dominant theme test. While a segment could fall within the rule, unless the objectionable matter is dominant th. ughout the work, looking at it in its entirety, it cannot be obscene.

(5) There must be an appeal to prurient interests. Webster defines prurient as "itching; longing; uneasy with desire or longing; of persons, having itching, morbid or lascivious longings; of desire, curiosity or propensity, lewd . . ." The material assailed must be such as to create this itching sensation if it is to be considered obscene. Otherwise it isn't, period.

Looking at this definition, it is a little easier to understand why so very few foreign films have been rated obscene and why the censor boards have been constantly overruled in their application of this epithet to foreign language films. The test for obscenity is tough and well it should be because short of total obscenity, we are in the area of free speech. And let's not confuse obscenity with sex. Judge Brennan himself states that "the portrayal of sex is not itself sufficient to deny material the constitutional protection of freedom of speech. . . . Sex, a great and mysterious motive force in human life, has indisputably been a subject of absorbing interest to mankind through the ages; it is one of the vital problems of human interest and public concern."

Clearly, then, the portrayal of sex on the screen is an entirely proper subject. It is only when the rigorous standards rightfully imposed by the Court are violated that material may be considered obscene. The constantly repeated, tiresome charges with reference to foreign and domestic films of alleged obscenity should be held strictly to this test. There may be a few people around who don't know what the word means.

No 'Horror' Films For Australians; Bowling Hurts

Melbourne.

Australia has a permanent prejudice against "horror" films, banning many of them outright. This goes back to 1948. Significantly the 20 features denied licenses by the censors a year ago included 14 rejected out of hand for "horror" content.

Violence accounts for cut scenes, along with "indecent" dialog and sex incidents. Some 121 incisions of some consequence were ordered last year.

The censorship operates here as to films intended for television, unlike the United States where the air media entirely escapes "prior restraint" but the theatre screen does not. Australia is a very big market for vidpix, about 11,000 films entering from foreign sources, Notably America and Britain.

Because of the large number of Europeans migrating to Australia since World War II there is a considerable market here for socalled "art" films, the offbeat product which cannot find outlets universally.

One of the real wails among the showmen for the past 16 months has been the fantastic boom in bowling alleys, an innovation here. The sports-loving Australians have adopted this exercise like crazy.

Italo Boom By-Product: Shooting Script Plus Data In Book Stores

Rome.

Richly illustrated books containing shooting script of a selected current feature and telling the behind-the-scenes tales of their making, have become valuable and (recently) profitable sideline ventures in an industry boom which finds more and more spectators attending quality product and, apparently, wanting to know more about them and how they were conceived and made.

Several books were published here right after the last war about films, but they were mostly dedicated to classics of the past. It was a Bologna editor, Capelli, who some years ago began his series "From Story to Film" (edited by Renzo Renzi) with a tome on "Romeo and Juliet." This was followed by others, all on pix by top-rated directors and totaling 21 to date. Biggest seller was "La Dolce Vita," which had to be reprinted and resulted in accented interest in other similar books, which are now all practically sell-outs. Two most recent Capelli items are for "Nude Odyssey," directed by Franco Rossi for Cineriz and "La Viaccia," directed by Mauro Bolognini for Arco Films, which is one of Italy's contenders at Cannes Fest this year.

Recent addition to trend is a new and similar series published by Salvatore Sciascia and edited by Antonio Bevilaqua. Sciascia series to date includes tomes on three Dino DeLaurentiis productions, "Il Gobbo," "Tutti a Casa," and "I Love, You Love."

In addition to bookstore sales, both the Capelli and Sciascia series constitute ideal prestige handouts for films' producers, who use the richly illustrated and interestingly written volumes to service scribes, impress foreign distribs and buyers, etc. At the same time, the producer's order constitutes a firm base for the publisher, who might otherwise not as willingly risk their coin.

Capelli books, hard-cover and clothbound, usually sell for about 2000 Lire ($3.20), while 3 paperbound Sciascia books to date are rated at Lire 1,500 per some $2.50).

Sessue Hayakawa in 'Judo'

Tokyo.

An indie film called, "Judo" by Dennis Kane and starring Sessue Hayakawa is expected to roll here soon.

Kodokan Judo Center, mecca for the sport, has pledged cooperation with the production.

Portugal's Bannings

Rome.

Italian pix have not only encountered censorship trouble at home: report from Lisbon and published locally says the following pix have been denied an import permit in Portugal: "La Dolce Vita," "Rocco and his Brothers," "L'Avventura," "Il Bell'Antonio," "General della Rovere," "Five Branded Women," "Arrangiatevi," "Costa Azzurra," and "The Moralist."

Foreign Gross Data for Japan

Tokyo.

The following are the top foreign film grossers in Japan for year ending June 30, 1960. Figures are based on receipts of six key situations: Tokyo roadshow, Tokyo general release, Kansai (including Osaka, Kobe and Kyoto), Nagoya, Fukuoka and Sapporo, which are estimated to represent from 30 to 60 per cent of an import's total Japan earnings, depending on the nature of the individual entries.

Some of the figures represent incomplete showings within the six situations. "Ben-Hur" had only played 18 weeks in Tokyo and 16 in Osaka by the cutoff date while "South Pacific," "Solomon and Sheba" and "On the Beach" had not yet played Tokyo general release. "Suddenly, Last Summer" had yet to play Fukuoka and Sapporo and "Five Pennies" had not yet played Nagoya, Fukuoka and Sapporo. Also, figures for Tokyo general release for "Suddenly, Last Summer," "12 Madchen," "Five Pennies" and "FBI Story" and for Kansai re latter two entries represent total grosses of double bills. Not listed is "South Seas" (Cinerama) which had grossed $1,196,955 in 65 weeks in Tokyo and Osaka by cutoff date.

"South Pacific" (20th-Fox)	$456,063
"Ben-Hur" (Metro)	447,222
"Solomon and Sheba" (UA)	424,947
"Horse Soldiers" (UA)	339,716
"North by Northwest" (Metro)	277,194

FOUR ITALO FEATURES SET AT CANNES FEST

Rome.

Italy will be represented at Cannes Film Festival by four features. These are: "Girl with a Suitcase" (Titanus), the official local selection; and three items invited by Cannes, namely, "La Ciociara" (Champion); "La Viaccia" (Arco), and "Che Gioia Vivere" (Cineriz).

Two of local entries, "LaViaccia," directed by Mauro Bolognini for Arco Film's Alfredo Bini, and starring Claudia Cardinale and J. P. Belmondo, and "Che Gioia Vivere" ('The Joy of Living'), directed by Rene Clement, with Alain Delon and Barbara Lass topplined, will have their world premieres at the Riviera gathering, while other two have already been seen in Italy. "La Ciociara" ('Two Women'), was directed by Vittorio DeSica and stars Sophia Loren. Embassy Pictures, which releases pic in States, has postponed US opening to allow pic to be shown at Cannes under regulations forbidding pic entries to be shown in country other than that of origin before the fest unveiling. Sophia Loren won the top Italo acting award for her stint in "Women."

Fourth Italo pic, "Girl with Suitcase" (reviewed in VARIETY, March 29, '61) stars Claudia Cardinale and was directed by Valerio Zurlini. Coincidentally, both Miss Cardinale ("Girl" and "Viaccia") and French thesp J. P. Belmondo ("Viaccia" and "Women") have two pix in fest as Italo entries.

For the record, both Clement and DeSica have won top Cannes prizes before with their pix, while Bolognini has had two pix accepted, never winning. It's a first for Zurlini. But all are really previous fest winners: Bolognini's "Bell'Antonio" won top kudo at Locarno last year, while Zurlini's "Violent Summer" won prizes at the 1960 Mar del Plata event.

Filipinos: 50 Stars, 112 Native Features, Only 22 Exported; U.S. Escapes Dubbing

By AARON PINES

Manila.

There are presently 23,000,000 people in the Philippines, most of whom speak English, thus requiring no dubbing on American pictures. Philippines became an independent republic in 1946.

In Manila, capital of the country, there are 10 firstrun theatres showing exclusively American pictures and two theatres which show exclusively firstrun Filipino pictures.

Censorship here is very strict as this is predominantly a Catholic country. It operates through a Chairman plus 14 members appointed by the President. The present board is composed of 10 women and five men.

Local production is in the hands of three major companies, namely, LVN, Sampaguita and Premiere Productions which, combined, produce about 112 pictures a year. However, there is a good chance that more independent producing companies will come up this year and next, challenging the three traditional family-owned studios. Biggest strength of independents is the desire to export Filipino product which the present three have not done to a very great extent.

As yet, Philippine television has not hurt grosses, but is slowly gaining ground and will have an effect on boxoffice as time develops.) Eight independent film-producing companies are Vision Pictures Inc., Malayan Pictures, C & A Movie Productions, Balatbat Productions, Master Productions, Mariposa Films and Bayanihan-Arriva and Arriva-Spotlight specialists in coproductions.

A total of 112 features were produced locally, up from last year's 95. Two coproductions were shown during 1960 — "Espionage Far East" and "Escape to Paradise" both by Lynnro Production, a Filipino-American company.

Awards Winners

Several important awards went to Filipino producers and talent at the annual Film Festival in Asia, held last year in Tokyo. LVN's "Bayanihan" (Philippine Folk Dances) took a gold medal award at Valencia, Spain. Same studio's "The Bountiful Earth" won special award at Berlin Film Festival and was named Best of the Year by the Filipino Academy of Movie Arts & Sciences (FAMAS).

Average black and white feature production costs range between 45,000 and 65,000 pesos; in color, 70,000 to 120,000 pesos.

As of December 31, there were estimated total of 632 theatres equipped to show 35m product and two 70m houses in Manila—the Galaxy and Rizal. Some 497 pay both domestic and imports, 234 have mostly foreign film policy and 340 play only Filipino pictures. Two houses were closed during the year and four new theatres were built in Manila suburbs. Average per-ticket admission tax is 20% of the basic price. Screen quota for Filipino picture is 10 days annually for first runs and one week for second runs.

It was estimated that 59 nontheatrical pictures were produced during 1960, 51 in black and white. It was established that a total of 322 foreign features were released last year (349 in 1959), with the following breakdown of country of origin:

U.S.A., 177;
Nationalist China, 58;
Britain, 54;
Italy, 15;
France, 9;
Japan, 7;
West Germany, 1;
Portugal, 1.

Pictures of countries other than these are not brought in. Columbia Pictures has imported an occasional few Spanish films made in Mexico, mostly Cantinflas.

Estimated boxoffice earnings of imports were Pesos 13,339,000. Based on this boxoffice figure, distribution earnings are reliably estimated at between Pesos 7 to 7.5 million. All English-language imports are shown in original versions. There are no quotas.

Exchange rate of Filipino peso from 2-1 on April 1, to 4-1—four pesos to one American dollar, but certain compensatory measures decrease the rate. Customs duty on 35m feature imports is 26 centavos per linear meter, 50 centavos for 70m. It is understood that about Pesos 21,000,000 are still frozen, in spite of continuing efforts by the MPEA companies to buy gold on the open market and resell it at a discount.

Few Film Exports

Only about 20% of the total year's production (some 22 pictures) were exported, these mostly to neighboring Asian nations, with only four or five getting into principal world markets. Estimated earnings from feature exports were put at 1,300,000 pesos, and the total was expected to be much higher in 1961 since there is a greatly hyped interest in foreign markets, but the government is apparently lax in failing to support this trend.

There are no essential changes in censorship regulations in 1960. The censors screened the aforementioned 112 features and 322 imports, with one of the first being banned and six of the latter. Three domestic pictures were severely cut and about 30% of all imports cut.

The television audiences are definitely growing, which is helped along by the critics' statements about some of the film producers. The writers complain that the makers of film fare have not come up with any new ideas and are forsaking the kind of quality pictures that provided stiff competition in the past three years for many imports. The critics also condemned the local productions which are heavily loaded with what they call "irrelevant symbolism" and "corny comedy" only understandable to Filipinos and thus incapable of attracting overseas audiences.

The Philippines now has seven video stations, three built last year, one in Baguio (northern Luzon) and the other two in the southern islands of Cebu and Davao, all part of the Inter-Island tv network whose home station is DZTV. There was an estimated total of 55,000 sets at year-end with 65% imported telefilm programming and 25% domestic. There is no censorship of videofare now, but there is a bill pending in Congress to include tv films along with movies. Price for ½ hour series ranges from 130 to 240 pesos. The Westrex Corporation, now a division of Litton Industries of the U.S., continues to be the principal purveyor and servicing agent of motion picture and tv equipment, although Japanese equipment is obtaining a substantial foothold in this market. The success of the Westrex operation is greatly due to the experience (with company since 1929) plus perfect salesmanship of Harro V. Zeppelin, resident mgr. and area recording mgr., and his able staff, headed by William Douglas.

50 Stars!

The life blood of the Filipino industry is upwards of 50 leading stars, but during 1960 a number of them married or retired and upcoming talent is scarce.

The big-name stage attractions now staged at the Araneta Coliseum and other places in Manila are presenting real competition with a long lineup of such international artists and entertainers as Pat Boone, Frank Sinatra, Nat King Cole, Bobby Darin and wife Sandra Dee and Joni James, all booked for probable sellout engagements in 1961.

As noted above, the growth of television may be a decisive factor in decreasing boxoffice take during 1961, especially since the Inter-Island network is expanding. However, it can naturally follow that there will be an increasing demand for telefilms, and since most of the major importer-distributors will be offering videofare, it may be assumed that any decrease in theatrical rentals might be at least partially offset by the new source.

Tennessee Williams Talk Track on 1954 'Senso'

"Senso," 1954 Italo pic directed by Luchino Visconti with Alida Valli and Farley Granger, is due to be released in the States for the first time by Lux Film later this year. Film has English dialog by Tennessee Williams.

Also due to be released by Lux in coming months are two other Italo pix which have been in the backlog for several years, "Neopolitan Carousel" and "Man of Straw."

B.C. Film Festival Now Organizing

Vancouver.

Norman McLaren, Canadian film-maker, has accepted the Vancouver Film Festival's invitation to be a judge of competitive documentaries and short subjects at this year's film fete, per festival director Stanley Fox. Fourth annual International Film Festival goes from July 10 to 22 in Vogue Theatre, Canadian Odeon's downtown Vancouver 1300-seater.

McLaren is the second of three judges to be named. Herman G. Weinberg of New York had previously accepted a festival bid and the third judge is to be picked.

Weinberg has sub-titled over 300 foreign language films, among his more recent credits is "Hiroshima, Mon Amour."

As to films expected at this year's festival, Fox said that it is still too early to have film commitments but there is an excellent chance of securing the following features: from Mexico, "The Young One"; from France, "Moderato Cantabile" and "Zazie dans le Metro"; from Italy, "Rocco and his Brothers" and "L'Avventura"; from Spain, "El Cochechito"; from Czechoslovakia, "Higher Principle"; from Yugoslavia, "The Ninth Circle"; and from Sweden, either Bergman's "The Virgin Spring" or a new Sucksdorff film. Feature films are also expected from West Germany, Bulgaria, Russia, Denmark and Poland.

Vancouver International Film Festival is fully approved by the International Federation of Film Producers' Associations but "competition" is restricted to documentary, short fictional and children's films only. Features are by invitation. Screening committees select 24 features and 100 documentaries and short subjects for public showing during the 12-day run, which drew a total audience of 22,000 in 1960, about 70% of capacity.

Nat Cohen to America For Variety Conclave, 3 Pix Distrib Deals

London.

As a delegate of the London tent of Variety Clubs of which he is a former Chief Barker, Nat Cohen, managing director of Anglo-Amalgamated Film Distributors, left London last weekend to attend the International Variety club's convention in Miami, Fla., but is making it a combined biz-pleasure trip.

On the outward journey he had a 24-hour stopover in N.Y. for confabs with J. H. Nicholson and Sam Arkoff of American International to discuss releasing plans in Britain and America. In Miami, he is meeting with Dave Emanuel of Governor Films, the company which distributes the "Carry On" films for Anglo in the U.S., and Joe E. Sugar, of Magna Films, which is handling "Watch Your Sterrf" for Anglo in America.

Next Sunday (30), Cohen will return to N.Y. for a three-day stay to finalize distribution deals on upcoming Anglo product. He will also have with him a print of "Payroll" which had its world preem at the Plaza last Thursday (20).

U.S. Importers of O'seas Product Get Insight at Frisco Film Fest

By WILLIAM STEIF

San Francisco.

As the San Francisco Film Festival plunges toward its fifth annual renewal (Nov. 1-14), it becomes more and more apparent that, if the festival has served no other purpose, it has at least gradually evolved into a successful pre-release screening place for foreign product.

Obviously, this was not the original intent of the fest's director, Irving M. Levin, in 1956-57, but the fact is that each year the fest has attracted more and more importers who have been able to check the reaction to foreign product before the type of audience the films will most likely draw to the boxoffice. For it must be remembered that the Frisco Fest is a box-office festival—audiences have had to pay $1.50 to $2.50 a head to enter.

The first Frisco Fest took place in 1957 and the IFFPA gave the festival Class B sanction the next year. A rundown of the past four years shows that a total of 75 features have been shown, 15 in 1957, 16 in 1958, 24 in 1959 and 20 last year.

In three of these four years the winner of the Golden Gate Award for "best picture" has gone on to show considerable boxoffice power in arthouses throughout the U.S.

Thus, in 1957 the winner was Satyajit Ray's "Pather Panchali," from India (the other two films in the "Apu" trilogy were entered in 1958 and 1959). In 1959 the winner was Roberto Rossellini's "Il Generale Della Rovere" and in 1960 it was the Russian "Ballad of a Soldier."

Many other entries, too, have been picked up for arthouse and (in rarer cases) general release in the U.S. and among them have been:

1957

Germany's "Captain from Koepenick," France's "If All the Guys In the World," Spain's "Age of Infidelity," Japan's "Throne of Blood," Britain's "Bolshoi Ballet" and "Three Men in a Boat" and the U.S.-made "Uncle Vanya."

1958

Canada's "A Dangerous Age," France's "The Living Water," Germany's "Taiga," Britain's "The Wind Cannot Read" and "A Cry from the Streets," Italy's "White Nights" and Japan's "Rickshaw Man."

1959

Franco-Brazilian "Black Orpheus," Mexico's "Santa Claus," Ireland's "Broth of a Boy," Denmark's "The Young Have No Time," France's "Nude in a White Car" and, of course, Britain's "Mouse That Roared."

1960

France's "The Love Game" and the U.S.' "Shadows."

This is only a partial list, and what is most interesting about it is what it leaves out. Here there are two points:

(1) A noticeable time lag occurs between the film's screening in Frisco and actual release of the picture in the U.S., with the result that pictures which were screened as much as four years ago have yet to get U.S. distribution;

(2) Until very recently there has been considerable hesitancy on the part of importers to take chances on Communist pictures, on pictures from very small countries or on pictures from any Asiatic country except Japan.

The time lag can be noted in several instances. Poland's "Kanal," a feature much praised in the 1957 Frisco Fest, has been purchased by an importer but is not yet in release. Same is true of a top-notch 1958 Polish entry, the comedy "Eve Wants to Sleep," which makes some of the French "New Wave" pictures look old-hat.

Also purchased, but not yet released, were the 1959 Dutch entry, "Village on the River" and the Shaw Brothers' 1960 Hong Kong entry, "The Enchanting Shadow."

Many of these films actually got their first U.S. exposure in Frisco and were first seen by importers at that time. A typical instance was Denmark's "A Stranger Knocks," which Trans-Lux's Dick Brandt saw in Frisco last fall but which he finally concluded negotiations on—and bought—only several weeks ago.

Aside from the time lag, the factor of which nation produced the film seems to loom very large, and here importers are beginning to realise that the Frisco Fest can be a bargain basement for potentially good grossers in the art circuit.

Just recently a Manhattan importer bought India's "Two Eyes, Twelve Hands," a 1958 Frisco entry vastly different from the Satyajit Ray type of film but very good. Still waiting for a buyer is the fest's 1958 "best picture" winner, Hungary's "House Under the Rocks." When the Hungarian film won in Frisco, memories of the brutal Communist suppression of the Hungarian uprising were still green, and this made the picture too hot to handle, in the opinion of many importers. Now it could be a sleeper, as could be Denmark's 1957 entry, "Qivitoq," a vivid story of Danish-Eskimo life in Greenland, and possibly Yugoslavia's "The Road a Year Long" (1958) and Japan's "Hidden Fortress" or Poland's "Lotna" (1959). The 1960 crop is just beginning to ripen but figures to have several possibilities, such as Sweden's "Mein Kampf," Spain's "Little Guide of Tormes" (which won many kudos in Frisco) and the Czech "Romeo, Juliet and Darkness." A sleeper among the 1960 features might be Germany's "A Man Goes Through the Wall," a comedy.

Deals for many of these pictures undoubtedly are in the works and a lot of these deals, it's safe to assume, stem from the pictures' initial screenings in Frisco. It's also safe to assume that there's a greater chance of picking up an offbeat boxoffice winner from an "odd" spot in Frisco than of seeing the more standard-type fare which dominates U.S. screens. Reason for this can be seen in a statistical rundown of where the 75 pictures shown in four years came from.

The U.S., oddly, led, with eight, though only one of these (1959's "Beloved Infidel") came from a major Hollywood studio.

Germany, Italy and Japan each had five entries in the four years. The next major group could be classified as "Iron Curtain" (all odd spots, so far as U.S. distributors are concerned). In the four fests, four films came from Poland, three each from Hungary and Yugoslavia, two each from Russia and Yugoslavia. Britain and France weighed in with four apiece, and so did India, Hong Kong and Spain, while Denmark came in with three, Mexico with two and the rest were one-shot affairs from such nations as Greece, Pakistan, Israel and South Korea.

'Gone With The Wind'—Still Big Blow

By BENJAMIN S. HARTIGAN

Hollywood.

To commemorate the Civil War Centennial on April 12 Metro reissued David O. Selznick's $3,957,000-three hour, 42 minute-10 Academy Award winning production of Margaret Mitchell's 9,900,000 circulation-70th printing-1,037 paged story of the Old South, "Gone With the Wind."

Film epic had a "third world premiere" in Atlanta March 10 marking picture's fifth release. It preemed there originally on Friday, Dec. 15, 1939 and a year later had a world-anniversary celebration. Film is now playing key cities in Deep South, opened Friday (24) at Hollywood Paramount, Hollywood, and now hits various centers across the country.

"GWTW" held first place as top domestic grosser, $33,500,000 until late last year when, per VARIETY's all-time grossers compilation it was edged out by Paramount's "Ten Commandments" with $34,200,000. D. W. Griffith's 1915 silent, "Birth of a Nation" would probably be the top money-maker, above $50,000,000 estimated, but its financial record was never audited.

In 1926 while recovering from a sprained ankle, former Atlanta Journal reporter Margaret Mitchell Marsh was coaxed by her husband to write a novel about the Civil War. She worked at it, on and off for the next nine years. The last chapter was written first and she juggled the others according to her moods. When the Macmillan company contracted for her manuscript the first chapter hadn't even been written nor did she have a name for her story. During her six months of rewriting, 20 overhauls on the first chapter alone, she found her title in Ernest Dowson's "Non Sum Qualis Eram" ("Cynara"): "I have forgot much, Cynara! gone with the wind, flung roses, roses riotously with the throng."

"Gone With the Wind" was published in June, 1938. Miss Mitchell hoped it would sell 5,000 copies; libraries she thought might be interested in it as an historical document. By Christmas a million copies had been sold and it dominated all fiction sales for two years, creating publishing history. It is the second best seller on record topped only by Erskine Caldwell's "God's Little Acre."

Not much screen interest could be stimulated for the book when advance copies were sent to the major studios, as a Civil War story was considered box office poison. Paramount's "So Red the Rose" with Margaret Sullavan and Randolph Scott released the year before was a cropper. David O. Selznick bought the screen rights less than a month after publication when the asking price dropped from $100,000 to $50,000—but with some misgiving. Darryl Zanuck earlier had offered $35,000 but was turned down by Miss Mitchell's literary agent.

"Wind" went into production on the evening of December 10, 1938, with the scene depicting the burning of Atlanta at Selznick-International Studios in Culver City, formerly Pathe, presently Desilu-Culver. Standing on the backlot site for the proposed construction of Tara and Atlanta were the 12-year-old Cecil B. DeMille silent "King of Kings" sets. Production-designer William Cameron Menzies suggested doctoring the old building to resemble the Atlanta area being depicted and in burning them the lot would be cleared at the same time the scene was shot.

George Cukor was assigned to direct the film, but due to differences of approach with Selznick was replaced after three weeks by Victor Fleming. Ten weeks later Fleming had to drop out due to illness and Sam Wood finished the picture. Sidney Howard was credited with the screenplay but Ben Hecht claims in his autobiography "A Child of the Century" to have rewritten the Howard treatment.

Picture was brought in after 22 weeks of shooting. During the filming 15 sound stages and the entire 40-acre backlot of Selznick-International were used. There were 449,512 feet of film used but only 160,000 feet were printed. "Wind" ran four hours and 20 minutes when it was first previewed but Selznick edited it down to current running time of three hours, 42 minutes. Max Steiner contributed a symphonic tone poem as score.

Rise of Cheap 'Significant' Film In U.S.

and of other forthcoming films all to be financed in this manner, outlines in detail the procedure suggested for obtaining this kind of support. Prior to approaching investors a decision should be made as to whether the syndication has to be cleared with the SEC before investors can be solicited. This can be avoided if the solicitation is solely to residents of one state or if it constitutes a "private" and not a "public" sale. The latter depends on the number of people to be approached. Naturally, before any planning on this level takes place, a detailed budget should exist, plus a production plan, script, cast suggestions, etc. etc. It must be remembered that the SEC reserves the right to approve sales literature.

Five important considerations are listed: the profit split, which should be 40-60 in favor of the investor; the point where spending the investor's money becomes legal (as soon as all the money is raised); the "cash flow" of the budget (if cost deferments can be obtained, a smaller working budget is possible); eventualities of going over budget (contingency reserve to be included in budget and insurances of various types, and/or the requirement of investors to put up an additional 10% or 20% if asked to do so); and finally the nature of the entity which will produce the film. The traditional Broadway form is the "limited partnership." Under this form the profits are treated solely as ordinary income received by the investors and are taxed as such. Losses are deductible. One way to eliminate the personal responsibility of the producer which this system incurs is to have the film produced by a corporation all of whose stock is owned by the producer and have the investors form a separate partnership which in turn lends the required money to the corporation. This preserves the tax advantage.

C. Unions.

The problem of union control—that is, control on the level of the physical apparatus—over what is essentially a creative art, is one that bears deeper analysis than is possible within this framework. Briefly, the unions became necessary for the protection of labor in a time when Hollywood constituted one of the few industries relatively untouched by the depression, so that the labor-versus-management issues became strained. Today, the craft unions under the general banner of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes, have virtual control over all facets of film making, from the minute the first nail is hammered into the first piece of wood for the set, to the time when the last patron pays his boxoffice ablution. To point out the utter extremity of the situation one could compare IATSE's hold over film to that of a hypothetical pencil-sharpeners' union over all writers, or a canvas-stretchers' union over all paint activities. To carry the simile even further, one would have to allow for the fact that art gallery owners would not handle paintings by artists who use non-union-stretched canvasses, etc, etc. There can remain no doubt today that the unions constitute the single most conservative and reactionary element (read: cog) in the wheels of the developing significant film movement.

It is very difficult to obtain honest and true views on this matter from film makers. Under close questioning the most advanced of them say that they have found ways of "dealing" with the unions. Some will go as far as making their films non-union, and then buying the union off at the moment when it becomes essential that their film be projected publicly. Those who have grown up within the industry will not under any circumstances allow that films could be made without the unions, and they justify the increased expense of a union-made film by referring to the "professional quality" which "cannot be obtained otherwise."

It is asked, why are the unions holding back a development whose eventual growth cannot but help their members? How does the apparatus of harassment operate? And what makes the difference in the final, artistic analysis between a union-made and a non-union made film?

Basically, it's the same old story of the attempt at status quo at all costs. "This is the system under which we have been doing fine, why change it? If we have come to the point of power where minimum crews can be demanded which will raise our members' salaries, why worry about the producer's budget? Why be concerned with whether it makes it possible for him to make his film? If he hasn't got the money, he shouldn't be making films in the first place! There are enough jobs on big productions, and there are always tv commercials. Why make concessions to somebody who isn't even anybody?" These are the standard arguments, and every one who has ever been in a studio or talked to a beginning film maker has heard them. And another thing: "Why allow young people to join the union just because they want to make films? Haven't we an established system for initiation? What if the boy doesn't have $3,000? Or isn't somebody's son?" Even Taft-Hartley hasn't been able to change materially the situation whereby young talent is consistently being kept out of the established locals. And it must be said right here that if it is necessary to use what is essentially a labor-restricting law in order to crack the union shell, it can only mean that the unions have become more monopolistic than capital. And this—the labor monopoly—is indeed the crux of the situation.

To get down to fact, it is extremely important for the significant film maker to decide at the very beginning whether he is going to buck unionism film or not. It is a practical question, the morality of which is inessential for the moment. But it is a decision each one has to make, and understand.

Incidentally, it remains a fact that some of the best cinematic talents today are not only union members, but staunch union supporters. It is also true that to work within a unionized framework enhances, generally, the speed and efficiency with which a movie can be made, and thus can contribute in a minor way to reducing production costs. And thirdly, the likelihood of finding creative talents within the unions which are not loathe to experiment and are willing to go out on a limb does exist. It is, in fact, not so much the union membership which is conservative, but the executive boards, anxious to maintain their own positions in many cases, and jealously guarding positions obtained through much hard growing up in a bad situation. Evil perpetuates itself diligently.

It is a matter of attitude. Just as the new significant film makers are striving to create a new awareness of film and a new attitude among the producers and exhibitors, so the unions should awaken to the reality of change with a new attitude of open mindedness. There is no reason unions should not exist, and certainly no one will demand their relinquishing control completely, but with a little creative thinking they would be doing more for themselves, in the long run than with a lot of flash-in-the-pan momentary achievemnts which could well throttle the emerging creativity.

D. Union facts.

Union minimums are generally higher than what the producer would ordinarily pay. All salaries have to be paid when earned and cannot be deferred, thus necessitating larger original budgets. Unions require minimum crews much larger than what the producer could get away with. And unions will not allow any outside talent to participate in a production, unless they are paid off, even if that talent is essential to the work, with the result that salaries often have to be paid twice.

I would like to repeat that the union situation is more complicated than the picture presented here, and that many other factors must be taken into consideration. But this is the picture as it presents itself to beginning film makers, a picture often so discouraging that only the most durable will sustain their drive.

Again and again a single fact emerges from close analyses: a new audience exists and films are being made for them. Film is on its way to becoming real and of age. But the roads must be cleared.

With Trend to Percentage Deals Overseas Producers U.S. Share Certain for Notable Enlargement

With an estimated $50,291,105 having been earned by forcign films in the U. S. market last year (see page one lead), a legitimate question is how much of this total finds its way back to the country of origin?

An educated guess is that it's a small percentage, but one that is growing every year, principally because the producers of the films most-likely-to-succeed in the U. S. market now are going for guarantee-plus-percentage deals, rather than outright sales.

The situation is clouded by a number of fiscal factors. The main one is the extensive participation by U. S. companies in British production. Though money earned in the U. S. on these "American" British releases obviously stays in the U. S., the British production scene has already benefitted from money spent in course of production.

Another confusing factor is the large amount of European coproduction, especially between the French and Italians. When one of these coproductions turns up on the U. S. market, it is usually identified as either French or Italian, depending on the predominant characteristic of the undertaking, even though the minor partner shares in its U. S. profits.

A case in point is Astor Pictures' import, "La Dolce Vita," which is identified as an "Italian" film and, as such, its profits in the U. S. would be accredited in a future VARIETY check to Italy. "Dolce," however, is a Italo-French coproduction in which the French partner, Gray Film, participated to the extent of 20% of the original financing, and will get 20% of worldwide profits.

In the case of "Dolce," this 20% obviously isn't going to be small change to the French industry. Astor Pictures has guaranteed its producers $600,000, of which $400,000 already has been paid. That means that France already has benefitted to the extent of $80,000 on the U. S. release of the controversial pic.

Greeks' Greek Themes

Washington.

Greek output of feature films rose to 59 during the production year beginning June 1959 and ending May 1960—a jump of ten from the previous year.

This was reported by U.S. Commerce Dept. The 59 films were made by 43 Greek outfits, and all dealt with Greek themes.

Jorgen Roos, Oscar Nominee, Plans To Expand Into Danish Features

Danish director Jorgen Roos, whose short, "A City Called Copenhagen," was nominated for an Oscar this year, plans shortly to enter the production ranks with his own features, he reported in New York, Friday (21). Roos is in New York, for about 10 days, enroute back to Denmark after attending the Academy Awards ceremonies in Hollywood last week.

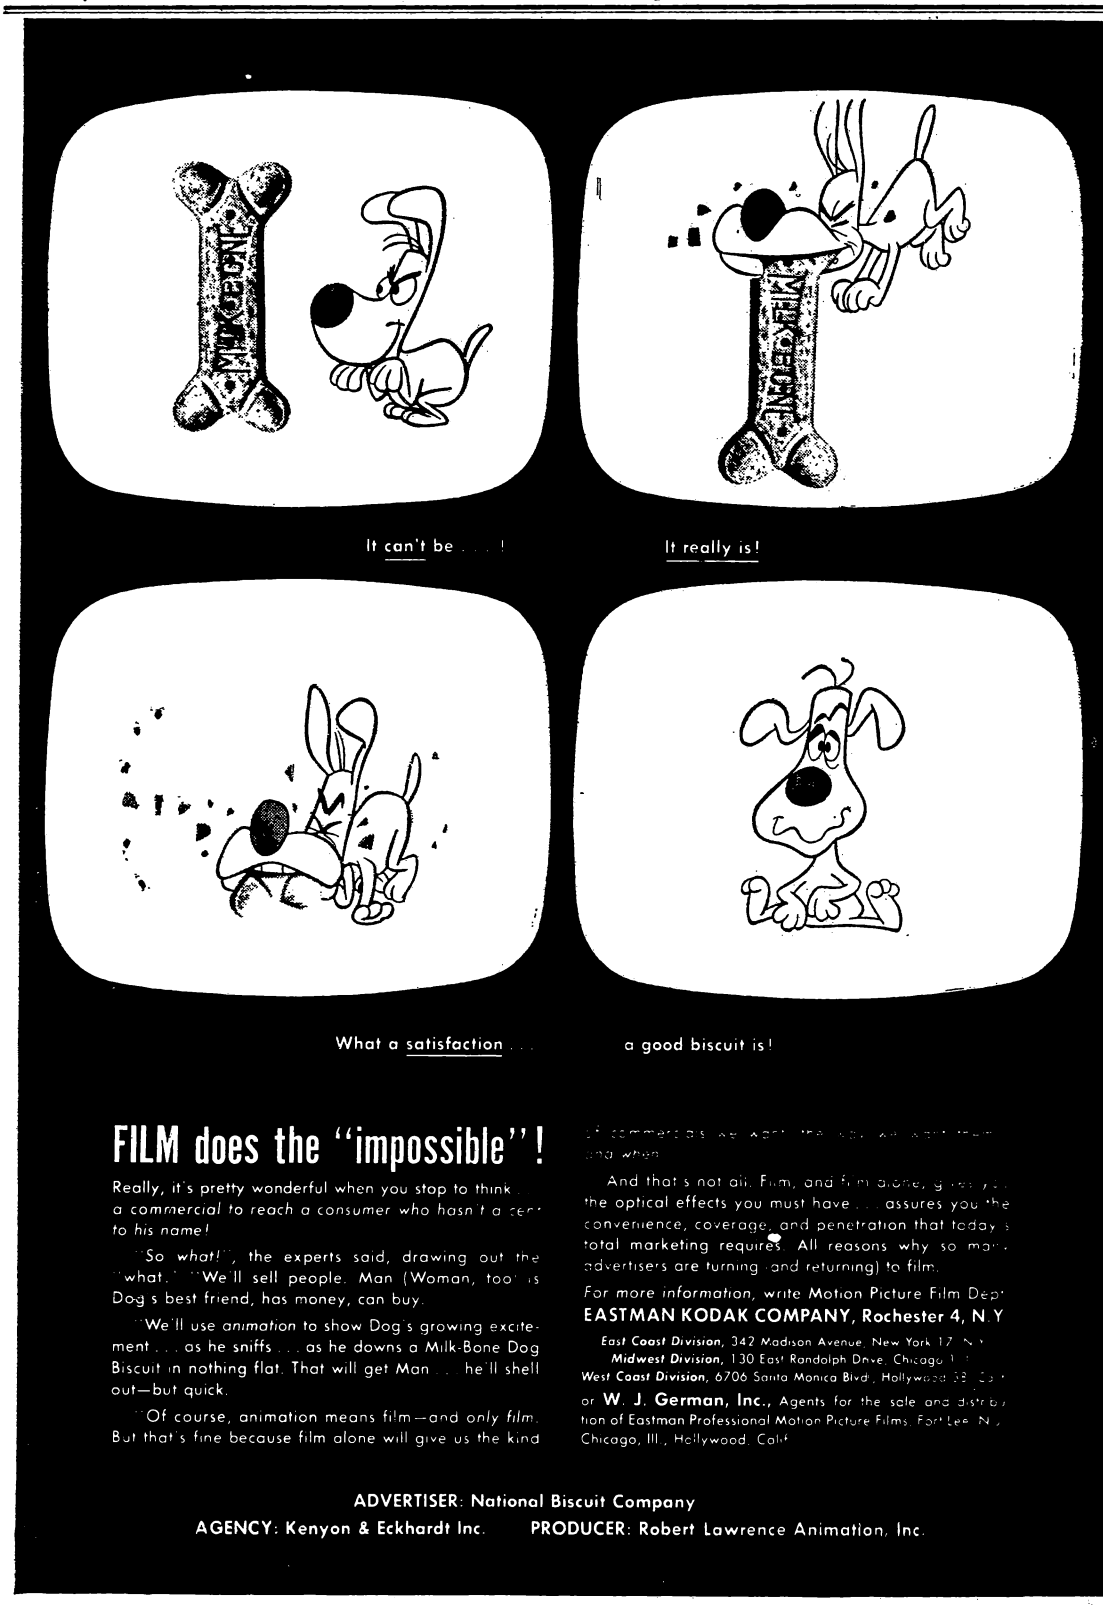
The 38-year-old director said that he's decided that the only way he'll ever make any real profits from his films is by producing them himself. As a director, he's had some percentage-of-profit deals with other producers, but always found that, for one reason or another, the point at which he would share in the profits never quite arrived. Thus the decision to produce his own projects.

Considering the fact that he already writes, photographs and edits his own works, this will make him a quintuple-threat man.

Roos' latest film is a 30-minute featurette about the Faroe Islands, "Foroyar," which is set to be shown at the upcoming Cannes film fest. Like "Copenhagen," being distributed this side by Tom Brandon's Brandon Films, "Foroyar" was sponsored by government funds—costing approximately $30,000, which isn't chicken feed for a short's budget in Hollywood or Denmark. Reason for the substantial budget, he explained, was that it was a government project, designed for promotion and goodwill around the world.

Working on his own, Roos estimated he would turn out a satisfactory full-length feature for between $50,000 and $60,000 in Denmark. Even so, such a picture does not have an easy time of it winning back its costs in the domestic market. Two million people out of the country's total 4,400,000 would have to see the film to put it into the black.

The comparatively low costs of production in Denmark has begun to attract a number of outsiders, Roos reported, and not all of them particularly commendable characters. Local production is perking along, turning out an average of about 15 feature a year. The director contemplates no trouble securing financial backing for his upcoming features, the situation being similar to that elsewhere in the world: if you have a good reputation and a good project, there's always money around ready and willing to invest.



FILM does the "impossible"!

Really, it's pretty wonderful when you stop to think . . . a commercial to reach a consumer who hasn't a cent to his name!

"So what!", the experts said, drawing out the "what." "We'll sell people. Man (Woman, too) is Dog's best friend, has money, can buy.

"We'll use animation to show Dog's growing excitement . . . as he sniffs . . . as he downs a Milk-Bone Dog Biscuit in nothing flat. That will get Man . . . he'll shell out—but quick.

"Of course, animation means film—and only film. But that's fine because film alone will give us the kind [illegible] commercials we want [illegible] and when.

And that's not all. Film, and film alone, gives you the optical effects you must have . . . assures you the convenience, coverage, and penetration that today's total marketing requires. All reasons why so many advertisers are turning (and returning) to film.

YUGOSLAVS PROTECT OWN PIX PLAYOFF

By STOJAN BRALOVIC

Belgrade.

State Secretariat for Education and Culture of Yugoslavia issued recently an order on compulsory showing of fixed number of domestically produced feature and short films. According to this order, all film theatres, which had on their programs up to 20 domestic films last year are in obligation to show at least two domestic features on their program this year. The compulsory showing of domestic films, under the order, grows progressively with domestic films production. The order "for the protection of domestic film industry," prescribed the penalty, amounting to 10% of gross income, for those movie enterprises which failed to show publically domestic films fixed under the order.

The first Yugoslav feature in colour, CinemaScope technique, "Miss Stone," which had tremendous success in Yugoslavia, has been sold so far to 25 foreign countries. Last year, as stated by the spokesman of the Vardar-Film of Skoplje, Macedonia, producer of this feature, "Miss Stone" was shown in Western Germany, Greece, Chile, Liban, Australia, Norway, Brazil, Burma and Iran.

"The Little Man," another feature produced by Vardar-Film, has been shown in Argentina and Burma, together with five shorts produced by the same company.

The Yugoslav Council for film production decided to request the government to pass a new film law—which will cover distribution too. The draft of the new law is already prepared, covering the rights and obligations of the producers, while other things will be regulated later through discussions of the parties concerned.

The State Secretary for Education and Culture, Krsto Crvenkovski, representing the government in the council plenum, suggested that the future film production should lay an emphasis on the principles of Yugoslav present development.

Calcutta Made 36 Pix in '60

Calcutta.

During 1960, Calcutta Studios produced a total of 36 pictures in the Bengali language of which seven were comedies, six crime-with-romance, four devotional, one musical and one fantasy. Seventeen were social dramas. Five of the total produced proved successful.

Ksdudita Pashan, based on a Tagore story, ran 57 weeks in Calcutta at one house.

Greece's Film Boom Falters But Coproductions There Loved

By RENA VELISSARIOU

Athens.

For the first time in years business has declined for the Greek motion picture theatres. During the first half of 1960-1961 winter season the cinemas of Athens, Pireaus and suburbs area have sold 4,972,776 tickets while during the same period last year the corresponding figure was 5,170,366. Which is to say, there is a decrease of 16.76% totally. This decrease however is higher in the first run cinemas reaching 22.22%.

Note that while many theatres have started operating this season attendance has dropped. Winter cinemas in the Athens-Pireaus and suburbs area reached 142 instead of the 117 of last year. Theatre building boom has been contagious among the Greeks. Apart from the 24 new cinemas which have been constructed in the Athens-Pireaus area there is an equal number of new theatres in the provinces.

Reports from Salonica, key city of Northern Greece, are not so pessimistic. Business there is up and there is an increase of 3.10%.

Films Released

During this period 248 new pictures have been released in this territory. Yank films are still leading the pack with 109 films. Local production follows with 37 and then the French with 29, German, 19, British 16, Italian 13 and Russian 12. The balance is from different other countries.

Company to suffer from new competition is the Th. Damaskinos & V. Michaelides concern which in the past covered 60% of the whole business. They are off 37.81%, representing Warner Bros., Universal, Columbia and Rank. Skouras Films, which here ranks second is doing the 12.89% of the business, representing 20th Century-Fox and United Artists. Paramount agent here. Savvas Films, rates 5.80%. The balance is covered by distributors of local films and the new distribution offices.

New distributors trying to establish themselves in the market are the Andreas Hallotis Co., Spentzos Films, Elli-Movie Enterprises and Akropolis Film. These companies are supplied mostly by the European market.

No TV

Greece is one of the few European countries not invaded by television, and it is not going to be for another three to five years according to the last statement of the Government on the subject. So, the motion picture trade here will not have to suffer from this danger for some years to come.

Athens has now 25 first run theatres. Prime earner is the Orpheus which sold 358,535 tickets in 128 days of operation this season according to the official report of the Statistic Bureau of the Union of Greek Film Importers and Distributors. Second is the Pallace with 329,172. Third is the Titania with 316,816. The Rex dropped to the fourth place instead of the third held last year.

Pireaus has six first run theatres. Top grosser is the Olympion owned by the new distribution office, the Andreas Hallotis Co.

Salonica, the third key city of Greece, has 12 firstrun theatres the best being Titania and Olympion controlled by Damaskinos & Michaelides.

Local Production

Greek film production reached its peak with a record of 104 films. This advancement in quantity, however, was not followed by an equal improvement in quality except for a few pictures which are really good. The majority of Greek films are still for local consumption only or for indulgent communities abroad.

Film which represented Greek production abroad was "Never On Sunday" directed by Jules Dassin, with Greek actress Melina Mercouri in the leading part. It was hardly a Greek picture since made by a foreigner with American guarantee.

Finos Films releases with Aliki Vouyouklaki as leading lady are scoring still. Last year with the "Thrashing Is a Blessing" and this year with "Aliki In The Navy" she swept the market. Her popularity is like Brigitte Bardot's in France.

Most Greek films, however, are not grossing as much money as they used to. Audiences are more discriminating.

Prospects for 1961 as regards local production are not too optimistic. Not a new picture has started rolling as yet though in the past year at this same period more than 10 pictures were before the cameras.

Greece Int'l Production Centre?

Various foreign pictures have been shot in this country and their producers expressed satisfaction with Greek aid. Favorable factors are the climate, picturesque scenery, cheap labor, low cost of living, favors granted by the Greek Government.

The climate is indeed exceptional. 20th-Fox shot two pictures here last Autumn; the "It Happened in Athen" and "Lion of Sparta" without losing a day of shooting. "Lion of Sparta" especially which started rolling Nov. 1, ended on January 20 right on schedule. This last film had Government support which provided more than 2,000 soldiers. Director-producer Rudolph Mate and writer-producer George St. George will shoot with the conditions prevailing in this country.

American Pictures shot on location here so far are Metro's "The Angry Hills," Columbia's "Surprise Package" and "Guns of Navarone," Fox's "It Happened in Athens" and "Lion of Sparta," Roger Corman's "Atlas," and "Nine Miles To Noon" produced by Lecoler.

This coming spring and summer several foreign pictures are scheduled to be shot here. Carl Foreman is planning to shoot a picture in Rhodes Island again called "Holiday" with Lana Turner and Anthony Quinn. Rudolph Mate and Georges St. Georges will shoot "Fort Rupel" based on a real war incident during the last war and there are many hopes that Fox's "The King Must Die" will be shot in Athens and Crete Island where the story really is developed rather than in Spain.

Spyros Skouras of N. Y., has spoken of building big new studios here, and switching part of his production. As to that, who knows? A great deal presumably depends on concessions Greek Government is willing to grant.

Greek Imports to U.S.

Greek Motion Pictures Inc., principal distributor of Greek product to Greek language houses in States, is scouting for its own mid-Manhattan theatre, Mrs. Chelly Wilson, prexy, reports.

Company's product now goes out principally through the Cameo Theatre, on Eighth Ave., and through the Olympia in Astoria. The Avon in Chicago also is a key outlet for the Greek pix.

Distrib brings in about 30 new Greek pix a year, of which 10 are subtitled in English.

Bergman 20-Year Prize From Spain

Valladolid, Spain.

Ingmar Bergman again walked off with main honors at the April 9-16 Valladolid International Film Week of Religious and Human Values. Last year he was awarded The Golden Standard for "The Seventh Seal" and this year his "The Virgin Spring" repeated in the category of religious values. In the hotly contested sector for The Golden Sheaf of Wheat (human values), Germany's "Death Is the Price of Love" was declared the winner.

Mexico took twin honors when "Macario" was awarded the special City of Valladolid plaque and the brand new Cultura Hispanica prize for the best Spanish language film.

Also presented for the first time this year was the International Critics Award (FIPRESCI), bestowed upon the Italo tragi-comedy, "Tutti a Casa."

A hasty consolation award, The St. George Cup, went to the most heavily applauded entry of the film gathering, the French entry, "Voyage in a Balloon."

Yank screen fare unrewarded, except for honorable mention given the Allied Artists release, "Crime and Punishment, U.S.A." Most commentators thought Billy Wilder's "The Apartment" and the same director's "Spirit of St. Louis" had little rapport with the scope of the Valladolid film meet.

CYPRUS AS IMPORTER

Island Heavily Exhibiting U.S. and Western Product

Mediterranean Island of Cyprus, recent trouble spot of cross-purposes between Britain, Greece and Turkey, is a lively market for motion pictures. In 1959 the island imported 721 items, of which 382 came from America.

This was a substantial increase, from 263 Yank works, the year previously.

Greece, which has its own not inconsiderable production industry, placed 81 films in Cyprus theatres during 1959.

Other suppliers: France, 67; Britain, 60; Turkey, 59; Italy, 27; West German, 23.

There are 56 theatres showing films on the island, about 33,000 seats.

Hello film world! WE HAVE PROGRAMMED

Russian-Eye View of San Francisco Festival

Translation of article by Alexander Karaganov from Moscow Literary Gazette Exemplifies Delight at Reception of 'Ballad of a Soldier' but Dismay that Soviet Army Footage Was Cut from 'Mein Kampf'—USSR's Point of View.

Moscow.

(Verbatim)

At the opening of the festival the festival director, Irving Levin, Mayor George Christopher, Jean Renoir and one of the favorite actresses of our youth, Mary Pickford, delivered speeches. Miss Pickford spoke about the significance of movies for the mutual understanding of peoples and recalled her trip to Russia where she made many friends, though she did not speak the language.

On the first evening of the festival the French film "Love Game" (producer, Philippe de Broca) was shown. It is a film dealing with the love of two friends for one woman. One of them, the husband of the heroine, is a good for nothing who enjoys life and who does not want to bother himself with the superfluous troubles of life. The other is more positive, and Susanne, the heroine, finally decides to become his wife. But at the last moment she changes her mind and runs back to her "bad lot" of a husband. In this film there are scenes which are played simply and with authenticity. But the whole story of the young men develops apart from any real-life situation.

This not only impoverishes the background of the story, but weakens its characters as well. The result of the narrowness of subject and action is that the poetry of love turns into a glorification of feelings which have been created just previously and which are not enriched with the inner emotional experience of contemporary men. The weaknesses of the "Love Game" are quite characteristic of many western films which we saw in San Francisco.

Praise For Danes

The Danish film "A Stranger Knocks" (scenario, Finna Metlinga; producer, Johann Jacobsen) was, in its own way, a sensational show. The basic theme of the film is a conflict, which has something in common with the famous story of Lavreney and Tchuchrai's film "Forty-first."

He and she. He—escaped from a fascist prison, having formerly been a member of the Gestapo. She—the widow of a killed anti-fascist. In the course of the film we learn, that the stranger who later becomes the lover of the heroine was the executioner who tormented and then killed her husband. When the heroine finds out about her lover's past, when she sees that he—even when leaving her house—remains a brute, proclaiming principles which are despised and hated by human beings, she shoots . . .

The Danish film reminds one, involuntarily, of a polemic, interwoven with direct quotations. For even the music in "A Stranger Knocks" sometimes sounds like a variation of the musical theme of the musical theme of "Forty-first." Though these films are very similar in their external subject, however, they are at opposite poles in many other regards.

In the film "Forty-first" there exists the poetry of true love; there you can find the hymn of loyalty to a great cause; this loyalty does not give way in the face of strong love or the fear of death. In the Danish film love is replaced by physical passion. On the screen erotic scenes are displayed which are rare in their frankness. Even Americans, who are used to the display of sex on the screen, were embarrassed. It is characteristic that the decisive disclosure takes place just in one of these scenes, in a moment when the tension of passions override all other emotion. Passion is shown in the film as a power which equalizes the executioner and his victim; both are her slaves. The film, which should have been wrathful, becomes conciliatory in spite of the final shot.

The philosophy of the hero of the film, that people are sinners, manifests itself with inevitable force; the heroine's timid, at best, protest against this philosophy, is undermined by the whole course of action. Indeed, the heroine lives out her disloyalty to the memory of her husband. In a dispute with her lover she talks about the impossibility of forgetting and forgiving the crime. But her experience and dissent with the Gestapo man, who fights for forgiveness and forgetting of everything, still remains somewhere at the periphery of the dramaturgy of the film; the rise of sexual motives which is now in fashion in western films, discredits and kills the theme of anti-fascism.

Examiner Quoted

The greatest event of the festival was the showing of "Ballad of a Soldier." On the day of its first performance the hall was overflowing. The spectators were even sitting on the steps of the theatre. After the last sequences, the applause was long and bouyant. And in the next afternoon at the second showing, all the spectators rose and greeted the Soviet film and its creators with a five minute ovation.

The press was unanimous in its judgment of the film. In its opinion, the "Ballad raised the whole atmosphere of the festival, determined its spirit. Charles Einstein, the entertainment editor of the San Francisco Examiner, wrote an article under the heading, "The year in which the San Francisco Festival came of age." He wrote, "We did not ever expect such a success with the festival as we had this year. The festival was opened in 1957; and the first three years served to lay its foundations. More inspiring than that was the break of this year. And we must thank the Russians for it. The presence of their film "Ballad of a Soldier" and the appearance of its producer and of two young film stars in San Francisco — all that taken together has transformed the competition with its excellent program into an event of world-wide significance."

Along with the "Ballad" the trade Czechoslovakian film "Romeo, Juliette, and Darkness" (authors of scenario, Jiri Weiss and Jan Otchenashek; producer Weiss) greatly stimulated the interest of the participants. A deep impression was produced by the Mexican film "Macario" (producer, Roberto Gavaldon). The spectators, and also the jury, highly appreciated in addition the films "A Night in Rome" (Italy), "The Diary of Sucko" (Japan), "The Little Guide of Tormez" (Spain).

As To 'Mein Kampf'

The atmosphere at the Metro Theatre was full of tension on the night, when the Swedish documentary film "Mein Kampf" was presented. For many Americans have never in reality known the horrors of war, have never met face to face the fascist brute; here they saw film documents, which showed the inception, the growth, the monstrous crimes, and the disintegration of Hitlerism.

But the film aroused great amazement in those people who had seen it before in Cannes. For this showing a number of sequences had been cut— sequences which had been dedicated to the operation of the Soviet Army. This attempt to belittle the decisive contribution of our army in the destruction of Hitlerism was a distinctive tribute to the "cold war"; it was most unworthy of a film which claimed objectivity in its portrayal of the great struggle of all nations against fascism.

Along with the works of great talents which enrich the current world cinema, there were shown at this festival a number of films which permitted a comparison of the modern film with the past; these comparisons place the cinematography of modern times in an unfavorable light. I do not exaggerate and speak about western cinematography in general; for this is a very complicated and contradictory phenomenon. While I do not seek universal generalizations, I particularly want to talk about a tendency, the symptoms of which were rather distinctly apparent in a number of films at the festival. The fact is that it seem as if many westerns cinematographers are at a crossroads — the themes, the conflicts and the techniques of the imitative arts of the past years are already mastered, and nothing new is found so far. They either, like imitators, repeat the past, or just initiate innovatory search without making any essential discoveries.

I am not speaking now about the mediocre cinematographers who are incapable of greater achievements. Let us consider the American film "Shadows" which is a production of very talented actors. This film is an improvisation with no particular point. It shows episodes of the life of a Negro girl, her brothers and companions who lead the dissipate life of American "Beatniks." The producer of this film, John Cassavetes, and the actors worked without a previously planned scenario. They composed dialogs while they were working and invented episodes and whole scenes.

U. S. 'Shadows'

Experiments in the field of improvisation are connected with the striving towards authenticity for cinematography authenticity which is now widely seen in the cinemas of all the world. Those people who saw "La Dolce Vita" or "The Savage Eye" know that the style of those films allows the insertion of whole scenes which are taken directly from the street — without actors, without any organization of the photographed episode; bits of life are conveyed to the screen in their roughness and their natural picturesqueness.

However, the ambition of the creators of the film "Shadows" to achieve naturalness and authenticity does not become a means of reaching cognition or a means of the artistic mastering of the world. Thus it seems to be nothing but a device, a device designed for a sober, perhaps for an exceedingly sober spectator, who cannot be touched by anything, who has seen everything, who knows everything, who ironically sneers about everything in life. First the cinematographers were surprised by its exotic experimental devices, by its arrangements which accentuated life, with its unexpected foreshortening, with its bright allegories and symbols. Now they want to surprise their viewers with the truth of that device. They decidedly break the conventionalities which estrange the screen from those who sit in the hall.

Esthetic Angles

It is well-known that the cinematographer not only refuses to cut off pictures of real life, but even stresses them, shows and clarifies them with an extra light in order to accentuate life, to sharpen its events and facts by means of goal-directed photography and by cutting. This external limitation and the accentuated selectivity of the cinematographic reproduction of reality in the hands of an authentic realist increases the cognitive possibilities of the cinema. But the painstaking approach to an absolute naturalness by the means which are used in the "Shadows" and other similar films, quite often estranges the artist from the great truth and weakens the cognitive power of his art.

The aspiration for authenticity, naturalness, simplicity of every sequence, of every word, is present in the "Ballad of a Soldier" and in the works of art of many Soviet cinematographers. But other premises and goals rest on the basis of these films. The creators of the "Ballad" do not want to surprise someone with the truth, naturalness for them is not a device. They have in front of them not a sceptic with ironic sneer, but a human being, vital, alive, who is of no less worth than the artists themselves, and who is interested in truth.

In their attitude towards the spectator there does not exist even the vaguest hint of the attitude which could be expressed in the following words: "Now we shall show you! . ." They work for the spectator as for a friend and almost tell him: "Let us together observe life and its details closely, not only in order to perceive its multicoloredness but also its pithiness. For it is very often in the small and insignificant that the great is hidden.

Meanwhile in this hard "Odyssey" of a soldier there appears the great warmth of a great people, the inflexible loyalty to one's obligation, a sterness and tenderness, moral demands, which go to the point of ruthlessness, cordial goodness, selfless sympathy with the grief of others.

The Jury unanimously considered the "Ballad of a Soldier" the best film of the festival. Grigori Tshuchal received the "Golden Gate" award for the best production. Still yet another work of Soviet filmmakers was distinquished by an award; the short film "Revenge," which was produced by Irene Poplavsky from a short story of Chekhov. M. Jashiny played the main role.

The decision of the Jury aroused a ready response in the press of San Francisco, New York and other American cities. In the newspapers there appeared articles about the "triumph of the Russians," interviews with the members of the delegation . . .

It should be said, however, that also beforehand the press, radio and tv dedicated much room in their publications and paid great attention to the arrival of the Soviet delegation in San Francisco; especially to the arrival of Tshuchrai, Ivashov, and Prochorenko in Hollywood, and to the numerous meetings with our journalists.

The Cold War

The work of the Jury, of its organizers and leaders, the critical appraisal of the "Ballad of a Soldier," our encounters with men of letters and scientists, the lecture about Soviet film art which I had the occasion to give at Standford University, and the conversation after it with the students, the talking of Tshuchrai and of our young actors with American filmmakers —all these events showed that the idea of the "cold war" does not find any support in the circles of creative American intellectuals. Among the Americans with whom we talked were many of those whose consciousness is burdened by prejudices toward the Soviet Union. However, these prejudices in general did not hinder the endless stream of varied questions; our partners in the talks we gave were anxious to learn the truth about the Soviet country and its art; and the prejudices appeared to be feeble and impotent when opposed by facts. In almost all of our conversations the exciting subject of peace was unavoidably touched on, the subject of broadening the connections between our people; and these conversations sprang up everywhere; at press conferences, and at receptions, simply on the street, in movie theatres while awaiting the show.

Naturally, among our partners we met also those who were more interested in the "problems" of screening "Doctor Zhivago" than in the truth about the Soviet Union. When I think of the hospitality and cordiality of all those who organized the festival, I would commit a sin if I were to fail to mention some episodes which testify to the still existing "cold war."

'Emigrant Rabble'

When our delegation gave a reception for the participants of the festival and for the press, four gentlemen of the emigrant rabble organized a picket at the entrance. They tried to palm off cheap leaflets on us and began to sing: "Brothers, you are slaves, you are oppressed beggars" and so on in that tone. These gentlemen did not calm down even when they were met with rebuff by the members of the Soviet delegation; they began to distribute their leaflets among our guests. This was on the street. At the next the following scene occurred: a new guest came into the club with a leaflet in his hands, read its heading aloud—threw it away and went on to greet the organizers at the reception. Thus, our guests walked up the stairs which were covered with discarded leaflets . . .

There occurred yet two or three other episodes which is usual, reminded one of the activity of those forces in the U.S.A., which fan the "cold war." But we felt also something else; we became convinced that the ideas of peace which were proclaimed by N. S. Khrushchev at the General Assembly also are forcing their way into America. This process will continue. It will be supported by cultural exchanges — by every new meeting of cultural workers, by every honest competition of art. And the festival in San Francisco was precisely such a competition.

Up 'The Cosmonauts'—But Not Russian

Indie Producer Alex Gordon Also Rides Topicality Of John Birch Society

Hollywood.

Indie producer Alex Gordon has registered titles "The Cosmonauts" and "Alias John Birch" with MPAA and is formulating a fall lensing date on a "back to back" basis for the pair.

"'Cosmonauts' will make no direct reference to the Russian spaceman who made space history, but will deal with fictionalized efforts of the two major powers in the space race," Gordon said. Ruth Alexander is presently scripting the feature from her own idea.

Gordon said "Birch" will be a fact-fiction treatment of the founder of the present John Birch Society, and will delve into "communistic influence" on American college campuses.

An estimated $600.000 budget has been alloted for each pic, he said, and either one or both may figure in his multiple pic deal with Columbia Studios, "depending upon pending negotiations."

Producer has set himself for "Birch" scripting chores, based on personal research.

Prior to production of two pix, producer will complete "Mask of the Red Death" and "War Against Crime" under his indie banner for pending Col release.

Finland Reduces Cinema Taxes

Helsinki.

The entertainment taxes for cinemas in Finland have been reduced, thus helping the film industry to better compete against hardening tele competition.

The reduction will amount to 5% in two classes for foreign pictures. For art pictures with a message the tax will go down to 15% from 20%, and lightweight pictures to 30% from 35%. The so-called "punishment class" of 50% tax for not recommendable i.e. too violent or oversexy) pictures remains as it has been.

It was pointed out that domestic pictures are tax free if they do not fall into a "punishment class" which has happened only once. Also, foreign pictures made especially for children are tax free. It further is noted that the classification decisions, which are made by the state-controlled censorship board, are subject to change.

Big Click on TV, Aussie Exhibs Book Jolson Pix

Sydney.

Recently, "The Jolson Story" (Col), went out again over a major tv commercial loop and drew raves.

Film exhibs in the nabes quickly awakened to the popularity of this Columbia oldtimer and decided to cash in on the public's yen. They booked "Story" and "Jolson Sings Again" for dating as a dual bill. And biz has been boffo with the pair.

How Foreign Product Scored In U.S.

toral spectacles raked in an amazing $4,640,000 at American box-offices.

Good Generally

The overall situation of foreign films in the U.S. continues onwards and upwards. Excluding for the the moment British features which, with so much U.S. production in London, are becoming increasingly hard to define, a total of 740 foreign pix, in both subtitled and dubbed versions, earned an estimated gross U.S.-Canadian theatrical rental of $27,316,119 in 1960, up substantialy from the $21,500,000 reported on 708 lingual films in 1959.

Add to the "foreign" figure the $22,974,986 earned by 135 British pix last year and the total for all non-American films in the U.S. market comes to $50,291,105 on 875 pix in 1960. This compares with $39,626,486 earned by 824 films in 1959.

VARIETY's check for 1960 covers the operations of 35 independent distributors in the U.S. (against 32 in 1959, as well as 10 (vs. seven in 1959) so-called "major" companies—American International Pictures, Allied Artists, Columbia, Metro, Paramount, 20th-Fox, Universal, United Artists, Warner and Buena Vista.

The extent to which these "majors" now dominate the distribution of non-American product in the U.S. can be seen in the accompanying chart showing 67 major-handled pix accounting for $32,207,555 of the $50,291,105 earned last year. The bulk of the remaining money was earned by about five or six indies, plus those distribs who service Spanish and Japanese language houses.

Steve The Mighty

While British comedies were aggressively assaulting the U.S. box-office and Steve Reeves was dominating the Italo imports for the second straight year, France's most famous structure since the Eiffel Tower, Brigitte Bardot, continued to go her own neat money-making way, usually without benefit of clergy or the Production Code approval enjoyed by her chief competitors from abroad. Eight Bardot imports, including two newies, brought in $1,627,000 around the U.S. and Canada in 1960. It's significant to note that a little over one-third of this amount was earned by one pic, "Babette Goes to War," which was distributed by Columbia and which did have a Code seal.

Of the almost $11,000,000 increase in overall non-American pic earnings last year, more than $4,000,000 was accounted for by the rise in British takings, from $18,644,190 in 1959 to $22,974,986 in 1960. For the purposes of this VARIETY estimating, any film which qualifies for Britain's Eady plan is considered "British." Thus the 1960 total would include as "British" the earnings of two Walt Disney pix, "Third Man on The Mountain" and "Kidnapped," even though to the naked eye they would seem as American as apple pie, or, "Pollyanna."

British Grossers

Of last year's total British receipts in the U.S., $17,487,486 were earned by such major company releases as "Sink The Bismarck," "Jack The Ripper," "Sons and Lovers," "Our Man in Havana," "Three Worlds of Gulliver" and "Circus of Horrors." Columbia, with nine British pix in release, accounted for over one-fourth of the total British take. Col, too, had a corner on the British comedies with "The Mouse That Roared," "Our Man in Havana," "I'm All Right Jack" and "Please Turn Over."

Giving "Mouse" and "Havana" stiff competition as the most successful British comedy of the year was the indie-handled "Carry On Nurse," which, at yearend, had already racked up $1,500,000 for Governor Films and was still going strong the first months of this year. Including approximately $1,000,000 in further grosses on 1959's "Room at The Top," Walter Reade's Continental Distributing did almost $3,000,000 worth of business on British films, including "The Entertainer," "Expresso Bongo" and "The Battle of The Sexes."

Accounting for a major portion of the increase in earnings on non-British imports last year were the Italian specs, a couple of Russian films acquired by U.S. companies outside the cultural exchange agreement, and one film each from Germany and Japan. All of this product was dubbed into English and none of it indicated that the U.S. was suddenly going artie in its tastes.

The take on Italo films in the U.S. rose from $9,720,060 in 1959 to $12,265,913 last year, and there wasn't an art house earner in the bunch. Including the four previously mentioned Steve Reeves epics ("Hercules Unchained," "The Giant of Marathon," "The Last Days of Pompeii" and "Goliath and The Barbarians"), 15 Italo specs, many of which had U.S. pre-production financing, brought in $8,298,113 at the U.S. b.o. Clearly when and if the muscle goes out of these specs, the Italians may be in a hard way. Luckily, in the current year, they have some extremely potent "class" product lined up for the American market, including "La Dolce Vita," "Rocco and His Brothers" and "L'Avventura." Their story will be told when 1961 is summed up.

French Tops In Art

Almost single-handedly, the French film industry provided a continuity of true art house product for the U.S. market last year. It was in 1960, in fact, that the effects of the "nouvelle vague" were first felt on domestic shores. Aside from the Bardot entries, which are beyond identifiable time and space, the most successful single French pic in the U.S. last year was Marcel Camus' "Black Orpheus," winner of the 1960 Oscar as best foreign language film (ironically, the language of this French film was Portuguese). Ilya Lopert distributed it. Film has taken in more than $600,000 by the end of the year, both dubbed and subtitled.

Other top new wave money-makers were the controversial but highly praised "The Lovers" and "Hiroshima Mon Amour," as well as Francois Truffaut's "The 400 Blows," all handled by Zenith International. These pix, with "Orpheus," accounted for approximately $2,000,000 of the total $5,190,000 earned by French product here last year, a slight gain over the previous year. Another substantial moneymaker was Trans-Lux' exploitation feature, "Nude in A White Car."

The most spectacular earnings increase of the year was that registered by Russian product. However, the U.S. State Department can rest easy: very little, if any, of the increase from $175,000 in 1959 to $1,833,481 in 1960 is finding its way back to the Kremlin. To be sure, the Russians got $67,000 for each of the seven cultural exchange pix they sold the majors but, altogether, the six exchange pix which went out in 1960 (the seventh went out this year) had trouble grossing $350,000. The bulk of this was earned by just two of the films, the ballet "Swan Lake" and kiddie feature, "Circus Stars."

The hike in Russian pic take was scored by the independently acquired cartoon feature, "The Snow Queen," which Universal released after virtually remaking it with new soundtrack, music and Art Linkletter prolog, and Sig Shore's fantasy-spectacle, "The Sword and The Dragon." Together these films earned almost $1,300,000. Both pix were bought outright, with Shore reportedly having paid Artkino $25,000 for the spec.

Also contributing to the Russian total was the approximately $30,000 earned by Janus Films' release of "Ivan The Terrible, Part II," and the estimated $135,000 brought in by Artkino's Russ imports.

German Product

German product also scored a sharp increase in 1960, rising to an estimated $1,233,375 from $662,160, with most of this being the result of "Journey to The Lost City" which earned close to $500,000 domestic. The exploitation pic boasted of approximately two thrills a second, and for good reason: AIP prexy Jim Nicholson edited Fritz Lang's two original features into just one, 90 minutes long. That didn't leave much time for dull explanations of various plot details.

A major disappointment was the final tally on the U.S. release of "Rosemary," that semi-stylish satire on postwar German society which did great in its initial stanzas, particularly in New York, but was spotty elsewhere. It had originally been hoped that this would be the picture to "open up" U.S. arties to acceptance of German product comparable to that given French and Italian films. Though it earned something in the neighborhood of $175,000, a real German artie smash has yet to arrive this side.

Most of the rest of the German monies were earned by DeRochemont's dubbed "Embezzled Heaven," also a disappointment since it was expected to appeal strongly to Catholics and evidently didn't, plus the German language features released by Casino films.

The bulk of the total Japanese earnings of $2,014,000 also was earned by 208 features imported especially for the Japanese language houses on the West Coast and in Hawaii. These pix did an estimated $1,300,000, up slightly from last year. It was one Toho-made sci-fi feature, however, Col's "The Battle in Outer Space," which pushed Japan's earnings up into the two million column. Adding coin, as well as prestige, to the Japanese record last year were Brandon Films' seven "festival" imports, particularly "Ikaru."

Sweden's earnings rose too, from $477,168 in 1959 to $635,000 last year, and again almost entirely as the result of Ingmar Bergman. The bulk of the 1960 money was still being earned by his "Wild Strawberries" and "The Magician," since "The Virgin Spring," the 1961 Oscar winner, was playing only a few dates before the end of the year. "Spring," which was proving to be the biggest Bergman grosser here even before winning the Oscar, should turn out to be one of the important chapters in next year's VARIETY survey.

Belgium Special

Belgium's gift to U.S. exhibition last year was one pic, the documentary, "Masters of the Congo Jungle," released this side by 20th to the tune of $475,000. Accounting for most of the Indian total were the three pix of Satyajit Ray's trilogy, "Pather Panchali," "Aparajito" and "The World of Apu." And of the three Danish pictures on the market, one called, of all things, "Call Girls," was the main breadwinner.

Still contributing importantly to the overall picture of foreign receipts in the U.S. are the special language houses. Azteca, which took over the distribution of Clasa-Mohme product last August, and Columbia pretty much have the three-million dollar-plus Spanish-speaking market in hand. Greek Motion Pictures, headquartered in New York, services the Greek language houses, last year bringing rentals of close to $105,000 on 30 new imports, about 10 of which are subtitled to be available to outside houses should they so desire.

U.S. Majors Share of Imports

The extent to which the major companies reaped the major benefits from the distribution of non-American product in the U.S.-Canadian market in 1960 can be seen in the table below. Number of pictures is shown in the parentheses.

COUNTRY OF ORIGIN	MAJOR COMPANY SHARE ESTIMATED RENTALS		TOTAL ESTIMATED RENTALS
Britain	$17,487,436	(30)	$22,974,986	(135)
Italy	11,228,113	(24)	12,265,913	(116)
France	810,000	(2)	5,190,000	(105)
Russia	1,096,481	(7)	1,833,481	(50)
Germany	574,475	(2)	1,233,375	(72)
Japan	536,000	(1)	2,014,000	(226)
Belgium	475,000	(1)	475,000	(1)

Of the total estimated U.S.-Canadian rental of $50,291,105 earned by 875 non-American films in 1960, $32,207,555 was earned by 67 films released through U.S. major companies. Of the estimated total rentals of $27,316,119 earned by 740 foreign non-English language pictures (non-British, whether dubbed or subtitled in English), $14,720,069 was earned by 37 films released through the majors. For the purposes of this survey, the U.S. major companies are American International, Allied Artists, Columbia, Metro, Paramount, 20th-Fox, Universal, United Artists, Warners and Buena Vista.

Foreign Film Take In U.S.

The following is a country-by-country breakdown of the estimated U.S.-Canadian rentals earned by non-American film product in 1960. The figures in parentheses represent comparable figures for 1959.

ORIGIN	NO. OF PICS		RENTALS
Britain	135	(116)	$22,974,986	($18,644,190)
Italy	116	(96)	12,265,913	(9,720,060)

Israel	1	(1)	3,000	(9,900)
TOTAL	873	(824)	$50,291,105	($39,626,486)

Films tabulated were released in the U. S. by 35 independent and 10 "major" distributors. Included in the latter category are American International Pictures, Allied Artists, Columbia, Metro, Paramount, 20th-Fox, Universal, United Artists, Warners and Buena Vista.

* The bulk of this revenue was earned by unsubtitled product shown in special foreign language theatres catering to ethnic groups.

Greater Union Leases Its Capitol in Sydney To Rudas for Revues

Sydney.

Tibor Rudas, ex-vauder turned producer, and Greater Union Theatres, ace cinema loop, have just consummated a pact for the lease of the 2,800-seat Capitol here, thereby giving Rudas an outlet here for his "Crazy Gang" revue. Capitol has long played second-release fare, with an occasional splurge on first-runs. House is actually owned by the city and is on a long lease to GU.

Rudas, who originally came here as a dancer, supplied talent to the Tivoli circuit and to show biz interests in the Far East. Later, he swung into solo production with "Oriental Cavalcade" and "Ziegfeld Follies," spotting these shows in the Tivoli here and at the Tivoli in Melbourne. Rudas had a falling out with the Tivoli group over terms and found himself minus showcases in the key cities.

Understood that Rudas also will spot his shows in the 3,500-seat State, Melbourne, from time to time.

Legit here is presently booming and biz should continue at a high level through the winter season.

"My Fair Lady," for example, is in its third year here for J. C. Williamson Ltd. "Irma la Douce" is also a click for the same management. "West Side Story" is winding up a good run for Garnet Carroll, with a revival of "Student Prince" in next for Carroll. "Glass Menagarie" is solid for the Elizabethan Trust. "World of Suzie Wong" moves in next month under the new James Laurie management the the Minerva, King's Cross, on a house deal with Metro.

Gleason Cast as Deaf Mute in 20th-Fox Pic Being Made in France

Paris.

Jackie Gleason does not like dubbing no matter what the general outlook is on this subject for pictures. He has solved this problem for himself in "Gigot," which he begins here next week (Gene Kelly directing for Seven Arts), with Ken Hyman producing, and 20th-Fox distributing. Gleason wrote the yarn but John Patrick is doing the script and dialog. Gleason's solution is in making his character a deaf mute. Remainder of the cast will be French, speaking in English because it is a Yank picture which unfolds in Paris.

One delay may be caused by inability to find enough local thesps with the ability to speak acceptable English. They will all have accents. Gleason does not care whether the picture is dubbed later for foreign showing, but he feels that the voice and action must go together for best results. In this case, he will depend on pantomime, but the all-French cast will give it a unity of tone.

"Gigot" has a 17-week shooting sked, and then Gleason heads back to the U.S. in September for his daughter's wedding.

SWEDEN'S NEW HOUSE TRUMPET-SHAPED

Washington.

A new 750-seat trumpet-shaped theatre, with several new gimmicks of design, opened recently in Malmo, Sweden, and is probably Scandinavia's most modern film house, reports Nathan D. Golden, of U.S. Dept. of Commerce.

Called the Royal, its projection both has six projectors, three of them for special system films, two for 70-mm film and one for the standard 35-mm.

The screen, 20 meters by 8 (a meter is 3.28 feet), is curved in an arc, which is said to give a third dimension effect to the picture. Also, maximum accoustic effect is achieved by designing the auditorium so that no part of the walls, floor or ceiling are parallel and by use of absorbent materials. The ceiling has thousands of small holes from which fresh air comes.

Gota Film Co., with five other Malmo houses, operates the Royal.

WB Option Registration

Washington.

Warner Bros. has filed a statement with Securities & Exchange Commission seeking registration of 122,700 shares of common stock.

The shares will be issued to key employes under the company's stock option plan.

Englund Ready To Start on 'Ugly' Despite Laos

Tokyo, April 18.

Despite the current crisis in Laos, producer-director George Englund is determined to bring "The Ugly American" to the screen. With Marlon Brando as Ambassador MacWhite, Englund reaffirmed his intention of rolling the Universal cameras in Thailand June 19 for filming of the controversial bestseller by William Lederer and Eugene Burdick.

Here on his third preparatory trip to Thailand, Englund said, "As far as I'm concerned, I'm planning to shoot the picture there. If there is some reason not to, I feel I would be so advised by the Thai government. Obviously if open warfare breaks out in Laos, it would effect our project."

Englund is visiting Hong Kong and Manila as well as here and Thailand to cast the film's Oriental roles. Traveling with Englund are casting director Bill Batliner, production manager Marshall Green, cameraman Cliff Stine, art director Al Sweeney and first assistant director Terry Nelson.

Englund has pencilled six weeks of Thailand locations followed by eight weeks of shooting in Hollywood. He expects to have a cast rounded out shortly. Among prospects is Japanese actor Eiji Okada, who registered in the Franco-Japanese production of "Hiroshima, Mon Amour."

Explaining the lengthy interlude since he took on the "Ugly American" project in mid-1959, Englund said that much of time lag has been due to his manner of approach. He acknowledged also that Brando's prolonged participation in "Mutiny on the Bounty" remake accounted for part of the delay. The State Department took no delaying action, Englund made clear.

Oscar for 'Spring' Just One of Several Recent Honors Won by Bergman

Stockholm, April 18.

When Ingmar Bergman received word that his film, "The Virgin Spring," has been awarded an Oscar, he commented: "An Oscar award in the U. S. is a charm. The financial success which an Oscar can produce means aid in making new experiments."

The newly founded Swedish State Film Board, which is to make annual awards to "producers of high quality films," announced on April 17 that 250,000 crowns ($50,000) of the 890,000 crowns ($198,000) of prize money had been awarded to Ingmar Bergman's "Devil's Eye." The next day Bergman also received word that "Spring" had received first prize at the religious film week in Valladolid, Spain.

Other Swedish productions that received Swedish awards include Alf Sjoberg's "Domaren" (The Judge) (Sandrews), which got $50,000 (it will be Sweden's entry at the Cannes Film Fest). Lars Magnus Lindgren's "Are There Angels?" (Sandrews) received $20,000. Olle Hellbom's and Olle Nordemar's "All We Children in Bullerbyn" (Artfilm) was awarded $20,000.

Bewhiskered 80-Yr.-Old Nippon for Yank Film

Tokyo, April 18.

While a man who has not shaved since World War II would seem an unlikely prospect for the film, "Marines, Let's Go!" (20th), such a person received a choice role in the pix. Eighty-year-old Kenkichi Kawashima, who sports a white silken beard, plays the grandfather of a Korean girl in this comedy. For Kawashima, otherwise the proprietor of the Kawashima Curio shop in Kyoto, it is the second role in an American picture.

He was in "Teahouse of August Moon" (M-G). Kawashima, regarded as an expert on Japanese swords, said he decided to let his beard grow during the war and hasn't set foot in a barber shop since. His reason: "Laziness."

Who's Who of New York Importers

Though the business of importing and distributing foreign films in the U. S. has become increasingly respectable—both financially and artistically—in the post World War II years, not all the color has gone out of the business.

Members of New York's importing fraternity are still an extremely individualistic lot. Perhaps in no other branch of the film business are there so many strange juxtapositions of high art and low commerce. Thus the same guy who may gamble his shirt to acquire and promote an avant garde pic about Uruguayan social conditions, may also, with another subsidiary, be distributing a nudie epic entitled "Falling Fig Leaves."

Another distrib may be fighting the Legion of Decency tooth and nail one minute, anent a Legion condemnation of an exploration of love, French-style, and the next minute courting Catholic cooperation for the promotion of a film biography of a noted saint.

The derby hat operators are still functioning, but only on the fringes of the business. Not seen in New York for some time is the distrib who, to spice up a couple of innocuous Swedish imports, shot some nudie footage on a New Jersey beach which he spliced, indiscriminately into both an urban drama and a rural slapstick farce.

There remains a high rate of personal eccentricity among importers, but perhaps no higher than among the other practitioners of film business. One newcomer to the ranks who came on big at the beginning of last year, wheeling and dealing with imported product, bidding (along with scores of others) for "La Dolce Vita," and generally behaving like a large factor, suddenly disappeared in August. He decamped from his midtown office in the middle of the night, taking with him his objects d'art and leaving, for his partners, a large pile of unpaid bills.

These guys, however, are the exception today. Film importing has grown up, and foreign films are now big business. Because of the nature of that business, which is so risky, the most successful importers are also generally the most individualistic, in artistic point of view if not in business practices. At least two major companies, United Artists and Columbia, have seen the dollars and sense in the artie market and made tie-ups with, respectively, Lopert Films and Kingsley International.

And, if any one individual can be singled out as having given tone and class to the New York importing fraternity as it is constituted today, it must be the late Joe Burstyn who not only sponsored American interest in Italy's great post-war neorealistic product, fought the bluenoses singlehanded, but also gave the importers their favorite gathering place—the Russian Tea Room on West 57th Street. Burstyn set more than one pattern.

The following is a rundown on the most active of the today's importers and distribs listed, to spare egos, in alphabetical order:

ASTOR PICTURES INTERNATIONAL (Franklin Bruder, Everett Crosby). Newly reorganized to handle class product from abroad, scoring the year's major coup by acquiring "La Dolce Vita." Also has the Italo "Rocco and His Brothers" for the U. S.

ATLANTIS FILMS (George Morris). A small outfit which hit the jackpot several years ago with an early Brigitte Bardot display, "The Girl in The Bikini."

BENTLEY FILMS (George Roth). Handled French, British and Italian product last year.

BRANDON FILMS (Tom Brandon). Last year concentrated on distribution of a package of seven class Japanese pix, with "Ikaru" being the most noteworthy. Also handling the early German sound version of "Three-Penny Opera." In addition has vast 16m library of "screen classics."

JOSEPH BRENNER ASSOCIATES (Joe Brenner). Deals principally in exploitation product. Sample titles: "Morals Squad," "Girls, Inc."

JOSEPH BURSTYN INC. (Faye Miske). Last year put out the Italo "Heaven on Earth" and now prepping "European Nights." Has a number of the top Italo and French pix of the early postwar years.

CASINO FILMS (Munio Podhorzer). Specializes in product for German language houses. Podhorzer, however, also is New York rep for Franco-London Films, and other top European producers.

CONTINENTAL DISTRIBUTING CORP. (Irving Wormser). Walter Reade's producing-distributing arm. Coproduced "Room at The Top," and a number of other important British imports including the current hit, "Saturday Night and Sunday Morning." The "major" of the indies.

ELLIS FILMS (Jack Ellis). Concentrates on French product, with two of its most important recent releases being "Back to The Wall" and BB's "Crazy for Love."

EXCLUSIVE INTERNATIONAL (Edward Gray). recently reorganized to handle both domestic and foreign product, with plans also to coproduce pix with Lex Films of Italy.

GOVERNOR FILMS (Dave Emmanuel). Hit the bigtime in 1960 with the British "sleeper," "Carry On Nurse." Also has "Carry On Constable" and "Carry On Sergeant."

FILMS AROUND THE WORLD (Irvin Shapiro). Last year had "Rosemary" and "Game of Love." This year, cashing in on "Breathless."

HARRISON PICTURES CORP. (Ed Harrison). Currently concerned principally with the Satyajit Ray trilogy from India, "Panther Panchali," "Aparajito" and "World of Apu."

HOFFBERG PRODUCTIONS (Jack Hoffberg). Handles wide variey of French, Italian, Mexican films, plus 16m, and library of Spanish language product.

JANUS FILMS (Bryant Haliday, Cy Harvey). Two of the youngest and most active guys in the business. Firm a close relationship with Svensk Film and its most famous export, Ingmar Bergman, whom the firm has promoted to U. S. respect and fame.

KINGSLEY INTERNATIONAL (Edward L. Kingsley). "And God Created Woman" helped create Kingsley's good fortunes. Prexy works closely with Columbia Pictures. Deals in top class product (upcoming: "La Verite"). Also emphasizes class short subjects, foreign and domestic.

LOPERT FILMS (Ilya Lopert). United Artists' importing subsidiary. Nothing but top product: "Black Orpheus," "Tunes of Glory," "Never on Sunday" etc.

LOUIS DE ROCHEMONT ASSOCIATES (Borden Mace). More active in theatrical and non-theatrical film production than as a distrib. This year handling Lutheran Associates' "Question Seven" as well as the domestic "Sand Castle."

LUX FILM (E. R. Zorgniotti). The remains of I.F.E. Releasing Corp. Recently most concerned with final playoffs of I.F.E. product, left when that operation closed down, but planning some new Italo releases.

WILLIAM MISHKIN (William Mishkin). Exploitation stuff. Sample titles: "Sexpot," "Vice Dolls," "No Morals," "Hotbed of Sin."

PRESIDENT FILMS (Joe Green). Handles French, Swedish, Italo product. Making money with the Danish "Call Girls."

SHOW CORP. OF AMERICA (C. Robert Mamby, Fred Schneier). One of the newest of the class importers. Last year handled "Man in The Cocked Hat," "The Poacher's Daughter" and "Next to No Time."

TIMES FILM CORP. (Jean Goldwurm). This year more famous for its highly publicized Supreme Court battle vs. the Chicago censors than for its new releases. Upcoming sked, however, includes "Plein Soleil," "Elevator to The Gallows."

TRANS-LUX DISTRIBUTING (Richard Brandt). Importing-distributing branch of the Trans-Lux enterprises. Usually picks one exploitable feature a year and goes all-out. Most recent releases: "Nude in A White Car," "The Savage Eye."

UNITED MOTION PICTURE ORGANIZATION (Richard Davis). This year has the highly praised Italo comedy, "Big Deal on Madonna Street."

VITALITE (Sig Shore). Took over operations of Fred Schwartz' Valiant Films earlier this year. Handles exploitation product, as well as class stuff such as "The Angry Silence."

ZENITH INTERNATIONAL (Daniel Frankel). Another of the top class companies. Has done particularly well with "new wave" product from France: "The 400 Blows," "The Lovers" and "Hiroshima Mon Amour."

'Spartacus' Scores At Gala Preem in Berlin

Berlin, April 18.

"Spartacus" (U) was preemed here last week at 1,500-seat Titania Palast. Although not too conveniently located, Titania Palast, however, has the biggest cinema screen in the country.

"Spartacus" made a considerably better impression on local audience than most of the big scale pix seen here lately. For a big film, it received about-average reviews here. Crix in particular praised the performances and director Kubrick's ability to achieve even intimacy on the big screen.

John Mills Named To Brit. Film Institute

London, April 18.

Lady (Isobel) Barnett, the tv personality, actor John Mills, Kenneth Adam, BBC topper; and J. S. Fairfax-Jones are new appointments by the Chancellor of the Exchequer as governors of the British Film Institute.

Robert Clark, the film executive, has been reappointed for a further term.

Indie Prod.-Distribs' Decline, Fall Main Topic in British Film Industry

London, April 25.

The decline and fall of the independent producer-distributor is currently one of the main talking points in British film industry circles.

Within the last few weeks one old established outfit, Renown Pictures Corporation, announced it was going into voluntary liquidation though it was solvent. Now reports are buzzing concerning the fate of another indie which is widely known to be experiencing financial difficulties, with a threat of bank foreclosure within the next few days.

These developments have given new credence to the long-held belief that the small man does not have much of a chance these days. There are, of course, exceptions to every rule, and one of the exceptions along Wirdour Street (London's film row) is the unequalled success of Nat Cohen and Stuart Levy, the joint heads of Anglo Amalgamated Film Distributors. They have been riding high for many years, both domestically and internationally.

Most other indies, however, have been feeling the pinch. And it is no secret that exhibs have applied the squeeze. There invariably has been a take-it-or-leave-it attitude to the salesman representing an indie distrib when he has tried to bargain for better terms. A request for a 30% rental, for example, was usually countered with a 15%, take it or leave it, offer. Usually it had to be taken.

That sequence of events undoubtedly was a key factor in cueing the arrangement whereby Columbia and British Lion set up house jointly a month ago under the umbrella title of BLC. And there is a general belief in and around Wardour Street that the pattern inevitably will be followed by others and that before long there will just be a handful of major distributors handling the British Hollywood output.

Titanus-Metro Newest 'Supply' Pact With U.S.A.

Rome.

The recent pact linking Metro with Titanus Films of Rome is only the latest in a series of moves designed to secure Italo-made product for Yank release—from the very start of production. Titanus-Metro deal calls for delivery of six pix in three years to the Yank company for worldwide release, with Metro to deal exclusively with Goffredo Lombardo's company on Italy productions.

Paramount, which in past years has made several deals with Dino DeLaurentiis (for "War and Peace," "Tempest," "Under Ten Flags," "Five Branded Women," etc.), is now mulling a similar deal with Galatea Films. First for Paramount-Galatea would be a Sidney Poitier starrer, "The Iron Man," but pact if sealed would be a longterm proposition.

Columbia is currently engaged in a series of pic deals with Dino DeLaurentiis, involving both release and production ("Barabbas," "Two Enemies," etc.), and has another pact with Morris Ergas' Zebra Films for a series of features being made in this country. Col has also bought a large number of Italian pix for various areas.

20th, which over a year ago was reportedly scared away from a deal with Galatea (to produce "Cleopatra," "The King Must Die," "Esther and the King," and others) in fear of a new Italian tax move, (only "Esther" was made for 20th by Galatea), may now "come back" to Italy after all with its harried "Cleopatra" effort. Company also produced "St. Francis of Assisi" here, but under Plato Skouras' aegis.

UA has from time to time been involved in various manners with local productions, though no longterm agreement was involved. "Jessica" (DEAR), currently being directly by Jean Negulesco in Sicily with a cast headed by Maurice Chevalier and Angie Dickinson, will get a UA release; ditto for "The Valiant" John Mills starrer to be shot on Italo locations for B.H.P. Films (London) and Euro International (Rome).

Universal has shot several pix in Italy, but all on its own. These have included "Raw Wind in Eden," "Romanoff and Juliet" and, most recently, "Come September." Warners has similarly avoided deals with Italian companies, except for a (highly profitable) series of purchases of local pix for Italo release. At least two of these have paid off in top coin: "Il Moralista," and "Europe at Night."

Other Yank "coproduction" activity in Italy has recently included Embassy International's deals with Lux Films (for "Wonders of Aladdin") and with Titanus (for "The Last Days of Sodom and Gomorrah"), both involving production phase as well. American-International has also made some local pre-production deals in recent past.

Among other Yank companies showing an interest in coproducing with Italy is Astor International, which recently bought a series of It. pix (Delta, Rocco and his brothers) for release.

DENMARK'S AIR STRIKE

Talent's Quarrel Weakens Screen's Opposition

Copenhagen.

The spring of 1961 has been rendered uneasy by a strike of all actors against the radio and television systems, both controlled by the kingdom. This is, naturally, a matter of who collects what but with the air media having makeshift programs there has been a drift of the citizenry to the legitimate houses, Royal Opera, the cabarets and so on.

It follows that the downtown firstruns here have benefited, too, though they do pretty well under all circumstances.

Recent big grossers among Yank imports have been "North By Northwest" at World Cinema and Universal's "Black Lace" at Kino-Palaet.

British Projecting Space TV Satellites as Reality for 1964; 20,000 MPH Whirl; $2,800,000 Cost

London, April 25.

British scientists hope to have a television satellite in Space by 1964—to beam top tv shows like "Sunday Night at the London Palladium" to all parts of world (including the U. S.) from space and to relay other countries' tv programs to Britain.

Appointment of U. K.'s top rocket scientist Geoffrey Pardoe—man behind the Blue Streak project—to direct the satellite team of nine scientists has just been announced by Sir Robert Renwick, chairman of the British Space Development Co.

Founder members of the recently formed company (initial capital $56,000) include Associated Television, Decca Radar, Hawker Siddeley Aviation, Pye Radio, Rank Television and Rolls Royce.

Outlining the scheme, which has to have Government approval before the first satellite is rocketed into Space, Leonard Matthews, one of the nine-member team of scientists, said: "At a modest estimate, the cost of the first satellite should be about £1,000,000 ($2,800,000). Its operational path will be 12,000 miles from the earth and its speed about 20,000 mph."

Matthews, who is Assistant Technical Controller (Communications) of Associated Television, said the first satellite would be one of two types—the first weighing 50 lbs. and the other 500 lbs. Choice would depend on the rocket facilities available.

Quality of reception between, say, London and New York, without any ground link, was likely to be much better than at present.

Single satellite could be used for only part of the day, but later this difficulty would be overcome by sending up a chain of them—possibly eight.

Said Matthews: "America has already made great strides with the use of satellites for telephone communications, but I understand she has not yet progressed very far with their use of radio and television. The Russians do not appear to be at all interested in satellite development along these lines. At least I heard nothing about it when I was in Moscow two months ago.

"Yet satellites will give tremendous advantages over the present radio link system. They will give a much wider coverage. They will, I think, be more reliable for there will be a lot less to go wrong. And they will bring a much better television news service from the world's trouble-spots which often have no television link under the present system."

Space tv-satellites—which might keep whizzing round the earth for 20 years or so — will carry their own spare-parts which will automatically swing into operation in case of mechanical faults, but Matthews thought a human rocket-riding "space mechanic" was also a possibility.

Summer Reruns

"CBS Reports" will go into a six-show repeat pattern this summer, starting in June. Decision marks a departure from original CBS planning, in that "Reports" had been envisioned as a year-round effort in new shows.

Idea, however, is to spell the Fred Friendly staff somewhat as well as to recoup some of the coin involved in having sustained the program since January, a state of affairs CBS frankly didn't expect.

By slotting reruns, CBS was able to pull in some summer business on the show via the substantially lower price scale, with Lipton and Fedders buying in for shortterm spans.

30-Year Quest For AT&T's Biz Brings 'CBS Reports' Coin

Bell Telephone has purchased sponsorship of two "CBS Reports" programs and has taken options on two more. All four shows will relate to developments in space, in which Bell parent AT&T has a vital interest, and Bell would have bought more had "CBS Reports" exec producer Fred Friendly had additional space projects on the drawingboard.

First of the Bell shows will be tomorrow night's "Why Man in Space?" with CBS and N. W. Ayer agency having rushed to firm the deal in time for the program, which had been scheduled a couple of weeks ago. Second Bell-sponsored show will come next fall, with the two under option planned for winter and spring. Exact nature of the three other shows isn't set, but one may deal with the Venus probe, another with the Saturn missile project.

Although the Bell deal isn't a big one in terms of billings, with a firm commitment of only about $450,000 involved, it's a major feather in CBS' cap. For one thing, AT&T is a big prestige client for a show like "Reports." For another, this marks the first time CBS-TV

CBS' Salant In Swipe At Those Huntley-Brinkley Tail-End Quips On NBC

Dick Salant, in his first major address since assuming the presidency of CBS News, predicted last week that the trend toward more electronic journalism, particularly in prime viewing hours, will continue to accelerate.

At the same time, in a speech before the Hartford Advertising Club Friday (21), he took an oblique swipe at the NBC Huntley-Brinkley competition. In evaluating the goals a tv news show must aim at, he asked:

"Are we satisfied when the viewer turns off the program at its end only with a recollection of some quip of the news broadcaster? Or do we aim, rather, for the viewer at the end of the program to think about the facts and issues which he saw on his television screen? I hope we will find the happy medium between style and viewpoint on the one hand and understandable content and substance on the other—with wit used only to illuminate and style and personality only a means to the end of understanding rather than the end itself."

Salant predicted many advances in news techniques in the next few years — communications satellites permitting instantaneous transmissions from all over the world, miniature cameras and tiny tape cartridges to dispense with developing and printing. But he also said that the "Knotty issues" over the form and nature of broadcast journalism will continue, whether for example to do three minutes of headlines on the hour or to expand news programs to half-hour length.

Salant also told the Hartford admen that if CBS Inc. dropped all its news and pubaffairs programming and substituted mass entertainment and sold these out, its pretax profits would increase by as much as 65%. Though he didn't go into specific figures, CBS' pretax profits last year were $23,000,000; that means that CBS is spending, out of pocket, some $15,000,000 a year on news and pubaffairs.

Schaefer Beer Buying WNEW-TV 'Rookie' Spec

Schaefer Beer seems to be making it a habit of bankrolling one-hour specials on WNEW-TV, N.Y. Brewery a month ago commissioned a one-hour St. Patrick's Day spec produced by the station, and now has placed a second special, "Biography of a Rookie," on the outlet for May 8 airing.

"Rookie" is a one-hour baseball special, produced by Dave Wolper and filmed by Hollywood cameraman James Wong Howe about the rapid rise of L.A. Dodger Centerfielder Willie Davis. Mike Wallace narrates.

Economics Of a Station Break

An additional 10-second station break may sound infinitesimal when stacked up against an overall network or station operation, yet over a year's span the pyramiding of the income can swell to staggering proportions.

It's estimated that the additional 10 seconds (extending station breaks to 40 seconds over the ABC-TV skein) will benefit the network's five o & o stations to the tune of some $2,500,000 in the course of a year. (Networks say it will restrict the 40-second break to two announcements on the o&o's.)

An affiliate station manager in a key market has revealed off-the-cuff that his profit picture will be enhanced by a third through the simple expedient of an additional 10 seconds. This becomes understandable in the light of the o & o potentials, for it could mean a clean $500,000 annual bonanza for a key station operation o & o or affiliate.

That's why, to avert any possible station defections to ABC, the CBS and NBC webs have no alternative but to follow suit.

Paley, In Stepped-Up Role, May Give Key Address To CBS Affils

It Figures

CBS-TV will carry Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson's address before the annual Brand Names Foundation Dinner next Thursday night (4) on its full network. Telecast will preempt "Face the Nation."

As a matter of coincidence, CBS-TV prexy Jim Aubrey is chairman of the Brand Names Week planning committee.

Indication of the increasingly active role being taken in CBS affairs by board chairman William S. Paley is the fact that he may address the opening-day luncheon of the CBS Television Affiliates Assn. convention in N.Y. a week from tomorrow (Thurs.).

Paley's attendance at the affiliate conclaves in recent years has been casual, consisting of a token appearance and possibly a few welcoming words. But this year, if plans work out, he'll make a major address on the state of CBS and the medium to the affiliates as the key opening-day's address.

Network has taken the unusual step of renting the Trans-Lux Theatre on Lexington Ave. & 52d St. for the opening day morning session (4) at which it will review the past season and its successes in the area of new programs and ratings and will preview footage from next season's shows. Robert Young and probably Robert Sterling will narrate the preview on film. CBS prexy Jim Aubrey, programming v.p. Oscar Katz and sales administration veep Bill Hylan will report on the prospects for next season.

Following the Paley lunch will be the affils' customary closed session. On Friday (5), affils will get reports from Dick Salant and Blair Clark on the revamped CBS News operation, from v.p.-general counsel Tom Fischer on the Washington picture, and Jack Cowden, information services veep, on advertising-promotion publicity. CBS prexy Frank Stanton will provide the wrapup address Friday afternoon.

In the evening, prior to the departure for most of the affils to Washington for the National Assn. of Broadcasters conclave in Washington, there'll be the traditional banquet and show, with some 30 stars from both coasts in attendance as well as news and sports personalities. Actual show isn't completely booked yet, but so far Jack Carter and Gordon & Sheila MacRae are on the bill. Web was unable to get its big comedy guns —Jack Benny, Red Skelton, Danny Thomas and Andy Griffith—in for the meeting.

CBS-TV Legalites Salvage a 400G Gleason Special

Television lawyers are generally regarded as something of a necessary nuisance in broadcasting, but CBS-TV last week was thanking its lucky stars $400,000 worth for its staff of legal eagles.

The network's staff of attorneys could take all the credit for saving that much in time and programming charges involved in the Jackie Gleason "Million Dollar Incident" special. For on Thursday morning (20), a N. Y. Supreme Court justice enjoined the web from showing the special the following night. But by Thursday afternoon, the CBS attorneys had persuaded Justice William C. Hecht to amend his injunction so the telecast could go on virtually intact.

In the morning, Justice Hecht had granted an injunction sought by George (Bullets) Durgom, pro-

How About That —L&M's ABC Buy

Liggett & Myers just bought a half-hour alternate-week of ABC-TV's upcoming 60-minute (7:30-8:30) telefilm series, "Follow the Sun." Cigaret goes into the Sunday night 8 to 8:30 period in a selloff from chief underwriter Kaiser Industries.

Decision to again buy ABC comes after the client recently pulled back all of its advertising on the network, in the wake of threats by Italo-American groups to boycott sponsors of "The Untouchables."

While some observers felt that L&M pulled out a total of $11,000,000 as the result of the threats against its "Untouchables" bankrolling, other felt that L&M had a mad-on against ABC. As it turns out, it couldn't have been much of a mad-on, because L&M's participation in "Follow the Sun" is worth about $2,000,000 to the network.

WNEW-TV: Korn-on-the-Cob

By BOB CHANDLER

Metropolitan Broadcasting Corp.'s exec v.p. for television, Bennet Korn, has found the secret that unlocks the profits for an independent station like Met's WNEW-TV in the highly competitive seven-station New York market. Fact is, he's gone beyond that—he's found the combination to both profits and rising prestige.

The station of late has been catching the most discriminate of viewing taste with such entries as political commentator Dr. Albert Burke, the BBC-TV Shakespearean cycle, "An Age of Kings," the weekly John Crosby stanza, its medical specials, its timely one-shot on the Nazi era, "Remember Us?" and such varied cultural attractions as its one-shot on Chopin.

Korn doesn't regard these as "bonus" programs for the egghead, or "conscience of a broadcaster" shows, or on-the-record offerings for his FCC log. Rather, they form an integral part of his attack on the problem of how to make money with an indie in a seven-station market.

This attack has a two-pronged approach. One phase is the programming philosophy, and the WNEW-TV approach is that of "diversity." The other, and possibly the more fascinating, is the financial attack, which requires what the musically-oriented Korn terms a "virtuoso performance" in the delicate balancing of fiscal factors.

The basis of the financial attack is the station's circulation. This will determine the rate which Korn can set and which will bring enough billings to operate in the black. The trick is to program the station so that this circulation, or audience size, can be maintained, yet to pay for the programs at a rate low enough so that the program costs won't exceed the billings return. In other words, buy the shows that bring a fairly respectable audience, peg the rate card to that audience and make sure the income exceeds the outgo, particularly that amount spent at the beginning of the cycle for the program material.

That's the balancing act, simplified, but the problem is how to maintain audience levels and reasonable program costs in a highly competitive market. This is where the programming philosophy enters, and with it another balancing act which can best be called "averaging." Whereas a network ordinarily figures on the basis of single programs paying their own way, Korn averages out his entire schedule.

One reason is that most of his business is national spot, so that there are few single-sponsorship factors to consider. Another is that he's got to think in terms of overall station circulation, not that of specific terms. As a consequence, he figures expenditure and income on an overall level, rather than in reducing it to terms of single shows paying their own way.

Accompanying this consideration is the diversity philosophy of programming. In figuring on a specific circulation level, Korn decided to aim at the area of a 5 or 6 rating as an average, which in N. Y. translates itself to between 275,000 and 300,000 homes. On that level, he decided that rather than specialize in a particular type of program, such as WPIX's syndicated vidpix identity of WOR-TV's feature film specialization, he would program on a diversified basis to attract various viewer groups, all with that 5 rating average in mind.

Because of this, and because of the "averaging" approach, Korn was able to mix his purchasing and programming. He's bought a few expensive first-run syndicated stanzas, several less expensive off-network reruns, and a lot of older material in areas such as dramatic anthologies that audiences can't get in the current network programming crop. To this he's added selected feature films which aren't too expensive—fourth or fifth run entries, but quality pictures. Then there are such live shows as wrestling, a big factor in the station's programming, and finally, the kidshows, with cartoons and short subjects as the base but implemented by such top live per-

1st Quarter Sales Up, Sez Stanton

CBS sales for the first quarter are up over the corresponding quarter in 1960, CBS prexy Frank Stanton told the company's annual stockholder meeting last Wednesday (19). He said that sales have increased for the quarter in six of the company's eight operating divisions, and named CBS Electronics as one of the divisions which has operated unsatisfactorily.

Stanton said 1960 represented the highest sales mark in the company's history, with profits at their third highest level, despite the recession. He said that if the general economy improves this year, "our sales for the year will be somewhat better than in 1960" and "our effort will be to try to produce profits at the 1960 level or better."

Meeting, at which CBS board chairman William S. Paley presided, approved a new 10-year stock option plan to replace the one which terminated last month, and reelected the company's

OF HOPE (BOB) & FULFILLMENT

'Sticks & Stones'll Break My Bones—'

ABC-TV has been coming in for more than its share of critical abuse these past few weeks, as witness:

The network's decision to extend station breaks an additional 10 seconds, cueing cries of "excessive commercialism" and forcing the other webs to fall in line;

Prexy Ollie Treyz's cries of "copy-catism" in accusing the other networks of imitating ABC's crime-adventure formats, resulting in stinging abuse of Treyz & Co. for forcing the rival networks to play it the same way, with a particular blast directed at ABC by Jack Gould in last Sunday's (23) N. Y. Times;

The continuing resentment and campaign of the Italian community for perpetuating criminal stereotypes on "The Untouchables" with resultant sponsor boycott threats.

But the AB-PT parent company stock (thanks chiefly to ABC-TV) goes up and up and up.

NBC's One-Sixth Of Prime Time For Public Service Shows Next Season

Whether it be a case of further satisfying its insistent "corporate ego" or submitting to public pressures or responding to a combination of the two, NBC-TV next season is going to program more public service material in prime time than it ever has in its history. It may not be as much as many critics desire, but just the same the web says it will be carrying four hours of guaranteed public service each week in the hours from 7:30 to 11 p.m. That's out of 24½ hours available a week.

Add to this an hour and 15 minute, a week of news (Huntley-Brinkley and the Sunday evening "Meet the Press" (both programs are just to the light side of being actual prime timers) and the weekly nighttime total jumps to five hours and 45 minutes. This compares to the total of four-and-a-half hours a week being done this season, counting everything.

NBC says it could wish for more sales in this area, but it is still getting more sales for news, information and culture than it has ever gotten before. What seems to have helped advance sales are three "object lessons": Lipton making tea sales out of "JFK," a study of the Presidency; Procter & Gamble figuring that a rerun of "Victory at Sea" was great for pushing a hard product like Crest; and Purex, in several programmatic ways, being able in two years to increase sales and thus treble the value of its stock on the market.

As for client prospects next season, there is the case of Don Hyatt's special projects group. It's SRO and can't handle any more stanzas. Most of the ones it's doing appear likely to fall into the Sunday DuPont series.

There is also the Gulf biz, in

The 2 P.M. Facelift

Dating practically back to 1949, the 2 to 2:30 afternoon slot on CBS-TV had been taking a beating as the graveyard of the web's daytime sked. Starting with Jack Paar and later seguing into Steve Allen, Robert Q. Lewis and Jimmy Dean, not to mention an unlamented item called "Full Circle," CBS pumped a succession of personalities and programming into the period, all in turn falling victim to the 2 p.m. jinx.

Surprisingly enough it has remained for a game show, the Pete Arnell-Irving Mansfield "Face the Facts" to lick the bugaboo, as evidenced by initial rating returns.

Miles Bid For Kuklapolitans; $1,400,000 Buy

Chicago, April 25.

Burr Tillstrom's Kuklapolitans, sans Fran Allison, are returning to NBC-TV next fall in a five-minute crossboard format, if the web can clear a suitable station lineup in the 5 p.m. (EST) period. Sponsor Miles Labs wants the top 106 markets.

Buy represents a $1,400,000 commitment on basis of a full 52 weeks, and it represents "found money" for NBC because it's in a time period the network doesn't normally offer for sale. What attracts Miles is that it follows "Here's Hollywood" with a reasonably good Hausfrau following. ABC's "American Bandstand" was under consideration for a time but was rejected because Geoffrey Wade agency felt its audience was largely teenage. Miles will be pitching Bactine and Chox Vitamins and wants to reach the femmes and moppets.

New "Kukla and Ollie" strip will probably be done in color.

Fri. NBC Belongs To the Chi Boys

Chicago, April 25.

That the Friday night lineup has finally taken shape in NBC-TV's fall schedule attributes largely to some coups scored by the web's central division.

Angus Robinson's staff came through with a part sponsor, American Dairy Assn., to cement Dinah Shore in the 9:30 period (switching off with 16 "Bell Telephone Hours"); got Brown & Williamson, uprooted from the Thursday sked, to switch to "Captain of the Detectives" in the preceding hour; and plucked the Seven-Up coin that now entrenches Larry White's circus shows "World of Entertainment," (with European performers) at 7:30.

Latter was a save, since the fizzery earlier had had a yen for the new five-minute "Kukla & Ollie" strip but wasn't satisfied with any berth NBC could offer. Miles Labs then grabbed off "K&O" for 5 p.m. across the board.

Central office also got a fat daytime order from Pillsbury, representing an hour per week in quarter-hour segments. Buy runs through summer and fall and, on a four brand rate, amounts to a $1,700,000 outlay.

RENAULT, COLGATE SPORTS COIN TO CBS

CBS-TV has come up with a couple of new sports clients. Renault, which hasn't seen action on the web since its sponsorship of the Winter Olympics, picked up one-fourth sponsorship of the PGA Golf Tourney from Chicago, July 29 and 30, while Colgate bought in for one-sixteenth of the Sunday "Baseball Game of the Week" for a 22-week span.

Renault deal brings the PGA telecast to the half-sold mark, with Williamson-Dickie Co. already in for a quarter. Needham, Louis & Brorby set the deal. Colgate business, which started weekend before last, was set via Ted Bates.

FANCY RATINGS, FANCY PRICES

By GEORGE ROSEN

It's very possible that with the single exception of Bob Hope, there's not another personality in all tv who can call his own shots on time preemptions or who, sight and script unseen, can pre-guarantee a Top 10 Nielsen rating, and actually deliver. Such is the unprecedented then-and-now pull of the tv comic—a pull which initially asserted itself when he first embraced the video medium back in '50 and is still going hot.

Hope is the closest anybody has ever come close to batting .1000 over a more-than-decade span in walloping the competition, as witness the following statistic: Since his Easter Sunday bow back in '50, Hope has done 80 specials on NBC-TV. There are 68 Nielsen average audience ratings on record. Of the 68, he won the rating race 57 times, soaring ahead of the competition with 87% wins against their combined 16%. That the impact is still there was evidenced by the Arbitron payoff on last week's Hope special, when he pulled a 26.4 (40% share of audience) against "Hawaiian Eye's" 13.8 and "My Sister Eileen's" 7.8.

All of which is a preamble to Hope's current status in an era of stratospheric cost figures. By virtue of his built-in Nielsen and the ability to deliver a Top 10 entertainment—name your own time slot and competition—a Hope tv special comes high. In fact it comes out somewhere near $400,000 per show (based on a $350,000 gross plus $50,000 required advertising). At six specials per season (the Hope minimum target) that's $2,400,000 for a half-dozen shows. The number of single sponsors around who are willing or can afford to go for that kind of loot for such minimum exposure over a season's span are few and far between, if not totally extinct.

Yet that's the way Hope wants to play it—one sponsor. Thus far he's unsold for next season. Buick had him for the past couple of seasons, but has bowed out. Had Hope agreed to a two-way sponsor spread, thus easing the burden of that 400G per-show tab, Buick would have been a cinch to come back.

Yet for all the Hope magic, if he would only agree to playing the sponsorship field to embrace more than one bankroller, it would ease the burden of the NBC sales boys. In fact under such optimum conditions the network (to whom Hope is under longterm exclusive contract) would persuade the comic to go for eight instead of six specials.

For one thing there are a lot of auxiliary factors going in Hope's favor next season, when recognition will probably hit peak fulfillment. There's the NBC "Project 20" essaying of "The Bob Hope Story" as one of the more important events to kick off the new tv season. But even more importantly is Hope's projection of the first international show to play overseas (accenting Asia, Africa and other troubled areas) as a sort of "advance man" of Global TV which would best characterize Hope's unique position today as a "one man Peace Corps," and also re-

FCC Orders Full Dress Hearing On Complex NBC-RKO Station Deals; A Field Day for B'cast Lawyers

Washington, April 25.

Rube Goldberg and Dr. Frankenstein hybrid, the NBC-RKO package broadcasting deal, near-monstrous in its complexities and ramifications, will be tackled head-on by Federal Communications Commission.

Rejecting idea of approving the multi-city swaps and sales without hearings—the easy way out—FCC ordered a consolidated hearing on the scheme. Date will be set later. Consolidated, that is, with this exception—the key Philadelphia phase will get separate treatment before the various other deals are considered.

Involving directly or indirectly no less than 22 applications before FCC, the richest and biggest of all broadcast swap-sales project owes its origin to the 1956 consent decree under which RCA-NBC has to shed its Philadelphia radio-tv properties because it allegedly coerced Westinghouse into giving them up.

After disposing of the Philadelphia propositions, Commission plans to issue a hearing order for the other broadcast applications involved. In its current announcement, FCC turned down an RKO request for postponement of NBC's renewals of its Philadelphia and Washington, D. C., licenses, pending action on applications for those outlets. Also rejected was a Philco request for separate consideration of NBC's Philadelphia license renewals as well as Philco's application for NBC's outlets in that city. But Philco and Westinghouse were made parties to the consolidated proceedings.

To complicate the issue, litigation of all breeds is still pending,

Lever Turns Other Cheek

Directly after Lever Bros. dropped a survey of how, in its eyes, tv audiences had dropped off, the bankroller bought into another network stanza for the '61-'62 season. Buy was for a minute-and-a-half a week in ABC-TV's "Corrupters."

Stanza, slated for Fridays at 10 in the fall, also has participating biz from Alberto Culver and P. Lorillard.

Garry & CBS-TV In a Hassle Over Switch to Olds

Seems a year hardly goes by that doesn't find Garry Moore and CBS-TV in a hassle over some aspect of the sponsorship of his Tuesday night show, particularly as it relates to full-hour sponsors. This year's no exception—CBS and Moore are having another go-round—but their positions are completely reversed from previous occasions.

Moore has always insisted on at least one full-hour sponsor in the alternate-week sales pattern for the sake of his format. This year, however, he's put the kibosh on the only full-hour bankroller CBS has been able to find. As of yesterday (Tues.), however, Moore had "reconsidered" and softened his stand.

The new hassle involves Oldsmobile, which has agreed to pick up an alternate-week hour on the show. With Plymouth cancelling its skip-week hour, CBS had plenty of takers for two alternate half-hours, but out of deference to Moore's previous wishes, looked for a one-hour bankroller and finally came up with Olds.

CBS' sense of triumph was shortlived, however, when it told Moore the good news. He flatly refused to accept Olds as an advertiser, claiming that to do so would be to damage his "integrity" before the public. In his view, switching from Plymouth commercials to Olds plugs in so short a time would destroy his viewers' faith in his integrity.

Web was flabbergasted, but said that contractually, it had the right to accept any sponsors it wanted. Moore replied that this was okay with him, but that he would not deliver the Olds commercials or the commercial leadins and that he would not drive an Olds.

After several meetings, Moore retreated from this stand and indicated he'd give Olds his cooperation. CBS then moved full speed ahead to try to close the Olds deal by the end of this week.

Goodyear Exits 'Pete & Gladys'

Goodyear Tire & Rubber has cancelled its alternate-week sponsorship of CBS-TV's "Pete & Gladys," despite the show's rating track record. The Harry Morgan-Cara Williams comedy has been consistently in the Top 40 Nielsen ranks.

At the same time, however, Goodyear shifted a portion of its money into CBS' "Douglas Edwards With the News," moving into an alternate Tuesday and Thursday pattern which opened up when Schlitz cancelled out of the Edwards show. Understood that Goodyear's budget is limited and that it prefers programming with a news-pubaffairs image to straight entertainment, so that it grabbed the Edwards opening but had to drop "Pete." As to the balance of coin from the comedy, it's indicated it would like to buy occasional news specials in the fall.

Carnation continues as the alternate client on "Pete & Gladys."

SEALTEST IN SNAG ON NEWHART DEAL

While Sealtest appears determined to carry forth its commitment for next season on the half-hour Bob Newhart stanza over NBC-TV, there are some problems that have cropped up and slowed down a final agreement on the Wednesday show.

Reportedly, Sealtest (out of N. W. Ayer) wants to sell off every third show after the first five weeks of sponsorship in the 10-10:30 time period. There is also the matter of finding someone to pick up the tab in the regions that Sealtest doesn't want.

Ayer feels the matter will be cleared up within a few days.

Decline of the Special

If, as now seems a certainty, there will be less than half the number of tv specials on the networks next season as there were this year, it's because most sponsors today are wedded to frequency and the hard-sell. Subsisting on specials alone, they find, simply doesn't pay off. It's like living on cake when it's the bread-and-butter pattern of cross-the-board or weekly exposure that holds the answer in today's competitive market.

Not that everyone shares the same conviction. There will still be the Equitables, the Hallmarks and the clients who will go for an occasional Bob Hope and a Dinah Shore, not to mention an Oscarcast and an Emmy presentation, but by the large sponsors today (in contrast to the flourishing period of the specials when they were built-in fixtures on the webs) are taking the procter & Gamble route—an infrequent special that's anchored on daily or weekly program frequency.

Greenbrier In Blue Funk As Product Protection, Fuss on Station Breaks, Program Control Loss Bother Admen

By ART WOODSTONE

One major defeat after another is being handed the ad agencies by the tv networks this year. This thought evidently gave the Madison Ave. leaders down at Greenbrier in White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., for their annual meeting a profound source of worry.

What the agency men are going to do to counteract their loss of bargaining power with ABC-TV, CBS-TV and NBC-TV nobody seems to know. Agency losses have not been about little things but on grounds they hold precious.

Belted on the matter of product protection, mutilated in the battle over the length of station breaks offered by networks to placate affils and virtually drowned this selling season in their efforts to sustain their control over program content on the webs, the tv agencies were consequently suffering during the meeting of the American Assn. of Advertising Agencies from mental disorders ranging colorfully from Greenbrier blue funk to Greenbrier purple rage.

As the speeches on the floor (e.g. "Encouraging Creativity Through Persuasive Techniques," "Pyschoanalysis And Advertising," and "The Ever Fresh Feminine Eye") continued, the backrooms at the resort reportedly seethed, particularly because of the most recent setback handed Mad Ave. in the electronic wars: George Gribbin, boss of Young & Rubicam, got an answer to his missives (to all webs) warning against the extention of time given to local station breaks, but his warnings were otherwise ignored. As one agency man from New York put it: "There's no question about it—the networks will give 42-second breaks. We have no recourse but to accept that as a fact."

Y&R wasn't the only agency to complain—just the first agency to complain on the public record. At least a dozen others have reportedly told the webs how poorly they received the word about stretching station break time at the expense of time for the network programs which they sponsor.

In this case, some agency heads have come to the conclusion that no effective course of action against Ollie Treyz (ABC topper), Jim Aubrey (CBS) or Bob Kintner (NBC) is available. To stop "incursions" such as this station break biz, they say, requires concerted action, yet concerted action by the agencies is clearly a violation of the laws written on restraint of trade.

Product Protection

Loss of product protection is probably the biggest source of Mad Ave. complaint, if not the newest. Webs—due to the complications of selling participations in 60-minute programs—have refused to offer advertisers the formerly traditional guarantee against also selling to competitive producers. First, the advertisers lost the right to protection against rivals buying into the adjacencies or programs next door. More recently, they have, for all intents and purposes, lost much of the protection they had against competing product in the same show. Just as an instance, Warner Lambert and Colgate are on the same shows over a NBC-TV. They aren't likely to be on the same week and, also, it can be argued that a mouth wash and a toothpaste aren't directly competitive, but nevertheless the copylines (about cleaner breath) are similar enough to give both companies the morning after feeling in their mouths.

A survey isn't necessary to see the way the networks have been turning back stanzas for next season that have had agency or sponsor backing. It's hardly a secret how many times in the last five weeks Kintner, Aubrey and Treyz have emphatically rejected offerings like the Jane Powell anthology (BBDO), "The Law & Mrs. Jones" (Benton & Bowles, others of the P&G agencies), and many more.

'Admen to Blame, Too'

Washington, April 25.

The advertising profession should bear a greater share of the criticism for low-quality broadcast fare, according to LeRoy Collins, President of National Assn. of Broadcasters.

Collins told the annual convention of American Assn. of Advertising Agencies: "Thus far, the broadcasting profession — networks and local broadcasters — have borne most of the criticism for not carrying more 'blue-ribbon' programming. The broadcaster has the public license, the ultimate responsibility to the people, so he is the natural target.'

"But those who use broadcasting as an advertising medium, and profit greatly thereby, should share more of this responsibility."

NAB Code Allows 70-Second Breaks

Washington, April 25.

National Assn. of Broadcasters injected itself into the hassle over network station breaks by citing the TV Code section allowing a maximum 70-second station break during prime time.

TV Code boss E. K. Hartenbower described the tv blurb rules as "an extremely difficult and delicate area of regulation." Station break ceilings as well as other rules governing commercial time standards are undergoing a "thorough" examination by NAB.

Hartenbower went on: "The time standards section of the TV Code states that station breaks between programs 'shall consist of not more than two announcements plus the conventional sponsored 10 second ID'. In addition, there is a 70-second total limit applicable to station breaks falling within the station's highest rate period."

MORE 'CHECKMATE' COIN FOR CBS-TV

"Checkmate" has reached the three-quarter mark on sponsorship, with Colgate and Revlon buying alternate-week, half-hours in the Wednesday 8:30-9:30 stanza. Liggett & Myers is already in for an alternate-week half-hour; ciggie outfit had given CBS a verbal order for an alternate-week hour but then decided to cut it in half.

"Checkmate" sales, coupled with the web's SRO on the Saturday night "Defenders," leave only two new hour stanzas on which CBS-TV has to concentrate its selling effort, both of them Thursday night entries. One is "Frontier Circus," the only new hour on which CBS plans to sell one-minute participations. It's already signed DuPont for a shorttermer, total of four participations.

Other is "The Investigators," which at least at this point CBS intends to sell in traditional half-hour pattern (in fact, the network is insisting that all participating sales patterns will be restricted to the 7:30-8:30 timeslots and won't carry over into the rest of the evening schedule). No bites yet on "Investigators," slotted at 9-10.

"Defenders" SRO represents complete renewals of the Saturday 8:30-9:30 time period, with Kimberly-Clark picking up an alternate hour and Lever Bros. and Brown & Williamson renewing their skip-week half-hours.

Memphis—Rodger May, erstwhile sales exec for Plough Radio, has exited that post to take over the general managership of WHBQ, General Teleradio AM outlet here. The new WHBQ skipper who is w.k. in southern radio circles, was associated with WNOX prior to coming to Memphis.

Stereo FM Gets Okay

Washington, April 25.

Stereophonic broadcasting via FM has been given the greenlight by Federal Communications Commission after lengthy study. FM broadcasting, already on the upbeat, should get a further shot-in-the-arm as result.

Okayed was a system combining methods of Zenith and General Electric. Commission said equipment capable of receiving the transmissions should be available to stereo fans "in the near future."

"A new dimension to broadcasting" was how FCC described the development.

'Greater Norfolk' Bid (1 Big Market) Could Hike Billings $1,250,000

Norfolk, April 25.

The three stations in the Norfolk-Portsmouth and Hampton-Newport News market have a problem —and they've banded together in an attempt to solve it.

The problem is simply that the Census Bureau and many timebuyers regard Norfolk-Portsmouth and Hampton-Newport News as separate markets, despite the fact that the FCC regards them as a single market and that the transmitters of the three stations are no more than nine miles apart. In fact, the Hampton-Newport News station, WVEC-TV, has its transmitter located right in the middle of downtown Norfolk.

Together, the market would constitute the 27th market in the country. But figured as separate markets, Norfolk-Portsmouth ranks 47th and Hampton-Newport News 120th.

To lick the problem, WTAR-TV and WAVY-TV in Norfolk-Portsmouth have gotten together with WVEC-TV and hired a single ad agency, Liller, Neal, Battle & Lindsey of Richmond, for a nine-month joint advertising-promotion campaigned aimed at advertisers and agencies to educate them on the Greater Norfolk market, replete with statistics about a 10-year growth rate two and a half times greater than the U.S. average. Aim is a 25% billing hike for the market in the next year or two, or $1,250,000 more tv advertising dollars for the three stations.

WNEW-TV

sonalities as Sandy Becker and Sonny Fox.

The diversity, Korn points out with some relief, does work; it does bring in that hoped-for 5 or 6 average and makes the financial clockwork tick. In fact, WNEW-TV's research indicates the station reaches every home in N. Y. at least once in four weeks.

But in terms of the commercial lineup, there is one group in the audience elements which that lineup misses. This is the egghead, the selective viewer. And if a station is committed to diversity in programming, it must reach everybody, not just 90% of its audience. Hence the WNEW-TV "prestige" shows, not simply conscience programs but an integral part of the basic commercial approach of getting to all of the market in small segments.

Korn readily admits that financially, and circulation-wise such programs figured to pull down the "average," but has found of late that in fact they don't. "An Age of Kings" is running an average 6 rating, pretty high for Shakespeare, and of course it's fully sponsored via Standard Oil of N.J. Dr. Burke is pulling down 4's and 5's, much higher than anticipated. But Korn was prepared to take the risks involved as part of the overall average, and the financial and rating rewards are just that much more gravy. Meanwhile, the egghead shows have fulfilled their function of filling the diversity gap, and moreover have added the extra bonus of rising prestige.

Korn admits that he's got a couple of things going for him, not the least of which is Metropolitan's group-ownership status. He can buy programs a little more cheaply via two-station buys; he can amortize some of his specials by running them on Met's other stations.

WCBS-TV VIEWS THE PRESS
With Charles Collingwood
Director: Robert Goodman
15 Mins., Sun., 3:45 p.m.
WCBS-TV, N. Y.

"WCBS-TV Views the Press" is taking up where the late Don Hollenbeck left off in radio some years back in appraising the print media. This time it's Charles Collingwood who's calling the shots. The premiere stanza had quite some "bite." Actually the video dimension adds nothing, for basically it's a radio show. It's what is said that counts.

Collingwood was chiefly concerned with recapitulating the Cuban disaster in pinpointing the laxity of the nation's press. Going back to the first revelation in October '60, as reported in the Hispanic American Review and up to the N. Y. Times Page 1 story back in January of this year, Collingwood proved that knowledge of CIA intervention was available, but that no one carried through, and these adequately-substantiated leaks were just dropped by the press. So how could the press cop a plea "because no one told us?"

All of this was well and good, giving the program a sense of direction, a goal and a purpose. And it was good researching. When Collingwood finished with the Cuban situation, he dwelt on the voluminous coverage of the Eichmann trial (confessing that a lot of the reporting was good) and the subordinating of the story in the wake of the Russian spy yarn, Cuba and now Algiers, finally escaping into trivia with a flippant observation on the N. Y. gambling scandal.

Collingwood had himself a meaty morsel, backed with strong documentation, in appraising the Cuban fiasco. As a stinging rebuke of U. S. journalistic standards and practices, it was healthy "viewing" (although even here it might have been enhanced with a hard-hitting critical analysis and summation rather than have it left dangling).

What immediately comes to mind is: "After Cuba, what?" Revelations of such enormity are few and far between. As a continuing cycle, the inherent danger lay in the latter part of Collingwood's program, suggesting that it may take more than just "viewing" the press to give it strength and a point of view. Rose.

What added up to a handsome trailer for the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus and a sock spec for Top Value Stamps was "Highlights of the 1961 Circus" aired Thursday (20) via NBC-TV. Hour-long taped show from the Greensboro, N.C., War Memorial Coliseum ably caught the big top flavor as some RB&B&B's celebrated turns displayed their talents.

Neatly riding herd on the assorted acts was ringmaster Arthur Godfrey who showed he was no mean equestrian himself. Godfrey not only smoothly handled the emcee chores in his familar, casual style but put his multi-gaited steed through its paces in eye-popping fashion.

More than a dozen acts were paraded on the homescreens at a time that undoubtedly caught a sizable juvenile audience. Few moppets (and their elders, too) could likely resist the amusing antics of Stephenson's Dogs, the spectacular feats of Trevor Bale's lions and tigers, the grace of the Flying Gibsons aerial act or the ingenuity of Klauser's Bears.

Plugs for Top Value were frequent but failed to interrupt the show's overall continuity. "The Greatest Show on Earth" also got a lot of mileage out of this special. For example, Godfrey occasionally came up with such aside comments as "you must come to the circus this year, it really is different . . . don't miss it in your town."

Sometimes it seems that the production staff of "Our American Heritage" recognizes a great urgency in recounting highlights of history and varied events that color the country's chronicle. They seem to feel that there is much to say and little time to do it, especially, in this Civil War Centennial Year, when one can't flip a calendar without noting some important anniversary of that conflict.

It is this drive to recount as much as possible and crowd a great many events into their scant half-hour that is reducing the effectiveness of this stanza. In Saturday's (22) session, the opus told of the two great decisions in the military career of Gen. Robert E. Lee. As he faced the necessity of surrendering the Army of Virginia to Gen. Grant, the story recalled his decision to take off his Union Army uniform, and go with the South. The second—whether to surrender formally or order, as suggested, his army to disperse and carry on the war via guerrila tactics. Lee properly reflected the folly of such a move and chose instead, formal surrender and cessation of hostilities.

In a half-hour, it was difficult to properly depict the General's torment in facing up to these huge decisions. Despite the capabilities of Dean Jagger, depicting Gen. Lee, there was little time to develop the various themes within this time period. However, all production elements and the cast were generally excellent. Jay Barney as Gen. Longstreet; Robert Emhardt, as Gen. Scott, and the various other supporting players, performed with taste and excellence. Mildred Freed Alberg ensured maximum effectiveness with allround production knowhow.

There was a time, say four years ago in the heyday of "Playhouse 90," when Jackie Gleason's "The Million Dollar Incident" would have made an okay offbeat entry for such a series. It would have figured as a nice change of pace, enhanced by the Gleason playing-himself casting and his authorship, but that's about all.

In today's television context, however, "Incident" takes on the status of one of the season's major specials; it doesn't deserve the distinction. It's basically a throwaway, a sometimes ingenious, occasionally amusing kidnapping yarn that manages to maintain interest in spite of its many flaws, but never arises above the commonplace.

Gleason's basic story, adapted by A. J. Russell, Sydney Zelinka and Walter Stone, varies from the ingenious to the ludicrous. His kidnapping plot is clever, his kidnappers are believable, but the people he should know best—the CBS execs and his own sidekicks like Jack Philbin and Bullets Durgom, are either so fuzzy or silly that they almost undo the ingenuity invested in the story.

That story has Gleason kidnapped during the days of his CBS Saturday night showcase and held for $1,000,000 ransom, which CBS is designated to pay.

The acting, too, varied. The kidnappers, Everett Sloane as the ringleader and Jack Klugman and Peter Falk, walked off with the honors, and Klugman got in the best comedy turn of the show in a drunk scene with Gleason. On the other hand, William Redfield as producer Jack Philbin, Harvey Lembeck as manager Bullets Durgom (changed at the last minute to "Eddie" to comply with an injunction prohibiting use of his name), and Paul McGrath as the unidentified CBS bossman had a pretty tough time of it. Gleason's characterization of Gleason would give a psychiatrist a few interesting hours of speculation, but Gleason the actor played Gleason the personality in fine style.

Even the direction, by Norman Jewison, varied with the script. The scenes in the hideout were extremely well done, but the pandemonium that reigned in the CBS and Gleason offices wasn't confined to the script. Jewison couldn't get his people to jell.

The Chevy Show

"The Happiest Day," with Irvin Graham contributing original book, music and lyrics, was a frothy tale hardly worthy of great effort but certainly not deserving of the poor handling given it by its co-directors Bob Finkel and Dean Whitmore, who apparently were unable to cope with the line of fantasy demanded by the script. Indeed, this "Chevy Show" hour Sunday (23) on NBC-TV was only fantasy when Wally Cox, as a guardian angel, was on stage.

Of course, Cox had the only original role, so to speak, and that may have had something to do with his superlatively light performance. Still and all, the weaknesses of direction were evident throughout the first 40 minutes of the 60-minute show; How many times has an audience seen the lovely Janis Paige cast as a poor working girl, or Jack Carson as the poor slob who can't hold onto his girl (until the final curtain) and Charlie Ruggles as the wise, endearing old man? Obviously, the casting was far from ingenious. However, as the rich boy who wins then loses the beautious secretary, Craig Stevens was alright, but then his role made very few demands on him.

There was a shrillness to the acting that must be laid at the doorstep of the co-directors, of whom Finkel was also producer. Yet when it came time for Cox, as Miss Paige's "guardian angel" who arranges for "The happiest day" in her life (a date with her boss, Stevens), he is delightful. Graham, the author, had a better idea of what he wanted to do with his angel than he did with his people; Cox was made out as a kind of Greek chorus and ethereal engineer, who moved what little plot there was.

Graham's lyrics were deft and his music, while not whistleable, still served its purpose. Art.

OTHELLO
With James McCracken, Maria van Dongen, Rudolf Knoll, Robert Thomas, Leonhard Paeckl, Heinz Borst, Mary Davenport, Siegfried Tappolet, Wolfram Mertz
Producer: Ettore Cella
Director: Herbert Graf
Conductor: Nello Santi
150 Mins.; Sun. ,8.05 p.m.
Swiss Television from Zurich

As a first step in a closer collaboration between Swiss state-owned, non-commercial tv and the Zurich Stadttheatre, initiated by Zurich's new opera chief, Herbert Graf, this videotape version of '60-'61's most successful opera production was telecast to a generally warm response by longhair buffs and laymen alike.

Inevitably with experiments like this, technical deficiencies were still evident, especially some cases of faulty lighting and sound control. However, in view of the fact that the Stadttheatre where the tape was shot during a regular performance of the Verdi opera, is unequipped for telecasting and that lack of time cancelled out lengthy rehearsals and preparations, it was an amazingly well-handled job.

Even on the small tv screen and sans color, this Herb Graf production, which opened the current season last fall and has emerged as the season's top b.o. and word-of-mouth entry, impressed as a theatrical event of rare magnitude. Beside the topnotch directorial job as well as the fiery batoning by young Italian maestro, Nello Santi, this was chiefly due to an ensemble of magnificent singing voices which included three U. S. singers: tenor James McCracken whose Othello ranks among the best to be found today; contralto Mary Davenport as Emilia and tenor Robert Thomas as Cassio. High powered performances, both vocally and acting-wise, were also turned in by Maria van Dongen (Desdemona) and Rudolf Knoll whose Iago was remarkably free of false histrionics. The opera was sung in its original Italian, with short summaries in German before every act. Mezo.

THE NEW AMERICANS
With Ian Trethowan
Producer: James Bredin
60 Mins., Wed., 9:35 p.m.
Associated TeleVision, from London

Reporter Ian Trethowan, who clicked last year with his "Main Street, U.S.A." skein, aimed to portray the new American administration, its personalities and objectives, in this hour-long filmed digest. On the whole, he succeeded. Chief impression, for overseas viewers, was of an alert body of men, alive with social conscience and snipping energetically at red tape. Trethowan contrasted the Kennedy regime with the outgoing Eisenhower outfit and claimed that men who aren't ashamed to read books were replacing the golfers. He also emphasized that it was too early to judge the new President's capacity, but clearly established that he thought it pretty huge.

The hour kicked off with an outline of the new Cabinet personalities, and President Kennedy himself, in the first tv interview he's granted to foreigners, explained how he interpreted the "New Frontiers" he intended to cross. He stressed the need for education in the scientific field. Press Secretary Pierre Salinger touched on the new administrative methods sparked by Kennedy—direct communication with Cabinet officers, his liking for opposing views to be presented to him coherently so that he could come to a quick decision.

Less familiar on this side of the Atlantic were the internal problems, and Labor Secretary Arthur Goldberg firmly stressed the need for reducing unemployment from its present seven per cent level to a minimum of four per cent. Similarly, Chester Bowles cast light on the Kennedy desire to re-establish good relations with Africa, Asia, and Latin America, but without impairing cooperation with Europe and NATO.

Such new devices as the Peace Corps were explained, and the feel of this part of the program, augmented by the lively comments of Attorney-General Robert Kennedy and Special Assistant Bundy, was of a thrusting body of men, determined to give the American image a new look.

Trethowan went on to examine the difficulties likely to be encountered with Congress. Kennedy supporter John Brademas dissected the differences with the British system, where executive and legislative bodies are one, and the dissident voice of Republican Senator Barry Goldwater was the only cloud in the silver sky. He came out against any compromise with the Commies, wanted the Cuban revolution struck down by force if need be and an out-and-out declaration that the cold war would result in an American victory.

Maybe, for internal consumption, "The New Americans" was too heavily pro-Kennedy on too slim evidence of present achievement. But it certainly gave an encouraging boost to American prestige on this side of the water. Ian Trethowan was capable throughout, though lacking in the final ounce of personality ideally required. James Bredin was the admirable producer. Otta.

AUF DEN SPUREN DES HENKERS
(On the Tracks of the Hangman)
Writers: Peter Schier-Gribowsky, Carsten Diercks
40 Mins.; Tues., 9:20 p.m.
West German TV, from Hamburg (film)

The trial of the Nazi war criminal, Adolf Eichmann, has had its effect on German television. "On the Tracks of the Hangman," telecast the day the trial started in Israel, was a 40-minute documentary which traced Eichmann's life from his home town, Solingen, to his Argentinian hideout. Report deserved a high rating and was one of the best documentary programs seen on domestic tv lately.

The creators, Peter Schier-Gribowsky and Carsten Diercks, deserve a special compliment for having had the courage to leave nothing unsaid and to exploit all the possibilities to acquaint German televiewers with the character and mentality of the mass killer. They interviewed eye-witnesses and even approached some of his relatives. It was depressing to hear that some used to think very highly of him. Some called him "a dear good fellow" when asked what impression he made on them. It was brought out that this man, murderer of millions of innocent people, liked classical music, played the violin and led a respectable married life. The two reporters also utilized excerpts from documentary pix on Nazi concentration camps.

Schier-Gribowsky and Diercks did an outstanding job which will be long kept in mind. It was also a necessary report for those who are apt to forget certain things too easily. Technically, the program was outstanding. Hans.

DUBLINERS
Director: Michael Ingrams
Writer: Jack White
30 Mins., Fri., 10:30 p.m.
Associated-Rediffusion, from London

This amiable filmed report took as its connecting link the literary reputation of Dublin. Thread of argument was that the most potent scribes — Bernard Shaw, Swift, Sean O'Casey, and James Joyce— had achieved their memorable work by emigrating. Was exile indispensable for Dublin writers? The subject was thrown at students, actors, artists and the like, and their comments were broken up by reminiscent anecdotes of the aforesaid giants. Director Michael Ingrams assembled the material so that it wasn't overweight with literary musings, and himself spoke a clear, but conventional, commentary on the sound-track.

Highspots were the dabs of portraiture touched in by elderly Dubliners. Garbage-man Paddy O'Reilly stood outside Bernard Shaw's birthplace and recalled how he'd written to the dramatist suggesting that the house should be marked by a plaque. Shaw had written back, saying that posterity would be adequately serviced with his collected works. However, the WANNA BUY A TV STUDIO?

BBC-TV: 'Never on Sunday'

Glasgow, April 25.

"Difficult" plays, plays of a sophisticated nature, and dramas dealing with "the darker side of life" will not be screened on BBC-TV on a Sunday evening, according to Sir Arthur Ilords, the BBC chairman.

He says so in a letter to Mr. J. J. Campbell, Glasgow lawyer, who had protested in a letter that many plays shown on Sunday evenings were "not only sickly, sentimental slush, but also, for youthful viewers, dangerous occasions of sin." Attorney claimed that viewing of Sunday night plays was now banned in many homes, and asked Sir Arthur if the BBC had any safeguards in force against the danger of corruption of youth.

Campbell made specific reference to the play "The Wrong Side of the Park," commenting that, although the author obviously regarded the adulterous theme "as a tender flower, to be preserved in memory's garden, nevertheless health-minded citizens would be more inclined to regard it as a poisonous weed to be forgotten."

The complaining viewer-attorney added, in his protest letter: "Almost every Sunday night now, the same dismal moans and grunts come over the air, from a motley throng of characters, many looking quite demented and all extremely tense in their hot chase after forbidden fruit. It really does get very tiresome."

In his reply, the BBC topper defended the showing of "The Wrong Side of the Park," saying the main body of responsible opinion had felt that the play was an attempt to illustrate the tragedy of failure, misalliance and unhappiness.

"To remove, as you ask, plays that are disquieting in their analysis of human nature would be to impose a censorship that could prevent the presentation of serious drama."

But Sir Arthur agreed that the accent on Sunday evenings should be on material suitable for general family viewing.

"You will find," he said, "that a change in this direction has already been made and that 'difficult' plays, plays of a sophisticated nature, or plays which deal with the darker side of life — they represent only a small proportion of our drama production—will be kept out of Sunday evenings."

Italy's Second TV Network Finally Gets a Govt. Okay; Will Preem Nov. 4

Rome, April 25.

The long-awaited second Italian tv channel will be officially inaugurated on Nov. 4, this year. Official announcement was made here by RAI-TV topper Marcello Rodino at a press conference also attended by the new RAI-TV director general, Ettore Bernabei.

Move comes after a protracted period of preparation and rumors (it had at one time been thought that RAI would start its second network during the 1960 Olympic Games), though as pointed out, it will still become a fact 13 months ahead of schedule. Official agreement which extended RAI-TV's government monopoly in fact states that the net must provide a "Second Program" before December, 1962.

While the current "National" program will continue at its current 10-hour-a-day clip, the new outlet will at least at the start be limited to two-three hours every evening, probably in the 9-11 p.m. niche.

Not much is known at present concerning the type of fare to be exposed, RAI merely stating that

BBC, Govt. Renew Tint TV Huddles

London, April 25.

The BBC and the Government have launched new huddles to discuss the coming of color television. This was admitted by the Postmaster - General, Reginald Bevins, in a reply to questions in the House. Present situation is that Bevins regards the question of line definition as of more current urgency than color.

Asked why he did not allow the BBC to have a pilot experimental scheme using 405 lines instead of 625 to gain more practical experience of transmission and reception, Bevins was emphatic: "It would be a mistake. Once you allow an experimental system on 405 lines you are liable to create a demand for sets that in three or four years time may well become out of date."

Bevins denied that "he was pandering to the interests of Independent Television Authority. I must consider what the BBC has to say since they reopened the matter following earlier discussions."

NBC's $15,230,000 2-Week Wrapup On '61-'62 Entries

Since April 10, NBC-TV has firmed up business for '61-'62 worth a total of approximately $15,230,000. About $9,720,000 of it is in deals for nighttime hours (time & talent), about $5,000,000 for daytime programming and another $410,000 for sports.

Biggest confirmation came from Nabisco for a full alternate-week hour of "Wagon Train." Other nighttime biz came from Colgate ("Thriller"), Warner - Lambert ("Captain of Detectives" and "Wells Fargo"), Brown & Williamson ("Detectives"), Liggett & Meyers ("87th Precinct"), and R. J. Reynolds (alt. half of "Train," which makes the Wednesday show full up since Ford owns the other 30-minute period).

Big daytime buys were by Thos. Leeming for about $1,500,000, Pillsbury for $2,000,000 and Ex-Lax for $1,500,000. Ford and Philip Morris, each paying $200,000 for a quarter of the event, topped the sports buys with purchases in the National Football League championship game.

ABC-TV's $1,000,000 Speidel Sponsor Coin

Speidel (watch band manufacturer) has bought a scatter plan in ABC-TV hour shows estimated at $1,000,000 for next season. In all, company has bought 28 minutes in three telefilm stanzas.

Spread of participations for Speidel on ABC-TV covers "Corrupters," "Naked City," and Surfside 6."

EASILY OBTAINED BOTH EAST, WEST

With tv network shows attaining peak 80% celluloid next season, and with live or live-on-tape entries hitting a rock-bottom level, the whole question of what to do about those huge studio and theatre facilities (both east and west) with which NBC and CBS appear to be stuck grows increasingly vexing.

In sharp contrast to the days when Max Liebman and the Jaffe boys were grinding out those NBC-TV specials at the network's vast Brooklyn studios, today it's a forlorn site. Only occasionally is it reactivated for a special but otherwise it has a ghost-town status. Yet over the years NBC was obliged to pour millions into the facility.

It's costing NBC something like $300,000 a year for the lease of the Ziegfeld theatre, N. Y. To all intents it can now be called the "Perry Como Theatre" since that's the only show coming out of the ex-legit showcase. The contract with the original owners stipulates that NBC would have to restore it to its original shape should it decide to dump the theatre. That would tote up to a bundle of dough. Since any self-respecting network merits at least one big showcase for audiences, and since there's no other available facility to house the Como show, NBC is obliged to stick with it.

Then there's the plight of NBC at Burbank on the Coast which, like Brooklyn, represents an investiture of millions but with little action today. Just to open the doors of the plant (like Brooklyn) costs $12,000 a day—so NBC plans to keep it shuttered throughout the summer. Only three daytime shows will be originating from the Coast, anyhow, and two of these are berthed at Sunset & Vine; the other is a tape remote.

It's the fall prospects—or lack of them—that creates the Burbank headache. Aside from a periodic Dinah Shore, Bob Hope, Dean Martin or some such special, the vast, sprawling facility—NBC's answer to CBS' Television City—will hit a blank.

The giant CBS plant on the Coast, with hardly any nighttime action and a handful of daytime shows (the latter only by the grace of shifting originations from N.Y.) poses similar problems. In the days when its giant studios were created, apparently no one foresaw the virtual takeover by film.

Scattered throughout the Gotham are a flock of CBS theatre-studios. Not as many as two, three years ago, but still an overabundance of them—many more than needed for the few tape-on-live contributions to the network skein.

10% Tax Bite on British Com'l TV To Yield $23,500,000 to Exchequer; 'Go Easy on Those Rolls & Bentleys'

By HAROLD MYERS

London, April 25.

Though there had been widespread agitation for moves to cut into commercial tv profits, the industry was caught by surprise with the Chancellor of the Exchequers decision to impose a 10% duty on all charges for commercial tv advertising from May 1 onwards. This will yield around $23,500,000 a year to the Treasury and will make a slight dent in the earning capacity of the major tv companies.

It will, however, seriously hurt the smaller regional companies which, while making a healthy profit, do not have the scope for returns comparable with the four majors. The main victims indeed will be the small regional stations which have either just come on the air or are just about to start transmission.

One particular case in point is that of Westward-TV which is due to start a commercial service in the West of England next weekend (29). Peter Cadbury, chairman of the programming company which has the concession for that area, reckons that the duty will rob them of about $280,000 a year—an appreciable slice by any standards, but particularly so in view of the fact that the Westward tv license, like those of all the other commercial programmers, is due to expire in 1964 when the present Act comes to an end.

It is early days yet to assess the real impact of the levy, and the program companies have not had time to decide whether to bear the burden alone or whether to pass it on either wholly or in part to the advertisers. It is thought likely, however, that they will have to carry the cost themselves as there have been many beefs about the high cost of television commercials.

One surprising reaction to the Budget decision was the comment in the Daily Express editorial. The

WMAR-TV Bldg. Plans

Baltimore, April 25.

Application for permit to erect new building to house WMAR-TV studio and offices on York Road just outside city line, has been filed with Baltimore county government. It was announced that station will continue to emanate actual broadcast signals as before from tower on Television Hill near WJZ-TV. Studio programs originating from the New York road location will be channeled to the transmitter on Television Hill via microwave links.

Studio-office building will have more than 50,000 square feet of floor space and architecture will be along modernized colonial lines that will fit in with building in area.

Niles Trammell's 'We Wuz Robbed' In Fighting Rap

Niles Trammell, as both a partner and managerial factotum of WCKT in Miami, has no intention of taking the threatened loss of his station lying down and even now is mapping an appeal to the Supreme Court. The ex-NBC president who relinquished his network pension rights and consultancy status in order to team up with the Cox-Knight publishing interests in running the NBC affiliated station in Miami, feels he and his partners are taking a bum rap.

Station, of which Trammell owns 15%, took the 10-count in an FCC examiner's preliminary report which took away the channel franchise (although a full FCC decision is still pending).

To the claim (during the period when the industry was on the D. C. hot seat) that, in seeking the VHF franchise, he had trafficked with FCC members, Trammell points to the fact that he did no more, no less than others were doing in the industry at a time when, in actuality, it was the fashion of the FCC membership to seek out the broadcasters.

Going in Trammell's favor is the Peabody award the station received last week, indicative of WCKT's recognition of its public service responsibility. Also a track record of industry contribution dating back to his longtime NBC prexy regime when he played a key role in developing broadcasting patterns.

Who's Gonna Take Brit. TV Tax Rap?

London, April 25.

Top level meetings have been taking place during the past few days among the commercial programming companies to decide whether any of the 10% of tax on tv advertising from May 1 imposed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his budget last week can be passed on or whether it must be met by the networks themselves.

On present performance it looks as if the Chancellor's estimate was a cautious one. He calculated that it would yield $23,500,000 a year but the estimated yield for March alone would have been over $2,330,000.

The return for the 10 commercial tv companies for March hit a new high with total ad revenue exceeding $23,334,000, and in the first quarter of the year the income was running 20% above the same quarter last year. The March total was 22½% better than March 1960.

Leading the field for March was Associated-Rediffusion, the company which has the weekday concession in the London area, with total ad revenue, according to Nedia Records, of $4,984,000. Associated Television were close behind in second place with $4,676,000, followed by Granada with $4,448,000 and ABC-TV with $2,800,000. The latter company has only weekend concessions for the Midlands and North of England territories.

Autolite Buying 'Racer' on ABC-TV

Hollywood, April 25.

Ford Motors, through its subsidiary, AutoLite, has signed on as sponsor of the new teleseries "The Racer" scheduled to air in the 7:30-8 p.m. Friday time slot over ABC-TV in October.

According to series producer Phil Shuken, 13 segments of the John Ashley-Brian Kelly co-starrer have already been lensed at Republic Studios, and an outstanding slate of 39 more segs will enter production shortly. Budget for the series is estimated at $58,000 per skein in a format dealing with sports and race cars. Part of series' filmage will be lensed in Europe, producer said.

Sale to Ford through ABC Films quashed prior rumors that "Racer" might be dropped by the auto company, although it acquired option of series through recent purchase of the AutoLite Battery Corp.

Series format was originally owned by Nick Schenck who sold it to AutoLite in a package deal calling for Albert J. Cohen to produce. Latter lensed several episodes before Shuken took over reins.

Present producer, summoned from Europe by ABC Films last week for lensings, will script a half dozen more segments, after which he will fulfill a supervisory capacity due to another commitment.

Shuken's other assignment involves more than a score of scripts for the continuing "The Real McCoys" teleseries, of which he is signed as chief writer.

VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top ten syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

(*) ARB's Nov.-Dec. 1960 survey covered a multi-week period. Syndicated shows sharing one of the weeks with an alternating or special program could not be properly judged for comparative performance. Therefore, Nov.-Dec. data will be limited to those syndicated shows which played in all weeks.

VARIETY - ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top ten network shows on a local level and offers a rating study in depth of the top six syndicated shows in the same particular market. This week ten different markets are covered.

In the syndicated program listings of the top ten shows, rating data such as the average share of audience, coupled with data as to time and day of telecasting competitive programming in the particular slot, etc., is furnished. Reason for detailing an exact picture of the rating performance of syndicated shows is to reflect the true rating strength of particular series. Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations and/or advertisers to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY. Coupled with the rating performance of the top ten network shows on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every tv market in the U. S.

(*) ARB's Nov.-Dec. 1960 survey covered a multi-week period. Syndicated shows sharing one of the weeks with an alternating or special program could not be properly judged for comparative performance. Therefore, Nov.-Dec. data will be limited to those syndicated shows which played in all weeks.

Gentleman's Disagreement

Such is the peculiar intimacy of television that there probably isn't a viewer alive who doesn't consider himself a show-business insider.

Today, the cab-driver who discusses "timing" is not talking about cylinders, and the barber who chats about "residuals" isn't referring to the curls on his cutting-room floor.

Perhaps that's why there's a special air of expectancy among viewers when "The Nation's Future" announces a debate on the entertainment industry itself. Throughout this broad land, you can almost hear viewers musing, "Ah, they're playing our song!"

This Saturday night, as it happens, the series will again be airing an important, show-business issue. Otto Preminger and Dore Schary will argue the question, "Should the Movie Industry Classify Its Films?"—a subject now being hotly and heavily thrashed out within the motion-picture business itself.

The avowed purpose of classification—either compulsory or voluntary—is to discourage groups from seeing movies which, in the opinion of the classifier, might exert a harmful influence. (Most classification has certain age groups and religious denominations in mind.)

Since both Preminger and Schary have long been outspoken champions of freedom-in-the-arts, their appearance in opposite corners this Saturday evening might, at first blush, seem a bit odd.

AT SECOND BLUSH, however, the casting is not so strange. Preminger strongly feels classification would prevent censorship from outside the motion picture business, while Schary holds that classification is itself a kind of censorship.

Because neither man has ever had a reputation for reticence, illogicality or blanching-under-fire, their meeting this week-end should be a dandy. Indeed, it promises to be TV's most attractive debate on a show-business issue since last New Year's Eve, when Steve Allen and Mort Sahl crossed swords (borrowed from an old Doug Fairbanks movie, as we recall) on the topic, "Should There Be Any Taboos for Comedians?"

Most of that "Nation's Future" session was quite serious and provocative (as might have been expected from two thinking-men's humorists) but the hour was also generously parsleyed with laughter.

Some of the lustiest guffaws came during the questioning of the debaters by the studio audience. In fact, the second question asked was posed by a man who looked and sounded strangely like Chico Marx (largely because he was). "What," he demanded to know, "What are we doing here on New Year's Eve?"

A while later, another spectator inquired, "Wouldn't it help to develop comedians better if we gave them a little more freedom, less taboos?"

"Certainly," answered Allen. "Les Taboos happens to be a very funny comedian."

If executive producer Irving Gitlin has seen fit to include a very small number of show-business topics among the 20 "Nation's Future" debates held thus far, it's simply because we live in an age where other, terribly important issues fairly cry out for priority.

Nuclear testing. International birth control. Sit-in strikes. Loyalty oaths. African Independence. Just to mention a few such crucial areas treated since the series' debut last November is to review a procession of the most vexing problems of our times.

Each of these subjects, and others, have been argued by two carefully selected authorities—men chosen not merely for their stature in their respective fields but for their ability to reflect that stature in extemporaneous debate before the TV cameras.

IT'S NO ACCIDENT that these intellectual jousts on "The Nation's Future" come off so well. Producer Arthur Barron and staff know that even the most absorbing of subjects can be a bore if the show's elements are not assembled with an eye toward maximum viewer interest.

They know too, however, that this end must never be sought at the expense of fair play. Thus, it's not enough that the two debaters of the evening be well-matched; the studio audiences must also be carefully balanced out.

That's why invitations to organizations representing all points of view are sent out well in advance of each show, with certain seating sections reserved to forestall the possibility of any one group's "packing the house" by getting there fustest with the mostest.

To help home audiences prepare for the debates, NBC and its affiliates distribute a quarter-million Discussion Guides to schools and national organizations each week. The Guides contain background material; arguments on both sides of the issue; and a list of suggested reading materials.

"THE NATION'S FUTURE" never really hopes to settle any major question in an hour of air time. But it does aim to stimulate viewers to continue the discussions on their own. Certainly, there's never been a time in our history when "talking things out" has been so necessary.

No one is more aware of that, we believe, than the distinguished debaters (Dr. Edward Teller, Rev. Martin Luther King, Sir Julian Huxley et al.) who've consented to appear on the series over the last six months. And highly satisfying to us have been their post-program "thank you's" for the fairness with which they were treated (both on and off-camera) by the program's staff.

Perhaps the most enthusiastic in this respect was author-economist J. Kenneth ("The Affluent Society") Galbraith, who came here from Washington, D. C. to appear on the show two months ago. Through a technical foul-up, we had two limousines waiting for him when he arrived at LaGuardia Airport.

After his return to Washington, Galbraith sent us a note saying he'd be delighted to do an encore on the series anytime we wished, "even if there's only one limousine waiting for me next time." Has higher tribute ever been paid to a television show?

SG's New Technique To Convert Cinemascope Theatricals To TV

Screen Gems' technical director M. Peter Keane has perfected a system of converting Cinemascope theatrical features for telecasting.

The system is important in today's features-to-tv field, with more and more post-'48s being released to the tv market, a period when Cinemascope enjoyed its heyday. It's understood, via stations, that Seven Arts Associated is working on a similar technique.

This is the way Keane explains his system:

In the theatre, when a Cinemascope film is projected, the image is more than twice as wide as it is high. On a tv set, the image is very little wider than it is high. This means that in a theatrical Cinemascope film, when actors are considerably left or right of the center of the picture, they would not be seen when this film was telecast, unless the Screen Gems technique or a similar system were used.

The technique involves considerable editorial judgment, as well as the invention and design of special pieces of equipment.

In preparing new negatives from which to make release prints for telecasting purposes, it is customary to start with a 35m fine-grain master of each subject, from which a 16m duplicate negative is optically produced. If this were done for a Cinemascope film making no allowance for the fact that the image is actually compressed sideways, two to one, then the duplicate negative also would have the images compressed. If prints from such a negative were telecast, the home viewer would see all of the action, but the actors, buildings, cars and, in fact everything would appear as though they had overdone the Metrecal bit.

In producing these duplicate negatives, therefore, special lenses are used to take out the "squeeze" that is in the fine grain master.

In doing so, more than 50% of the width of the image is lost to the 16m dupe negative. This accounts for certain situations in which Cinemascope films on tv will show a blank set with dialog coming from the loud speaker. In this case, the actors are off the tv screen, because the SG technique or similar systems have not been used.

For its system, SG has built a special Moviolas that indicate the exact area that the tv viewer would see from a squeezed Cinemascope film. Using one of these, the film editor running a Cinemascope print can easily tell whether or not the actors will be telecast. If not, he selects a position left or right from the normal center position and indicates this in a precise record, listing the exact frame in which the movement, left or right, is to start.

The laboratory then has a simple job from this point on. Starting with the first frame of picture in each reel, the lab manufactures an unsqueezed 16m duplicate negative from the squeezed Cinemascope 35m fine-grain master, using the notes to position the picture left or right, as indicated by the film editor.

The editor has in fact thereby reedited the Cinemascope version of this film to a flat version for telecasting. SG system takes less than two working days for conversion. Among SG post-'48s now in distribution that have been so converted are "My Sister Eileen," "Long Grey Line," "Last Frontier," and "Fire Down Below."

ZIV-UA 'DIAMONDS' INTO 83 MARKETS

With Max Factor and Kroger Co. heading its sponsor list, Ziv-UA's Brod Crawford starrer "King of Diamonds" racked up 83 markets.

Kroger, through Campbell-Mithun, signed for the series on WDAF, Kansas City; WHIO, Dayton; and WCPO, Cincinnati. Max Factor bought the show for placement on KONA, Honolulu.

Roster of stations now includes: WFLA, Tampa; WGN, Chicago; KCPX, Salt Lake City; WBTV, Charlotte, N.C.; WBRET, Scranton-Wilkes Barre; WFMJ, Youngstown; WCCO, Minneapolis - St. Paul; WLAC, Nashville; KCRA, Sacramento; KDRO, Colorado Springs, Colo.; WTVM, Columbus, Ga.; and KHQ, Spokane.

Jack Barry's Kid Show

Jack Barry returns to tv emceeing his own show on WNTA-TV, Newark-N.Y., starting May 6. The Saturday at 7 p.m. half-hour outing is titled "Kidding Around," and is described as an interview-variety show with children.

Picking up the tab is Osrow Products, makers of car washes and other products, via Gamut Advertising.

Barry had been partnered with Dan Enright and had last emceed "Twenty-One," which sparked the Charles Van Doren quiz scandals. There was no testimony linking Barry to any rigging.

Technicians Fear WNTA-TV Lopoffs

International Brotherhood of Electrical Engineers, local 1212, is objecting to the sale of Channel 13 in New York to educational tv interests. Objection is steeped in the fear that turning over one of the city's seven video channels to further decline in employment for the educators will merely cause a industry technicians. IBEW also feels that the move won't materially improve local programming.

By its own count, the IBEW local lost 64 men through CBS firings and another 13 late last week through layoffs at WNTA-TV, which is on Channel 13. Labor in tv dreads further cutbacks by fall, since there has been a substantial falloff in the amount of live and taped tv being done as opposed to the old days when live tv was king of the airwaves and when the live technical unions. IBEW and the National Assn. of Broadcast Employees & Technicians (at NBC, where there have also been largescale cuts of late), were flourishing.

It's held likely that IBEW will enter a formal objection with the FCC about the attrition of live tv programming throughout the industry and, particularly, at CBS, where the union has jurisdiction.

IBEW execs feel that the educational people who seem closest to getting Channel 13 from National Telefilm Associates might better spend the more than $5,000,000 the station will cost for programming. Union says that if it is spent on quality programs the seven N.Y. outlets can—if necessary through the FCC—be made to air the educational stanzas. Basic fear, as expressed by IBEW, is that the educational people will have a hard time making ends meet once they've gotten the station, and, as a case in point, the union points to the Pacifica Foundation in non-commercial radio as having a difficult time of it financially.

The 13 men believed to have been fired by WNTA are from among the 53 IBEW rank-and-filers who work at the company's radio and tv outlets.

CBS NAMES WESTIN FOR EUROPE PROD.

Av Westin has been named to the new post of CBS News producer and director for Europe. He'll be in charge of production of all news material originating in Europe for CBS News, as well as in charge of all assignments flowing to Europe from N.Y. and Washington.

Westin, who will report directly to CBS News v.p.-general manager Blair Clark, will be stationed in London, with the appointment effective in mid-June. Westin, a youthful vet of CBS News, has functioned as both a producer and director. He's currently operating on Fred Friendly's "CBS Reports" producer staff, but is being pulled away for "Project Mercury" coverage prior to his departure for London.

Japan Provisions Governing Vidpix Get Clarification

Clarification of the new provisions governing the Japanese market was issued by the Motion Picture Export Assn., whose various representatives around the world are actively engaged in building the export field for American tv interests.

MPEA expanded on some of the provisions regarding the overall increase of the total allocation of 45% of the new fiscal year starting April 1. MPEA's statement also made clear that the Japanese government does not formally sign a trade agreement with any outside trade association, but issues policies after discussions with interested parties. Most active in these discussions which led to this year's liberalization has been Irving Maas, MPEA's v.p. in Tokyo.

The overall increase in the total allocation from the past year's budget of $2,100,000 to $3,000,000 for the current fiscal year is the only limitation on imports. Under the new policy there are four separate categories for tv film importation; each limited only by the total amount of dollars to be made available to the tv stations.

1. For Series: This is the network budget, with network being defined as a combination of stations covering, at a minimum, the Tokyo and Osaka regions. There are five such networks and each is allocated $8,000 per week—a total of $2,080,000. The money to be spent only for regular tv series and not for feature films.

2. For Global Allocation: This is the per station budget and is divided among the individual stations according to market size. There are no restrictions on the types of film the station may buy under this category. It totals $610,000.

3. For Color TV: The budget is for color film only. It totals about $150,000 but actually will serve to provide more color film than the amount indicates. The buying station must charge only one-third the cost of a color film against this allocation. The other two-thirds must come from the other categories.

4. Other Allocations: No specific total is given in the official regulation for this budget, but it is understood to amount to around $160,000. It includes documentary films of news and sports nature.

MPEA, in its statement, wasn't nearly as rosy-hued as John McCarthy, prexy of Television Programs Export Assn. McCarthy said he has secured a pledge from Japanese government looking toward the end of all restrictions in the next fiscal year. MPEA offices in Tokyo said it's hard to predict what the Finance Ministry will do next fiscal year, although the ministry is studying the abandonment of all import restrictions.

O'Seas Prices On Telepix

Here is a market-by-market rundown of average prices secured for commercially good half-hour telefilm properties in the world market. The prices, for the most part, are for one run. In some markets, there can be quite a range between the high, low and average prices. For example, in England, average price for a half-hour episode is $2,800. But a skein made in England, under a co-production deal, can bring as high as $7,500 or more. In Canada, an English network deal with CBC can bring $4,500 per episode, as opposed to $3,000 in syndication. In Japan, price ceilings have just been lifted and the $900 average price cited is an anticipated estimate. Here is how the world market's price structure shapes up:

TV Stations, Inc. Sets Confab At NAB Meet

Warren Bahr, v.p. of radio and tv at Young & Rubicam, will be the guest speaker at the annual confab of TV Stations, Inc., at next month's National Assn. of Broadcasters convention in Washington.

Other speakers will include W. D. (Dub) Rogers Jr., chairman of the board, Herb Jacobs, prez, and Norman S. Livingston, v.p.

Rogers will render a progress report on TV Stations, Inc., plans to upgrade syndicated product to network quality without spiraling cost to stations. Reports of Jacobs and Livingston will cover TV Stations new diversification activities, such as the new advertising agency service division and the quality control division.

TV Station's quality control division offices will open on or about May 1 in Hollywood, and will be headed by Lee Savin, formerly general exec for Desilu Productions.

IT'S CNP, NOT SG

The syndicated charts of VARIETY on April 19 erratumed the Chicago, Cleveland and Cincinnati listings of "The Jim Backus Show."

Distrib is California National Productions, not Screen Gems.

CHURCHILL SEGS TO 12 FOREIGN COUNTRIES

Screen Gems, now dubbing the "Winston Churchill" series in four languages, has racked up sales in 12 foreign markets.

Series now is being telecast in England, in Canada on the English CBC network, in Finland and in Australia.

Sales have been made in Argentina, Brazil, Mexico, Uruguay, Philippines, Thailand, French Canada, with sales expected shortly in West Germany and Japan.

Series is being dubbed in Japanese, Portuguese, French and Spanish.

Chertok's 7 Arts Post

Harvey Chertok has been named director of advertising, sales promotion and publicity for Seven Arts Associated. Chertok was formerly supervisor of advertising and publicity for United Artists Associated.

Prior to joining UAA in August, '59, he was merchandising manager for National Telefilm Associates.

KMSP-TV Testing Ground for 20th

Minneapolis, April 25.

Twentieth Century-Fox is using the Minneapolis-St. Paul area as a testing ground for future expansion in the television field according to heads of the studio, here last week for the start of Fox's KMSP-TV tieup with ABC.

President Spyros Skouras said that if the KMSP-TV experiment is successful, Fox will move to acquire additional tv stations. To boost the studio's local property, Skouras plans a weekly parade of Fox movie stars and directors to the Twin Cities. Fox Movietone News will also produce several public service specials, Skouras added.

Pete Lavathes, Fox tv producer head, noted that new experimental shows developed by the film company will be taped in Hollywood and shipped here to be tested on local audiences.

Brazilian TV's Slapdown on U.S. Product in Restrictions on Film Use

Brazil, the fastest growing tv market in Latin America, has adopted a Presidential decree which would virtually bar American product there.

Only hope, as far as American export interest are concerned, is that the newly adopted decree doesn't take effect until Jan. 1, 1962. By that time, the hope is that the government will be persuaded to alter the stiff terms of the decree, signed by President Janio Quadros on April 12.

According to the tv division of the Motion Picture Export Assn., major provisions of the decree are as follows:

1. For every two foreign films telecast, features, vidfilms, or even vidtape, one Brazilian film or vidtaped show must be telecast.

2. During the hours from 7 to 9 p.m., only 30 minutes of station time can be devoted to film. During other hours, filmed shows cannot occupy more than 20% of total station time.

If stations don't comply with the decree terms, abrogation of licenses is the penalty.

Currently, there are 28 tv stations operating in Brazil, 21 of them owned by Diarios Associados. Station owners and operators, all along, have opposed restrictive steps limiting foreign programs. Their contention is that the pool of talent and native facilities are insufficient to program a station. Unions of artists and technicians, however, take the opposite tack, contending the imports throttle their livelihood. It was the unions' position which won out in the decree signed by President Quadros.

MPEA's Brazilian representative Harry Stone is trying to ease the terms of the decree, joining the station operators, advertising agency representatives and others. In N.Y., number of importers, feel the decree may be a "trial balloon" from which bargaining will proceed.

ITC To Unveil Two Syndicated Entries

Independent Television Corp. will have two syndicated shows for fall telecasting, according to Abe Mandell, overall sales v.p.

ITC has been out feeling the market with the Peter Graves starrer "Whiplash," shot in Australia. But that may not be the property. ITC, because of its parent company, Associated Television of England, has a number of other properties in the can or upcoming. What ITC goes with for fall telecasting will depend on the reaction of the market to its various offerings.

Among the properties is an hour-long series, titled "Ghost Squad," produced in association with the Rank Organization. "Ghost" is considered a definite possibility and would be the first hour-long series to be fed to the syndication mill on a first-run basis, if sufficient interest jells to take it off the shelf. Others in the ITC hopper include "Sir Francis Drake," Jo Stafford, and "Supercar."

Wrather's Cleanup On 'Lassie' Residuals

With "Lassie" due for another season on CBS-TV, via Campbell Soup, Jack Wrather Organization has built a sizable nest egg in residuals.

With the completion of the next group of 35 episodes, "Lassie" series will have completed nearly 300 half-hour segments, the majority of which had had only one network run. Many of the earlier "Lassie" episodes now are being syndicated by Independent Television Corp. under the title of "Jeff's Collie."

$4,000,000 'Susie' Gross for ITC As Syndicated Entry

Independent Television Corp. disclosed some figures indicative of the grossing performance of its more successful skeins.

"Susie," according to ITC, has racked up almost $4,000,000 in domestic syndication and foreign sales since 1956 when, as "Private Secretary," it departed the Sunday night CBS-TV lineup.

The Ann Sothern starrer is currently being seen in 183 domestic markets and in 37 countries outside the U.S. Today, in local sales, "Susie" is being seen for the fourth, fifth and sixth time in such major markets as Los Angeles, Dallas and Atlanta. Skein is in its seventh and eighth run in cities like N.Y., Baltimore, Detroit, and New Orleans. Chicago is seeing "Susie" for the 10th time and Washington, for the 13th.

"Fury," on NBC-TV since October, '55 and in syndication as "Brave Stallion" since 1959, has brought in $6,815,000. "Fury" preemed on NBC-TV as a Saturday morning show in '55, sponsored by General Foods and Borden. In the spring of '60, NBC bought the show for another two years and "Fury" is now being sponsored by the National Biscuit Co., Miles Labs and Sweets Co. of America.

In syndication, under "Brave Stallion" title, its in second and third run in many markets.

$1,000,000 Sales On 'Dick Tracy' Cartoons

Television Personalities, Inc., has hit the $1,000,000 gross mark in sales on its "Dick Tracy" cartoon series.

New stations added to the list of some 30 markets include: WBS, Atlanta; KPRC, Houston; KENS, San Antonio; WTTV, Indianapolis; WPTA, Ft. Wayne; WPRO, Providence.

"Magoo" series, also marketed by Television Personalities, under the sales direction of v.p. Al Unger, has added WTMJ, Milwaukee; and WSB, Atlanta, to its list.

1961 GROSS WILL TOP $30,000,000

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

In the hectic vidfilm syndie biz, some semblance of balance is offered in the foreign market. The past year has shown an overall improvement in the foreign field, with markets such as Canada and West Germany growing, and ceilings lifted in Japan. A few new markets have entered the tv arena.

A good commercial property in the foreign field, including Canada, can realize a potential of $22,205 for a half-hour episode, as the accompanying market-by-market rundown tabulates. No property ever reaches that maximum potential circulation, although a few properties have come close.

Although the foreign field for vidfilms is on the whole healthy, it's beset by many difficulties. There are sore spots ranging from Brazil (see separate story) to quota restrictions in England to outcries against violence in American vidpix in many sections of the globe.

Total vidfilm grosses from the foreign market for '61 are expected to top the $30,000,000 mark set the previous year. On the positive side are the new channels being activated in Canada, the upcoming second channel in West Germany, opening of small markets such as Rhodesia, Chile, Virgin Islands and Curacao. Although these markets at this time don't return many dollars, they represent the first step to a growing potential.

On the negative side are the new restrictions set in Brazil., the loss of Castro's Cuba as a market, the continued stiff restrictions in England, still the number one overseas market if a show can be placed on the air.

Helping the growth of overseas sales are two industry trade associations now functioning, the vidfilm section of Motion Picture Export Assn. headed by William Fineshriber, and Television Programs Export Assn., topped by John McCarthy. Both organizations are busy appraising members of local conditions, prices, etc., and pushing to expand the reach of American programs abroad. Each organization is just about a year old.

The number one market outside the U. S. continues to be Canada. Quite a number of American vidpix series have secured berths on the English Canadian network compared to years ago, although such placements still remain small. As yet, the new Canadian quota hasn't pinched American vidfilm exporters. The quota for all stations is that the programming output of each station shall run in the ratio of 45% native to 55% imported. Buoying the entire Canadian situation is the preeming of second stations, commercial outlets, in a number of key markets.

On the whole vidfilms continue to be the international tv medium, with vidtape presenting problems and features not attracting the same playing time splash on tv as they have achieved in the U. S.

What is attracting more and more attention abroad is the 60-minute vidfilm form, with foreign countries getting on the hour series bandwagon. "Wagon Train" is a fave of England as is "Perry Mason." There might have been many outcries against violence in Japan, but "Untouchables" found a berth at some hefty prices on Japan's commercial network.

Fate of CNP Up In Air as NBC Mulls Complete Lopoff or Drastic Cutback; Report Action Imminent

California National Productions is probably going to be changed drastically soon. Either the syndication-tv film arm of NBC will be eliminated entirely or sharply diminished in size. However, no definite decision either way has been reached.

In any event, it looks like CNP will be the place where NBC, which has been cutting back all along the line among its various divisions, will make the last of the cuts due in the present slash. It's said by top NBC sources that all other departments have now been pared as much as they're going to be for the time.

Suffering from the doldrums besetting the entire syndication business these days plus having the problems peculiar to a syndie outfit owned by a network (i.e., a sense of restraint about selling filmed pilots to webs other than NBC), CNP has allegedly been losing money the last couple of years of operation. One top management source, though, insists it's in the black.

Al Stern, head of the NBC international setup and Calnat, was in Latin America at the beginning of the week, and Herb Schlosser, general manager of the film subsid, is out due to a death in the family. Upon their return, it is reported, action will probably be taken.

Most likely course at the moment seems to be the cutback method, which, among other things, would mean dropping part of the staff, now between 70 and 80 persons on both coasts and in the sales territories around the country. Also, according to one report, Calnat might be restricted next year to the production of at most two syndie series, one being another season of "Blue Angels." Apparently, this would end or seriously mitigate the Calnat practice of doing pilots for possible network use.

If the company is not dissolved, NBC is considering changing CNP's name back to NBC Films.

TV Feature Distribs In NAB Unveilings

Upcoming National Assn. of Broadcasting convention will get a major play by features-to-tv distribs. Another major distrib, Seven Arts Associated, disclosed that it plans to unveil a new package of Warner Bros. pix at next month's convention.

Earlier, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, stated its plans to begin selling post-'48's at the NAB confab. Metro's post-'48 package, it's understood, will consist of a small group of less than 40 titles.

New Seven Arts package contains 41 Warner Bros. titles and will be called "Films of the 50's Volume II." Seven Arts has sold its first group of 40 WB pix, called "Films of the 50's," to 74 markets. Seven Arts, in addition to the Warner Bros. post-'48's, has bought post-'48's from 20th-Fox for which selling plans yet are to be disclosed.

'Late Show,' After 10 Years, Still Pulling 'Em In

The "Late Show" on WCBS-TV, N.Y., now celebrating its 10th anni, has come up with some recent ratings reflecting the big audience pull of the tv pix showcase.

A new high for a Saturday night in the 10-year period was scored March 11 by "Abandon Ship," which registered a 25.2. "Abandon Ship," starring Tyrone Power, a Screen Gems post-'48er, was a first-run entry that particular night.

CBS o&o flagship tallied the Arbitrons for a month's period, stacking the results against previous ratings for the showcase on the basis of days in the weeks. System, thereby, matched a Saturday against approximately 519 other Saturdays in the 10-year period. Time span taken for the Arbitron matching game extended from March 11 through 14, 1961.

During the month's measuring period, there were 18 pix that tabulated 34th or better out of a possible field of 520. Of the 18 pix, nine were first-run and nine reruns.

Among the highs were: "Purple Heart," a rerun of March 5, which posted the fifth highest Wednesday night rating in the history of the "Late Show." Rating of the Dana Andrews starrer was 13.2. The sixth highest rating for the showcase Tuesday nights was posted by "Code of the Secret Service," a rerun, telecast April 4. That drew a 13.1.

Other pix falling in the 34th or better group included: "An Act of Murder," Frederic March; "Strange Conquest," Jane Wyatt; "Tobacco Road," "Fortunes of Captain Blood," and "Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo." The higher rated pix lineup spans the years from 1935 through 1957 for the product.

'Presidents' Set As Vidpix Series

Tri-Video Corp. is prepping a new half-hour weekly film series "The Presidents." Each episode will deal with a President of the U.S., in chronological order, from George Washington through J.F.K.

Jack Goldstein, vet theatrical, film and tv exec, who recently completed the pilot film of a new tv series "The Hidden Key" starring Melvyn Douglas, is executive producer.

Eric Barnouw, the script editor for NBC and at present Professor of Mass Communications Media at Columbia Univ., is script editor for the series as well as writer for many of the episodes. Steven Sharf will act as producer-director.

Research for the project will be done by staff of Columbia's Center of Mass Communications.

Series is designed as a network entry.

12,209 Features Into TV

Total number of theatrical pix now available for tv has hit the high water mark of 12,209, with 2,651 being in the post-'48 category, according to Broadcast Information Bureau's TV Film Source Books.

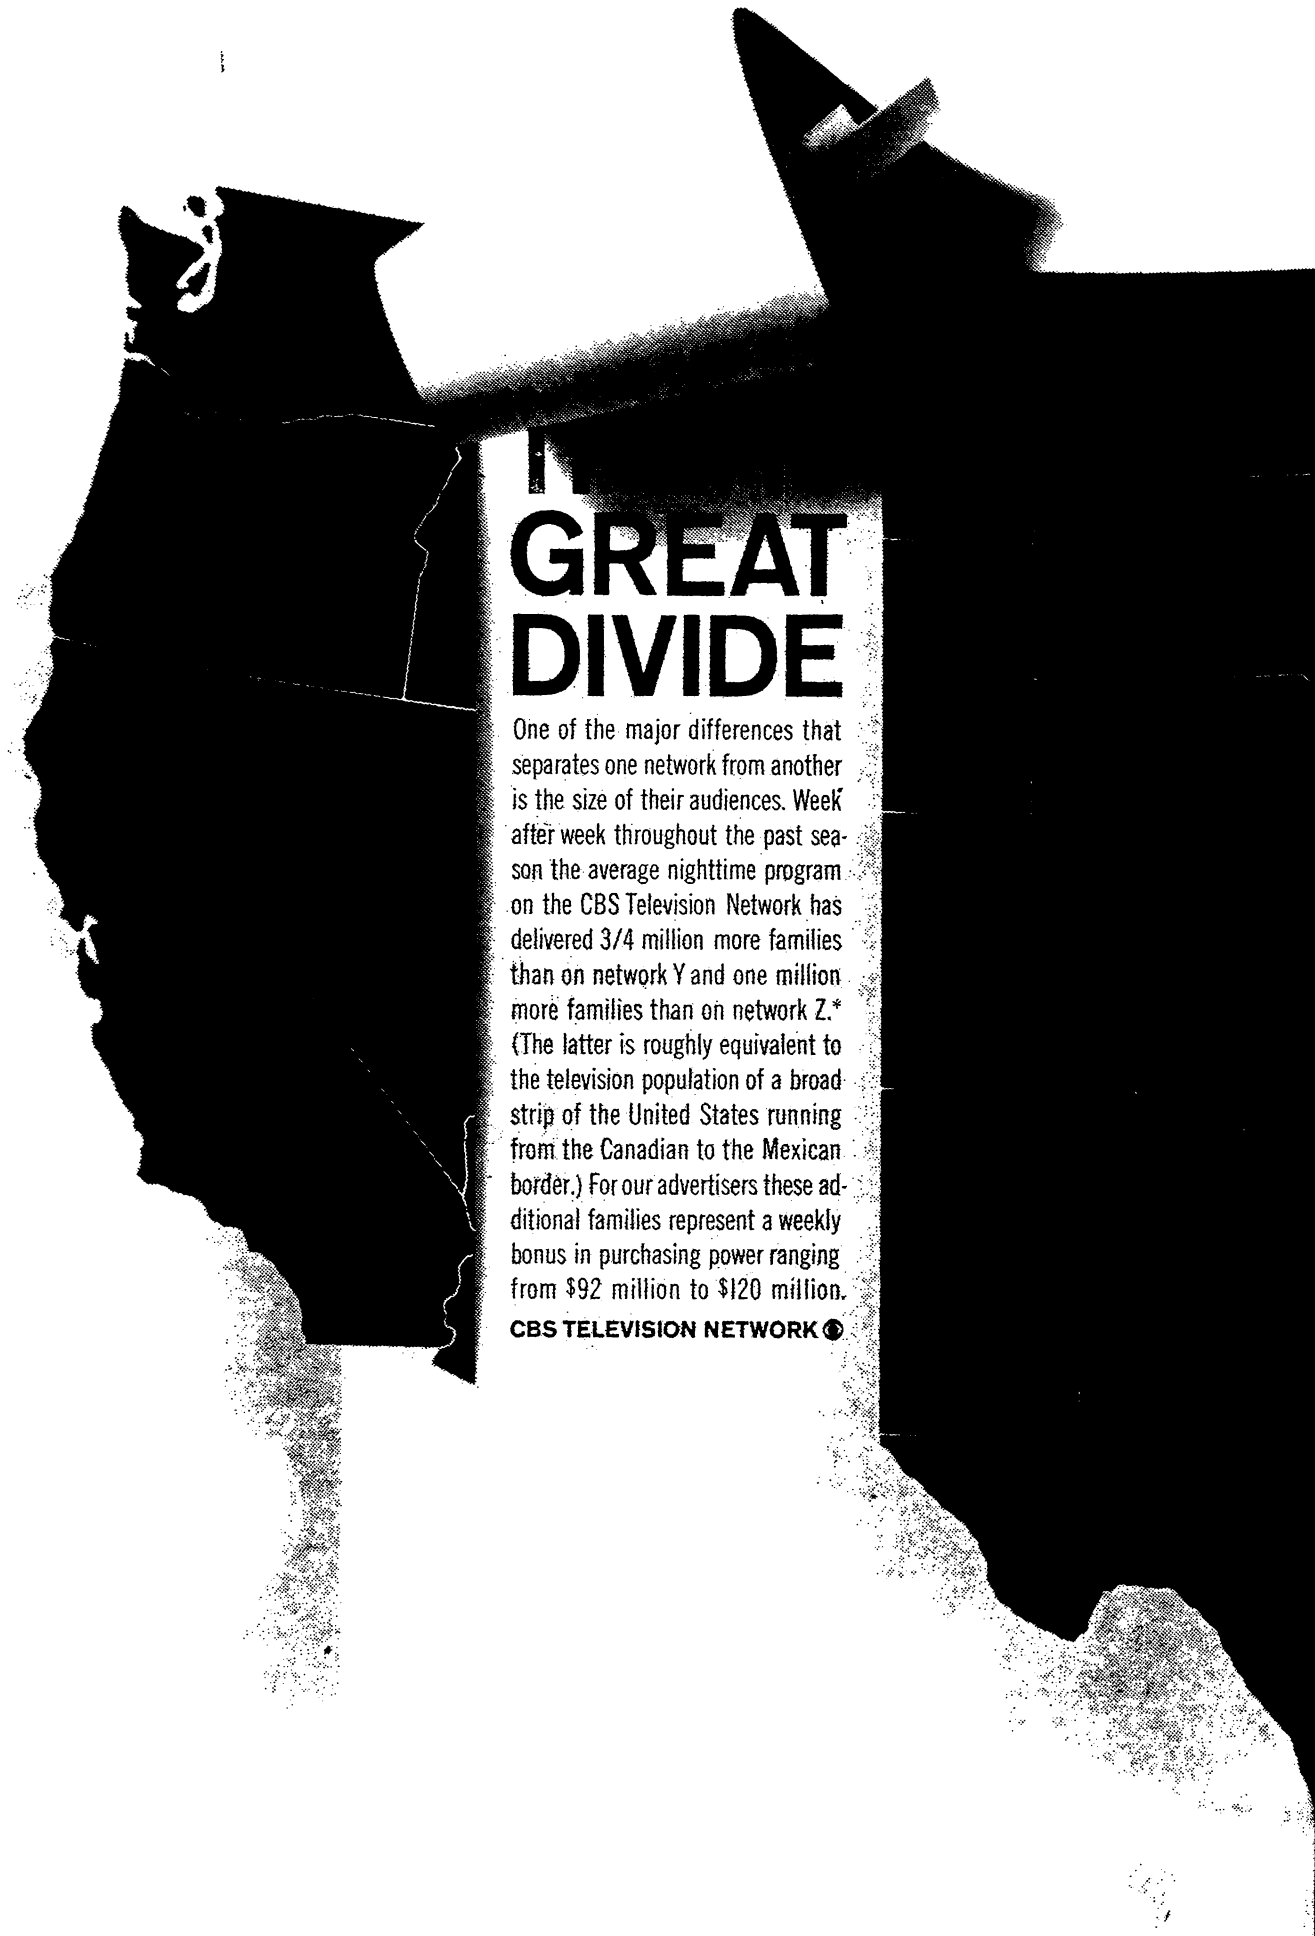
Bureau's latest reports indicate that since last August, 957 pix have been released to tv, 481 of which are post-'48 titles.

Number of westerns in the total bundle of 12,209 pix are estimated at 10%, surprisingly low.

More 7 Arts WB Buys

Another four stations have signed for Seven Arts Warner Bros. package of 40 post-'50 p.x. Stations are WRAL-TV, Raleigh, N. C.; KOLD, Tucson; KRDO, Colorado Springs; and WWL, New Orleans.

Package, which has been out in the market since last October, has racked up 74 markets to date. KOLD, Tucson, bought 11 special features in addition to the WB package. KRDO bought 12 action pix.



THE GREAT DIVIDE

One of the major differences that separates one network from another is the size of their audiences. Week after week throughout the past season the average nighttime program on the CBS Television Network has delivered 3/4 million more families than on network Y and one million more families than on network Z.* (The latter is roughly equivalent to the television population of a broad strip of the United States running from the Canadian to the Mexican border.) For our advertisers these additional families represent a weekly bonus in purchasing power ranging from $92 million to $120 million.

Client Going To Bat With 'Casey' Gets A Premium

ABC-TV insists it is sticking with "Dr. Ben Casey" (out of the Bing Crosby production shop) as the entry for Monday nights between 10 and 11. And as a result, the network is trying like the devil to crack the sales barrier on the stanza.

To guarantee that Crosby's stable gets the show on the air, the producer, for one, is reportedly offering a $4,000 a week "program contribution" to the first advertiser who buys it.

Banking on the possibility that the network will ultimately back off from "Casey" if a sale isn't made shortly, various outside sources have been pushing their own favorites for part of the Sunday slot. Among them has been BBDO, which for Pepsi-Cola, is still trying to find a time period for the half-hour Jane Powell anthology. Whether ABC, which admittedly had rejected the stanza sometime ago, would reconsider it without the guarantee of a full sale (Pepsi only wants half) is doubtful.

With "Casey" still the strongest Monday possibility, "Adventures in Paradise" has been shifted (according to a plan made days ago that has been dropped, picked up and droped many times to Mondays from 10 to 11. "Adventures"-"Casey" parlay for Sunday-Monday apparently has locked Metro's "Asphalt Jungle" out of a fall berth.

Armour and Alberto Culver were supposed to take participations in "Adventures" if it remained a Monday entry next season, but these two potential bankrollers have evidently refused to shift their coin into "Casey," leaving the stanza unsold.

Bob Hope

asserting a role which even transcends show biz—that of a guy who wrote an addenda to the Four Freedoms and convinced a nation that "freedom to laugh" merits equal billing with the basic freedoms. The discussions for Hope to "entertain the world," with the international show getting a showcasing in all tv nations, are now going on among top brass in Washington.

Yet for all these unmatched virtues, if NBC could spread the sponsor loot it would ease matters. Even armed with such "dream data" which shows Hope running on with top Trendex honors among all personalities in the area of sponsor indentification, the one gnawing fact remains—where do you find a single sponsor who will shell out $2,400,000 for six programs?

Way back in the early '50's when it was chiefly a CBS vs NBC rivalry and before the ABC competition began to assert itself, Hope was knocking off Nielsens in the 50's and 60's typical example: 60.6 for his April 8, 1951, telecast, as against a 28.4 for the CBS entry. Even as late as '55 he was still grabbing off 40's, doubling and tripling the competition. In more recent years, with the three-network audience spread, the figure has diminished—but rare indeed has been the occasion when a competing show topped the Hope Nielsen board of directors. Meeting, unlike that of previous years, was without incident.

Stanton laid special stress on the programming successes of the CBS-TV network, on the increasing potential in the foreign field, and on the "vigorous new leadership" at CBS News under Dick Salant and Blair Clark, which he started "is already making its mark" via such newsbeats as Stu Novins' first report on the Cuban invasion and Marvin Kalb's tipoff on a Soviet man-in-orbit days before it happened.

VARIETY-ARB's weekly chart offers a day-by-day analysis of the top feature evening slots in a particular market. On Saturdays and Sundays, daytime feature slots compete with nighttime pix periods for designation as the top feature slot of the day. The analysis is confined to the top rated feature slots in the ARB measured period, broken down by days in the week. The ARB measured period usually covers three or four weeks. Other data such as the time slot and overage share of audience is furnished. Top competition and competitive ratings also are highlighted.

NBC Pubservice

news specials, and a reasonable degree of interest in a new 10:30-11 Wednesday stanza to be done by Dave Brinkley. This is in addition to his nightly news stanza with Chet Huntley, which is sold to Texaco.

Going to daytime information for next season at NBC, web says there will be a weekly total of 16 hours and 45 minutes, compared to this season's 15 hours. Adding up night and day, the '61-'62 weekly total will be 19 hours and 15 minutes, an increase of 17% over this season.

Nighttime public service programs next season will include the nightly news, "Meet the Press," DuPont's 40, the new Dave Brinkley Wednesday stanza and a similar one (maybe by Frank McGee) guaranteed for Friday at 10:30. Additionally, there are 40 guaranteed news-pubaffairs preemptions of an hour length and, on top of that, several "White Paper" and Gulf specials in news or news analyses. NBC maintains that neither "White Paper" nor Gulf will go into the 40 hours of previously mentioned specials. On the basis of what they're doing this season at NBC, the web maintains it is fair to assume that, in addition to the 40 guaranteed hours, there'll be at least another 40 (Gulf, "White Papers," etc.) making two hours of specials in the average week.

The daytime inclusions in the total are "Nation's Future" (moving to Sunday afternoons), "Today," the "Midday" newsstrip, Chet Huntley's Sunday afternooner, religioso series, "Mr. Wizard," "Continental Classroom," a new weekly teenage news show, plus daytime specials.

NBC-RKO

has reached a dead end in the courts. There are the propositions FCC will have to determine:

—NBC and RKO will swap their Philadelphia and Washington, D. C., outlets—NBC's WRCV AM and TV in Philadelphia and WRKO's WNAC AM and TV and WRKO, Boston.

—NBC will sell WRC-AM-FM-TV in Washington to RKO for $11,500,000.

—NBC will buy KTVU, San Francisco-Oakland, for $6,500,000 from San Francisco-Oakland Television Inc.

—RKO will sell WGMS-AM-FM, Washington, to KFWB Broadcasting Corp. (Crowell-Collier) for $1,500,000.

—Philco has applied for the same channel (3) now occupied by NBC in Philadelphia.

—San Francisco Chronicle (KRON-TV and KBAK-TV) has applied for a new tv station on Channel 4, where NBC's WRC-TV is operating.

—NBC applications for license renewals of its Philadelphia and Washington licenses as well as RKO's for WNAC, Boston. Also, San Francisco-Oakland Television's license covering its cp needs an FCC nod.

Above is a vast oversimplification. The multi-city transaction should prove a heyday for communications lawyers, and the hearings should provide enough transcripts to fill a moderate-sized library.

AT&T

has been able to grab AT&T or Bell as a sponsor.

It's also something of a personal triumph for John Karol, CBS-TV sales v.p. in charge of special projects, who closed the deal. Karol's been trying to sign AT&T for 30 years now, since the days he started in radio sales with CBS and afterward as the web's v.p. in charge of sales. That goes back to the "Telephone Hour" in radio, when it was a virtual NBC monopoly and Karol was pressured to try to bring it over to CBS. Karol at one stage of the game preferred not to, because NBC had it on Mondays at 9 against CBS' "Lux Radio Theatre," and Karol figured "Lux" did better than it might have against stronger opposition.

FLICKER TAPE RUNS TWO HOURS LATE IN HEAVY FEATURE FILM BUYING

Off to bearish start, sudden recognition of true value by smart money in TV management spurs brisk buying to bull market proportions

Investment for profit in feature films for TV broke with tradition when Seven Arts offering of top quality, top priced post-50 Warner's found bold buyers among station executives with a keen eye for audience-pulling power regardless of price. Investment quality of the Warner films apparently fits the growth pattern of stations committed to a policy of providing TV advertisers with the best film programming money can buy.

SUPPLY OF FEATURE FILMS OUTNUMBERS STOCKS ON NEW YORK EXCHANGE

Availability of some 11,000 motion pictures makes selective buying a prerequisite to TV station profits

A resounding tribute to the perspicacity of station executives, especially in smaller one-channel markets, is found in their selection of Seven Arts' "Films of the 50's". Outstanding performance wherever telecast bears out their good judgment as analysts of feature film quality.

Reasons for choosing the Warner package are variously stated by station executives. Says A. J. Bauer, General Manager, WINK-TV, Fort Myers, Florida:

"Every year we scour the market for better and better feature films for our sponsored Thursday night 'Variety Theatre'. With literally hundreds of films to choose from, we decided the Seven Arts package is in a class by itself.

"The sponsor is convinced his show is now giving the Fort Myers audience the best feature film entertainment that money can buy."

Says Jean Hendrix, Assistant to the General Manager, WSB-TV, Atlanta, Georgia:

"WSB-TV has always been strong in feature film programming. We acquired the Warner pictures to make it still stronger.

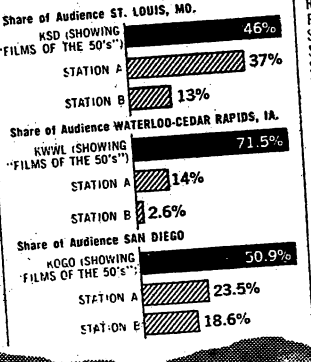
"The first thing we will do is use the 26 color films in a Friday night slot we'll call "Warner Bros. Premiere'. Also; the high caliber of this Seven Arts release gives us pictures we'll run as specials in 'A' time. Actually all of these films have the high quality we require for our spot carriers. All in all I'd say these 'Films of the 50's' will strengthen our leadership in feature film audience here in Atlanta."

Says Robert J. Heiss, Manager of Radio & Television, WTMJ-TV, Milwaukee:

"Unlike some of the assortments we've bought in the past, we can say of these Warner features, all quality, no rubbish."

CHARTISTS SEE FEATURE FILM MARKET HIGHLY SELECTIVE

The record-keeping analyst draws conclusions from profitable performance that accrues to stations willing to invest in top quality product. Typical chart (below) shows correlations of film quality to audience appeal as reflected in ratings, a primary base for outstanding station profits.



QUALITY FILM CONCEPT FINDS SEVEN ARTS SALES UNSCATHED BY RECESSION

"We believe the fact that our sales have run counter to the economic climate," declares Eliot Hyman, Seven Arts President, "stems from our great emphasis on quality product."

In its first six months on the market with the "Vol. 1" package of Warner's "Films of the 50's" Seven Arts has sold 74 TV markets at prices that set all-time highs in the industry.

Television Reviews

mostly in his delivery. The narrator, who ties together the clips of the trial itself with his on-screen words, is largely a personal essayist. Though contrary to the usual style of a tv narrator, the first person does have its value: He's a knowledgeable "observer" and his opinions count. However, the burden of keeping it up through much of the nightly half-hour occasionally leaves him with some relatively limp things to say—verbal padding, which is unimportant yet time-consuming.

His choice of clips from the stuff supplied by Capital is—pun intended—capital. It's fascinating watching for the most part. On Thursday (20) clips of the previous day's activity in Israel were intermingled nicely with background shots of the Eichmann trial. With no fresh clips available on Friday (21) because Thursday was a holiday in Israel, Bishop and his producer Vince Dempsey still did well through an incisive reiteration of Eichmann's confession to two Israeli officials when he was first taken prisoner.

Bishop, in spite of his shortcoming as a performer and his lesser failings as a narrator, has a purpose in mind that is commendable: To give design, other than that supplied by the random chronology of the trial itself—he's been tying together pieces, which to him, give distinct insights into the many facets of the former Nazi assassin.

As for the commercials by Glickman, the big realty company, they are short and clear. The bankroller is performing a considerable public service on all counts.

ERNIE KOVACS SPECIAL
With Maggie Brown, Bobby Lauher, Muriel Landers
Producer-Writer: Kovacs
30 Mins.; Thurs. (20), 10:30 p.m.
DUTCH MASTERS
ABC-TV, from H'wood
(Erwin Wasey Ruthrauff & Ryan)

Ernie Kovacs had a wild time with sight and sound Friday (20) night on ABC-TV. The little special (30 minutes) proved to be only mildly diverting, more mad than funny.

It's okay to sit in on a "much to do about nothing" excursion, if the experience has delights. There were a few delightful moments in Friday's outing, but too many moments had a "so what" ring, full of tricky shots, sight gags and what-have-you that didn't pack a solid yock.

The best gags came with the crawl at the wind-up, with such listings as Art Director and Jewel Thief, so and so, and "a production of El Cheapo subsidiary." An enjoyable segment was Kovacs as a motion picture director, performing the megging chores in front of old footage. The opening sight gags flipped flopped on the laugh—miss meter. Most of the long interlude with music, using crazy effects, proved to be boring nonsense. Music of Tchaikovsky and Bartok just couldn't be downed by Kovacs' inventions, and the mixture of the two, for the most part, didn't jell. Horo.

BULOVA WATCH TIME WITH PAT BOONE
With Fabian, Dorothy Provine, Johnny Mercer, Joanie Sommers, Kingston Trio
Producer-Director: Norman Jewison
Writers: Herb Sargent, Saul Ilson
Conductor: Vic Schoen
Choreographers: Marc Breaux, DeeDee Wood
60 Mins., Thurs. (20), 8:30 p.m.
BULOVA
ABC-TV, from H'wood
(McCann-Erickson)

Producer-director Norman Jewison is to be commended for trying to get more out of his "Bulova" special than he actually had. Working within a mild format designed to be a salute in spring with some pleasant but not too exciting performers, Jewison managed to develop a bright and likable effect some nifty camera shots, imaginative choreographic work (credited to Marc Breaux and DeeDee Wood) and overall good pacing.

Despite Jewison's efforts, the show never came across as a socko stimulant. Star, Pat Boone, lacked the ebullience necessary to project spring's, bubbling quality and his guesters, Fabian, Dorothy Provine, Joanie Sommers and the Kingston Trio had a buoyancy that was sprightly and fresh, but never reached zingy proportions. Yet singer-cleffer Johnny Mercer delivered in his easy-going manner but his patter assignment didn't help much.

The dueting of Boone and Mercer and Boone and Fabian had some pleasing moments as did a medely by Boone, Mercer and Miss Sommers. Miss Provine stirred up some noise with "Some People" from the "Gypsy" tuner, and the Kingstons made much of a "Spring Fever" routine. A "Take Me Out to the Ballgame" sequence between Boone and Fabian came off well, too.

The Bulova people asked a lot of Boone by frequently slotting him as commercial spokesman. He delivered with sincerity. Gros.

PROFILE: GEORGE ROMNEY
With Don Perrie
Producer: Paul Williams
Director: Shields Dierkes
90 Mins., Sun. 2:30 p.m.
WWJ-TV, Detroit

A verbal autobiography obviously requires something worth saying and a person who can say it well, if it is to be effective. If, in addition, the verbal autobiography is presented before a tv camera, the subject's appearance and presence must jibe with his words. On all counts, George Romney, president of American Motors Corp., chairman of Citizens for Michigan, and a leader in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, was excellent. Everything about Romney was impressive—his speech, his looks, his manner and his ability to project very strongly an image of sincerity of purpose and strength of character.

Strangely and, perhaps, prophetically, Romney did not mention American Motors when he was asked by his interviewer, Don Perrie, about his future plans. Instead, Romney concentrated on politics and religion. He told his reasons for turning aside strong bids to become a candidate for governor and for U. S. Senator. But, the door was not slammed shut and the program very sharply pointed up the unmistakeable fact that George Romney would be an extremely difficult man to defeat for any political office.

Romney has ideas and ideals; he is a handsome and charming man; he is articulate and sincere, and all of these qualities come across with amazing impact. He talked engagingly about his early life, which was rugged and hard. He told about his struggles as a young man, his missionary work for his church in England and Scotland in 1926-27, and his cross-country courtship of a woman who gave up a promising film career to marry him. He also revealed that his wife later had a radio program in Washington, D.C.—she read poetry—and that her announcer was Arthur Godfrey.

Romney spelled out his religious convictions with forcefulness and very evident sincerity and what he said could be subscribed to wholeheartedly by a religious man of any faith. Even more forcefully in his quiet but extremely effective way, Romney told about the great need to rewrite the Michigan Constitution which now has been authorized by the voters. He modestly played down the role that Citizens of Michigan, a non-partisan political-action group he organized and chairmaned, played in bringing about the favorable vote.

Don Perrie wisely kept his questions to a minimum, using them merely to prompt Romney. The camera work was excellent, hitting Romney from many angles as he remained seated in an easy chair throughout the program.

This was the initial program in a series of interviews-in-depth, open-end discussions planned by WWJ's Public Affairs Department. It is obvious that Romney was a rare subject who could talk for an hour and a half and still hold interest. In the future, WWJ may have to resort to production gimmicks and a different format in order to sustain the high quality of the initial effort of this very ambitious project. Tew.

PANORAMA PACIFIC
With Red Rowe, Art Linkletter, David Rose, Grant Holcomb, Cecil Smith, Stephen Longstreet, Jean Majors, Gerry Johnson
Producer: Chet Brouwer
Director: Jim Johnson
60 Mins., Mon-Fri., 8 a.m.
PARTICIPATING
KNXT, Hollywood

Information shows are rare in the early ayem on television but KNXT's Bob Wood must have reasoned that touched up lightly by Ralph (Red) Rowe a show of this type could serve a useful purpose and fill a challenging niche on KNXT. Dropped two years ago for undoubted fiscal reasons, it has been restored to good standing and the sales department is hustling to keep it alive.

"Panorama" can be best described as having a little of everything. On the interview line were David Rose ("but I wanted to be an engineer"); Art Linkletter, who disclosed that he'll do a telethon in Australia for the heart fund; Dr. W. A. Young of the Griffith Park Zoo, who brought along two baby chimps; The Times' Cecil Smith, who said there was no outstanding Oscar picture this year and that he was surprised that Ralph Bellamy wasn't nominated for his portrayal of FDR in "Sunrise at Campobello"; Stephen Longstreet, who talked about the Civil War to plug his book, "Gettysburg"; Gerry Johnson, who'll conduct future interviews; Paul Jackson of the police department, who'll give driving tips; Grant Holcomb, who came on twice with spot news; and Jean Majors, who'll take the early risers through their exercises.

That's a big order for any hour show but Producer Chet Brouwer, director Jim Johnson and Rowe (a likeness of Walter Cronkite) crowded it all in due to the absence of interrupting sponsorial pitches. They even had time for a complete playing of Rose's theme song for the show, "Flavia." (Remarked Rose, "it's the first time I've heard it played completely, too").

Show was casually paced by Rowe, who set the stage for the various elements and got out of the way. It's too early for jokes and witty sayings so Rowe just rolled with the tape. For openers the diverse elements were well stitched together by Brouwer and for early risers not frantically fighting the clock it's worth a look. It invariably will get better after the warm-up. Helm.

THE NEW NATIONS
With Carter Davidson, others
Exec Producer: Hal Fisher
Producer-Writer: Davidson
Director: Phil Bondelli
30 Mins., Sat., 1:30 p.m.
WBBM-TV, Chicago (film & tape)

WBBM-TV, which consistently maintains a high standard in public affairs, is impressively represented in the current program exchange between CBS o&os by an informative series on the multifarious problems facing new nations in Africa and Asia, and the implications of those problems on the rest of the world. Series is stewarded by Carter Davidson, who is well versed in his material via his previous careers as journalist and exec director of the Chicago Council on Foreign Relations.

Installment caught surveyed three of the "older" new nations, India, Pakistan and Ceylon, all of them unloosed by England in the late 'Forties and each with distinct internal crises today. Most of the half hour was apportioned to India, partly because of its greater size but perhaps chiefly because of its significance vis-a-vis Red China, the two countries resembling each other in poverty and over-population but taking opposite political roads. Davidson depicted, with film clips illustrating, the industrial progress India is making but told how the Communist party there, and the Commie threat from the outside, were posing serious problems to its democratic form of government.

Key problem in Pakistan was shown to be its differences with India, especially with the U. S. giving greater economic aid to the former, while in Ceylon it was the friction between two resident racial groups that is jeopardizing political stability. Davidson didn't pretend to be thoroughgoing in his treatment, but neither was he superficial. Sole point of cavil is that there were too many interviews (one for each country covered) for the length of the show. Not only were they interruptive, they forced a too rapid delivery of the exposition in order to be accommodated. The time schedule was too tight and made itself felt to the viewer.

Series should succeed in giving its followers fairly substantial understanding of the trials of each new republic, as background to their emergence in the news headlines, both present and projected. As for Davidson, in slightly over a year of professional experience before the cameras he has developed into a big league tv commentator. Les.

THOMSON'S SCOT TV FRANCHISE BLASTED

Glasgow, April 25.

An attack on Scottish commercial television and its program contractor, Roy Thomson, is made in a resolution to be discussed this month by the Scottish Trades Union Congress.

Motion comes from the Heating and Domestic Engineers' Union, and demands the revocation of the license granted to Thomson on the basis that there has been "nothing beneficial to Scotland" in the operation of the company.

The contrary is the case, states the resolution which will be discussed by trade unionists when they meet at Rothesay, near here.

"Its operations have been solely directed to making as much money as possible with the smallest entertainment return."

CBS-TV Retaining 'G-E College Bowl'

A Peabody Award seems to have played a part in ruining NBC-TV's chance to lure "G-E College Bowl" away from its CBS berth. In what is now an annual try, NBC this year made another pitch to General Electric for the Sunday afternoon half-hour (for 5 p.m. on the NBC hookup), and until early last week it appeared as though NBC might get the stanza.

However, after a Peabody went to the show on CBS-TV, the sponsor got the feeling that it might be wiser not to disturb anything just yet and, so, on Friday (21), renewed for another season with CBS. This apparently ruins NBC's Sunday, 5-6 p.m. plans, in which "Bowl" was to be backed to back with a stanza sponsored by an insurance firm at 5:30.

Ex-Capone Guard Sues ABC-TV for 200G As 'Untouchables' Sequel

Atlanta, April 25.

Edward T. Simpson, of Constitution, Ga., in nearby DeKalb County, has filed a $200,000 suit in Fulton Superior Court against American Broadcasting Co., declaring he did not accept a $1,000 payoff while guarding "Scarface" Al Capone during his transfer to Alcatraz Prison in California in 1934.

A retired guard for the United States Bureau of Prisons, Simpson alleged this guilt was "imputed" to him in the television show "The Big Train," a recent two-part show on "The Untouchables" series.

Simpson also denied other "imputations" that he was an accessory to the murder of a fellow prison guard and aided and abetted Capone in an attempt to escape during the transfer by train from the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary to the Alcatraz Island pokey.

He said the "imputations were "false, defamatory and libelous" in a two-count petition filed in Fulton Superior Court Friday (21).

He said the "imputations" were Paramount Theatres, Inc., owners of ABC-TV, and Crosley Broadcasting Corp of Atlanta, owners of WLW-A, tv station which shows "The Untouchables."

Simpson denied that any of guards who made controversial train trip "committed the acts portrayed" on tv show.

He pointed out show did not "portray" the guard accepting the payoff, but he was one of only two guards inside the car in which Capone was riding and the guilt was imputed to him. The other guard, he said, was Comer Head, captain of the guards.

10% Brit. TV Tax

Express, like all the other papers in the Beaverbrook stable, has consistently vigorously attacked the tv operation, but instead of welcoming the Chancellor's action, suggested the attack was in the wrong place. "To attack the advertising revenue of the tv companies is to put an impediment in the way of business generally," the paper noted. "It is to interfere with the vigorous development of competition. Commercial tv is a vast monopoly structure. Monopoly is not dealt with by inhibiting competition."

Commercial tv companies, major film organizations, among others, will also be seriously affected by the proposed payroll tax which the Chancellor has the power to introduce during the year. This will impose a levy of about 50 cents per week per person on the payroll, and in the case of the big outfits employing a thousand or more workers, can mean a tidy anual sum. On top of that there is an increase in profits tax of 2½% to compensate for the slight improvement in the starting scale for surtax.

Of immediate concern to top execs in the Chancellor's warning to keep a close watch on expense accounts and the immediate decision that cars purchased by companies have a ceiling allowance of $5,600. This will eliminate the Rolls Royces and Bentley purchased by companies for the use of their top execs.

there will be no sharp differentiation between the two programs, and that new net will allow viewers at a given moment to vary their fare, for example from light to cultural, from comedy to drama, or from music to news. It's pointed out in this connection, however, that both nets will have separate organizations, and that each will have its own newscasts, at staggered hours so as not to overlap.

It's known that at first, only 50% of Italian territory will be "covered" by the second program (vs over 95% for the current set-up). By the end of next year, this total will rise to about 70%, it's expected.

No news was given about how commercials will be treated on the second program.

Canada TV's Wage Hike

Ottawa, April 25.

Canadian Broadcasting Corp.'s Ottawa headquarters announced ratification, with the National Assn. of Broadcast Employees and Technicians, of the terms of a collective agreement between CBC and NABET.

It gives employees in the bargaining unit a 4% salary increase for the year ending Jan. 31, 1962, plus 3% upping for the next 14 months, effective April 1, 1961. A clause makes the first basic increase retroactive to Feb. 1, 1961. Around 1,400 technical employees of CBC are affected.

Canada's Second TV Web Set for Aug. 11 Preem; 4-Station Sports Teeoff

Ottawa, April 25.

Although a deadline of Sept. 30 was set for its operation, Canada's second television web will preem Aug. 11 with the first of the Big Four football games. The Ottawa headquarters of the Board of Broadcast Governors announced it had okayed the application of S. W. Caldwell of Toronto for a tv network and turned down that of CFTO-TV, a Toronto company planning to form a temporary video web.

Caldwell's network, the first web opposition the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. has ever had, will teeoff with four stations—CFTO in Toronto, CJOH, Ottawa; CFCF, Montreal—and increase to eight later.

In approving Caldwell's application, BBG stipulated the new network would have to provide a minimum of 10 hours a week and submit a report on proposed staff. Grid fans are kudosing the news since it will bring them the football games to which tv rights are held by CFTO in Toronto.

Radio Followup

Fulton Lewis Jr.

Regular listeners to Fulton Lewis Jr.'s 15 minute nightly newscast on Mutual should not have been surprised by the news stories breaking over the weekend about the alleged role of the U. S. Central Intellegence Agency in the abortive Cuban revolution.

About six or seven weeks ago, Lewis went to Miami for a series of meetings and interviews with the leaders of the various Cuban refugee organizations headquartering in that city. Upon his return, Lewis began a series of broadcasts covering the entire Cuban situation and, besides providing illuminating background on the whole problem, scooped just about every other news media in the process.

Lewis' commentaries on the news have always been oriented to the conservative point of view, and so too have his recent broadcasts concerning Cuba. Nevertheless, his on-the-air reports have had an authoritative ring and his personal dislike and distrust of certain groups, especially in the State Dept., while evident, have usually been limited to comment on current happenings as it effects U. S. policy in one way or another.

As long as four or five weeks ago, Lewis came out with flat statements accusing the CIA of not only selecting Dr. Jose Miro Cardona as the titular head of the revolutionary regime when his supporters represented only a very small portion of the Cuban exiles in this country, but also accusing the agency of pouring $18,000,000 into the group to finance their anti-Castro activities. Lewis further reported that, based on his discussions with Cuban exile leaders in Miami, Dr. Cardona was widely mistrusted by them, and that his program of government for Cuba was nothing more than the Castro revolution with Castro left out. On several occasions he also provided background biographies on some of the Cardona lieutenants, pointing out that many of them had held positions in the Batista government and that almost none of the group really represented the genuine feelings of the large majority Cuban exiles.

All of the programs on the Cuban situation have been exciting listening and firstrate radio commentary. The fact that Lewis was in virgin territory, and covering a story not reported by other news media until this past weekend, added an air of excitement that comes only with exclusivity. Lewis had a clear beat on the story and made the most of it. Syd.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

Exchange of network affiliations by two of Cincy's three tv stations becomes effective April 30 when the Taft Broadcasting Co. WKRC-TV goes ABC and the Scripps-Howard WCPO-TV switches to CBS. WKRC-TV is celebrating its new alliance with the presence of ABC brass and stars. There'll be no ribbon cutting for viewers but the web's top execs, Leonard H. Goldenson, Oliver Treyz, James A. Hagerty and Robert Coe, are to be greeted at a reception in the plush home of WKRC-TV. Also some ABC-TV celebs, like Dick Clark, Connie Stevens, Ponci Ponce, Bob Conrad, Anthony Eisley and Grant Williams. Clark will do a charity hop at Coney Island's Moonlite Gardens.

The stars will lay over for a day and appear on WKRC-TV originating shows. A week later some more ABC-TV names, including Don Morrow, Bud Collier and Johnny Carson, are to visit.

At WCPO-TV, an ABC outlet for several years, the switch to CBS-TV will be without fanfare.

In one of his periodic open letters to the press, NBC chairman Bob Sarnoff supported the establishment of an industry-wide Office of Research Methodology "for continuing study" of the rating services. Sarnoff said he asked that the Advertising Research Foundation "set up the kind of project envisaged" in the report done in an expert report for Congressman Oren Harris.

NBC once before (in '55) backed an Office of Research Methodology but nothing came of it. Yet after the latest NBC proposal according to Sarnoff, the ARF empowered A. W. Lehman, its prexy, to appoint a committee "to study the feasibility of the idea."

The WFIL stations in Philadelphia were singled out as the only broadcasters honored with the Merit Award of the National Religious Publicity Council at its annual convention in New York (17) "for excellency in religious coverage." The award was presented to Roger W. Clipp, veepee of the radio and tv divisions of Triangle Publications, for the stations' "One Nation Under God" series.

The Council, a group of public relations pros working for Protestant denominations and agencies throughout the U. S. and Canada, pointed out "perhaps unique in contemporary broadcasting, 'One Nation Under God' represents a conscious effort on the part of the managers of the stations to strengthen the religious basis of our lives through broadcasting."

NBC News copped two of the three television awards in the 29th annual Sigma Delta Chi Awards for Distinguished Service in Journalism. Independent stations copped the other tv award and the two radio citations.

NBC got an award for "public service in television journalism," while David Brinkley, its D.C. correspondent, copped the prize for television newswriting. The WTVJ, Miami news department took the other tv award, for television reporting. Winners in radio were WBT, Charlotte, for "public service in radio journalism," and Fred Goerner, reporter for KCBS Radio, the CBS o&o in San Francisco, for radio reporting.

plaque was installed—and it took the shape of a dustbin lid.

Similarly, C. P. Curran summoned up the young James Joyce, his churlish arrogance and his difficulties as one of 17 children, and George Fallon did the same for O'Casey.

It was generally agreed by the youngsters present that Dublin provided a rich quarry of material, but it could only be mined at a distance. And the general effect of the program was of an agreeable causerie, giving slightly more point and stimulation than the run-of-the-mill travelog, but hinting admirably at the loquacious and slow-changing character of its chosen city. Otta.

EYE ON RESEARCH
With Raymond Baxter
Writer: Gordon Rattray Taylor
Producer: Philip Daly
30 Mins., Wed., 9 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Whilst giving all praise to the BBC-TV for recognizing the egg-head minority, "Eye on Research," back for a further skein, seemed to be directed at a minority of a minority on this showing. Subject was a sacred mushroom, consumed by Mexicans and causing hallucinations. American banker Gordon Watson had made a snack of them, seen visions, and instituted scientific investigation of the reason why.

Emcee Raymond Baxter took cameras into the Swiss laboratory where research was concentrated. He drew out a number of obscure and dull references of techniques from two scientists, and this added little to common knowledge, except that a potent drug can be isolated from the mushrooms.

The program became livelier, and more generally interesting, as it went on. The effects of the drug were shown on the work of an artist who had been subjected to it; his drawing gradually lost control. And the half-hour closed with an intriguing interview, in which a woman who had suffered from a mental disorder explained how a three-month treatment had restored her. Thus the drug was a speedier substitute for psychiatry, which could take up to three years to achieve the same object.

"Eye on Research" has previously proved itself a handy and able way of distributing information about current scientific probes. But its chief fault is to make assumptions about the average viewer's intelligence which just aren't valid. This half-hour might have absorbed the experts, but it was way out in space so far as the rest were concerned. This was partly due to Gordon Rattray Taylor's otherwise lucid script. Philip Daly directed deftly, and emcee Raymond Baxter was fine when he remembered to translate into ordinary language. Otta.

Balto Sunpapers In Salisbury AM-TV Buy

Baltimore, April 25.

A. S. Abell Company, publishers of The Sunpapers and operator of Station WMAR-TV in Baltimore, and Peninsula Broadcasting Co., operator of radio station WBOC-TV in Salisbury, Maryland, have announced agreement whereby Sunpaper publishers will acquire Salisbury radio and tv properties. Agreement is subject to approval of stockholders of Peninsula and governmental agencies, including FCC.

Properties to be acquired by Sunpapers under agreement include: WBOC Radio, in operation since 1940; WBOC-TV, in operation since 1954; Radio Park, and separate transmitter site, both in Salisbury; More than 80% of stock in Peninsula Community Television Co., Inc., a subsidiary of Peninsula Broadcasting which operates a Community Antenna Television system; two microwave relay stations, used essentially to provide network connections to WBOC-TV.

Some CBS '20th-Century' Footage Leased to WB For 'Majority of One'

CBS-TV's public affairs stanza, "The Twentieth Century," has gone into the entertainment business, albeit fleetingly. Footage from the program's "Japan's Changing Face" episode this season has been licensed by Warner Bros. for its production of "A Majority of One," with Rosalind Russell and Alec Guinness starring in the Gertrude Berg-Cedric Hardwicke Broadway roles.

Film is set in Japan, and Warners found it needed a sequence on Japanese television. Someone at the studio remembered the "Twentieth Century" sequence, which featured a Nipponese rock 'n' roll quintet singing "Clementine" and "Red River Valley" in a Ginza coffeehouse called the Rockabilly Cafe. Hugh Benson, aide to WB production topper Bill Orr, made the arrangements to get the film from Murray Benson, CBS Films' director of licensing.

cality. Airing last Tuesday night (18), a day after the launching of the rebel invasion of the island, its scheduling had a sense of urgency and timeliness.

But by the same token, the program itself was inadequate to the occasion. Okay as a background piece on the changes Castro has initiated in Cuba, it imparted a sense of frustration to the viewer by being a background piece and a background piece alone, whereas the information about the main story, the invasion itself, was skimpy and sketchy. Had ABC preceded "Close-Up" with a half-hour on the invasion and the overall rebel movement, it would have had a hot show on its hands. But the "Close-Up" alone, despite the last-minute audio updating, was insufficient to the occasion.

Emphasis in the special was on Cuba's drift to Communism, with footage depicting the flow of Communist advisors and technicians into the island and the ideological shift of Castro's speeches. At the same time, this ABC News production presented a balanced picture by indicating the real improvements Castro has made in lower-class living conditions and education.

The show's most valuable contribution, however, was its indication, via good interviews with Cuban peasants and even middle-class citizens, that the extent of opposition to Castro is not as widespread as the rebels (and the U.S., for that matter) would like to think it is. A Negro sugar worker summed it up excellently; he was all for Castro because of his reforms, and asked about Communism, he simply stated, "I don't know anything about that."

Actor Michael Kane was brought in as narrator and did a fine job. John Secondari was exec producer, Walter Peters produced, Graham Grove wrote the special and Marshall Diskin directed. As a fill-in on Cuba, it was an okay show, but the way ABC handled it in light of the big news break on the invasion, it left a lot to be desired. Chan.

Home Habits Hamper TV Education? Boston U. Prof Thinks They Do

Boston, April 25.

TV habits at home hampers tv education.

So says Prof. Ralph Garry of B. U. School of Education. "There is apparently a carryover in viewing habits from the commercial channels to the tv lessons in class rooms."

One trouble with tv in the school is the quality of tv out of school, he says. "With the airwaves full of violently uneducational tv, less than half of the nation's parents take time to regulate what their children see."

"Children have grown accustomed to watching tv for adventure, excitement and escape, which involves a passive, receptive viewing—far from ideal for the learning situation. The carryover, however, doesn't work the other way, he points out. Even children who have been exposed to in-school tv lessons (there are 160 school systems now in the "21-inch Classroom") rarely watch educational tv at home.

Altogether only 30% of the families in Greater Boston tune in to WGBH-TV during the week, Dr. Garry estimates. He estimates that less than 10% of elementary school through junior high school audience takes advantage of educational tv offerings, except when such programs are part of the regular school day.

"Freezing of taste" among moppets is one reason for the kiddies' lack of interest, the BU ed psychologist, director of several research projects in the field, thinks. "Like the child who will eat only tapioca for dessert, or the moppet who refuses to touch tapioca, young tv viewers form firm preferences and stick to them."

If they like westerns, they'll look high and low for westerns. Also cops and robbers. And the commercial nets offer enough hours in both fields to satisfy all but the most bloodthirsty moppets, he says, putting the blame on the parents, who "should expose the child to examples of better programming."

"Although mothers and fathers are traditionally concerned with the playmates their child meets in the street, they often ignore the people he meets on the tv screen, where the average child spends as much time as he does in school."

hibiting CBS from telecasting the program as long as it contained "the name and characterization" of Durgom, Gleason's former manager. The program deals with actual people in an imaginary situation, and Durgom (played by Harvey Lembeck) was an integral part of the action. Besides, the program had been taped last August.

But the CBS production people told the lawyers that the show could be saved if the injunctive provisions were limited to Durgom's name. Technicians assured the attorneys they could dub in another name each time Durgom was mentioned. The real problem was the injunction on Durgom's characterization—it simply couldn't be eliminated without ruining the show.

The attorneys then returned to court and lodged an appeal with Justice Hecht, asking that the word "characterization" be stricken from his order and the injunction be limited to "name." After a full afternoon of argument and deliberation, Justice Hecht approved the amendment, ordering CBS to put up a $10,000 bond.

The CBS tape technicians thereupon went to work, dubbing in a new name at 18 separate points in the tape, concentrated in three key scenes. And the show was off to the races.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Frank DeVol Orch (Columbia): "THEME FROM DAVID AND GOLIATH" (Parade*) follows the big pic music trend with lush and potent qualities that develop into a good spinning bet. "DAVID'S DREAM" (Parade*) is built up with a melodic strain that gives it fine spinning chances, too.

Mickey & Sylvia (Victor): "LOVE IS THE ONLY THING" (Omell*) sets the duo in a rhythmic outing that's quite pleasing and should attract lots of deejay interest. "LOVE LESSON" (Ben-Ghazi has an okay swinging feel to which the team brings an infectious styling for good results.

Jane Morgan (Kapp): "LOVE MAKES THE WORLD GO 'ROUND" (Robbins*) is the entertaining ballad theme from the film "Carnival" tuner and is sure to capture top spins. "HE MAKES ME FEEL I'M LOVELY" (Harms*) is a solid ballad from "Donnybrook," an incoming Broadway tuner, delivered with a warm romantic styling to enhance its spinning potential.

The Romancers (Palette): "ADIO MARIA" (Zodiac*) has a good swinging feel and a vocal group presentation that gives it a take-off circle. "IT ONLY HAPPENS WITH YOU" (Zodiac*) doesn't show off much more than some familiar rock-a-ballad patterns.

Nancy Wilson (Capitol): "GIVE HIM LOVE" (Sam Weiss*) gets off to a strong ballad quality via some impressive vocal dramatics. "THE NEXT TIME YOU SEE ME" (Dandelion*) is a jazz oriented blues styling that's developed for pop deejay play.

Danny Davis Orch (Verve): "THEME FROM CARNIVAL" (Robbins*) has an intriguing melodic quality that is enriched by the maestro's sharp trumpet lead. "STARDUST" (Mills*) glitters once again as Danny Davis gives it some trumpeting care.

Stu Phillips Orch (Colpix): "BLACK STOCKINGS" (B. F. Wood*) runs at a catchy instrumental pace that should attract good deejay exposure. "LIKE HUNGARIAN" (Col. Pict. Music*) is a hip workover of Liszt's "Hungarian Fantasy" that's okay for occasional programming.

Dick Roman (Epic): "JUST FOR ME" (B. F. Wood*) works up a peppy quality that could stir up spins and give it a good run for the money. "DON'T TELL ME WHY" (B. F. Wood*) has a slow ballad mood that will have trouble getting a spinning start.

Eddie Calvert (ABC-Paramount): "I NEED YOU" (Ardmore*) has the fine trumpet lead that gives this melodic ballad an added spinning push. "PENNY POINTS POLKA" (Jewel*) whips up a polka bounce that will be attractive in many juke areas.

Dream-Timers (Flippin'): "AN INVITATION" (Village*) is a neat ballad entry shaped along rocking lines that could take it far along the spinning circuit. "THE DANCIN' LADY" (Village*) steps along with a zip that could draw okay juke play.

Moe Koffman (Gold Eagle): "KEEP WALKIN', LITTLE FLOCK" (Woodbine*) sets up a freewheeling gospel mood with a captivating instrumental exuberance that rates attention and play. "WISHBONE" (Woodbine*) has a flavorsome instrumental quality with enough bounce to attract the juke crowd.

Isley Bros.: "STANDING ON THE DANCE FLOOR" (Progressive-Trio*) presents more of the group's uninhibited rocking work which always seems to get a following. "SHINE ON HARVEST MOON" (Remick & Vogel*) is rocked to the hilt by this frantic team and the kids will probably find it to their liking.

The Impacts (Carlton): "HELP ME SOMEBODY" (Atlantic*) rolls with a rocking flair that will make some of the jeaners jump around the jukes. "DARLING, NOW YOU'RE MINE" (David Jones-Porgie*) plays with familiar rocking ballad touches for fair results.

Donnie White (Felsted): "OBJECT OF A MALE" (Ridgeway*) is pegged for the teeners in beat and lyric angle and they may build it into a good spinning bet. "FOR AN ETERNITY" (Ridgeway*) sets up a rocking ballad mood that may have some meaning for the juve disk crowd.

Danny Owens (Imperial): "YOU'RE A LITTLE TOO LATE" (Travis*) rocks with a joyous bounce that could make a dent in pop circles. "I THINK OF YOU" (Travis*) swings with a lilt that's pegged for happy juke action.

Eddy Manson (20th-Fox): "CHA PALOMA" (Margery & Kennebeck*) brings a cha cha flavor to "La Paloma" making it a fresh item for the hip-swingers. "I FOUND MY MAMA" (Mills*) showcases some of Eddy Manson's unique harmonic tricks in a duet with Paula Manson reciting kiddie rhymes.

Michael Angelo (Star Lite): "DON'T EVER LEAVE ME" (Mills*) has routine ballad qualities but the singer gives it some push. "LA FEMME" (Mills*) comes across with a jaunty spirit that gives it a fair spinning chance.

Best Bets

FRANK CHACKSFIELD ORCH. (London) ..... THEME FROM CARNIVAL / Lullaby In Blue

Frank Chacksfield Orch's "Theme From Carnival" (Robbins) supplies the pretty melodic touches that everybody seems to go for and builds them into payoff proportions. "Lullaby In Blue" (Famous*) is in a moody blues-ballad vein but it does offer tasty programming fodder. It's from "The Pleasure of His Company" pic.*

RONNIE SAVOY (MGM) ..... BEWITCHED / It's Gotta Be Love

Ronnie Savoy's "Bewitched" (Chappell) takes another Rodgers & Hart tune for a wild rocking ride and it's sure to roll into the best-selling bracket. "It's Gotta Be Love" (Merrimac†) has a strong rocking sound that the jeaners will find satisfactory.*

THE JOURNEYMEN (Amy) ..... CUP-E-CO / Hush Storm

The Journeymen's "Cup-E-Co" (Joli-Tinker) is a Hawaiian-styled rocker that's a natural to make a strong spinning noise on all levels. "Hush Storm" (Joli-Tinker*) has a quiet folk song quality that shapes as a pleasing programming entry.*

GLORIA LYNNE (Everest) ..... HE NEEDS ME / The Lamp Is Low

Gloria Lynne's "He Needs Me" (Mark VII) has a good jazz feel but it's delivered with such a standout styling that it can't help but make a payoff dent in all pop areas. "The Lamp Is Low" (Robbins*) puts the standard in a jazz vein that will delight the hip set.*

KENNY DINO (Dot) ..... JUST WAIT AND SEE / A Little Bit

Kenny Dino's "Just Wait and See" (Porgie†) rolls at a hot rocking pace that makes it a surefire takeoff entry and gets the new singer off to a fine start. "A Little Bit" (Porgie†) is also loaded with the rocking touches that make the young femmes scream.

FLOYD ROBINSON (Jamie) ..... MOTHER NATURE / Is There Something I Ought To Know

Floyd Robinson's "Mother Nature" (Tree†) plays with a zingy rocking beat and a lyric angle that the kids are sure to dig in a big way. "Is There Something I Ought To Know" (Tree†) gets in some dramatic rocking ballad vocalizing but it's cut from familiar cloth.

WILL SANDERS & THE DUPREES (Regatta) ..... SUMMERTIME / I'm Movin' In

Will Sanders & The Duprees' "Summertime" (Gershwin Pub.) is a frenetic rocking version of the Gershwin classic and if it could happen to Rodgers & Hart's "Blue Moon" it could happen to this one, too. "I'm Movin' In" (Pub Music†) gets up a rocking sound that the teeners will pick up, too, especially around the jukes.*

MARGIE SINGLETON (Mercury) ..... YOUR OLD LOVE LETTERS / Are You Ever Too Young

Margie Singleton's "Your Old Love Letters" (Red River†) started out as a country click but it's developed here for the pop market in a way that gives it clicko proportions. "Are You Ever Too Young" (Sure-Fire†) lifts her tempo a bit and the recitative insertion will bring a lot of teeners to its side.

Album Reviews

"The Happiest Girl In The World" (Columbia). Some of E. Y. Harburg's clever lyric trys fashioned to Jacques Offenbach's lilting melodies make this a worthwhile addition to the original Broadway cast album shelf. Although it lacks socko qualities, it does have enough pleasant items to get it programming time. Among the sides that will build are "The Happiest Girl In The World" and "Adrift on A Star," sung by Dran Seitz and Bruce Yarnell; "Whatever That May Be" sung by Janice Rule and "The Greek Marine," "That'll Be The Day" and "Never Trust A Virgin" sung by the show's star, Cyril Ritchard.

Norman Luboff Choir: "Apassionada" (RCA Victor): Norman Luboff has taken his slick choral grouping south-of-the-border on a richly rhythmical excursion. The romantic elements of the Latin tunes are heightened in his treatment and such faves as "Perfidia," "Maria Elena," "La Paloma" and "Adios" are delightful to hear all over again.

Nat Wright: "The Biggest Voice In Jazz" (Warwick). Although Nat Wright is far from "the biggest voice in jazz" as the title heralds, he does have fine vocal qualities that are authentic and true and could eventually work out well in niteries and legit. He's backed by some swingers here like Coleman Hawkins, Benny Green, Jimmy Giffre, Paul Chambers and others of similar ilk, but he sings 'em out straight and strong and in an effective manner. "Secret Love," "This Nearly Was Mine," "Johnny One Note" and "Sophisticated Lady" are some of the standouts in his standard repertoire.

Mantovani Orch: "Italia Mia" (London). Mantovani, a British bandleader whose origins are in Italy, has turned out a nifty melodic salute to the land of his fathers and London has packaged it in a two-fold set with photographs of the country that make up an important sales plus. In the groove is the familiar and popular Mantovani style that's rich, romantic and rewarding. He reaches into the classics as well as the pops and it all emerges as flavorsome fodder for the deejay turntablers as well as the home spinners.

"Percussion on Parade" (Ultra Audio). This is an all-star set put together by United Artists Records for the sound buffs. There is nothing new or terribly exciting here but the marquee lure of such strong disk names as Ferrante & Teicher, Eydie Gorme & Steve Lawrence, Don Costa and Al Caiola, among others, will attract sales interest. The sound is strong and sharp, and the repertoire has a class that would stand up even without the audio gimmicks.

Jonathan Winters: "Here's Jonathan" (Verve). Overloaded as it may be, the comedy-on-disk field seems to be still wide open for those who can put laugh routines that will hold up into the grooves. Jonathan Winters, who has been nibbling around the bestseller charts with his previous LP excursions, could break through with this one. His spoofs on test flights, westerns, airline stewardesses, the man from outer space and child psychiatry, among others, are more than just throwaways. They have repeat value and that seems to be the purpose of putting them into a disk in the first place.

Moiseyev Dance Ensemble: "A Moiseyev Spectacular" (Artia). The tieup with the current S. Hurok presentation of the Moiseyev terpsters will give this import a strong sales push. Granted, that the Moiseyev's are winners because of their dancing, the musical association presented on this package will keep a lot of people happy. The package was recorded in the U.S.S.R. and, although the Soviets may not be first in recorded sound, the orch's exuberance bubbles through the grooves. Included are Russian dances, Ukrainian dances and Byelorussian dances for those who dig that chav-chav beat.

Buzz Clifford: "Baby Sittin' With Buzz Clifford" (Columbia): The reason for this package is that Buzz Clifford "made it" in the pop singles market with "Baby Sittin' Boogie." He's one of those teen singers who can sing up a storm with a rhythm number but gets completely lost when he moves into a ballad groove. He's a teen-age phenom and when he does "Shake, Rattle & Roll," "Long, Tall and Sally" or that "Baby Sittin' Boogie" click of his, he's in control of his element. But when he moves into the ballad areas, he just shows his limits.

"Junk" (Argo). This was pegged as a happy kick for hipsters but its presentation is square. A "Morris Grants Presents" (for Norman Granz), a Morris Brewbeck (for Dave Brubeck), a Miles Morris (for Miles Davis), a Morris Garner (for Erroll Garner), a Ornette Morris (for Ornette Coleman), a Morris Ferguson (for Maynard Ferguson) is one "Morris" too many and in questionable taste. The parodies of the original styles are okay, but it adds up as a sophomoric endeavor even to the title. "Junk," which spells out "Jazz University's New Kicks."

Lolita: "Songs You Will Never Forget" (Kapp): Whether the "Sailor" single click of a few months ago will carry this singer's second LP to the sales forefront is moot. However, she does have a winning way and puts a lot of Continental savvy into a repertoire of pic songs and nitery material that have found a market in the overseas club circuit. The package is loaded with Europe charm but its appeal here is limited.

Larry Elgart Orch: "The Shape of Sounds To Come" (MGM): Larry Elgart is not that far ahead of band sounds as the title indicates but he is showing some new concepts that will interest band followers. The arrangements by such innovators as Bobby Scott, Bill Finnegan and Marty Holmes, among others, bringing a fresh approach to standards like "All The Things You Are," "I've Got You Under My Skin" and "Get Out Of Town" and that makes the set worth while.

Max Asnas: "Corned-Beef Confucius" (Kimberly). Max Asnas, the pastrami potentate of N. Y.'s Stage Delicatessen has been spread across the grooves like chicken fat. His palaver, like his pastrami, is an acquired taste and will be limited to the Broadway-Hollywood & Vine axis. His wry-bread witticisms have a Jewish philosophic touch and are delivered in the style of a non-pro raconteur. There are some show biz pros, like Jack E. Leonard, Myron Cohen, Morey Amsterdam, Joey Bishop and N. Y. Post columnist Earl Wilson, on hand to help him out but it's mostly an inside joke.

Rex Allen: "Rex Allen Sings 16 Favorite Songs" (Vista). There's a country quality to Rex Allen's voice that gives everything he does an all-American touch whether it's religioso like "The Little Old Church in The Valley," western like "The Lilies Grow High," foreign, like "Morgen," or Broadway, like "Staying Young" (from the recent "Take Me Along" tuner). He gives these, and others of varied origination, a delineation that's friendly and appealing. Gros.

Cheesecake Fades on Album Covers As Geometric Patterns Take Over

Record album covers are going from cheesecake to graphic art and the femmes are bowing to geometry. Instead of nudies, and provocative romantic layouts, the disk designers are concentrating on the dots and dashes and a new concept of album packaging.

The trend was launched last year by Enoch Light for his "Persuasive Percussion" album on the Command label. Since then most of the other companies have been following suit, having discovered that the uncluttered graphic approach has become a new means of merchandising records.

When Light introduced his Command line, he hired artist-educator Josef Albers to design the jacket for the initial release. Albers created a black and white design utilizing 242 black dots on a white background. On his second assignment for Light, Albers, who is a former chairman of Yale's Department of Design, turned to another geometric form, the square.

Light then brought in Charles Murphy, a 27-year-old artist and a student of Albers, to organize an internal art department. Under Murphy's direction, the 72-year-old Albers has now produced four album covers for the Command line.

Abstracts Catch On

The Albers-Murphy theory of abstract shapes and asymmetrical figures caught on and similar stylings by other companies are evident in every record shop. If the cover doesn't include geometrical figures against a white background, it at least features plenty of white space.

According to Murphy the basis of all good design work is reason. He points out that Albers' whole basis of thinking revolved around simplicity and his clean sharp forms related to percussion. He added, "The use of black circles on "Persuasive Percussion' departed drastically from what had been done in the past. And since the recording was itself a departure, the entire package molded

'Wolfie' Gilbert Blasts at AGAC

Beverly Hills.

Editor, VARIETY:

I defy anyone to deny that, for over 50 years, I have been an unselfish protagonist of any and all songwriters.

This means service, loyalty and money.

As of now, to find the American Guild of Composers & Authors, formerly SPA (Songwriters' Protective Assn.), disenfranchising me and other writers because we refuse to subscribe to the royalty-collection plan, for valid reasons, is beyond my understanding.

This is high-handed activity which I must condemn, even in my own colleagues, as being arbitrary and domineering. Why lifetime, legitimate music publishers should be placed in the same category as mushroom, irresponsible publishers "with offices in their hats") is strange.

Burton Lane, the president of the Guild, even resorted to advising members that their group insurance will be terminated if they refuse to sign for the collection plan.

I pay $200 a year dues for service to others which I do not need or get. I and many others pay it to protect the large number who do.

I reluctantly write this public letter in the hope that this adamant pernicious activity does not destroy, or rather in an avid desire to preserve the American Guild of Authors & Composers, which, up to now, has done valiant good and service.

$557,000, Houston Symph Season With Barbirolli

Houston, April 25.

Budget of $557,000 is set for the Houston Symphony next season—Oct. 16 through March 20—with Sir. John Barbirolli as principal director. He'll occupy the podium first four weeks and last four, with guest conductors taking other concerts.

Orch was headed last season by Leopold Stokowski, who resigned to accept a contract with the Met Opera.

More than half of the '61-'62 budget is expected to be made up at the boxoffice, the remainder by gifts.

London's 6-Year U.S. Release Deal With Italo Label

London Records has closed a deal with Durium Records for distribution of the Italian company's catalog in the U.S. The tie calls for a six-year exclusive.

London will establish a separate sales division, headed by a Durium division manager, and will have a regular release program. It is intended that material will be released both as singles and LPs. The material will be released on the London, Durium or Richmond labels, depending on the nature of the material and actual recordings.

Lee Hartstone, London veepee-general manager, pointed out that Durium catalog, which is loaded with Italian folk and Neapolitan music, will enhance London's expanding international catalog.

The Durium artist roster includes such diskers as the Marino Marini Quartet, Aurelio Fierro, Flo Sandon's, Roberto Murola, Rino Salviati, Little Tony, Eduardo Lucchina, Sergio Centi, and others.

The first LP release will be available within 60 days, while the effort on singles starts immediately with the release of hit Italian disk, "24 Mila Baci," by Little Tony. It was specially re-recorded in Italy with English lyrics for the American market.

Cap Ups Perry Mayer To Nat'l Merchandising Mgr.; Other Staff Shifts

Perry Mayer, ad manager of Capitol Records Distributing Corp. since last November, has been appointed national merchandising manager. Mayer, who will report to Stanley Gortikov, CRDV v.p. and director of merchandising, replaces Lloyd Settle who resigned from the company two weeks ago.

Succeeding Mayer as ad manager is John Annarino, who was formerly pop album merchandising manager. Dick Heckenkamp, who joined CRDC last November as single record merchandising manager, takes over the pop album merchandising duties formerly handled by Annarino.

Rose Dexter, for the past year a secretary in the single record merchandising section, has been upped to the post of single record merchandising manager. In assuming her new responsibilities, Miss Dexter becomes the second distaffer to hold an exec post in CRDC. Merrilyn Hammond has been radio-tv promotion manager for the past several years.

In addition to supervising the activities of CRDC's merchandising and promotion units, Mayer will continue to exercise administrative control over the company's national consumer and trade advertising programs.

UPPED SALES IN CROSS-SELLING

By MIKE GROSS

The separation between pop singles and pop albums is narrowing. In fact, the packages are beginning to take their cues from the singles especially where click songs are concerned.

The growing practice now is to issue an LP using the title of the artist's click single as a marquee lure. The record companies are moving fast in this respect and often follow a click single with a similarly titled LP only a few weeks after the single reaction begins to show strong sales action.

According to a major company sales exec, the hit-song titled LP has become a solid "cross-merchandising" item. He explained that it draws consumer attention to the single as well as bringing in an adult buyer for the LP. He pointed out that an adult may be attracted to a hit tune, via deejay exposure or tv programming, but is reluctant to buy the single disk.

A $3.98 Bargain

The economics of an album, though, offering 40 or more minutes of music for about $3.98 sends him to the stores for that clicko single. Kids, too, the sales exec added, see the value in getting a dozen songs for $3.98 instead of a single record with only two tunes for about $1.

The close tie between pop single and album sales was evidenced recently with Lawrence Welk's "Calcutta." Both the single and the LP received RIAA-endorsed gold disk awards. The single for selling over 1,000,000 copies and the album for going over 500,000 sales mark.

Such a major company as RCA Victor has built up the single-to-album tie in a big way. In its single-LP transition are Jim Reeves' "He'll Have to Go." The Browns' "Three Bells," Hank Locklin's "Please Help Me, I'm Falling," Chet Atkins' "Teensville" and Ray Peterson's "Tell Laura I Love Her."

Col recently issued an album by Buzz Clifford titled "Baby Sittin' Boogie" after the singer's single of that title broke through. Col also did the title tie with Percy Faith's "Theme From a Summer Place." The single was culled from a Faith LP that had a different title but when the single became the top song in the country, Col immediately switched titles with a special sticker over the album sleeve to cash in on the "Summer Place" click.

Other Examples

In addition to the "Calcutta" spread, Welk had a two-way run with a "Last Date" single and LP and Ferrante & Teicher got a similar dual sales run with their single of "Theme From the Apartment" and their similarity titled LP for United Artists. Coral, too, is getting into the act, with an announcement this week that is rushing a McGuire's LP into mar-

'VITA' ALBUM PREEMS VICTOR'S INT'L SERIES

RCA Victor will kick off its new International Series with soundtrack album of "La Dolce Vita," Italian pic which opened in N. Y. last week. The soundtracker, which was recorded in Rome by RCA Italiana, will be issued the first week in May.

The score, with music by Nino Rota, includes a theme, a congo-inspired "March of the Gladiators," a recall of "Arriverderci Roma," "Stormy Weather," and a Latin version of "Jingle Bells." The orch was conducted by Franco Ferrara.

According to Dario Soria, Victor veepee who heads the International series, "La Dolce Vita" launches a program that will bring to the U. S. top material recorded by RCA's affiliates in other countries.

Celler Bill Establishing Stiff Penalties For Disklegging Wins RIAA Backing

The bill introduced into the House of Representatives last week by Rep. Emanuel Celler imposing criminal penalties for the counterfeiting of records is being strongly endorsed by the Record Industry Assn. of America. The RIAA stated that provisions of the bill parallel the recommendations for federal legislation by its legal committee.

Congressman Celler's bill (H.R. 6354) would punish anyone convicted of counterfeiting records or their labels with a fine up to $10,000 or a jail sentence of up to 10 years or both.

In addition to the amendment providing for a fine and imprisonment for transporting illegal recordings in interstate or foreign commerce, the bill also provides for an amendment to the Copyright Act. Latter is the amendment that attorney Julian T. Abeles has been fighting for on behalf of the music publisher principals of Harry Fox in the enforcement of their rights against the record "pirates."

In the production of such actions the recovery was limited to a 2c royalty and a further sum of 6c for each infringing record manufactured. Under the new amendment, the copyright proprietor can recover $1, instead of only 8c for each infringing record manufactured, or the court could award the damages suffered by the copyright proprietor, as well as all the profits made by the infringer, or in lieu thereof make an arbitrary award of $5,000 for each such infringement.

Henry Breif, exec secretary of the RIAA, said that members of the RIAA have spent thousands of dollars in an attempt to track down and expose those who are involved in the counterfeiting of records. "The absence of effective federal legislation," he said, "has permitted these counterfeiters to operate and prosper without fear of meaningful reprisal. We think the proposed law will go a long way toward remedying this situation."

Brief also pointed out that the practice of counterfeiting records, which drained about $20,000,000 from the music industry in 1960, has as its principal victims the record manufacturers, distributors, dealers, recording artists, musicians, music composers, publishers and the U.S. government.

Roulette Activates Gee With Glover Topping A&R

Morris Levy, Roulette Records prez, is reactivating the firm's Gee label with Henry Glover as artists & repertoire chief. Gee will put its stress on single releases.

The reactivated label will kick off with the Cleftones release of "Heart and Soul." Glover indicated that he planned to concentrate in the rhythm & blues and rock 'n' roll fields.

Celler Bill Would Raise Tariffs On Tune Soundtracks

Washington, April 25.

New legislation reportedly is on the drawing boards which would stem the flow of foreign-made music soundtracks by raising import barriers.

It was learned that Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.), influential Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, is shaping such a measure as a means of attacking the perennial issue raised chiefly by American Federation of Musicians.

The bill reportedly would reimpose the same general duties on film soundtracks that were in effect in 1950 before the tariff policies regarding foreign soundtracks were liberalized at behest of the picture producers, among others.

Outlook for the bill, when and if introduced, is uncertain. A milder measure introduced by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Cal.) last session, which would simply require labelling of foreign films and soundtracks as of foreign origin, made no progress after receiving general opposition from Eisenhower administration agencies.

Mills Visiting Branches, Affils on Annual Trip To Continental Market

Jack Mills, prexy of Mills Music, heads out on his annual European junket today (Wed.). Accompanying him on his two-month business-pleasure trip will be his wife Estelle. They're sailing on the Queen Elizabeth.

As is his annual custom, Mills' first visit will be with Cyril Gee, general manager of Mills Music Ltd., London, where plans will be formulated for the annual publishing program and forthcoming sessions at Canford School where Mills sponsors an eight-week summer session each year.

Of major importance on Mills' itinerary this trip will be a call at the new branch office, Mills-Holland, which joins the other European branches, Editions Mills Music Belgium and Editorial Mills Music Espanola, which are also stops on his schedule. He'll also visit affiliates in Germany, France and Italy for purposes of renewing contracts.

Mills' latest European acquisition is "The Song of the Rain," from the Fernandel pic, "The Cow and I," composed by Paul Durand. Also from Europe, B. F. Wood, a firm in the Mills combine, has acquired Black Stockings" from Mills Music Ltd. The tune has been recorded by Stu Phillips for Colpix.

Last week Mills attended the 14th annual Cantors Assembly of America at Grossinger's, Ferndale, N.Y., where he and the firm were cited for their contributions to the Jewish music field with emphasis on the liturgy in the synagog. Mills is publishing a series of 15 commissioned sacred works. Norman Warembud, firm's production manager, has been instrumental in building this division.

Name Beyl Cap Disk Club Head

Ronald Beyl will take over as administrator of Capitol's dsk club. In addition, he's been elected to Cap's board of directors.

Beyl, who'll assume his new duties July 1, is currently director of management review and development. His responsibilities in the operation of the record club will include the fulfillment department, chairmanship of the club's record selection committee, and in merchandising liaison with John Stevenson, club's veepee.

When he moves into the club picture this summer, Beyl will divide his time between Scranton, Pa., club's h.q., and Cap's exec offices in Hollywood. Beyl has been with Cap since 1957 when he came in as exec staff analyst.

Meantime, Geoffrey Racine has shifted from his spot as veepee at the club to take over as acting general manager of Capitol Records of Canada Ltd. He will resign his veepeeship effective June 30 but will continue as administrator of operations of subsidiaries under Daniel C. Bonbright, veepee of administration and finance. In his new duties, Racine will report directly to Glenn E. Wallichs, Cap prez, and will maintain headquarters in both Hollywood and Toronto. He's been with the diskery since 1952.

Freberg's 4-Vol. Spoof of U.S. History Adding Up to 100G Package for Cap

Stan Freberg's musical revue spoofing U. S. history is shaping up as one of Capitol Records' most ambitious disk projects. The first volume of a projected four-volume series, going out under the overall heading of "Stan Freberg Presents The United States of America," cost about $30,000 to put into the groove and if Freberg sustains his pace the complete package will be well over the $100,000 mark.

The first LP in the series, titled "The Early Years," was "11 weeks in the making." Coming up are "The Middle Years," "The Late Years" and "The Late, Late Years."

Freberg collaborated with Kenneth Sullet on the sketches and with Billy May on the music. The package, presented like a Broadway production, has a full cast of actors and May fronts a large orch.

The outlay is given to Freberg by Cap as an advance against royalties, which says a Cap exec, "makes it theoretically his own money." However, the disk man added, "if the albums don't sell, Capitol, of course, takes the bath."

The initial album in the series will be previewed at a cocktailery at N.Y.'s 21 tomorrow (Thurs.). The affair will be hosted by Random House prez Bennett Cerf who has Freberg lined up for some book assignments. In addition, Cap has Freberg set for a guest shot on Jack Paar's NBC-TV show next Monday (1) to coincide with official release of the package.

Symphony Based On A Texas Rural Sing Gets K.C. Philharmonic Preem

Kansas City, April 25.

Highlight of the National Federation of Music Clubs convention here Friday (21) was the premiere performance of a new work, "Sunday Sing Symphony," by the Kansas City Philharmonic Orchestra under direction of Hans Schwieger.

New symphony is the work of Ray Green, a native Missourian. It's based on themes he heard when he attended a rural sing at a Texas crossroads when he was stationed nearby during the war. Music of the sing uses only five tones of the scale and each note on the staff is of a different shape, thus explaining its label as "shape-note" music.

A choreograph was set to the symphony by Green's wife, May O'Donnell, and presented at the premiere by herself and a company of six dancers.

While few composers give any attention to shape-note music, Green said he regards it as rich a source of musical Americana as cowboy ballads and spirituals. Themes hark back to Scots-English folk songs, he said.

COL SETS KAPRALIK AS A&R COORDINATOR

In a reshuffling of the artists & repertoire structure at Columbia Records stemming from prexy Goddard Lieberson's takeover last week, David Kapralik has been set as coordinator of the pop artists & repertoire department.

Kapralik will now coordinate the activities of the pop a&r department and its artists, schedule the department's activities in accord with the company's release program and maintain the department's liaison with creative services and the sales department.

Before the divisional changeover, Kapralik had been director of artists relations and national promotion manager for the sales department. According to Lieberson's theory, artists relations should come under the a&r structure and Kapralik will continue to work in this area, too.

In an a&r assignment on the longhair level, Thomas Frost has been appointed a producer in Col's Masterworks a&r department. He joined the diskery in 1959 as an associate producer. He reports to Schuyler Chapin, Masterworks' director.

Day (London), Aussie's Lex Albert Due in U.S.

From Austalia and from England will converge in New York two music publishers, both repped in the U.S. by attorney Julian T. Abeles. Eddie Day, head of Francis, Day & Hunter, is due over with his wife, and from Sydney will come Alexis (Lex) Albert and his wife, Elsa. He heads the old-line music publishing house of J. Albert & Sons.

Meantime David Day, of the family, has been more permanently stationed in New York representing both the FD&H and affiliated B. Feldman catalogs, scouting songs, etc.

Slate 1st Meets For ARMADA Fla. Conclave

The first seven manufacturer-distributor meetings which will be held in conjunction with ARMADA's Assn. of Record Manufacturers and Distributors of America annual convention in Miami Beach in late June have been set.

Atlantic Records will hold its meeting June 24. Cameo is set for for the morning of the 25th with VeeJay coming up the same day later in the afternoon. Time Records is scheduled for the morning of the 28th with United Artists holding its session in the late afternoon. The following day has Jubilee slotted for the morning and Stereoddities in the afternoon.

Art Talmadge, ARMADA prez, stated that the new affiliate membership classification has been verified and applications are now being accepted from allied crafts and professions in the music business. Already accepted under this new grouping are the Ivy Hill Lithograph Corp. and Robert Kerr and the Tele-Theatre Corp. Talmadge said that additional applicants are now being accepted and processed through ARMADA's offices in Chicago by Jordan Ross, org's exec secretary.

Another ARMADA program being implemented this week was the distribution of logo mats and seals for use by association members in their advertising, and to be incorporated in their stationery, bills, etc.

In addition to the manufacturer meetings which are bringing in heavy reservations, Ross said that this is the first year that exhibits will be included in the convention and the space, which is limited, will be allocated on a first-come basis.

GALA LABEL PARENT PROFIT OFF TO 225G

London, April 25.

Musical & Plastic Industries, manufacturers of the Gala label, announce a group profit of just over $225,000 for the year ended Dec. 31 last. It's a drop of nearly $280,000 on the previous year.

Total dividend for the year, including a final distribution of 7½% will be 20%. It was 32½% in the previous year.

Bennett Drops 'Camelot' Tune; Chappell's Squawk

London, April 25.

Tony Bennett, now playing the Pigalle nitery, has dropped the song "Follow Me," from "Camelot," from his act. This was at the request of Chappell, which is publishing the "Camelot" music.

There's a copyright law here which enables publishers to object to show-songs being performed prior to the musical's opening and "Camelot" is not due here till 1963.

Merc Goes Nashville

Chicago, April 25.

Mercury Records, has moved Shelby Singleton, its southern a&r director, to Nashville to set up permanent headquarters.

Singleton's first move after opening the Nashvile office has been to sign two young singers, Bobby Freeman and Mitchell Torak.

Basie to Preem Peoria Concerts

Peoria, April 25.

Entertainment Enterprises, new booking agency here, has unveiled ambitious concert plants to fill Peoria's formerly pro-less summer sked. Outdoor series beginning June 3 will bring Count Basie and his orchestra, Ray Charles and his orchestra in July, the George Shearing Sextet and Andre Previn in August, Errol Garner at date to be announced and the Kingston Trio in September. Performances will be in new 3,000-seat Glen Oak Park bandshell.

Headed by Tom Manwell, Dave Ogilvy and Dan Smith, Entertainment Enterprises has already presented Bob Newhart with Chad Mitchell Trio, and Louis Armstrong and his all-stars at Shrine Mosque. Upcoming on May 21 is Limeliters trio—Lou Gottlieb, Alex Hassilev and Glen Yarbrough.

Fall and winter bookings by new group include Liberace on Sept. 24, Jose Greco in January, Roger Williams, Bobby Darin, Tommy Sands, the Theatre Arts Ballet Group, Shelley Berman and The Little Orchestra of New York, all at dates not yet definite.

In bringing pop attractions seldom seen and heard here, Entertainment Enterprises has tapped new, youngish audience not usually drawn by traditional longhair fare. Firm's owners figure Peoria's metropolitan population of nearly 300,000 should keep house well filled for their big-name offerings.

Roulette's Forum Label Documenting Nazi War Trials in $4.98 Package

Roulette Records is bowing an "Audio History" series in its subsid Forum label. The kickoff package will be the "Nuremburg War Criminal Trials," a documentation of the trials with official transcripts. The album was written and produced by Bud Greenspan, a tv producer for the Dancer, Fitzgerald & Sampler ad agency.

The package is narrated by David Perry and includes the actual voices of Nazis on trial. Included in the double-fold single pocket album will be photographs of the trials. Roulette is mapping a big promotion campaign to tie in the LP with the Eichmann trial in Israel, William Shirer's bestseller, "The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich," and the flood of new documentary films dealing with the Nazi era.

Greenspan is scheduled to make a number of key tv appearances in connection with the promotion of the package. The album will hit the market this week and will retail at the suggested list price of $4.98.

Libel Suit Settled

London, April 25.

A libel action brought by orchestra conductor Max Jaffa against Associated Newspapers was allowed to be withdrawn in the High Court.

It involved an article which appeared in the Daily Mail and the Scottish Daily Mail. It was stated that Jaffa would receive "a suitable payment."

Merc Mulls Closer Indie Co-op Ties; Clyde Otis Shifts to Liberty A&R

Chicago, April 25.

Mercury called in its execs and regional a&r men last week, and the major item on the agenda was how to expand the company's relationships with independent producers and smaller record firms. Asserting that the "great American appetite for the newest and latest is using up material faster than television used up comedians," prexy Irving B. Green said that he is formulating a realignment of the recording staff with intention of going out after indie talent and pressings rather than waiting for it to come over the transom.

Although not specifically as a result of the projected new outlook, Green used the meeting to announce the addition of Nat Goodman to Mercury's Los Angeles staff. He also announced the resignation of Clyde Otis, who had been serving as eastern pop a&r director. Otis has switched to Liberty Records where he will head a&r in the east.

Mercury's recent deals with Indies include the purchase of Joe Barry's "I'm A Fool To Care" from Jin Records and the Mus-Twangs "Marie" from Negro Records. Both of these will be manufactured and distributed by Smash, Mercury's subsidiary. Mercury has also negotiated a deal to handle distribution for Clock Records.

Homburger's Bookings

Toronto, April 25.

Walter Homburger's International Artists has signed for '61-'62 season at Massey Hall here: Marian Anderson, Victoria de Los Angeles, Mahalia Jackson, Andres Segovia, pianists Artur Rubinstein, Rudolf Serkin, Bryon Janis, Benno Moiseiwitsch and Emil Gilels. Four via Sol Hurok office.

Berlioz' "Damnation of Faust" will be done by Toronto Symphony and Mendelssohn Choir, Walter Susskind conducting. Deutschmeister Band, with a company of dancers and singers, will do "Vienna on Parade."

Baker Back To Big 3 in Prof. Dept. Shakeup

The Big 3 (Robbins, Feist & Miller) underwent a reshuffling of its professional department setup last week.

Murray Baker returned to the Big 3 fold to step up record exploitation and hypo coverage of variety shows. Baker left the Big 3 in 1958 after many years as professional manager of the Robbins firm.

Although the Big 3 has been building up its activities in the east and on the Coast, it decided to close its Chicago office with Erwin Barg stepping down as manager. On the foreign front, Alan Holmes has taken over as firm's European representative replacing Paddy Crookshank who exited the company last week after a seven-year tenure.

Holmes has been with the Big 3 since 1952, serving as general manager of Robbins Music Corp., Ltd., in London. He has been named a director, representing Big 3 interests, on the boards of B. Feldman & Co., Francis, Day & Hunter, Robbins Music Corp., Ltd., and their affiliated companies throughout Europe.

Holmes plans to work out a closer liaison of Robbins, Feldman and Francis, Day & Hunter interests. He also is mapping greater coordination of professional activities of these three groups of companies which comprise Affiliated Music Publishers. Holmes' initial plans include a May visit to the Big 3's Continental affiliates.

Stateside, the firm is now working on the score from the Broadway click, "Carnival," and theme music from two foreign pic imports, "Saturday Night and Sunday Morning" and "La Dolce Vita."

Legit Echo of Vaude Gets British Decca LP

London, April 25.

British Decca is releasing the original cast set of "Belle—Or the Ballad of Doctor Crippen" on May 4. It ties up with the show's first night at the Strand Theatre. Chappell is publishing the music, by Monty Norman. "Belle" is a Wolf Mankowitz-Monty Norman musical which is expected to revive nostalgic memories of the London vaude bills that flourished in 1910.

Cast includes George Benson, Patricia Burke, Virginia Vernon, Jerry Desmonde, Davy Kaye, and Nicolette Roeg.

N.Y. Court Tosses Out 500G Suit Vs. RCA Over Calypso Songs

A $500,000 injunction and accounting action brought by Glory Records against RCA was dismissed last week by N.Y. Supreme Court Justice Henry Epstein.

The case revolved around a calypso record released by Glory called "Banana Boat Song." It was allegedly infringed by RCA Victor with a tune called "Day-O" from an album by Harry Belafonte and marketed as a single under the title of "Banana Boat (Day-O)". The recording by Eddie Fisher of a song called "Cindy-Oh-Cindy" also was said to infringe upon the Glory disk.

In dismissing the suit, the court held that "The proof reveals beyond the question of a doubt that the 'Banana Boat Song' is a folk song of the West Indies, and the title of which the plaintiff bases its entire case when recording of the name is found to be used for songs for many years."

The court also held that "neither the words, tune or quality of the songs are the 'Banana Boat' song of the plaintiff as sung by The Tarriers or are comparable or similar to RCA's song by Belafonte." The court added, "Both are pleasant entertainment."

The title which is the sole possible basis for the plaintiff's case is without merit, Justice Epstein noted, since it was not plaintiff's creation, was not an original, but in public domain. "No one could possibly confuse one song with the other," the court pointed out.

In the case of "Cindy-Oh-Cindy," Justice Epstein ruled that "the plaintiff has failed utterly to present any evidence to support its claim of unfair competition."

Belafonte's "Banana Boat (Day-O)" has been credited with kicking off the calypso trend several years ago.

Singer Denied Injunction Vs. 'Moon' Distribution

Los Angeles, April 25.

Superior Judge Gordon Files found in favor of High Fidelity Recording Inc. in denying an injunction against firm's distribution of the record, "Dance by the Light of the Moon," sought by singer Walter Ward of the Olympics. Pasarow & Spiegel repped HFRI.

Ward, in suit filed last March 29, claimed that the recording company had improperly coupled "Moon," as sung by the Olympics, with selections of two other vocal groups, thus creating confusion in minds of public. Bench ruled that High Fidelity had properly labelled songs on jacket.

Inside Stuff—Music

Ernest Tubb, veteran songwriter and western singer, is frequently embarrassed when fans ask him to sing his own compositions. His trouble: he can't remember 'em. Tubb, appearing at the Flame cafe, Minneapolis, told Mpls. Tribune columnist Will Jones, "I've been recording for 21 years and have had over 200 records, and I just can't remember them all. I had a night not long ago when I only knew one of five requests, and they were all songs I'd written.

"I'm not the only one. It's a thing that happens often in the country-western field, especially if you've been working for a long time. The pop singers don't make as many records as we do, and it's easier for them to remember their old ones."

When he can't recall a song requested by a fan, Tubb says "all you can do is be honest and say you don't know it." Singer has no difficulty however, remembering his biggest hit recordings.

Baby Washington Shifts to ABC-Par; MGM Gets Junior Waters; Other Deals

Baby Washington, who's been making noise in the pop disk field with "Nobody Cares" on the indie Neptune label, will now record under the ABC-Paramount banner. The diskery also re-signed the Elegants who previously recorded under the Apt label, an ABC-Par subsid.

MGM: Junior Waters

Junior Waters, who bowed last year on ABC-Paramount, has switched to MGM Records. The singer, who's managed by music published Julie Stearns, is the nephew of Ethel Waters. His first MGM platter will couple "Rockin' That History" with "I'll See You In My Dreams."

Roulette: Jackie Kannon

Comic Jackie Kannon has been signed by Roulette Records to do three albums. He'll cut the first one at Jackson, Mich., penitentiary and title it "Pros From The Cons."

Capitol: Jimmy Wolford

Jimmy Wolford, a vet of Cliffie Stone's Coast-originated "Hometown Jamboree," has been added to the Capitol roster. His recordings will be supervised by exec artists & repertoire producer Ken Nelson.

Audio Devices' 1st Qtr. Sales Up 20% Over '60

Audio Devices, manufacturer of magnetic tapes and other recording materials, racked up a record $2,000,000 take for first-quarter sales this year representing a 20% increase over the corresponding period in 1960. According to William T. Hack, firm's prexy, this boost compares to a 15% increase maintained in '60.

At Audio's annual meet held in N. Y. last week, Hack reported that three new tapes have been introduced. The first, which Hack considers extremely important to this year's sales picture, is a heavy duty computer tape, designed and developed for the new high-speed, high density computers. The second is a high quality lubricated tape for cartridge use, while the third is a high-output sound tape for meter reading by utilities companies.

ket titled after their single click. "Just for Old Times Sake."

The single-LP title tie also works as a means for a company and the artist & repertoire department to showcase a new artist on ballads and other material with which he's not associated on the click single.

This was done recently by Col with a sound-gimmicked click, "Baby Sittin' Boogie." Using the title as a lure for the LP, the a&r department showcased the singer in a variety of standards and more orthodox material. "Also," one sales exec said, "a click single title gives the album a pre-sold start and you don't get enough of that these days."

Brand's Double Life

Oscar Brand will lead a double concert life at N.Y.'s Town Hall May 27. The folksinger has been set for a kiddie concert in the morning and an adult show in the evening.

Producer Peter Rachtman figured that the bawdy folksong material which Brand has popularized on his Audio Fidelity and Elektra releases should have an "adult only" tag so the kiddie concert will feature only folksongs of the type he does on his WCBS-Radio show.

Tape From Disks Query Gets U.K. Govt. Brushoff

London, April 25.

Britons can go on making tape-recordings from disks official. House of Commons question on the subject from William Teeling M.P. was turned down by Government spokesman Sir David Eccles who said it was "essentially a copyright problem." Teeling had pointed out that private recordings were being made from disks borrowed free from public libraries and wondered what protection could be given composers and disk companies.

Despite Sir David's thumbs-down, belief is growing among music-men here that solution will be found to the problem of tape-free tape which is costing composers thousands of dollars every year.

into a new marriage of art and sound."

Murphy's own design work, a melding of red and black circles on "The Persuasive Trombone of Urbie Green," has earned recognition from the Art Directors' Club of N.Y. His cover was recently selected as outstanding in the graphic arts category.

New Experiments

While other companies are now producing jackets with geometric designs, Command is experimenting in new directions. S. Neil Fujita, former art chief at Columbia Records, has supplied four covers of his interpretative design.

"There's definitely a place for photography as a design tool," Murphy emphasized. "But it has to be used with discretion. If you're going to be successful in the long run, you have to think of the functional reason behind the design."

In dealing with freelance artists like Fujita, Murphy usually explains the contents of the record and lets the artists inject his own emotional feelings.

Up until three months ago, Murphy handled all the art work himself. Light bolstered the department by adding another young artist, Jerry Sukenick, who studied at Indiana U. and was graduated from the Philadelphia Museum College of Art as a graphic designer.

Newport Fest Police Budget Rivalling Outlay for Talent, Promoter Asserts

The Newport, R.I., Music Festival, slated to start June 30 for four days, will have a police budget that will be as huge as the talent outlay, according to Sid Bernstein, in charge of this year's bash. Every effort, he said, will be made to eliminate the riots of last year that forced the Newport city fathers to shy away from another conclave of the big beat. The overall budget of the festival will be around $160,000, of which about $75,000 will be for talent.

Bernstein is seeking names such as Leonard Bernstein, Steve Allen, Dave Garroway and Garry Moore to host the sessions of the festival. He's optimistic despite the fact that there have been no acceptances as yet from these individuals.

Among those signed so far are Louis Armstrong who will appear on the opening day. Others are Dave Brubeck, Carmen McRae, Maynard Ferguson, Ramsey Lewis, Lionel Hampton, George Shearing, Gloria Lynn, Duke Ellington, Sarah Vaughan, Cal Tjader and Stan Getz. Being negotiated for are Peggy Lee, Ella Fitzgerald, Chico Hamilton, Ray Charles, Art Blakey and Horace Silver.

Despite the wails of the Newport city fathers that they would never hold another festival after the riots of last year, a long and hard look at the economics of the situation caused a reappraisal. For one thing the U.S. Naval base at Newport isn't being used as much as it used to be.

The sailors that used to pour money into the town aren't anchoring with their former frequency, and the employment in that phase of city activity is down. Consequently, Newport officials sought to reshuffle the festival with assurances that the rowdyism of last year would be eliminated. They decided to get new promoters, other than George Wien and Lewis Lorillard, and appointed a committee of five Newport businessmen to scout for a new producer.

They gave Bernstein the nod. He is partnered in this deal by jeweler Abe Margolies, who is also a financial backer of the Arc 120 lens, and Chicago contractor John Drew. Bernstein has promoted the music shows at the Paramount Theatre, Brooklyn, for the past few years, and prior to that was with various talent agencies in New York.

Plan $300,000 Bldg. To Replace Ottawa's Razed Gatineau Club

Ottawa, April 25.

Joe Saxe is calling for bids this week for construction of a posh new Gatineau Club to replace the 33-year-old nitery destroyed last fall by fire. The new buiding will go up this spring on the foundations of the old club. It will be a slick, modern two-story structure.

Plans show top floor for guest rooms. Main floor will house the nitery which can also be used as dining room or convention hall, plus lounge, main entrance and offices. There will also be lounge, locker rooms and screened patio for golf club members facing the golf course. Club's full name is the Gatineau Golf and Country Club and it owns one of eastern Canada's finest courses.

Construction will be of concrete, to cost more than $300,000. Parking area will take 500 cars.

Niteries on the Quebec side in the Ottawa region are still awaiting the technical details of Quebec province's new legislation covering the operation of clubs and all other liquor outlets. Until this is received, scanned, mulled and explained in huddles with the authorities, nothing can be decided on nitery operation here. Chaudiere Club is still dark.

Genevieve's New Act

Genevieve is breaking in a new nitery act at the Monticello, Framingham, May 1, with other dates still to be lined up.

Singer's fall itinerary will include the Holiday House, Pittsburgh, Oct. 13.

Ban Comm'l Firms From Using Institutional Names

N.Y. Gov. Nelson Rockefeller last week signed a bill forbidding commercial firms from infringing on names of cultural institutions. Bill, introduced by John R. Brook, Manhattan Republican, was supported by the Metropolitan Opera Co., Carnegie Hall and Cornell University, which had sought protection from unauthorized use of their names.

Among the instances cited was the recent court decision forbidding the vocal group, Metropolitan Sextette, from use of the Met label. Bill also would protect the Met from such ads as one used some time ago by the Maidenform bra, depicting a bra-clad femme singing at the Opera.

Bill makes publication or use without permission of the institution involved a misdemeanor punishable by a $500 fine and/or a year in jail.

Key Mpls. Nitery Boom to Baseball

Minneapolis, April 25.

Local nightclub owners foresee a bonanza resulting from introduction of major league baseball here. With outstate demand for baseball tickets mounting, bistro operators expect to reap a share of the profits from the invasion of visitors.

To lure out-of-town trade as well as local clientele, a third Minneapolis nitery, Duffy's, stated last week it's starting a big name entertainment policy. Bistro has already inked Duke Ellington band for a one-week stand June 16, Lionel Hampton for a mid-October date and is dickering with Harry James, Louis Armstrong, Dave Brubeck and Andre Previn for future bookings. Duffy's owner George Foster originally signed Benny Goodman to open May 1, but had to delay his name act plans when Goodman cancelled all touring dates.

Two other Minneapolis niteries, the Flame Room in the Radisson Hotel and Freddie's, have been offering top names for several years. Padded Cell and the Key Club are other spots which occasionally book headliners, but latter's license is in jeopardy following a disturbance there two weeks ago.

Buff Nitery Op's Move Into Personal Mgt. Field May Spark New Trend

Harry Altman, veteran operator of the Town Casino, Buffalo, is going in for personal management as a sideline. He has pacted two singers, Neil Darrow, who is contracted to the Cameo label, and Marco Valente, inked to RCA Victor. Altman has signed both singers with General Artists Corp.

Altman's entry into personal management is another indication of the fact that bonifaces are seeking to have a greater voice in the moulding of headliners which they help create. A showman for 45 years, Altman says that for years he has been approached by singers and agents as well to aid talent.

Some of the acts later became names that he had to shell out huge coin in order to get them into the Town Casino as well as the Glen Casino, Williamsville, N.Y., which he also operates. This time, Altman is taking a more active interest in acts which he feels will have a promising future.

Other bonifaces who have gone into personal management include the Scandore Bros. of the Elegante, Brooklyn, as well as Max Loew of the Viennese Lantern, N.Y.

While the American Guild of Variety Artists forbids cafe operators from becoming agents, the union has no rules on bonifaces turning personal managers.

Donna Atwood, Specht Rejoin Icer in Russia

Kansas City, April 25.

"Ice Capades" is bringing back two of its all time favorite skaters for the tour of Russia which begins May 2. Donna Atwood, the Newton, Kas., gal who headed the ice company for several years, and Bobby Specht, who teamed with her, both flew in here last week to begin practice sessions to sharpen their figure eights.

Miss Atwood has been in retirement for several years, now the mother of three children and ex-wife of John H. Harris, the "Ice Capades" originator and producer.

Party Disk Queen Hypos Late Trade At Roundtable, N.Y.

Despite the paucity of late business in New York, the Roundatable is filling up for most of its three nightly shows. The attraction, of course, is the indigo tunes of Belle Barth who has another fortnight to go at this spot. Originally booked for $2,500, she was renewed for three weeks and raised $1,000 in recognition of her ability to pull the spenders.

Miss Barth's boom b.o. was prepared by here party albums which have been one of the hottest under-the-counter sellers in disk shops. Many purchasers have been following her to the Roundtable for the in-person delivery of the off-color ditties.

Initially, Miss Barth held off on delivery of the blue chansons, but later she took off many of the wraps, although it's understood that she's keeping herself sufficiently in check to satisfy the State Liquor Authority and the Police Dept. Even with these concessions, the tunes are spicy enough to satisfy most of her auditors.

Otherwise, late cafe business is off throughout New York as well as other cities. However, there has been somewhat of a resurgence of early trade due somewhat to more favorable weather.

Most of the small rooms are doing fairly well filling up for at least the first show of the evening and catching much of the after-theatre trade. A greater upsurge is expected next month, with the start of the prom season and an increase in the number of buyers who normally converge on New York at that time.

MITZI GAYNOR PACT: CAFE DEBUT & FILMS

Hollywood, April 18.

Mitzi Gaynor and Morris Lansburgh, owner of the Flamingo, Las Vegas, have entered into a two-way contract under which singing actress will make her nitery bow and star in two films to be made under her indie Green Aisle Productions banner and financed by Lansburgh and his associates

Thrush will open a one-month stand Dec. 22 at the Flamingo. Film properties still are to be set.

'Playgirls' Cafe Unit Set by Jackie Barnett

Comedy writer Jackie Barnett is again turning cafe unit producer with "Playgirls of 1961" which will open May 4 at the Riverside, Reno. Barnett is aiming at a Las Vegas showplace to be followed by a tour of major cities. He previously produced "New Faces of 1928," which had a long cafe run several years ago.

In this show will be Sabrina, Sherry North and Sue Carson with others still to be set.

New Atlantic City Spot Pacts Trio of Names

Jack Berenato, operator of the Gondola Room, Atlantic City, which is being readied to preem around June 16, has started signing talent. Already set are Karen Chandler, June 24; Earl Grant, July 24, and Dick Haymes, July 31. A top name is being sought for the preem show.

Michael Sean O'Shea has been pacted as the room's producer.

TV's Animated Cartoon 'Characters' Mop Up in 'Appearance' Gimmick

A show biz gimmick in connection with merchandising is developing lucrative business for outdoor and kiddie theatre situations. Impersonators of cartoon characters are becoming important bookings for fairs, shopping centres, kiddie matinees in theatres and elsewhere.

A major boom in this type of booking has taken place with the upbeat in animated cartoon series on television. "Huckleberry Hound" and "Yogi Bear" are being merchandised by Screen Gems. Latter, which produces the "Huckleberry Hound" series has been sending out a live act consisting of both these characters. That act is already set for 35 dates this year. SG is also preparing another act based on other Hanna-Barbera characters, "Quick Draw McGraw" and "Baba Looey."

Also hot sellers on the juvenile circuits are the characters drawn out of "Rocky & His Friends" over ABC-TV. Leon Newman, Licensing Corp. of America veepee, is currently booking a pair of characters, "Rocky and Bullwinkle," as an act. This twosome played a long series of dates last year, and have been working shopping centres and theatre dates during the winter. They will play park and fair dates during the summer as well as appearance in various stores.

LCA is also prepping acts based on characters in "Leonardo" and "Pip the Piper" kid shows, on NBC and ABC respectively.

Wide Moppet Appeal

These cartoon characters have wide appeal for the moppets, thus can be used in a wide variety of situations where juve enticement is necessary. Because of the merchandising ticins with these bookings, the acts are now being booked by the turns' packagers. Previously they were booked by regulation talent agencies. In this way, displays of the sponsors' products can be made so that the merchandiser can get full value out of the appearance.

The packagers have also had to routine the act, as well as supply costumes, music, etc. In some cases, there are several acts with the same characters making the rounds.

History of the cartoon acts goes back as far as "Popeye" and the "Mickey & Minnie Mouse" days. "Howdy Doody" & "Clarabelle" have been making the rounds of the kiddie time, and there have been representations of the "Seven Dwarfs" on the circuits. However, with merchandisers in the picture, the custom of booking cartoon characters based on teevee representations is likely to increase.

Labor Day Grandstand Show Cancelled by CNE

Toronto, April 25.

The Canadian National Exhibition will consider staging its 24,000-seat grandstand show on the two Sundays that fall within its Aug. 18 to Sept. 4 showings this summer, but will not open the exhibition as a whole on Sundays, according to CNE spokesmen.

Grandstand show will end night of Sept. 4 instead of following Saturday (9), CNE directorate has decided, with performers working on week-to-week contracts. Premise is that, with Labor Day attendance small in past, it would be uneconomical to hire the cast for one week and have it perform for one night; hence no Labor Day grandstand show this year, first time in lengthy history of the CNE.

Tilt Disney Pay For Disneyland

Hollywood, April 25.

Walt Disney's new seven-year pact as Executive Producer and general supervisor of Disneyland will be voted upon by Disney stockholders May 16 at special meeting in Burbank, according to proxies sent to stockholders.

New deal has already been approved by Bank of America, National Trust & Savings Assn. and Prudential Insurance Co. of America from whom Disney company has made substantial loans.

Under terms of new agreement dated Jan. 1, 1961, Walt Disney will receive $3,500 a week, an increase of $500 weekly from his previous contract, and $1,666.66 each week in deferred payments to him or his family (on death) for period of one and a half times length of his services.

The payments, according to proxy, represents increase of $26,000 annually. The deferred payments will begin with expiration of seven year Disney's contract dated April 6, 1953 called for $3,000 weekly plus expenses; also 25% option in feature films liver which he must advise before production starts. He is to contribute in proportion of interest acquired in such films. He recently acquired 10% in "Moon Pilot."

Disney's old pact expired Dec. 31, 1959 and was extended a year.

For the fiscal year ended Oct. 1, 1960, Disney received $156,000: William H. Anderson, veepee in charge of studio operations and Director, $89,000; Roy O. Disney, President and Director, $52,000; E. Cardon Walker, veepee in charge of advertising and sales director, $52,000; Gunther R. Lessing, Vice-Chairman of board, veepee, general counsel and director, $31,300.

Mexico City Greenlights Its 'Disneyland'; Park Rising on 250-Acre Site

Mexico City, April 25.

Mayor Ernesto P. Uruchurto has not only given his official blessing for the erection of an "Entertainment City" here, but has allocated around 250 acres in the Chapultepec Woods section as site for the Mexican version of Disneyland.

Presumably this is not to be a profit making project. Receipts are to be channeled for schoolchildren's breakfasts and other welfare purposes.

Apart from the various rides and diversions, there is to be an artificial lake with three small vessels providing rides to paying public. There are to be pyramids, a small bull ring, etc., with central theme of entire project reflecting various epochs of Mexican national history.

The amusement park, not to be confused with another Disneyland-type project still in planning stages for nearby Ciudad Satelite, is expected to become a reality this year. It will be under supervision and management of the National Assn. for the Protection of Youth.

Greek Theatre, L.A., Rolls 9th Season June 23 With Victor Borge's 1-Weeker

Los Angeles, April 25.

Greek Theatre will tee off its ninth season June 23 with Victor Borge, in for a week, returning for first time since 1959. Season under direction of James A. Doolittle will have a total of seven presentations, with dates still being arranged.

Lineup now includes Jose Greco and his Spanish Ballet, to follow Borge; Harry Belafonte in a show featuring Miriam Makeba, African song stylist; and N.Y. City Ballet, in its production of the full-length "Nutcracker" and repertory program of three L.A. preems.

Sked also includes a package show composed of Roger Williams, Al Hirt and the Belafonte Folk Singers (no connection with the singer except use of his name); "A Summer Song Fest," topbilling Nat "King" Cole; and Greek Tragedy Theatre from Athens, in a production of Sophocles' "Electra." Latter is being brought to this country by Greek Theatre Assn., which will sponsor its first American tour.

'Rebel' Gets Outdoors

Nick Adams, who portrays the lead in the teleseries, "The Rebel," is being booked for the outdoor circuits. First date lined up for him is at the Wichita Buffalo Show & Rodeo, June 26 for a week.

Other stands are being lined up by the William Morris Agency.

'Judy at Carnegie' Capacity $20,100; Star's Surcharged Gotham Comeback

N. Y.'s Carnegie Hall was supercharged on both sides of the footlights Sunday evening (23) with Judy Garland onstage and an overflow crowd of partisans in the audience. It was a triumphant return to Gotham (she's already done the Palace and the Met bit) for Miss Garland who pulled in a $20,100.62 gross at a $9.90 top. A Carnegie repeat is scheduled for May 21 and similar sellout proportions are already indicated.

The audience mood was indicated right from the start when hefty applause greeted the opening strains of "The Man I Love," "Trolley Song" and "Over The Rainbow" which were played by Mort Lindsey leading a 39-piece orch. It was a natural lead-in for the star who walked casually out of the wings looking unusually slim in a sheath skirt and mandarin jacket. The unannounced walkon caught the house off-guard but as soon as she got stage-front pandemonium broke loose and a standing ovation stalled the song fest for several moments.

It was like that all through the long solo show which kicked off about 8:45 p.m. and broke near 11:20. It probably could have gone on longer, too, if Miss Garland had come prepared with more arrangements. After her 24th number of the evening, she halted the tumultous applause demanding still another encore with, "We just don't have much more." To which a voice from one of the boxes responded, "Just stand there."

This would have been less of a strain on her and the audience, too. For watching Miss Garland work is an effort as well as a pleasure. It's virtually impossible to remain casual and uninvolved when she's at work. She demands as much of the audience as she does of herself but everyone seems to enjoy participating and pulling for the singer who's become a sentimental fave of show biz.

There's more than sentiment involved, though. There's talent and lots of it. Few singers around can get as much out of a song as Miss Garland. When she's singing the happy rounds like "When You're Smiling," "It's Almost Like Being In Love," "The Trolley Song" and "Zing Went The Strings of My Heart" or the quiet "You're Nearer," "A Foggy Day" and "If Love Were All" to an intimate piano accomp, or a jazz-styled "Who Cares," "Putting On The Ritz" and "How Long Has This Been Going On" or the blues-fashioned "Come Rain or Come Shine" and "Stormy Weather," everything she's got goes into 'em and she' got plenty. The tones are clear, the phrasing is meaningful and the vocal passion is catching.

In addition to her pipes, which

Eleanor Powell Defers 10G LQ (N.Y.) Bookings

Eleanor Powell has stepped out of her date at the Latin Quarter, N. Y., projected for May 17 for three weeks. Miss Powell stated that she wanted more preparation before hitting the east. She had been in retirement for many years, and recently started a comeback in Las Vegas.

According to Ed Risman, the Latin Quarter managing director, there had been discussions and he understood that she would play the date at $10,000 a week. However, no contract had been signed.

Miss Powell has been one of a string of headliners contemplated for the Latin Quarter to bolster the current longrunning revue "Vive La Femme." Crosby Bros. (3) open tonight (Wed.); Moore & Lessy have been signed for July 4, and Liberace will open either late August or early September. The new show is slated for October with choreography by Ronald Fields.

Cancel Amaya's S.F. Performance As AFM Pickets

San Francisco, April 25.

A lone AFM picket cancelled the second of five Carmen Amaya performances at the 1,550-seat Geary Theatre last Friday (21) night and forced impresario John Moss to refund money to an audience of 800 which waited a half-hour for the show to start.

The argument—a long-standing one between AFM Local 6 and impresarios bringing attractions to Frisco — focused on the use of eight standby musicians, which neither Moss nor Miss Amaya wanted but which Local 6 insists are the minimum for the Geary.

Miss Amaya opened Thursday (20) night without the standbys and Charles (Pop) Kennedy, Local 6 president, told Moss that he would have to hire them thereafter if he expected Miss Amaya's show to go on the next night. Moss refused and the next night at 8:30, the AFM picket showed up. This prompted the stagehands to walk out, making it impossible for the show to go on.

On Saturday (22), however, Moss and Local 6 came to an agreement and the two Saturday and Sunday shows went on as scheduled.

SAN ANTONIO SPOT GOES ON '20S FORMAT

San Antonio, April 25.

Shadowland, an old suburban San Antonio spot, is being reopened under the ownership and management of Larry Herman, local danceband leader.

Since the war, Shadowland has been used only for private parties. In its heyday, however, it was a rendezvous for the most famous name bands of the period—Kay Kyser, Paul Whiteman, Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey, Glen Gray and the Casa Loma Orchestra and Henry Busse, plus Sophie Tucker and many other solo headliners. Herman will reopen the historic spot under the name of The Roaring '20s.

See Lotsa Banquet Biz For Summit Hotel, N. Y.

Indications that the new Summit Hotel, N.Y., now under construction by the Loew's Theatre interests, is booking a lot of advance banquet business is seen by the fact that the Ziegfeld Club has already reserved a December date for a function.

The organization, whose members worked in various Flo Ziegfeld shows, on Sunday (23) held a teadance at the Persian Room of the Plaza Hotel for the benefit its needy.

Inside Stuff—Vaude

President Kennedy's suggestion that there be a more careful perusal of expense accounts has restaurateurs and nitery owners worried. Inasmuch as some cafes get as much as 30% of their business through credit cards, and with most of that representing trade which various firms pay for, they see a major drop in business when new teeth and/or stricter enforcement of present regulations are carried out.

Of course, they comfort themselves that most of the trade coming into cabarets and restaurants is legitimate. However, with the threat that many items will not be deductible, it's likely to scare off a lot of business. Precedent for this is seen in the various retrenchment waves set in motion by individual firms. When this happens an entire set of customers disappears for lengthy stretches.

The more expensive establishments will be the major sufferers, since much of their spending comes from commercial firms. Should the promised economy wave come through, it's likely that many of the upper-priced beaneries will have to reduce prices or watch their carefully developed trade go to the cheaper joynts.

Pitt Promoter Wins Jail Booking In Wake of Phony Clint Walker 'Show'

Pittsburgh, April 25.

Clint Walker, star of ABC-TV's "Cheyenne" and his Wild West show at 39c, was the big "bargain" offered audiences yesterday (Monday) at Memorial Hall. But no one showed up except the customers. As a result, promoter Richard Ryan was under arrest here for arranging non-existing theatrical performances.

Ryan, who has several aliases, had duped various civic groups into sponsoring his "shows" in various communities, none of which came off. His main purpose in contacting the civic orgs was to get names on a mailing list. All of the individuals listed were hit for contributions to the charities which lent their names to the promotion.

Ryan, according to police, has a record dating back to 1940 and only last December was sentenced to 90 days in jail for promoting a so-called benefit for a boys' home in nearby McKeesport.

When no entertainers showed up for the Clint Walker show and with Ryan in jail, Safety Director Louis Rosenberg contacted radio and tv stations here to entertain the disgusted ticket buyers. However, most of the customers wanted their money back and the sponsor obliged.

Ryan, who is a native of Canada, is also having difficulties with the U.S. Immigration Service. Authorities here say he may be deported.

Blades Show Cuts No B.O. Ice at S.C. Arena

Columbia, S.C., April 25.

Attempt here to build a club ice show into an arena presentation proved financially unprofitable for local promoter Buddy Lee.

Lee brought Ed and Wilma Leary's "Adventures on Ice," primarily a clubdate unit, into Township auditorium week of March 30-April 2, with added acts and big orchestra.

The seven shows drew only 3,186 paid admissions, even though the show was advertised for 50 miles around. Special Easter Week church services were blamed, in part, for poor attendance.

Nitery Censor

the arrest objected and left he discontinued use of the words.

Complaint, according to Leonard and Hopkins—and confirmed by Chief Allen—was signed by the club's bartender under direction of the management and also by several off-duty policemen in the audience, latter acting as witnesses. A spokesman for the club, which is owned by Dave Campagna, said, however, bartender signed the warrant only at request of Chief Allen as a witness to the show.

Leonard said he was told to warn his client not to show up for work Friday night or he would be arrested. Hopkins, however, appeared, was taken to jail, released under bail, and returned to do what Chief Allen described later as "a perfectly legitimate show." Numerous club patrons, upon finding the performer had been taken to jail, appeared there to offer aid in getting his release, Leonard said.

Hopkins' hearing is set for Thursday (27). Outcome, over which numerous local nitery operators are concerned, would set a precedent of nitery pre-censorship if the performer is found guilty. Latter would depend on evidence interpreted to material used being of lascivious, prurient nature, attorney Selwyn said.

Another recent case of this nature involved arrest of singer Belle Barth at the Cloister several weeks ago. Case, however, was subsequently thrown out of court for incorrect charge. However the Cloister drew a three-day shutdown rap.

'Clean' in N.Y.

George Hopkins, whose foray into four-letter words threatens a censorship situation in Los Angeles, was originally reviewed in VARIETY in 1951 at the Village Vanguard, N.Y., where he didn't come prepared for the requirements of the room material-wise.

Review by Jose noted that Hopkins, in one instance tried to imitate Jackie Miles in the exposition of a cowboy bit. According to the Los Angeles charges, he shoulda stuck to Miles.

Will It Still Be 'The Midway'

Whether N.Y. World's Fair 1964-1965 prexy Robert Moses likes the "midway" term or not, it will be euphemistcally referded to as the Amusement Area, because its location overlooking Flushing Meadow Lake and adjacency to the amphitheatre (former Billy Rose's Aquacade), makes it the focal point of the light entertainment. One social hub for the VIPs will be a class Terrace Club, overlooking the lake, which either Restaurant Associates (The Forum, the Four Seasons, etc.) will build and operate or which the "21" Club may ditto. I. Robert Kriendler, president of the famed West 52d St. restaurant, is on the board of the Fair. Restaurant Associates and the Brass Rail already have signed for hot dog stands and other restaurant concessions, 33 in all, split about 50-50 between them.

The amphitheatre is reportedly about set to go under the operation-direction of Radio City Music Hall senior producer Leon Leonidoff and vet maestro Meyer Davis, with industralist backing. Show will be a combination aquatic and stage presentation, with plenty of girls in the water and on the runways. Production cost will hit $600,000. Understood Davis-Leonidoff will buy $250,000 of Fair bonds.

While the Fair Corp. shares percentage-wise on all undertakings which have a public boxoffice or large gross potential, these ventures still must be guaranteed substantially to the Moses project, which has a nearly $70,000,000 nut to underwrite before the Flushing Meadows project debuts in April '64. On the other hand, intra-restaurant, theatre, exhibit, etc., there can be concessions for food, beverages, snacks, souvenirs, etc.

Buster Crabbe is another mentioned for the Amphitheatre or for still another aquatic spectacle. This will be the Cypress Gardens-type of marine show which has put that Florida resort town on the map, in newsreels, on tv specs, etc.

It is no secret that Florida, now faced with stiffer competition from Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Nassau and other Caribbean resorts, has been dented on tourism and is getting promotion-minded. For the first time, incidentally, the State of Florida just opened an exhibit in Rockefeller Center.

Incidentally, more in line with Moses' credo of class-for-the-masses, even the hot-dog stands will have to conform with specific architectural and aesthetic standards. A minimum of $60,000 is the budget for these decorative dispensaries of frankfurters etc.

2,000 Eye World's Fair Blueprint; Economics Fine, But Fun's Aloof

By JOE COHEN

N. Y. World's Fair prexy Robert Moses is probably one of the most efficient planners in the public works domain. To an invited audience of public officials, civic dignitaries and newspapermen, Moses proved on Saturday (22), which was officially billed as World's Fair Preview Day, that he can put on a very nice show. Practically everything went off as per schedule before an audience of about 2,000 at the foot of the projected Unisphere which will be the theme of the new exhib.

The crowd had exhibits, scale models of the Fair's layout, and were told that more than half of the financing was behind them. Mayor Robert F. Wagner spoke of the huge benefits accuring to the city, its people and its commerce, because of this huge exhibition. There was also an excellent buffet luncheon served in the sole remaining building left from the 1939-40 saturnalia.

In Mayor Wagner's estimates is a return of an employment roll of 30,000 minimum to cater to the Fair's needs and services, a construction cost of $250,000,000, most of which will go toward wages of New York workers. The city will derive between $150,000,000 and $210,000,000 in tax revenues, and it will lure 70,000,000 visitors into the city from all parts of the world, which, of course, will accrue to the benefit of local hotels, restaurants, department stores, etc.

Many felt that the entire affair was nice, even though the few attempts at showmanship went awry. The 500 or so who came to the shining by boat from the east side mooring were welcomed by a quintet of pretty, weaving hula maids, from the Hotel Lexington. Arthur Treacher said a few words and Eartha Kitt performed briefly, latter two during luncheon.

The preview did prove that everything will be just so and efficient. One could marvel at the table at the scale models which would show the layout of the event to come off in three years, but few could say that the whole thing was fun. It's the absence of the latter quality that may spell a big difference. The Fair may not need a Little Egypt or a Sally Rand, but it will definitely have to be more than a lesson in civics and international amity if it's to achieve maximum effectiveness. As showmen and sponsors have learned since the days of the medicine shows there's got to be an entertainment come-on before the sales spiel, whether it was snake oil or as industrial and international amities. In most of the projects by Moses, he has gotten along very nicely without fun areas or midways. Jones Beach is a prime example. But here the lures are sand, surf and sun.

Preview Day also had another sidebar. Moses can make concessions to expediency. He had Borough president of Queens John T. Clancy on the rostrum, who delivered the typical speech of a politico with a multitude of "greats" in it, and there was Richard F. Sentner, exec veepee of U.S. Steel, delivering a 10-minute commercial for his firm. They're contributing the Unisphere. Maybe Moses will make a concession to fun and thus permit Mayor Wagner's happy prophecies to come true.

Plea for Ban on London Strippers Voted Down By 19-to-5 Margin

London, April 25.

Sir Cyril Black, a Tory Member of Parliament, hollered loud and clear, but unsuccessfully, in an attempt to force a ban on "all striptease and all displays of nudity and near nudity." He wants all such shows in clubs and theatres to be thumbed down as illegal, without obscenity or indecency having to be proved.

But the Standing Committee on the British Licensing Bill wasn't having any, and vetoed his amendment. Black is concerned with the difficulty of pinning a prosecution on what is obscene or indecent, because of varying opinions.

Calling for "a drastic clean up of these entertainments in bogus clubs," he asked whether those present would like their wives, sisters or daughters to earn their living in this way. Dennis Vosper, Minister of State, Home Office, said the bill already dealt with indecency in clubs and other establishments, but that near-nudity, nudity and striptease was difficult to define.

Tory M.P. William Rees-Davies put in a bid for the thirsty by insisting that they should not try to ruin "a perfectly good drink bill" by trying to deal with striptease and nudity on account of these subjects having nothing to do with legal tippling.

Black's amendment was axed by 19 votes to 5.

Newhart Aids Symph

Bridgeport, April 25.

Bob Newhart-Chad Mitchell trio date for benefit of Connecticut Symphony Sunday (23) at Klein Memorial Auditorium hung the SRO sign on the municipally-operated 1,500-seater for first time in 15 years.

At $4 top a gross of almost $3,750 was estimated.

Matson Line Sets Top Names For Hawaiian Cruises

Hollywood, April 25.

Nitery talent will be used for the first time on the Matson Line's cruises to Hawaii. A flock of acts has already been lined up by Seymour Heller who is coordinating bookings for the steamship company.

While talent will put on two shows enroute to Honolulu on the S. S. Lurline and S. S. Matsonia and two more coming back, they'll draw no salary. However, all the acts' expenses will be paid. Moreover, during the Honolulu stopover the Royal Hawaiian Hotel there will present one show, with perfomers getting a cut of the covers.

Set to break-in the arrangement are Gordon & Sheila MacRae and the Crosby Boys. They'll start late in August according to Heller. Firmed for voyages thereafter are Margaret Whiting and Mel Torme, Gogi Grant and the Hi-Los, Rhonda Fleming and Jack Smith, Paul Gilbert and Chiquita & Johnson, Dick Contino and Marie McDonald, the Modernaires and Buddy Lester, Jimmie Rodgers and one-to-fill.

Two years ago, when the S.S. Leilani plied between Los Angeles and Honolulu, Heller had a similar deal going. At that time he used Rodgers and Connie Haines, Alexis Smith and Craig Stevens. But on that occasion, the acts merely got the sea trip; there was no money opportunity tie-in with the Royal Hawaiian. Since then the Lilani has been withdraw from service.

Memphis Paper Yanks Scribe's Column, But It Continues as Paid Ad

Memphis, April 25.

Bill Bruning, who was relieved of his assignment as nightbeat columnist for the Memphis Commercial Appeal, is retaining his pillar in the sheet as well as adding the Press-Scimitar, but under paid auspices. The column is being subsidized by Larry Owens, operator of the Nite Lighter cafe, a close friend of Bruning's who is carrying it as an advertisement in both papers.

Tab for the two sheets runs to $750 weekly and the column is clearly labeled as an ad. Bruning was shifted to the Commercial Appeal copy desk.

It's recalled that showman Billy Rose, during his operation of The Diamond Horseshoe, N.Y., wrote a column on sundry matters, which was later syndicated by the Herald Tribune.

In the realignment of duties on the C-A, Archie Quinn, who chronicled the local show biz scene, has been upped to entertainment editor by editor Frank Alghren. Quinn, in turn, delegated John Knott to do a daily show business column.

Sheraton to Operate New $4-Mil. Hawaii Hotel

Honolulu, Aprli 25.

Sheraton hotel chain will operate a $4,000,000 luxury resort at Kaanapali beach, Maui island. Unique "hanging garden" design is expected to make it Hawaii's most distinctive hotel. Initial increment will have 150 rooms. Hotel will be constructed and owned by a group of California builders. Ernest Henderson, Sheraton president, flew in from Boston to wrap up the long-pending project.

Entire Kaanapali shoreline is earmarked as a $40,000,000 resort center as a long-range development by American Factors, Ltd., and Pioneer Mill Co.

Playboy Incorporating 140 Hotel Rms. In Its New $3,500,000 L.A. Key Club

Chicago, April 25.

Playboy Mag is incorporating 140 hotel rooms in its projected $3,500,000 Los Angeles key club on the Sunset Strip site of the old Mocambo (latterly the Cloister). Playboy recently laid out a reported $1,200,000 for the site and two adjoining parking lots to reps of Paulette Goddard and the Tyrone Power estate, who owned the land. Groundbreaking is scheduled for this fall, and the target date for completion is late 1962.

The new club will generally follow the Penthouse-Library-Living Room format of the Chi prototype and some entertainment policy of "something going on all the time." But this will be supplemented with a little theatre, a swimming pool, cabanas, and steam baths for patrons who would like to rid themselves of the alky for which they paid $1.50 a shot. All of this and briefly-clad "bunny" waitresses, too.

Playboy will open its new Miami Beach club (second in the proposed chain) on May 10 with a bill composed of Mae Barnes, Clancy Hayes, Starr Sisters, Johnny Janis and Don Sherman, plus the Julian Gould Trio. Herbie Brock and Teddy Napoleon. Other franchises have been let for St. Louis, New Orleans, Pittsburgh, Detroit and Baltimore, and construction of a Gotham club is under way.

Coast Playboy setup will also house offices for Playboy Magazine and for Show Business Illustrated, a new consumer mag in the entertainment field.

Ray Charles' Big $39,618 On Trio of 1-Nighters

Ray Charles on a trio of one-nighters over the weekend, in which he played four shows, scored a big $39,618. At the Music Hall, Cincinnati, Friday (21), he did $13,611. In Pittsburgh's Syria Mosque Temple, Charles hit $15,749 in two shows and he did $10,054 in Columbus' Veterans Memorial aud on Sunday (23).

The tour is being promoted by Hal Zeiger.

Democrat Retort To G.O.P. Quips

Washington.

Editor, VARIETY:

Your printing of the Oscar awards prepared by our giggling friends at the Republican National Committee, prompts this response.

The use of whimsey as evidenced in its awards of the Oscars, adds a new dimension to political warfare.

The Republicans have lately produced a comedy act—Ev & Charlie—which has been favorably compared with the old vaudeville team of Gallagher & Shean. The one who sounds like Huckleberry Hound is Ev. Thus far Ev and Charlie have upset both the Goldwater and Rockefeller wings of the GOP, and the suggestion has been made that they be replaced by a series of tv debates between Rockefeller and Goldwater. But the Republicans are understandably allergic to tv debates so Ev and Charlie seem destined for a long run.

Another show biz approach by the Republicans involves a writing cat, one Tom Kitten, who authors inside accounts of goings-on at the White House. By a strange coincidence, Caroline Kennedy has a feline pet named Tom Kitten. We have investigated this new threat to our Party and have discovered that Tom Kitten is the pen name for a pet cat owned by the Republican publicity director. This talented animal not only writes the Tom Kitten letters but also prepares speeches for the Republican Chairman and contributes to their publication, Battle Line.

We at the Democratic National Committee take our politics quite seriously and we have no plans to try to match the Ev & Charlie Show or to hire a talking dog as a ghost writer. Despite the thesis of George Orwell's novel, "Animal Kingdom," we believe that politics is for people and that the use of animals—no matter how talented—is just a passing fad.

Deputy Chairman for Public Affairs.)

Cover Charge Inflation Seen Hitting Hotel B.O.

Spotty post-theatre business in the New York hotels has caused agents and show biz observers to ponder the escalating cover charges that these rooms have gone in for of late. They average $3 and $4 and, in the case of the Waldorf-Astoria when a Chevalier or Belafonte is booked, has occasionally been tilted to $5.

The hotels' theory that the covers will defray the cost of the talent and music, and the profit will come from foods and beverages, is good if business holds up. For years the hotels looked upon their entertainment rooms for "publicity" values but postwar prosperity and flux of travel has made the rental of rooms no problem. In fact if hotels don't average 85-92% average occupancy, as the more successful ones do, they complain.

None the less, the hotel rooms, with their covers, do face competitive situations such as the Copacabana and the Latin Quarter where there are no covers but do give elaborate shows at $6 and $7 minimums.

Pistol Packin' Key Club Owner May Lose Mpls. License After Shootings

Minneapolis, April 25.

Unwillingness of either victim to file a complaint has prevented police from filing charges against Henry Sabes, owner of the Key Club, who shot two patrons in his nitery fortnight ago. Minneapolis Mayor P. Kenneth Peterson had directed Police Chief Kenneth Moore to sign such a complaint on first-degree assault charges.

Shooting incident occurred when a patron who had been evicted from the club returned with a gun. Sabes, armed while gathering cash receipts, ordered the customer to drop his gun and shot him when he refused. A second shot by Sabes injured a nearby tablesitter.

While it's unlikely that charges will be filed against Sabes, the bistro proprietor is in danger of losing the licenses for his Key club where many show business stars have appeared during the last two years.

Moore said that his department is gathering information on the disturbance and the nightclub's operations. Date will be turned over to the Minneapolis city council which will be asked to revoke the club's licenses for liquor, 3.2 beer, entertainment, food and cigarets.

Rockefeller Vetoes Bill To Broaden Agencies

Albany, April 25.

A bill designed to permit talent agencies to expand their activities was vetoed last week by New York's Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller. The Governor stated that the proposed measure, which was introduced by Sen. Daniel G. Albert, (R-Rockville Center) as an amendment to the General Business law, could result in abuse and evasion of the maximum fee provision of that law.

Sen. Albert asserted that the bill would allow talent agencies to set up tax-saving partnerships and corporations for actors, agents and writers. But he also admitted that the measure would enable an agency to sell instruction courses, photographs and other services whereby an office could charge more than the legal limits now permitted.

Opposing signature of the measure was the State Labor Dept., New York's Mayor Robert F. Wagner, the State AFL-CIO and the Associated Actors & Artists of America.

New Acts

SYLVIA COPELAND
Songs, piano
25 Mins.
Downstairs at the Upstairs, N.Y.

Sylvia Copeland is an unusual singer-pianist even for a room that dotes on unusual and offbeat entertainments. Miss Copeland, light skinned and of Haitian descent, seems highly influenced by her ancestral heath. She endows her tunes with a heavy beat and is lavish in the use of her colors. Her vocal palette is well stocked, she can roar the scale like Yma Sumac, be as kittinish as Martha Kitt, and withal show a sense of humor and an off-centre line of thinking that will keep patrons hopping mentally.

There are too many times when she goes overboard. Instead of using her colorful endowments skilfully, she daubs indiscriminately and therefore presents a confused portrait of herself. Miss Copeland goes off in many directions without holding still in one place long enough to make any kind of vivid impression. She sings in the patois French of the Haitian, goes in for a Portuguese ditty, a moody tune of Puerto Rico, and a takeoff on "Bye Bye Blackbird" and "I Love Paris." Her style is varied on each tune, and she strives for so many effects that she can leave a listener bewildered.

There is, however, an undeniable song and piano talent. She needs a strong discipline and a more focused viewpoint. She has the physical accoutrements and personality to start her off strongly on the floor. Jose.

HOWARD BEDER
Songs
25 Mins.
Eddys', Kansas City

After a couple of years as singing host of Le Cupidon in N.Y., Howard Beder has recently taken to the night club circuit. Good looking young man with a fine baritone puts much into his work. He favors the romantic ballads and comes off strong for his 25 minutes at the Eddy Bros' deluxe restaurant, his first engagement in these parts.

His background at the N.Y. intime spot comes in handy as he sings out to the patrons by name (and table number at times), and he brings them into the act for a singalong or two. Opens with "Hello, Young Lovers" and follows with "Somebody Loves Me," "You're Nobody Until Somebody Loves You" and "Just Say I Love Her" to hold the romantic pace high.

He switches to a livelier tune with "Birth of the Blues," contrasts with "The Show Must Go On" and winds with a switchback to "Lazy River," which finds the patrons singing him off and enjoying it all. There's always room in show biz for a bright young singer, and Beder should make it okay. He's also a good bet for the recording field with his clear and competent pipes. Quin.

JANE MARTIN & JOHN BARO
Comedy Ballroom
25 Mins.
Eddys, Kansas City

Twosome of Jane Martin and John Baro have been working their nightclub comedy antics and knockabout adagio acro in Canadian spots for several months, but the turn is new to U.S. audience. This fortnight at Eddys' is their first in this country. Comedy being not too plentiful on the club circuit, there's a good future ahead for them, albeit a bit of tightening in their routine would help.

Opener has Miss Martin at the mike in a gaudy getup a la Jayne Mansfield, and this gets her comedy rolling on "Talent" song. She intermixes some chatter, some of it is mainly for the late crowd, then satirizes "Cowboy's Sweetheart" as one of her best bits. John Baro then has an inning as an inept conductor; the two carry off a comedy ballroom, and bow off with their 25 minutes seeming a much faster turn.

Patrons here see comparatively little on this order, but took to it quickly, and at close sent the couple off to a rousing hand. They have a wealth of material, doing two different shows here. Their is wacky comedy, full of laughs, an unusual entry for clubs. Quin.

YVONNE CONSTANT
Songs
Society, London

Yvonne Constant is a bright blonde Parisian with a gay bubbling personality which more than compensates for any vocal deficiency. Wisely, she does not attempt to strain as her voice would certainly not stand up to it, but, surprisingly, that matters not at all. It is the end result in her case is a lively, enjoyable, diverting 20-minute songalog, in which most of her numbers have a French origin, but her explanatory dialog and lyrics are generously laced with English. Not unnaturally, she has a couple of numbers from "Irma la Douce," including "Dis-donc" and the title song, a bright little number caled "Mary the Mink" and a delightful closing song in "Itsy Bitsy Teeny Weeny Tout Petite Bikini." She also has a strong comedy entry in "The Physique of Philipe."

Miss Constant rarely stays put at the microphone but prances around the floor with some cute steps which somehow or another seem to fit the mood of each of her songs. She looks a safe bet for any cafe in which comedy entertainers are popular. Myro.

REBECCA APPONEY
Wild Animals
16 Mins.
Shrine Circus, Omaha

Pert and pretty Rebecca Apponey may soon become the nation's foremost femme wild-animal trainer. The young and stacked lass, performing in an abbreviated trainer's costume, has been working the former Cuneo animal act now for five weeks and should be ready for some bigtime bookings by the time she completes her summer's work with the Kelly-Miller Circus.

Miss Apponey, a brunet, works seven leopards, seven Siberian wolves and a black panther through rapidfire routines. Act is flashy, animals are well groomed and high spot comes when a zebra enters arena to be ridden by a leopard—normally a deadly enemy. In getting leopards out of the ring, Miss Apponey sends them through three fire hoops suspended at top of the arena.

Act figures to fare well in any visual medium. Trump.

KING PLEASURE
Vocals
30 Mins.
Jazz Workshop, San Francisco

King Pleasure is the jazz singer who really started the whole bit of jazz vocals to instrumental jazz solos on which the acts like Lambert-Hendricks-Ross are now washing in. He writes his own material and it is replete with meaning for the jazz fans and news faithfully to the jazz solo on which it is based.

For instance: on the Charlie Parker alto sax solo called "Parker's Mood" King Pleasure has written a moving jazz poem that is one of the most effective vocal numbers in jazz. His repertoire is varied from blues to jump tunes and ballads. He is particularly strong on numbers such as "Sometimes I'm Happy" (he does the classic Lester Young solo here), "Mood For Love" (on the James Moody alto sax solo) and several from the pen of Charlie Parker. He's got LPs on Prestige and Hi-Fi Jazz going for him and looks like a solid addition to the jazz stable. Rafe.

MORTY STORM
Comedy
20 Mins.
Trade Winds, Chicago

Morty Storm, who has devoted the past 15 years to clubdating in the east and playing the Catskill circuit, is currently making his debut in a major nitery. He acquits himself here as a standard comic with standard material, and gets substandard reaction.

He spends half the act prodding, if not imploring, the audience to laugh and, while many comics use this as the basis for a workable routine, with Storm it sounds merely desperate.

Comic would do well to capitalize on the one characterization that he handles best and is most physically suited to—that of the beset-upon litle man for whom everything goes wrong. His occasional venture into this portrayal suggests the possibility of an integrated act on this theme. Mor.

L.A.'s Ambassador Sets String of Name Dates

Hollywood, April 25.

The Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, has a record string of advance bookings lined up for the Cocoanut Grove. Following the stand of Georgia Gibbs, "Holiday in Japan" revue opens April 25, trailed by Eydie Gorme & Steve Lawrence; Pat Boone, June 1-14; Louis Prima and Keely Smith have been contracted for June 15 to July 2.

After a three-week gap, into which possibly Steve Allen's show, now in Las Vegas, may be niched, comes Sam Levenson, July 25-Aug. 13; Tony Martin, through Aug. 30; Myron Cohen-Vivienne Della Chiesa, through Sept. 14; Gordon & Sheila MacRae to Nov. 1; Sammy Davis Jr., until Nov. 22; to be followed by Nat King Cole who winds up Dec. 17.

Gibson, was imbued with press agentry. The plea was made that Miss Gibson's near-nudity not be covered with "red tape of a legal nature." While he defended his client's right to the "Greatest Show Girl on Earth" title, Ottenberg also said he hoped the case wouldn't be taken to court.

Actually, the law firm's letter, signed by Richard B. Smith, made no direct threat of legal action. It was framed in the form of an emphatic request that the blurbs be discontinued.

Smith said the circus and its predecessors "have consistently over the years since the 1870s used and protected this valuable tradename and service-mark throughout the U.S. and foreign countries." He continued:

"We are sure you realize the infringement on our client's tradename and service-mark upon reading the advertisement and the substantial injury which our client would suffer from its continued use by you."

"The Greatest Show Girl on Earth" was a recent Ottenberg idea. Miss Gibson regularly is promoted as "The Bashful Bride," the name of her unbashful act.

Judy Garland

haven't sounded so good in years, there was almost a new Garland on stage at Carnegie. She's trimmed down quite a bit since her last N. Y. appearance at the Met two years ago, and she isn't as tense. There was an ease and a self-assurance in her demeaner that diminished any worries about whether she'd get through. It was all slick and pro, even to the incidental patter about her weight and hair-do.

The presentation and costuming were simple. The sheath-mandarin effect of the first act was replaced by black slacks and a blouse in the second. The costuming gave her unusual mobility and she used it to advantage. With the use of hand-mike, she pranced and skipped around the stage heightening her singing with the aura of complete physical joy. And when she asked the aud to join in a singalong on "For Me and My Gal," few could resist.

In fact, the aud couldn't resist anything she did. The aisles were jammed during the encore turns, applauding her every curtsy and even saluting her three children, who were lifted on stage by Rock Hudson who had a first-row seat, with appreciative cheers. Even after the "just stand there" request, she followed with two additional numbers, "After You've Gone" and "Chicago" which brought her songbag for the evening up to 26 numbers.

Maestro Lindsey filled a herculean job leading the orch on the big numbers, heading a nine-piece combo for the jazz sequence and supplying keyboard accomp for her excursion into intimacy.

Freddie Fields and David Begelman, her managers, are credited with the presentation and Capitol Records' engineers were on hand to put "Judy At Carnegie" into the groove. Even pruned to the limitations of an LP's running time, it should be a socko platter. Gros.

Latin Casino, Camden

Camden, April 13.

Milton Berle, Betty George, The Dunhills, La Scala Opera Singers, Francis Brunn, Leonard Sues conducting Martyn King Orch (14); $6 minimum.

Milton Berle is introduced, somewhat out-of-datish, as "Mr. TV" at this plush 1,500-seat room. It would be more apropos to call him "Mr. Night Club," because this clearly is his element and he enjoys every minute of his act as much as the aud enjoys him.

As usual, Berle is in almost every act, with only superb juggler Francis Brunn being spared. Berle appears in the audience first and has the crowd with him even before he hits the stage.

The night club Berle is a somewhat different citizen than the one that dominated the early days of tv. He alternates between impersonating a swish and a lecher and gets away with it because he always is the clown and the jester.

Luscious singer Betty George, she of the unbelievable chassis, is the butt of Berle's comments on how she is put together but manages to do a thoroughly professional singing job on the one number alloted her. Berle would do well to give her a few more songs to do. She has a swinging, hard-hitting singing style.

Berle also manages to break up the burlesque opera act by the La Scala singer, does some dancing with the male precision specialists, the Dunhills, and clowns with his trumpet playing orchestra leader, Leonard Sues.

Berle troupe closes April 30, with Abbe Lane and Xavier Cugat opening May 1. Bitt.

New Lotus, Washington

Washington, April 20.

Gene Barry, Jack Denton, Winnie Hoveler Dancers (4), Jack Bosco, Eddie Diamond Orch (10); $1 cover, $3 minimum.

Gene Barry, the gunslinging dude of the NBC-TV "Bat Masterson" series, has little trouble switching to a dudish song-and-dance man in his appearance at the New Lotus. He's played niteries before, but his D.C. run represents a tryout of a new approach.

Barry, whose tv series apparently has run its course, proves as cool a customer onstage as his video characterization. He capitalizes on his sleek, suave looks, as well as his rep as a tv celebrity. But he also vocalizes well (baritone) in a variety of styles, maneuvers with dexterity, and displays pro poise and stage presence.

Barry conveys a little of both Dean Martin and Perry Como, both in looks and performance. His biggest asset now obviously is his video fame. But what comprises his drawing power can also serve to handicap his effort to make Barry—not Bat—the nitery attraction.

Only vestige of his Western role incorporated in his act is the gold-knobbed cane—a handy prop for his routines anyway. Popular with the juve set, Barry has material as clean as a sermon.

Harrah's, Lake Tahoe

Lake Tahoe, April 21.

Louis Prima & Keely Smith, Sam Butera and the Witnesses (6), Leighton Noble Orch (15), Dorothy Dorgen Dancers & Singers (15); $4 minimum.

This Louis Prima-Keely Smith outing is proving to be one of the strongest shows (b.o.-wise) Russ Hall has booked for the big South Shore Room since it opened in December, 1959. Despite a traffic-crippling spring snowstorm that dumped more than a foot of the white stuff on the Tahoe scene, localites and tourists are packing the house for the two shows nightly, and for this potent bill three shows are skedded for Friday and Saturday nights. And it's reservations only. On night caught, maitre d'Cliff Kehl and his capable staff managed to seat an estimated 800 for each of the three shows.

Current stint marks the first time the Prima-Smith show has played the south end of Lake Tahoe in several years. And aud reaction indicated repeat dates should be more frequent. As expected, it's a top-league offering heavy on the stuff the ensemble has honed to perfections: Prima's strong vocaling and horn blowing, Miss Smith's deadpan expression (and impressive song styling) and the frenetic instrumentaling of Sam Butera and his talented Witnesses.

From opener "When You're Smiling" to exit number the show's a swinger. Group essays such as "I Ain't Got Nobody," "Just A Gigolo," and "Sheik of Araby." Prima and Miss Smith go it tandem to score with the likes of "When My Baby Smiles At Me," and "Old Black Magic." Prima and Butera duo for new laugh-getter called "Coolin'."

Dick Humphreys, no newcomer to Reno-Tahoe clubs, proves he's one of the best hoofers in the business. Execution is neat, style is commanding, and he works at a jet pace. Dorben Dancers and Singers take the opening spot in an imaginative bit of choreography on an Afro-Cuban theme. Colorful jungle setting lends to the mood. The smartly rehearsed line is proving to be the best ever to play a Reno-Tahoe club.

New show set for May 4. Long.

Fairmont, S. F.

San Francisco, April 21.

George Gobel, Dolores Perry, Ernie Heckscher Orch (11); $3-$3.50 cover.

George Gobel is his usual, charming, amusing, low-pressure self in this one-hour show which should keep the check-grabbers happy.

He comes on with somewhat fresher material than he was using in his last stint at the Fairmont 21 months ago, and spins a number of yarns based on his own special lode of humor—wife Alice, embarrassing moments, growing up in the Midwest, etc.

In his light, melodic voice Gobel reprises the last few bars of a bit he's done before—a song called "That Old Irish Mother of Mine" — and winds show's first half-hour by introducing Dolores Perry, a red-haired soprano who sings "Beyond the Blue Horizon," "The Sound of Music" and "Un Bel Dei" from Puccini's "Madame Butterfly." The aria is her best contribution.

Gobel returns with more yarns, including one truly funny shaggy dog story about Thomas A. Edison, and winds by singing a ballad, "Soon I'll Wed My Love." He and Miss Perry end the show with a cute duet of "You Are My Sunshine."

Show is unpretentious but satisfying and runs through May 10. Stef.

Barclay Hotel, Toronto

Toronto, April 18.

Eddie Peabody, Bobby Sargent, Bob Arlen Dancers (6), Bobby Rose, Percy Curtis Orch (8); $1.50 cover.

With Eddie Peabody playing his first Toronto club date, though remembered from earlier days of vaudevile at the old Shea's Hippodrome, the banjo great alternately belted out and caressed his trademarked instrument for 40 minutes when caught opening night. He finally had to beg off at this spot where tables were added for jammed customers with long memories.

Ageless, blond man is noisy and loud—with excellent technique. He also puts a violin-mute on his banjo for a soft rendition of "Sunrise Serenade" and "I'll See You in My Dreams," with some clever double-stopping of a nostalgic "Liebestraum."

Bobby Sargent, a stage actor before embarking on club work, proves himself a fine story-teller. He also scores with his song of a disappointed French soldier who joins the Foreign Legion and comes back to his once-delectable mistress of five years before to find her physically changed. This is done in French lyrics to the tune of "Valentina" and had the customers hilarious.

His takeoffs on the Washington scene are discerning and punchy, ditto his kidding of tv commercials and a very funny impersonation, complete with dialect, of an immigrant who had succeeded in America. More a character actor than a one-line comedian, Sargent is of the Berman-Sahl school of commentators but more effective in appeal to the general run of nitery patrons.

Acts are in till April 29. McStay.

Blackstone, Chicago

Chicago, April 18.

Hildegarde, Franz Benteler Orch; $2 cover weekends, $1.50 weeknights.

Sheraton-Blackstone's posh Bonaparte Room is made to order for Hildegarde, and vice versa. The chanteuse from Milwaukee, with her let's pretend Gallic showmanship, was an inspired choice to initiate a show policy in this room, which previously had been a class dinery with a small society unit—a sort of south-of-the-Loop edition of the Ambassador's Buttery.

It's clear, from Hildegarde's example, that the Bonaparte lends itself to tony femme talents, and the hostelry, which hasn't yet a second booking, will probably find itself competing for names with the Drake's Camellia House.

From the moment that Hildegarde steps out on the floor it's strictly her party. Roaming the room with mike in hand, she enhances the intimate dinner-party atmosphere the room affords with her tres charming song and patter, then moves into the spotlight to sing her American-in-Paris Seine songs as the tablesitters call out requests for number identified with her since their prom days.

Hildegarde has updated her repertoire to include a few of the more current favorites, such as "Follow Me" from "Camelot" and the theme from "Never On Sunday." But it's her old-wine collection of Parisian vocal pastries that really score. She hiatused for a costume change and came back for another set of piano and song nostalgia pieces and, withal gave them a solid 50-minute one-woman show.

A few bugs remain to be worked out in the staging for the Bonaparte (formerly the Balinese Room), particularly the sharply-angled overhead spotlights which tend to cut across the performer. However, the total effect is that of a classy supper club and the new image should make for solid biz and prove prestigious for the hotel.

Bill is in till May 7. Mor.

Flame Room, Mpls.

Minneapolis, April 19.

Felicia Sanders, Irving Joseph, Danny Ferguson orch. (6); $1.50-$2.50 cover.

It's a new Felicia Sanders in the new Flame Room this session. A frequent performer here before this nitery in the Hotel Radisson was completely revamped last year, singer is as changed as the plush surroundings. For one thing, she's doing more progressive jazz than she did in her last appearance, a cue she has taken, no doubt, from her gifted pianist-director, hubby Irving Joseph. She's dispensed with most pop numbers and is concentrating on show tunes and specialty material.

Miss Sanders earns the congrats of regular patrons by avoiding the cliches which thrushes on the nightclub circuit have been delivering ad nauseam this season. Despite a heavy run of gal chirpers here in recent months, none of Miss Sanders' selections has been heard in this spot.

Her style of warbling doesn't evoke table pounding, but the large, restrained audience at show caught was quietly appreciative of her intense delivery. Singer scored best with "This Nearly Was Mine" and "When the World Was Young."

Accompanist Joseph is thoroughly competent, contributing a jazz beat that's a welcome change from the usual 88 backing. Danny Ferguson's band, with a little more opportunity for expression, does a nice job supporting the headliner.

Miss Sanders remains through April 26 with Vivienne della Chiesa in the following fortnight. Rees.

Sands, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, April 21.

Jerry Lewis, Steiner Bros. (3), Garr Nelson, Copa Girls (12), Antonio Morelli Orch (28); produced by Jack Entratter; choreography, Renne Stuart; $4 minimum.

The distinctive comedy style of Jerry Lewis should insure for impresario Jack Entratter capacity Copa Rooms for the next month. Lewis initials his turn with topical gags, waves his clowning versatility into a romp which brought blanketing yocks from first-nighters.

Among the clicking bits are his impreshes of a pug, a folk singer, a maestro, a nine-year-old dancing school student and a fast draw contestant. He shows his ad-lib artistry with audience participation in singing and leading the orch. Lou Brown, piloting the 27-piece Antonio Morelli music-making crew, gives a strong assist.

The Steiner Bros. (3) present a swiftly moving act which borrows unashamedly from the Four Step Bros. and the Dunhills in the terp department. What the youngsters lack in originality they make up for in enthusiasm, also scoring in the vocal segments.

Holdover production number, featuring the songs of Garr Nelson and the fine footwork of the beautiful Copa Girls (12), balances program, in until Danny Thomas opens May 17. Duke.

Hungry i, S. F.

San Francisco, April 17.

Mort Sahl; The Grandisons (4); Anita Shear. $2.50 admission.

Back at his old haunts in the club where he got his start, comic Mort Sahl displays again the barbed shifts of political and social wit that put him on the top of his field. Incidentally, his reappearance in this cellar bistro is the first time the club has had a real winner in months.

This was a bad winter for Enrico Banducci and Sahl's four-week stint may just pull him through. Opening week, the lines were once again all up the stairs into the street for the shows as it has been for top run talent in the past.

Without his props of Ike and Nixon, Sahl looked as if he might have trouble finding targets for his darts. But he has neatly avoided this, partly by telling what he would have said if Kennedy lost, partly by sniping at the Kennedy administration and partly by shifting ground into less immediate political areas. It is a tribute to Sahl's success as a show biz autodidact that he has gotten to where he can do this successfully.

His familiar sweater-and-open-shirt costume with a newspaper clutched in one hand is still his trademark. His lines come fast, studded with "right?" and all his familiar asides. But there is more orthodox direction to his shows now, more working and reworking of material and less off the top of the head ad libbing.

The result is a well paced, well planned show that is full of properly spaced laughs, contains enough of the political satire to satisfy the original fans and still is aimed at a broad audience. With this return to the hungry i, Sahl proves he is in the first rank of night club comics and will stay there as long as he wants.

The Grandisons, a Negro gospel group (three girls and a male pianist who also sings), belts out a list of gospel and folk songs with more energy than polish. Sister Rosetta Tharpe pioneered in this field 20 years ago and did it better. The Grandisons have youth and ingenousness going for them, but medium pipes and a stiff manner onstage hamper them. However, at this moment they are in a favorable position for success.

Anita Shear, who may turn out to be the Sidney Franklin of flamenco singers, plays guitar and sings folk songs—flamenco, French, Russian, etc. in a plaintive, amiable voice. She's most impressive with the flamenco bits on which she picks guitar. Rafe.

Riviera Club, Dallas

Dallas, April 15.

Mark Carroll, with Howard Stafford, Dee & Willie Barton; no cover or minimum.

Singing pianist Mark Carroll is back on the nitery scene, now at the plush, new midtown Riviera, latest of the many privateries. Youngster has embellished his act via a fine standup vocal stint on stage. With Howard Stafford at the 88. After a trio of songs, Carroll takes over the keyboard, where's he adept.

Added assets are his vocal shading in a rare choice of tunes; he displays savvy in piping "Small World," "Lady Is a Tramp," "How to Handle a Woman" and "Two Ladies in the Shade of the Banana Tree." He stylizes "I've Never Left Your Arms," "To Be in Love" and the clean, clever and risible "A Trout, No Doubt." He scores big with topical lyrics on "Will You Still Be Mine?"

Top backing is provided by Dee Barton, drums, and Willie Barton on string bass.

Act is set for three frames, with no replacement set. Bark.

Dunes, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, April 20.

Zsa Zsa Gabor, Wiere Bros. (3), Earl Wrightson, Joey Forman, Hank Henry, Joyce Roberts, Girl Dancers (10), Boy Dancers (4), Bill Reddie Orch (13); produced by Harold Minsky; original music, Bill Reddie; stage direction, Edward Lynch; choreography, Ron Lewis; $4 minimum.

Fortunately for Zsa Zsa Gabor, producer Harold Minsky has surrounded her with some talented people, and the result is that her show here isn't a total loss. Harry Crane has given her some fairly humorous dialog based primarily on the "I won't speak to you unless you are a millionaire" theme, but this, plus a pretty face, hairdo, and gowns isn't enough to carry a Vegas-type show. The Wiere Bros., Earl Wrightson, Joey Forman, Hank Henry, Joyce Roberts, outstanding original music by Bill Reddie, and some magnificent choreography by Ron Lewis come to the rescue.

The Wiere freres, a trio of outlandishly nonsensical comics with a Continental flavor, have much new material, and have never been funnier than they are in this outing. They do a wonderful straight act on their own, and lend their talents from time to time to bolster Miss Gabor's appearances.

Earl Wrightson, the handsome singer with the rich baritone, is a fine performer in the heavyweight class who helps salvage the proceedings. Wrightson registers solidly with his too brief repertoire, which initials with a pleasing version of "Camelot."

Joey Forman, another highly capable performer, is a potent member of the team which helps the star from sagging too sadly. The multi-talented Forman is wasted here, but his efforts are top-drawer.

Hank Henry, the Silver Slipper top banana, stepped in at the last minute of rehearsals to hypo a skit with Miss Gabor, and he all but steals the entire show. Henry will bicycle between the Slipper and the Dunes.

Joyce Roberts, assisted by a male vocal group called The Eligibles (4), is a beautiful chirperterper who smoothly sparks the tasteful production numbers. At Miss Gabor's request, there are no nudes in this party, in for four weeks. Bill Reddie's orch (13) blends for a big plus factor. Duke.

Desert Inn, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, April 18.

"Phil Harris Show," with Phil Harris, Sandy Stewart, Aldo Monaco, The Pieros (2), Conrad Buckner, Jubilee Four, Donn Arden Dancers (12), Buddy Cole, Carlton Hayes Orch (17); produced by Phil Harris and Frank Sennes; choreography, Donn Arden; $4 minimum.

The Phil Harris Show is a thoroughly enjoyable package that should keep the turnstiles breezily windmilling for maitre d' Pancho at the Painted Desert Room for the next four weeks. Honorary Confederate Harris has concocted an evenly-balanced parade of variety acts, each of top-drawer calibre, and he masterfully dominates the festivities as the charming coordinating headliner.

Sandy Stewart, Aldo Monaco, The Pieros (2), Conrad "Little Buck" Buckner, the Jubilee Four, and the Donn Arden Dancers (12) support Harris in the romp, which is guided with the proper flair by Buddy Cole, fronting the Carlton Hayes orch (17).

Miss Stewart is a shapely young brunette looker who sings with an exciting drive; she has certain shadings of the Eydie Gorme and Judy Garland styling in her ballad-less offerings, but she has enough distinction on her own to stamp her as star material.

Aldo Monaco, introed with a recording from a recent Bing Crosby tv spec on which he appeared, makes a strong impression with his big baritone voice that hits high-B flat in a thunderous rendition of "Granada." The Italian import strolls through the audience, sans mike, bows off singing potently to an appreciative yock when a wine glass breaks in Harris' hand.

The Pieros (2), longtime faves in Vegas, click again with their juggling artistry which is punctuated with comedy. Another welcome returnee to the Strip, Conrad Buckner, pulls sincere ap-

Shows Abroad

On The Brighter Side

London, April 13.

Peter Bridge & John Gale presentation of a revue in two parts (33 scenes); devised and staged by James Gilbert; musical numbers staged by Alfred Rodrigues; sketches, lyrics and music by Sean Vincent, Ian Fraser, Neville Phillips, Alec Grahame, George Hall, Richard Waring, Dennis Wilson, Robert Gould, Lance Mulcahy, Gerry Donovan, Robb Stewart, Johnny Speight, Kenneth Williams, David Cumming, Derek Collier, Stanley Daniels, Ray Jessel, Stanley Myers, Vivian Ellis, Ken Hoare, John Taylor, Eric Merriman, David Campton, Brad Ashton, John Pritchett, Barry Cryer. Decor, Clifford Hatts; costumes, Alan Pilkford; lighting, Richard Pilbrow; orchestrations, Dennis Wilson; musical director, Colin Beaton. Opened April 12, '61, at the Phoenix Theatre, London; $3 top.

Cast: Stanley Baxter, Betty Marsden, Pip Hinton, David Kernan, Ronnie Barker, Judy Carne, Una Stubbs, Bob Stevenson, Greta Hamby, Victor Duret, Amanda Barrie, Elisabeth Counsell, Allan Barnes.

The latest entry in the recent rash of revues, "On the Brighter Side," has little shape or positive style, but relies on a fair number of good comedy sketches to win its audience. There is little evidence of sharp wit or clever satire, but that seems to be the trend nowadays, and, judged by previous results, the show should have a moderately successful West End run.

Peter Bridge and John Gale, partners in presenting the revue, have cast their net widely for writing and musical talent. That in some measure results in the lack of shape referred to and, surprisingly, does not result in as much variation in content as might be expected. Many of the sketches are obvious in content and lack the sock punchline which is the mainstay of revue. However, there are some excellent teaser sketches which click because of their brevity.

There is also some attempt to produce a topical touch. One item is about Britain's affluent society, another about the Germans (is it a coincidence that the Eichmann trial opened the same week?), and another on race prejudice. A number entitled "Balloons" has no connection with a man who went into space on the same day as the opening.

Betty Marsden and Stanley Baxter team together effectively. She is an experienced hand in revue and this emerges clearly in several items. Probably her best individual bit is in a sketch titled "Busy Line," which she plays on her own. This is a diverting scene, though the payoff is disappointing.

Baxter is best known as a comedian in Scotland, but since he came to London a year ago, has been making a name for himself on tv, and the title for this current show comes from his video series, "On the Bright Side." Though revue is a new medium for him, he comes out well, particularly in some of the brief teasers.

Pip Hinton, who has top featured billing, once more shows her versatility. She has a vivacious personality, dances well and sings pleasantly. Ronnie Baxter gives strong support and David Kernan impresses in several scenes. Other members of the cast lend adequate support.

The show has been devised and directed by James Gilbert, with the emphasis on gaiety and color and that mood is held in the brisk musical numbers staged by Alfred Rodrigues. Clifford Hatts has relied almost exclusively on Venetian blinds for his attractive decor.

Heinrich	Derek Newark
American Officer	Julian Glover

Jean-Paul Sartre's "Altona," which was a major success in Paris under the title "Les Sequestres d'Altona," is a drama of considerable significance. It is too long, though it was shortened for its original French presentation and has been cut further for this English language production. Despite its length it is a power-house, forcefully directed and acted. Its engagement at the Royal Court Theatre must obviously be regarded as a tryout prior to transfer for a regular West End run.

Though there are obscurities, the play itself conjures up a vivid picture of Germany as seen through the eyes of an industrialist and former Hitler collaborator, and his disillusioned son, an ex-officer in the Nazi army, who has locked himself away from the rest of the world for the past 14 years. It is not just an indictment in plain terms, but also a recapitulation in dramatic form of what has happened in postwar Germany.

The head of the von Gerlach family, on being told that he has six months to live, wants to settle his estate. His first choice would naturally be his eldest son, but Franz von Gerlach has been locked away in an upstairs room since he returned from the Russian front, and to avoid charges it had been reported that he had left for the Argentine and since died.

Alternate scenes are staged in the upstairs room where the ex-officer, still in his uniform decorated with a row of medals, and with a portrait of Hitler on the wall, is writing his testament (or is it defence?) while having an incestuous relationship with his sister and a more obvious relationship with his sister-in-law.

He is obviously deranged, is convinced that the outside world is as he left it 14 years before, and that his beloved Germany is still in ruins, downtrodden by the allies.

John Berry has clearly had a difficult assignment in staging a play of this length and character, particularly as it has almost no relief in its heavy text. One apparent weakness in the direction is that some of the more intimate passages are almost inaudible in the back part of the auditorium. That apart, the drama has been vividly recreated and a fine marquee cast contributes telling performances.

Diane Cilento and Claire Bloom, as sister and sister-in-law respectively, give tense yet admirably suitable contrasting performances. Miss Bloom, particularly, makes a powerful impact, especially in the scenes when she is alone with her brother-in-law.

Kenneth Haigh does not always resist the opportunity of being the angry young Nazi and occasionally overdoes the histrionics, but it is a powerful role and he puts plenty of thought into it. Basil Sydney has a more restrained part as the father and fills it with assured professionalism.

Nigel Stock has more limited scope as the other son; but does his part well enough. Julian Glover, Richard Butler and Derek Newark have only minor bits in which they re-enact one wartime scene.

Sean Kenny again shows his skill as a designer. His main set of the von Gerlach home is original and imaginative; and it is neatly adapted for use in the scenes in the room above. The Altoni of the title is an industrial district of Hamburg.

The Rehearsal

London, April 7.

Tennent Productions ltd. in association with the Bristol Old Vic Co. presentation of a three-act comedy-drama by Jean Anouilh, translated by Pamela Hansford-Johnson and Kitty Black. Stars Phyllis Calvert, Diana Churchill, Maggie Smith, Alan Badel, Robert Hardy. Staged by John Hale; decor, Jane Graham; lighting, Joe Davis. Opened April 6, '61, at the Globe Theatre, London; $2.80 top.

Footman	Andrew Kane
M. Damiens	Lockwood West
Countess	Phyllis Calvert
Count	Robert Hardy
Hortensia	Diana Churchill
Hero	Alan Badel
Villebosse	Jeremy Burnham
Lucile	Maggie Smith

Jean Anouilh's "The Rehearsal," in at the Globe Theatre until the end of May, is one of the more elegant productions to grace the West End Stage. It has a unique charm, and the author's rare command of language and his facility for changing mood and pace is always in evidence. With its distinguished cast, there is little doubt that it will be a hot attraction for its short run.

The main setting for the three-acter is the decorative rehearsal room at a French chateau. The count, his wife, his mistress and guests are rehearsing Marivaux's play, "The Double Inconstancy." All the characters are in 18th century costume, though the time is the present.

Anouilh develops the situation into a classic play within a play in which the main interest is centered on the count's love for a young servant girl, whom he woos and wins. It is at this point that the countess and the mistress put their heads together to wreck his plans and persuade another character to make love to the girl.

The opening act has a lively epigrammatic quality with frequently sparkling dialog, but that is not sustained and the middle act tends to sag. The opening scene in the final act, in which Alan Badel sets out to win the girl away from the count, though a little overlong, is tender and moving. It is a scene which reflects as much on the players involved as on the author and director.

Of the sterling cast only Phyllis Calvert does not seem quite right as the countess. There is nothing wrong with her performance per se, but she apparently does not fit the part naturally.

Robert Hardy and Alan Badel are both excellent. Diana Churchill shows delightful restraint as the mistress, and Maggie Smith plays the young girl with gentle conviction.

Apart from the slackness halfway through, John Hale has directed with authority and full appreciation of the text.

JEWISH-JAPANESE PLAY AS AMATEUR BONANZA

Now that the amateur rights to "A Majority of One" have been released, legit pressagent Bernard Simon is expecting his Package Publicity Service to be bombarded with a rush of orders for publicity materials from Jewish Community Centers. The comedy, in which Gertrude Berg and Cedric Hardwicke are still costarring on tour, is concerned chiefly with the romance between an elderly Jewish widow from Brooklyn and a Japanese businessman.

One of the first requests for publicity materials came from the Catholic Madonna High School in Aurora, Ill.

Cincy Park Stock Opens; Promote 4-City Setup

Cincinnati, April 25.

The Playhouse in the Park will open its second stock season tomorrow (Wed.) with "Volpone," to be followed by five other plays for two-week stays. Michael Alfreds is producer-director, replacing Gerry Covell, who launched the 14-week winter subscription season, a prestige success and boxoffice failure for the 178-seat theatre in municipal Eden Park.

The company includes Stephen Pearlman, Dean Santoro, Andy Rasbury, Michael Miller, Patricia Hamilton, Roberta Bennet, John Wurster, Abe Dunsky, James McKinley and Ollie Hiers.

In another dramatic venture, Morry Efron and Manning Gurian are enrolling members in the Theatregoers Sponsor Club, to promote a subscription tryout program in Cincinnati, Dayton, Columbus and Louisville. The plan is to produce only new shows in the four cities. If the membership goal of 5,000 in four cities is not reached and the $100,000 producing company budget has not been obtained, Efron says, club members and producing company partners will get their money back.

Russos Again Aid Cubans, Via a Ballet in Paris

Paris, April 25.

The Russians came to the aid of Cuba in faroff Paris this past weekend—on the cultural front. The Cuban Ballet was supposed to open at the Sarah Bernhard Theatre on Monday (24) but, as of April 21, they were still in Havana. Castro apparently had other uses for his airplanes and the ballerinas couldn't swim that far. So the Vachtangov Theatre of Moscow, a dramatic troupe which was supposed to depart from the theatre to make room for the Cubans, agreed to stay on an extra few days as replacement.

It is conceivable that the Cubans may still show up in Paris for a few dates (their scenery and costumes are here, having come by ship in advance of the troupe, which was to fly) but, if they do, their engagement will have to consist of only one or two performances, since the Liban Folklore Co. is already in town for rehearsals and setup, their engagement to start at the same theatre on Saturday (29).

Gerard Oestreicher will present "Shalom," a musical with book by Don Appell and music and lyrics by Jerry Herman, on Broadway in December. Albert Marre will direct and Robert Weede and Molly Picon will star.

Inside Stuff—Legit

A 34-page, illustrated booklet dealing with the problems connected with the building of new kinds of theatres has been published by the Board of Standards & Planning for the Living Theatre, a committee of the Greater N. Y. Chapter of the American National Theatre & Academy. Titled "Open Stage Theatre Checks List," the booklet mentions 301 items in 44 different sections, and recommends planning and consulting procedures intended to prevent oversights that have plagued theatres in the past.

Augmenting the text are pictures of the Stratford (Ont.) Shakespearean Festival Theatre and plan drawings of Harvard's Loeb Drama Center. Set designer Jo Mielziner and Edward F. Kook, head of Century Lighting, are respective chairman and vice-chairman of the board, composed of theatre specialists and organized by the Greater N. Y. Chapter "to encourage the optimum preliminary planning of the physical structure of theatres."

Harry Freud, like publicist Edward L. Bernays a nephew of the founder of psycho-analysis, Sigmund Freud, has also written VARIETY to comment on Henry Denker's Broadway play, "A Far Country," and the respective articles of Bernays and the dramatist as published here Freud, a transportation industry exec living in Yonkers, acknowledges that Denker's play, as to the case history it presents, "is truly absorbing theatre," but objects to claimed distortions of family members. Denker indicated that he has no intention of continuing the debate, holding that he wrote an honest and sympathetic account of the great Viennese doctor and that he has yet to find a psychoanalyst who agrees with Bernays or objects to the drama. Denker acknowledges that Harry Freud's statement that Freud lived at 19, not 18, Berggasse, Vienna, is a welcome detail which he found difficulty in confirming.

Off-Broadway Review

Gallows Humor

Theatre 1961 presentation of the Richard Barr & Clinton Wilder production of two-act comedy by Jack Richardson. Staged by George E. Sherman, scenery, William Ritman. Features Gerald Hiken, Julie Bovasso, Vincent Gardenia. Opened April 18, '61, at the Gramercy Arts Theatre, N.Y.; $3.50 top.

Prologue	Paxton Whitehead
Lucy	Julie Bovasso
Warden	Vincent Gardenia
Walter	Gerald Hiken
Martha	Vincent Gardenia
Phillip	Gerald Hiken

Theatre 1961 is probably the most active and successful producing unit off-Broadway this season. Its latest presentation, Jack Richardson's "Gallows Humor," at the Gramercy Arts Theatre, is the fifth offering this stanza by producers Richard Barr and Clinton Wilder.

On an off-Broadway scene that has been riddled with revivals, adaptations and shaky musicals, "Theatre 1961" has concentrated mostly on the presentation of new, "promising" playwrights. Last year the group offered Samuel Beckett's "Krapp's Last Tape" and Edward Albee's "Zoo Story" and this season it is presenting a bill of Albee's "American Dream" and "Death of Bessie Smith," all currently running, although "Krapps" and "Zoo" are under different management now.

"Gallows Humor" follows in the same vein. It is a social satire on the conformity and irony in modern living, which throws its barbs with precision, providing laughs and caustic observations, if little sage comment.

Richardson appropriately enough sets his comedy in a prison, after a brief prologue by a Mephestophelian actor who says he's been cut from the play because his outdated acting style can't properly adapt to the modern complexities in theatre of being able to tell the living from the hanged. Paxton Whitehead plays the part skillfully.

The story is divided into two parts, the first involving a condemned prisoner who murdered his wife after a crushing experience as a lawyer when his client's "open and shut case" was foiled because she developed a case of the hiccups which so convulsed the court that she was convicted anyway, and a prostitute, hired by the prison to send the convicts to the gallows "contented."

The second scene is in the executioner's home and concerns his desire to break with routine, if only to wear a black hood when he performs his hangings or flick ashes in his slippers. He is eventually subdued by his inability to escape, even after finding his wife in the arms of the warden and delighting in the excuse it provides him. The unlocked kitchen door won't open and, no matter how hard he tugs, he can't seem to strangle his wife with the hood.

Gerald Hiken is both prisoner and executioner, ironically, and is a fine performer as each. Whether sulking about his cell trying to avoid the prostie while ranting about order and chaos, or gleefully contemplating leaving his wife for a life of clearing out the "dead branches" of the world, he is a pleasure.

Julie Bovasso is also delightful as she woes him in the first scene, reminding him that she will have her reputation spoiled if he doesn't make use of her services, and dryly picking away at him in the second scene, refusing to be choked and counciling "there's only one world and only one way to live in it, dear." Vincent Gardenia is effective as the warden and scores particularly with an oration he delivers on "the ship of life," which is filled with just about every cliche such a speech could hold.

George L. Sherman has directed smoothly, keeping the pace moving with spoofy bits of staging and William Ritman's settings, which include sinks with running water, are sturdy and appropriately confining.

Show Out of Town

The Miracle Worker

Wilmington, April 13

Martin Tahse (by arrangement with Fred Coe) production of drama in three acts by William Gibson. Features Eileen Brennan. Staged by Arthur Penn; scenery, and lighting, George Jenkins; costumes, Ruth Morley. Opened at the Playhouse, Wilmington, April 12, '61.

Doctor	Paul Haney
Kate Keller	Kay Chevalier
Capt. Keller	C. M. Gampel
Martha	Sharane McCurry
Percy	Perry Greene
Viney	Jovotte Sutton Greene
Helen Keller	Donna Zimmermann
James Keller	Thomas Connolly
Aunt Ev	Alice Yourman
Anagnos	Frank Shaw Stevens
Annie Sullivan	Eileen Brennan
Children	Lorraine Abate, Laurie Millar, Gillian Spencer
John	Stanley Greene

The road company of "The Miracle Worker," stacks up as a worthy facsimile of the Broadway original. As seen in its Wilmington break-in the drama of Annie Sullivan's fight to bring a sense of communication to the blind, deaf and dumb Helen Keller carries a terrific audience impact. The fight scene, in which Annie and the young Helen battle wordlessly for some eight minutes, is still the show's standout.

Eileen Brennan does a fine job as Miss Sullivan, stressing both the dramatic and humorous moments, and she demonstrates she can carry a straight role.

Donna Zimmerman is a find in the part of the nine-year-old mute, conveying the afflicted child's frustration and rebellion, and making believable the transition from brat to sweetness under Annie's strong-minded guidance.

The rest of the cast is up to par. Kay Chevalier is good as the mother, C. M Gampel is convincing as the father and Thomas Connolly acceptable as the son. Arthur Penn, who staged the original production, has repeated for the current company and the scenery and lighting by George Jenkins are top drawer.

Santa Fe Opera to Berlin

Santa Fe Opera will travel to Berlin Arts Festival next September under a deal negotiated in Manhattan by concert manager Thea Dispeker.

It's part of a package involving the services of conductor-composer Igor Stravinsky.

Selection of New Mexico's little troupe involves another choice of a "hinterland" talent organization as presenting to Europeans a concept of culture in American being broader than the urban centres.

National Phoenix Touring Setup Part of Spreading Rep Movement

The planned National Repertory Theatre tour next season of a "Mary Stuart"-"Elizabeth the Queen" program marks another step in a growing repertory movement. The situation is evident in some off-Broadway spots and in summer Shakespeare festivals, the current overseas tour of the Theatre Guild-American Repertory Co., the planned Repertory Theatre for New York's Lincoln Center of the Performing Arts and the Tyrone Guthrie Repertory Theatre, now scheduled to open in Minneapolis in 1963.

The National Repertory Theatre company is being formed by the National Phoenix Theatre, which will present the troupe in partnership with Columbia Artists Management, Inc. The two-play program is scheduled to begin its road trek next October with CAMI's newly-formed legit division, headed by Herb Fox and Ronald Wilford, handling the tour. The project will also mark the return to a repertory operation of Eva Le Gallienne, a veteran advocate of such ventures.

Miss Le Gallienne, who'll star in both plays, was the founder of the Civic Repertory Theatre, which functioned in New York from 1926 to 1933. She was also associated with Cheryl Crawford and Margaret Webster in forming the American Repertory Theatre in 1946. The actress costarred with Irene Worth in the Jean Stock Goldstone-John Reich adaptation of Friedrich Schiller's "Mary Stuart" at the Phoenix Theatre, N.Y., in 1957. She subsequently appeared in the 1959-60 National Phoenix touring edition of the play, costarring with Signe Hasso.

At the conclusion of last season's tour, which ran 35 weeks and covered 35 cities, the "Mary Stuart" production was picked up by WNTA-TV's "Play of the Week" and has since been syndicated to around 58 outlets throughout the country. Faye Emerson is being sought to costar in the two plays with Miss Le Gallienne, who'll appear as Queen Elizabeth in both. The title role in "Elizabeth," written by Maxwell Anderson and unveiled in New York in 1930, was originated by Lynn Fontanne.

Michael Flowell and Frances Ann Hersey will manage the venture for the National Phoenix, which was formed to carry on the work of the off-Broadway Phoenix The-

Hartke Makes Good?

Washington, April 25.

Catholic Univ. is inviting title-rewrite jokes with its new revue, due for presentation here next Friday night (28) through May 13. The show is called "From the Desk of Father Hartke . . ." and it's already being suggested that if the reaction is unfavorable the title might be changed to "From Father Hartke's Bottom Drawer."

One of several other such revues was the Walter and Jean Kerr show, "Thank You, Just Looking," which went from the local campus to Broadway as "Touch and Go." The new show's title refers to Father Gilbert V. Hartke, head of the Catholic Univ. speech and drama department, who is this year celebrating his silver jubilee in the priesthood.

Bill Fields, 62, Legit, Circus P.A.

William Fields, veteran legit pressagent and producer and general publicity head for the Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus, died of abdominal cancer last Monday afternoon (24) in the Hospital for Special Surgery, N. Y. He was 62.

Fields underwent surgery last year at the Leahy Clinic, Boston, for what he believed was a stomach ulcer. He thought he had recovered but became ill about four weeks ago and was in French Hospital, N. Y., for about a week before being transferred to the Hospital for Special Surgery. With the approach and then the opening of the annual circus engagement at Madison Square Garden, N. Y., he attempted to supervise the publicity campaign by telephone from his hospital bed, but was not permitted to do so.

Although Fields was an ardent circus fan and did publicity for the big show for many years before becoming general press head two years ago on a 52-week basis, he was chiefly known as a legit pressagent. He was chief p.a. for the Playwrights Co. from its formation in 1938 until its dissolution last year, and also worked for various other leading managements. In a career dating from 1925, he represented many of the top stars.

Fields had several notable char-

AGMA-S.F. Opera Settle Dispute Over Insurance; 2-Year Study of Issue

San Francisco, April 25.

The American Guild of Musical Artist and The San Francisco Opera came to terms last Saturday (22) in a five-hour emergency negotiating session in Mayor George Christopher's office. The agreement came one day after the opera company's board of governors had voted unanimously to cancel the 1961 season, scheduled to start in early September, and had further threatened to go out of business entirely.

For many weeks the opera company and AGMA had been deadlocked over the question of whether the company would carry unemployment insurance for some 185 AGMA members. Under state law, if an organization carries unemployment insurance for one employee, it must carry it for all. The opera has about 850 employees.

Under the agreement signed last weekend, AGMA will sign a two-year contract with the opera, providing for a 6% pay raise and deferring the unemployment insurance issue untill the contract's expiration. AGMA had sought a 8.8% pay raise and the opera had offered a 5.5% raise, but this was never a major issue.

Part of last weekend's agreement, however, provided that over the next two years AGMA and the opera's execs would explore the unemployment issue unofficially.

Christopher stepped into the dispute after Hy Faine, AGMA's national exec secretary, had flown here from New York to try to settle the issue, and failed. Earlier, State Labor Conciliator Adolph Koven had also failed to mediate the dispute.

End Old Squabble Over Gate Theatre in Dublin

Dublin, April 25.

The Gate Theatre, which closed here after the death of lord Longford, its chairman and financial angel, has been reopened. A 25-year-old dispute which split the original Gate Theatre company into two groups, Longford Productions and Hilton Edwards-Micheal MacLiammoir Dublin Gate Theatre Productions, has been settled. The rift involved Lord Longford and Edwards and MacLiammoir. Lady Longford, the late chairman's widow, is the new chairman of the company, and she has also joined Edwards and MacLiammoir on the board. Desmond Guinness has become a director.

Plans for the operation of the theatre have not been announced. The Gate is currently offering a John Molloy revue.

Chi's Edgewater Beach Continues Lenny-Debin

Chicago, April 25.

The Edgewater Beach Playhouse is retaining Jack Lenny and Nat Debin of New York as casting directors and talent buyers for the upcoming strawhat season. The inside-the-city silo is itching for a fresh roster of top-draw names that aren't normally on the summer theatre circuit.

Lenny-Debin office will work in conjunction with Henry Guettel, Edgewater's new managing producer.

Elitch's, Denver, Names Windsor Lewis Stager

Denver, April 25.

Windsor Lewis will be the director this summer at Elitch Gardens Theatre here here. He succeeds Arthur Sircum, who had the assignment the last two seasons. Play selections for the 1961 ten-week season have not been announced, but as usual will probably be mostly Broadway hits.

Lewis is the husband of legit actress Barbara Bel Geddes, currently on Broadway costarring in "Mary, Mary."

Eiffel Musical Has 550G Budget (Plus Overcall?)

The budget for the projected production next season of "Tour d'Amour" is believed to represent a record high for a regular Broadway musical. Philip C. McKenna, who intends producing the show with book by Ken Englund and music and lyrics by Charles Henderson, has set the capitalization for the venture at $550,000. That figure could climb to $605,000 on the basis of a 10% overcall provision.

Rising production costs have pushed the budgets on some musicals of this and recent seasons to what's been considered a high mark of around $500,000. The cost of opening the current Broadway production of "Camelot" on Broadway reportedly ran considerably over $500,000, but that involved unanticipated expenditures in excess of the budget.

In the past there have been flop musicals and even straight plays which have dropped over $500,000. In most cases they involved enormous losses in excess of their budgets because of such unanticipated complications as staggering tryout losses or attempts to overcome apathetic boxoffice response on Broadway, or both.

The authors of "Tour d'Amour," which is about Gustav Eiffel, builder of the Eiffel tower, are to get a combined 6% of the gross on the projected presentation. Any profits are to be split 50-50 between the backers and the management.

SABBATH (FRI.) LEGIT IS ISSUE IN TEL AVIV

Tel Aviv, April 18.

A battle is underway here over the refusal of a legit operation to abandon performances Friday nights because of an old municipal law prohibiting stores from doing business on the Sabbath. Local authorities have warned Peter Frye, director-producer of the small Peter Frye Presents theatre company to go dark Friday evenings or have the performances closed down by force.

Frye, a former New Yorker, is standing his ground. Answering shut-down threats, he says, "My company will play right in front of the theatre, in the middle of the street." The law relating to stores, bans sales during the Sabbath, which begins Friday evening and runs through sundown Saturday. It is not strictly enforced, since many cafes, for instance, are open Friday night and Saturday.

The city appears to be making a test case of the Frye legit situation, however, Mayor Mordechia Mamir is understood to be unhappy about his role in the affair. A social-democrat and former member of Ben-Gurion's government, he was elected mayor in coalition with the religious parties and consequently has to obey their demands when the observance of Sabbath is concerned.

It's figured that the situation, which some see as a "bigots versus liberals" issue, may play some part in the forthcoming elections.

Do Legit 'Duel'

A dramatization by David Gild of Anton Chekov's novel, "The Duel," will be presented by the Yale Univ. School of Drama next Wednesday-Saturday (3-6). The play will be the college theatre's fourth and final major production of the 1960-61 season.

Gild is a third-year playwriting student at Yale.

Norman Twain May Drop Plans For Other Shows at 'Off-B'way' Mayfair; Says Equity Rules Strangle 'Roots'

By JESSE GROSS

Norman Twain's plan to present a series of plays at the 299-seat Mayfair Theatre, N.Y., may not get beyond "Roots," his first presentation at the house. The producer intends abandoning the project unless Actors Equity makes some concessions in the special contract established by the union for the theatre because of its location in the Broadway area.

Twain is to meet with representatives of the union this week to discuss the "inequities of the Equity contract." The prospect of the union going along with him on certain adjustments he plans recommending, particularly in relation to minimum salaries, isn't considered too good.

"Roots," capitalized at $17,500, cost $15,000 to open at the Mayfair as its first tenant last March 16, Twain says. The production is scheduled to close May 6 and the producer claims that he's already used up the investment and is now personally on the hook for an additional sum.

The minimum salary required by Equity for members of the "Roots" cast is $85, compared to the $45 minimum off-Broadway and the $111 minimum on Broadway. Some of the members of the company get more than the minimum and the salaries are also on a sliding scale up to the equivalent of the $111 Broadway minimum. Rehearsal pay is $50, compared with $20 off-Broadway and $82.50 on Broadway.

The sliding scale in the Equity minimum salary contract for the Mayfair is $85 up to $8,000, $90 between $8,000 and $8,500, $95

Life Can Be Bountiful

With the boxoffice click of "Mary, Mary," at the Helen Hayes Theatre, N. Y., authoress Jean Kerr is more harried than ever with professional demands, including a voluminous correspondence, in addition to her duties at home in Larchmont, N. Y.

Unchanged is her family's flippant attitude, however. The playwright's husband, N. Y. Herald Tribune drama critic Walter Kerr, last week suggested that the household's new theme might be a soap opera-type title, "Can Jean Kerr Achieve Happiness?"

'Irma' Pays 10% 1st Profit Divvy

Backers of the Broadway production of "Irma La Douce" have received their first profit dividend of $9,500. That represents their 50% share of a $19,000 distribution, and gives them a 5% return thus far on their $19,000 investment.

The musical, which originated in Paris and was done in London prior to its Broadway presentation, was produced by David Merrick, in association with the management of the British edition. As of last March 25, the venture had netted $74,229, of which $14,846 went to the British management as its 20% share of the profits.

The remaining profit, after the deduction of another $1,800 for unincorporated business tax, was $57,583. That figure, allowing for the British management's 20% share, is figured to have climbed about $10,000-$12,000 on the basis of profitable business since March 25. The income earned thus far includes the Broadway presentation's share of revenue from the pre-production sale of the film rights to Billy Wilder and the Mirisch Bros.

Elizabeth Seal and Keith Michell, repeating the role they played in London, costar in the musical, now in its 31st week at the Plymouth Theatre, N.Y.

Green Mansions a Farm For Chi's Happy Medium

Chicago, April 25.

The Happy Medium Theatre Club here has made a deal with the Green Mansions stock operation at Warrensburg, near Lake George, N.Y., for the purpose of incubating new satirical revue material. The Chicago cabaret-theatre has settled on the revue format as a regular policy on the strength of its current offering, "Medium Rare," now in its 10th month.

Happy medium owners Oscar and George Marienthal are subsidizing part of the Green Mansions nut this summer in an arrangement that would give Happy Medium first call on any new material produced at the Borscht Belt resort. Green Mansions has helped uncover the talents of such new legit musical writers as Sheldon Harnick, Lee Adams and Charles Strouse, all represented in HM's current show.

Antioch Strawhat Will Come Back With 5 Plays

After a three-year suspension, the Antioch Area Theatre will re-open July 5 in a new outdoor amphitheatre on the campus of Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio.

The season will start with Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," followed by Arthur Miller's "Death of a Salesman," Moliere's "Doctor In Spite of Himself," George Bernard Shaw's "Heartbreak House," and closes September 10 with the Jean Giraoux "Enchanted."

Mpls. Guthrie Theatre Opening Set Back to '63; Fund Still 750G Short

Minneapolis, April 25.

Its opening already postponed once from original target date in May, 1962, the proposed Tyrone Guthrie Repertory theatre's debut has been pushed back again to May, 1963. Anticipated "construction delays" and Guthrie's desire to open with a full 20-week season were reasons given for further delay of the showplace.

While theatre officials decline to say so, difficulty in raising $1,900,000 for construction of the showhouse also appears to be a factor in the postponements. The theatre foundation board announced last week that contributions totaling $1,140,000 have been received. These include a $400,000 grant from the Walker foundation of Minneapolis, contingent upon an additional $1,500,000 being raised. Backers had hoped to complete the fund drive by next month, but have now extended the campaign for the remaining $750,000 to this summer.

Guthrie, here last week for meetings with theatre and community leaders, told foundation directors, "A short season starting in late summer would not permit us to bring to Minnesota the actors we have in mind." Oliver Rea, slated to be administrative director of the repertory company, added that the prospect of a short 1962 season starting late and conflicting with actors' other commitments "has been of utmost concern."

According to present plans, the 1,400-seat theatre will open in 1963 with a season running from May through September and including a six-play repertoire. Start of construction is still slated for this summer.

Mike Ellis Has 'Pleasure' At Bucks County Barn

Michael Ellis will open a 20-week season next Saturday night (20) at Bucks County Playhouse, New Hope, Pa., with Constance Carpenter and Murray Matheson in "Pleasure of His Company." Each of the production's at the 432-seater will run two weeks.

This will be the Playhouse's 23d year of operation.

Moiseyev Dance Return to Met, a Hit; But Blinder-Lights Punish Audience

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

The blockbusting dance-and-acrobatics revue from Moscow, the Igor Moiseyev Dance Co. is back after three years, again under Sol Hurok's banner, again marked by high artistry, charm and showshopping dynamics. It is a measure of the entertainment that a triumph was scored despite the irritation of large segments of the first night (18) audience against an extraneous imposition upon its, the audience's, good nature.

Throughout the performance, to the very end, camera-and-blinder-light creatures from outer space roamed the aisles of the Metropolitan Opera House. At every outburst of applause for the entertainers the torture-lights played straight at the audience, presumably to take a record of its enthusiasm. Much of the audience and some of the professional reviewers spent a good deal of time looking away from the stage. What price album for return to Russia? The continuing punishment, the flying squad itself, one man in a brown shirt, sleeves rolled, their bunch-lights pushed into occupied boxes made photography the hideous modern assault on dignity and decency which it sometimes is. To paraphrase Will Rogers' London quip about hating to get up in the morning because the English coffee was so bad this reviewer hated for each Moiseyev number to end because the publicity penalty was so terrible.

The lucky folk who see the show on ordinary nights will, one supposes, escape the concentration camp illumination. Theirs will be the delight, without the punishment. Suffice that a largely new company is back for the U. S. tour, the girls trending to 17 and younger, and the whole show cleverly stagemanaged.

Snow Storm, Snow Flake and Snowflakes opened with a quiet, symbolic Russian winter scene that was lovely in setting, costuming and effects. Followed an Estonian "Over the Legs" duet, a sort of peasant showoff number performed by Tamara Zeifert and Boris Berezin. Folkloric values continued in a Kalmuk Dance, a Moldovian Briul and a Russian reel, an interlocking monogram, the sort of thing Moiseyev and Beryozka, the all-girl troupe which Hurok also brought over, do so superbly.

The present show's only solo performer is Sergei Tsvetkov whose feats of dancing while balancing an earthenware platter must be seen to be credited. He makes the dish descend from his head to his sacroiliac and back onto the head while dancing.

Moiseyev alternates items of furious pace with quiet interludes of which Irina Konyeva and Boris Petrov's quaint courting routine to Boris Gradsky's accordion is another delight. The first act climax is a holdover from three years ago, the strangely evocative reminder of Russian bravery in World War II, "Partisans," with the amazing gliding stride of the horseman.

The new novelty, and an amusing one, is the Russian's own burlesque of an American jitterbug crowd of juveniles in frothing extremis of ecstacy. It is diverting first because performed by a Soviet company and then because close enough to reality to ring true, however, exaggerated at moments.

It brings a stunning show to a strong climax.

Cliff Carnell, currently in Paramount's "Too Late Blues," opens July 4 in "Wish You Were Here" in Indianapolis, and follows with "Lady in the Dark" opening midsummer in Fort Worth.

New Dramatists Lunch Raises $9,150 for Fund

The New Dramatists Committee raised $7,000 in cash and another $2,150 in pledges at a fundraising luncheon recently at Sardi's restaurant, N. Y. The affair was held in connection with the organization's drive to raise $40,000 from those in legit and allied fields. An additional $22,000 is to be raised through contributions by foundations and other groups. The coin is required by the committee to carry out its annual program of discovering and aiding new playwriting talent.

Of the $40,000 being sought from the entertainment industry itself, about $22,000 has thus far been raised, including the take at the Firday luncheon.

'Frank' 1st Musical At Edinburgh Fest

Edinburgh, April 18.

"Frank the Fifth," satire on big-business methods, by Friedrich Durrenmatt, Swiss author, will be the first musical play to be presented at the International Edinburgh Festival. Joint backers are Wolf Mankowitz and Oscar Lewenstein. It will open at Empire Theatre Aug. 21, running to Sept. 2. Julian More, who worked with Mankowitz on "Expresso Bongo," is adapting the lyrics.

Durrenmatt is author of the recent London success "The Visit" and also of "Romulus the Great," presented at the 1960 Edinburgh Festival and has been presented already in Zurich and Munich.

For the third week (Sept. 4-9) of the annual Scot culture junket, the program at the Empire will consist of three works dating from the period between the wars. Production is to be by the Western Theatre Ballet, whose dancers will be joined by selected solo singers and the Scottish National Orchestra.

Hayward to Europe On Legit, Pay-TV Stints

Leland Hayward, co-producer of the Broadway and road companies of "Sound of Music," planed from New York last Sunday (23) to attend rehearsals of the West End edition of the musical, due to open May 18 at the Palace Theatre, London. He's co-producer of the original Broadway edition and associated in the British presentation.

Following the show's London preem, Hayward will go to Paris to confer with Harry Kurnitz, who's adapting Marcel Achard's current French success, "L'Idiote," which the producer intends presenting on Broadway next fall under the title, "The Naked Truth." He will also try to line up properties for U.S. toll-television presentation.

He is due back in six weeks.

'Do Re' Recovers 30% of $400,000

"Do Re Mi," currently in its 18th week at the St. James Theatre, N. Y., has thus far recouped about 30% of its investment. The David Merrick production, which cost $72,923 in excess of its $400,000 capitalization, had reduced its deficit to $326,241 as of March 25. That amount is now figured to be down to about $280,000 on the basis of profitable subsequent business.

Although still a hot ticket, the Phil Silvers-starrer is not maintaining a steady sellout pace. However, the musical earned a $95,017 operating profit for the eight weeks from Jan. 30-March 25. Grosses during the period ranged from $65,543 to $71,203, with the production clearing $10,501 on the low take and $12,780 on the higher figure.

The backers have thus far been repaid 40,000, representing 10% of their investment. "Do Re Mi," which has a book adapted by Garson Kanin from his short story of the same title, has music by Jule Styne and lyrics by Betty Comden and Adolph Green.

Vancouver Festival Talent-Loaded

Red Army Chorus a Highlight—Britten's Opera, 'Midsummer' Set—Many Concert Figures

By SAM SHAW

Vancouver, April 25.

Budget figures of well over $400,000 is expected to be set for the 1961 Vancouver International Arts Festival operation, which goes into its fourth year on July 10. The 1960 expenditures amounted to $408,500, against which the total revenue of $411,000 left a surplus of $2,500. Revenues included $257,400 from box office take and sale of radio and Video rights.

Grants and donations from corporations, foundations, the Canada Council, the Provincial Government, the city of Vancouver, and private individuals totalled $153,600. Actual revenue exceeded budgeted revenue by 11 percent as the result of many capacity and near capacity houses. Based on these figures, the 1961 budget will be commensurate in view of the slate of festival events currently booked by Nicholas Goldschmidt, Artistic and Managing Director. Figures were to have been already revealed but illness of the treasurer has temporarily postponed it. One of big entertainment events will be Chorus, dancers and orchestra, for four appearances at the Pacific National Exhibition Forum, Aug. 10, 11, 12 evenings with matinee Aug. 12. Soviet troupe, 180 strong, will make its first North American appearance at the Vancouver Festival, flying from Moscow to Montreal and then by Canadian jetliners to Vancouver. Company is coming to Canada under the auspices of Canadian Concerts and Artists Inc., Montreal, operated by Nicholas Koudriavtzeff, through whom Vancouver fest booked last year's Chinese Peking Opera.

Festival runs six weeks to August 19 but will offer a preview concert by the New York Philharmonic under the direction of Leonard Bernstein on April 22 at the Exhibition Forum. The two-week International Film Festival starts July 10. Also set is a Military Tattoos commencing July 14 for eight performances at Empire Stadium under Brigadier Alasdair Maclean of the Edinburgh Tatoo, a veteran of Copenhagen, Lisbon, Bermuda and New York's Madison Square Garden.

Arts section commences on July 24 with the New York City Ballet. Travelling with a total of 75 people, including 56 dancers, company will give eight performances in the Queen Elizabeth Theatre. It will present three completely different programs, including classic and contemporary works of George Balanchine. Ballet will continue to San Francisco, Los Angeles and Chicago. Conductor is Robert Irving.

On Aug. 2 the Western hemisphere premiere of Benjamin Britten's opera, "A Midsummer Night's Dream," will be presented in the Queen Elizabeth Theatre. This director and designer will be Harry Horner. The opera "The Magic Flute" will have American counter-tenor Russell Oberlin in role of Oberon and Mary Costa as Titania. Canadian bass-baritone Jan Rubes will sing the comic role of Bottom and other cast members named include Canadian soprano Ilona Konbrink as Helena and two Americans, Davis Cunningham tenor, and Richard Fredericks baritone, as Lysander and Demetrius respectively.

Additional talent in prospect for the festival: La Comedie Canadienne from Montreal, Irmgard Seefried of Vienna Statoper, Frances Bible, Glenn Gould, Alexander Smallems, Earl Wild, Isaac Stern.

Bing To Blonde: 27 Roles Pronto

Rudolf Bing hunted for and found a new blonde soprano for the Metropolitan Opera in Dorothy Coulter. She made a late-season debut drawing excellent critiques in "La Boheme" and is going to get a real buildup next season, being under instructions from Bing to prepare herself in 27—correct—roles.

Soprano debuted in 1958 with the NBC Opera, then aged 22. She had been told by Oscar Hammerstein 2d that her voice was too operatic for "Pipe Dream"—and Broadway.

Miss Coulter is wife of Joseph Hall, a Kansas City businessman and mother of two children.

Suggests Having '2d-Run' Houses for B'way Shows When Attendance Slips

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

As a regular (but not a regular-price) theatregoer, I was interested in your comments on twofers in the March 8 issue.

I objected to your inference that the only complaint from the twofer holding public was that they could not get tickets for a specific performance. I recently came upon some twofers which were good only for a period of a week. I hurried over to the theatre and asked for two tickets for any of that week for either mezzanine or orchestra. In other words, I made no restrictions at all.

The reply was that there were no tickets available. Why did they ever let the twofers out in the first place? They didn't even have regular-price tickets available. And so I had a new addition to my collection of unused twofers.

Like most theatre-lovers on a budget, I think Broadway prices are too high. As a result, I like twofers. I have found that I go more often when I am able to get twofers. Also, I was one of the first in line when "Period of Adjustment" went on reduced rates.

It is my opinion that the stimulant needed to revive the "dying" theatre in New York is to develop second-run theatres. These are not to be confused with touring shows. Once a play has reached a point where patronage has started to dwindle, transfer it to a theatre where the overhead is less, cut out some of the frills, reduce some of the high salaries and royalties and cut the prices. Then watch the non-expense account, middleclass theatre-lovers flock in.

The movies do it, why can't the theatres? These second-run theatres would make theatre-going more attractive to the public, would provide more jobs for actors, would advance the art, and in the long run would produce more profits for the investors.

Kermit Hunter's 'Thunder' Covers Peoria's History

Peoria, April 25.

Plans are shaping up here for big outdoor drama. "Thunder on the River" set for May 25-30. The play by Kermit Hunter, associate professor of drama at Rollins College, Roanoke, Va., traces the history of the Peoria area from Father Marquette to the Joliet days to the present. Hunter has also written several other historical pageants, including "Unto These Hills," "Horn in the West," "Forever This Land" and "Chucky Jack."

"Thunder" is being directed by Edgar Loessin, recently general stage manager for "Show Girl," with choreography by William Hooks. The production will have a cast of 450, including local choral and dance groups. The show is being sponsored by the Arts & Science Federation of the Peoria Area and will be staged in the new 3,000-seat Glen Oak Park bandshell.

RECORD MAIL ADVANCE FOR INT'L SCOT FEST

Edinburgh, April 18.

The record rush for ducats to the upcoming International Festival is being viewed as foreshadowing a successful 1961 arts junket. On the first day of dealing with mail orders, these totalled an estimated $135,000. Orders came in from 24 overseas countries as well as from the U.K.

An augmented office staff is handling a flood of applications from the U. S., Canada, Africa, Australia, New Zealand, Pakistan, Switzerland, Hong Kong, Denmark, Italy and Portugal. Staff is working nights to cope with the mail.

Total value of tickets for this year's performances is about $546,000. More than 275,000 ducats have been printed for the 182 performances.

Melbourne to Get Big Theatre, Art Centre

Melbourne, April 18.

Melbourne is to have a $9,000,000 Cultural Centre, which will include three theatres, cafes and art galleries. A spire-type building will have a cafeteria and restaurant plus three theatres.

Around the courtyard will be four floors of galleries. One theatre, with capacity of 300, can be used for experimental productions, a second with 1,000 seats will be for stageshows, and a 1,200-seat house will be for ballet, chamber music and opera.

Construction on the Cultural Centre is expected to start next August and opening is scheduled for 1964. Public will be asked to contribute $2,250,000.

'West Side' in Paris With JFK But Embassy Declines Any Subsidy

Paris, April 25.

"West Side Story" completes its month's run at the Alhambra Theatre here Wed. (26), proceeding to Turin, Italy, but comes back for three more weeks May 14 and will be here as "cultural background" to the visit of President John F. Kennedy in spite of the refusal of the U.S. Embassy Cultural Attache here to aid the company.

Company came in during the Easter holidays and got rave reviews and an exuberant first nite welcome. The newness and freshness of the U.S. musical approach as opposed to the rather operettatye tastes tyical of Parisians were underlined. But the holidays, the outsize 2,400-seater theatre, and the rices ($6 top) somehow did not add up to a wow.

'Jane' Peter Kent Is Ex-MCA Katz

The co-producer billing on the longrun off-Broadway revival of "Leave It to Jane" underwent an unannounced change some time ago when the name Peter Katz was substituted for Peter Kent. The move represented a switch in monickers only, since Kent was really an alias used by Katz for moonlighting activities while employed by the Music Corp. of America.

Katz was 24 years old when he joined Joseph Beruh in producing "Jane," which opened May 25, 1959, at the Sheridan Square Playhouse, N. Y., where it's still berthed. He assumed the name of Kent for the venture because he was working for MCA-TV at the time and the organization frowned on outside business activities by those on its payroll.

According to Katz, who asserts he was responsible for raising about half the $14,000 capitalization for the "Jane" revival, the presentation came about when he and Beruh were making inquiries in relation to a planned musical version of "The College Widow." They discovered the vehicle had been musicalized in 1917 as "Jane," and they thereupon acquired the rights to the Guy Bolton-P. G. Wodehouse-Jerome Kern adaptation of the George Ade comedy.

"Jane" marked Katz's debut as a producer, and a year-and-a-half later he made the jump to Broadway as Alexander H. Cohen's associate producer on the click two-character "Evening With Mike Nichols and Elaine May" revue, now in its 29th week at the Golden Theatre, N. Y. Prior to hooking up with Cohen on the revue, for which he claims he brought in $16,000 of the $60,000 capitalization, Katz made a stab at packaging television specials with two partners formerly associated with tv producer Hubbell Robinson.

The packaging venture, which collapsed after about two months, followed Katz's departure from MCA-TV in March of last year. Associated with him in the unsuccessful packaging project were Thomas Ryan, now with legit-tv-film producer Leland Hayward, and attorney Sam Cohn, co-producer of the 1958 off-Broadway presentation of "The Saturday Night Kid."

Having already been active off-Broadway and on Broadway Katz is now working in the stock field organizing packages for presentation at the Paper Mill Playhouse, Millburn, N. J., and the Westport (Conn.) Country Playhouse. He's keeping his eyes peeled for properties he may produce or co-produce on Broadway. In line with this, he made a verbal agreement while in London last year with British producer Peter Bridge to exchange properties regarded as production possibilities.

Bridge is currently represented on the West End as co-producer with John Gale of the revue, "On the Brighter Side," which opened last April 12 at the Phoenix Theatre there. The two are also presenting a revival of "Finian's Rainbow," opening June 8 at the Saville Theatre, London.

Ontario Will Have First Legit House With Booze

Ottawa, April 25.

Ontario's first theatre licensed to sell drinks will be in the Empress Hotel, Peterborough, this summer. The establishment is installing a stage in its Imperial Ballroom, already licensed for beer and wine.

The Straw Hat Players are due to open the season June 27 and will continue through Sept. 2, offering revivals of Broadway successes. The legit group won't share in the receipts from the sale of beverages, but figures it likely to help attendance.

Another stock troupe will play the Britannia Hotel, and the Carling, both in the Muskoka resort district, and in Cobourg and Lindsay—all non-booze houses.

The Speakeasy Theatre, Toronto, failed recently despite a 10-week run of "The Boy Friend," because producer Mark Furness couldn't get a license for anything stronger than coffee.

NTP in the Red Despite 90% B. O.

Paris, April 25.

In spite of its successful repertory setup and big public following of the Theatre National Populaire (state-subsidized) was in the red for the seasons of 1959 and last year, according to prexy Jean Vilar. This past season of five months in Paris played to an audience almost 90% of capacity, and yet the company is hard-pressed to make ends meet. This is Vilar's lament.

Vilar says that the state handout just is not enough and the few seasons when the company was in the black, the taxes set them back again. He points out that he is given enough for five months for 150 showsings of various plays but has to keep his theatre together for the whole year. Thus the TNP goes in for a lot of foreign dates, for wrich it gets ample governmental handouts, as well as on its swing around France.

This season he seemed to hit the right moods, for attendance was practically full at all shows. Shows included Bertolt Brecht's "Arturo UI" which treated the dangers of Fascism, Sophocles' "Antigone" pointing up the basic laws of humanity; Lesage's "Turcaret," religion among the poor in Sean O'Casey's "Red Roses for Me" and Maurice Jarre's "Loin De Rueil" (Far From Rueil).

Vilar had to give up an experimental small theatre where he could try out new playwrights and players because of a lack of funds. He feels that the TNP has served its purpose and developed a large popular audience and given them great classics and other works that fit in with their daily preoccupations and desires.

Modern-Dress Moliere In Gotham and on Tour

A modern-dress, French-language production of Moliere's "L'Ecole des Femmes" will be presented tomorrow (Thurs.) through next Sunday (30) at the Barbizon-Plaza Theatre, N.Y. The offering, which has been touring U.S. universities and colleges since Feb. 13, was produced by Jean de Rigault in coordination with the Theatre du Vieux-Colombier de Paris and is being presented by de Rigault under the auspieces of the Government of the French Republic and with the cooperation of the French Cultural Services in the U.S.

Following its Manhattan stand, the presentation will embark on a short New England tour under the sponsorship of the Cambridge (Mass.) Drama Festival. The hike, which will end May 9, marking the termination of the U.S. tour, will include a May 7 engagement at Harvard's new Loeb Drama Center. The production, in which Bernard Lajarrige headlines, was directed by Robert Marcy.

Mex City Brass Closes Strindberg 'Sonata' Play

Mexico City, April 25.

The Office of Public Entertainments has shut down the La Esfera Theatre after one performance of "La Sonata de los Espectros" ("Sonata of the Phantoms"). The Strindberg drama was labeled "immoral" by city authorities.

Despite efforts by the producers to obtain a reversal, it appears that the production will not receive a green light here. Elda Peralta was starred in the one-night offering.

N.Y. Shakespeare Fest Raises 75G Of Needed 160G

The N.Y. Shakespeare Festival has raised $75,000 thus fare of the $160,000 it needs to present three planned cuffo-admission performances in New York's Central Park this summer. Of the coin already raised, $35,000 represents the take from the second annual Evening With Shakespeare dinner and entertainment program held last Sunday night (23) at the Hotel Commodore, N.Y., for benefit of the Joseph Papp festival operation.

The $50-a-plate Commodore affair, of which Dorothy (Mrs. Alfred) Strelsin and Joan Crawford were chairmen, was attended by 600 who shelled out an additional $5,000 through their participation in a raffle for a total contribution of $35,000. Papp told those attending the fete, which also marked Shakespeare's 397th birthday, that unless the balance of the coin was forthcoming the contemplated season in Central Park would have to be curtailed.

Regarding the $85,000 still to be raised, Papp said that N.Y. Mayor Robert F. Wagner promised last year that he would ask the Board of Estimate for an appropriation of $60,000 to help underwrite the season. "Up to now," Papp commented, "he has failed to bring the matter before the board." The producer said he wired Wagner last Friday (21) to apprise him of the "seriousness of the situation" and to urge him to place the matter before he board.

The Central Park season is slated to begin July 5 with "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at a temporary site north of the Belvedere Tower Lake. A permanent $400,000 theatre, on the shore of the lake, is now under construction and is expected to be ready for an Aug. 2 opening of "Much Ado About Nothing," to be followed Aug. 28 by "King Richard II."

To Present 'Father's Day' At Edinburgh's Lyceum

Edinburgh, April 25.

"Father's Day," by Gilbert Wakefield, will be tried out, opening next Tuesday night (2) at the Lyceum here. It will mark the taking over the theatre by Myer Oppenheim, wealthy Scot business man, from the firm of Howard & Wyndham.

The Lyceum will be part of a major arts-and-culture block of new buildings in the center of Edinburgh, aimed largely at Festival audiences.

CAPE COD MELODY'S 12TH

Weeks In Prospect—'Destry' As Opener

The Cape Cod Melody Tent, Hyannis, Mass., begins its 12th season of operation with a June 30-July 1 presentation of "Destry Rides Again." David Marshall Holtzmann is managing director of the operation and Peter Candler is general manager. Ernest Sarracino director and Gerald Alters musical director.

Besides "Destry," seven other musicals will be presented at the spot during the nine-week season. Stars are not employed for the productions which will run one week except for an extra two days of "Destry" and a fortnight of "Flower Drum Song" beginning July 24. Other shows skedded include "Chocolate Soldier," "Wish You Were Here," "Most Happy Fella," "Merry Widow," "Take Me Along" and "Kiss Me, Kate."

'Pan' Backers Get $12,500 Profit As Mary Martin, Producers Defer

Mary Martin, who played the title role in the 1954-55 Broadway musical version of "Peter Pan" has given the show's backers reason to crow. The star, by again deferring the payment of money due her from the production, has enabled the management to make an initial "profit" distribution last week of $12,500 to the investors only.

The divvy represented a 10% return to the backers on their $125,000 investment. Besides Miss Martin, the Los Angeles Civic Light Opera Assn., also deferred a claim to first net operating income. And, in the same spirit, the general partners, Richard Halliday, Edwin Lester and Herman Bernstein, also deferred their combined 50% participation in the coin distributed to the backers as profit.

Lester is managing director of the CLOA setup in L.A., which originally produced the musical, subsequently presented on Broadway by Halliday. Miss Martin's husband. Bernstein was general manager of the production, which had a 19-week Broadway run in 1954-55. Income from the sale of the property to NBC-TV enabled the Broadway venture to repay its entire $125,000 investment in full a month after its Main Stem fold and two weeks after offering's initial telecast.

Contributing to the repayment of the investment in 1955 was Miss Martin's deferment at that time of $32,750 salary, which was to have been paid her from additional funds taken in by the Broadway production. During the past few years the Broadway company has picked up revenue from stock performances and the RCA Victor album. As a result, the coin owed Miss Martin has been reduced to $22,842 thus far and the obligation to the CLOA has been pared from $3,919 at the time the investment was repayed to $1,419 thus far.

The television adition of "Pan" was repeated by NBC-TV in 1956 and re-created for a third outing on the network last December. The Broadway production received $15,000 as it's share of the authors' royalties from the recent telecast and it was from that revenue that last week's distribution was made.

The musical version of "Pan," based on the James M. Barrie play, has lyrics by Carolyn Leigh, music by Mark Charlap, additional music by Jule Styne and additional lyrics by Betty Comden and Adolph Green.

London-Paris Trips For Alex Cohen Associates

Alexander H. Cohen believes in sharing the wealth. The producer, who's been represented this season by two profitable shows, one on Broadway and the other on the road, is treating four members of his New York organization to four-week, all-expense, round-trips to London and Paris.

The quartet includes Seymour Merscher, associate and comptroller; Roy A. Somlyo, general manager; Annette Segal, production assistant, and Marina Blodget, production secretary. The four-week trip will be split evenly between Paris and London. Cohen maintains an office in the latter city.

The longrunning Broadway click, "An Evening with Mike and Elaine May," is a Cohen presentation as was the successful road tour earlier this season of "At the Drop of a Hat." Besides his production activities, Cohen is also New York representative for the O'Keefe Centre, Toronto, which hasn't a dark week since opening last Oct. 1.

British Equity To Seek TV Residue

London, April 25.

In seeking contracts with British film producers to cover the use of feature pix on tele, British Actors Equity is not after extra cash. So said Felix Aylmer, when presiding at the BAE annual meeting here last Sunday (23).

He explained that the union wanted to repair the omission in contracts, covering the use of the pix in a medium for which they were never intended and which, in fact, did not exist when the contracts were drawn up. He recalled that the Screen Actors Guild had been forced to strike to put the matter on a proper footing, but hoped that would be avoided here.

"It may be as well to explain," said Aylmer, "that our purpose in raising this issue is not to get more cash out of a group of employers who have already suffered considerably from the competition of tv. We believe, indeed, that in this matter their interests largely coincide with our own. We are persuaded that they have been unwise in nourishing their rivals by feeding them with their own product at ridiculously low rates, and as a result are in danger of being swallowed outright.

"If we can persuade them of this, there should be little difficulty in our coming to an agreement, and establishing control over the use of cinema films on tv, which should prevent the exploitation of both themselves and us by the new giant to our common destruction" he added.

The Equity prexy also hit out at the decision to exclude theatres from the recent report on health, welfare and safety in some places of business. "We are still regarded, it seems, as rogues and vagabonds, undeserving of a dignified home, who must be prepared to put up with worse working conditions than are considered necessary in shops and offices," he commented.

Clurman, Odets to Talk At Chi Theatre Session

Chicago, April 25.

Harold Clurman and Clifford Odets will participate in a Midwest Theatre Conference, sponsored by Chicago Univ. Theatre, Aug. 4-5. Others taking part will be critic-philosopher Kenneth Burke and poet-educator Reuel Denney.

In addition to the seminar, the conference will offer two Court Theatre productions, Pirandello's "Six Characters In Search of an Author" and Shakespeare's "Henry IV, Part I."

Irish TV Setup In Equity Hassle

Dublin, April 25.

Irish Actors' Equity, in a deal with British Equity, has barred all non-Irish-made films from Irish TV, scheduled to go on the air next November.

Edward J. Roth, American-born Director-General of Radio Eireann, controlling body for tv and radio in Ireland, commented on ban when he said "they came to me to negotiate, but how do you negotiate on an accomplished fact? It's absolutely impossible for a television station anywhere—and nowhere more so than in Ireland—to operate a service without introducing a considerable amount of foreign material in the beginning."

He added that he felt that he had no right to negotiate with a union on a subject which affects the economies of other groups, such as advertisers and production companies. "If agreements were made irrespective of their rights it would be most unfair."

Roth remarked that the door was open for discussions and Irish Equity secretary Dermot Doolin's comment was that he was glad to hear it. Roth has said, however, that ban will not keep station off the air. Ban is worrying Irish advertisers who are linked to companies using tv ads on Britain's ITV service: if it is enforced they could not cut costs by importing films made and used on British network.

Costs Holiday Mag $17,500 Damages For Using Shirley Booth in Promo

Pictures of actors and other public figures may not be used commercially without authorization even though used previously for news purposes. That was decided last week in a case involving the use of a photo of Shirley Booth in advertisements for Holiday magazine. A jury in N. Y. Supreme Court unanimously awarded the actress $17,500 damages.

The photo of Miss Booth, taken by Slim Aarons in Jamaica during the winter of 1957-58, was a novelty pose showing her standing in water up to her shoulders, wearing a large picture hat. It was a color shot. Holiday mag reproduced it in February, 1959, as a full-page feature of an article on Jamaica. In June of the same year, the publication used a small print of the same picture in an ad in the New Yorker mag and Advertising Age.

Miss Booth, who had not authorized the use of the photo for advertising purposes and was not informed that it was to be so used, brought suit. During the jury trial before N. Y. Supreme Court Judge Samuel C. Coleman, the defense argued that prior use of the picture in a feature article made permissible its use by the same magazine for promotional purposes.

Miss Booth was represented by George Gallantz, of the firm of Colton, Gallantz & Fernbach. The attorney for Holiday was Harold R. Medina Jr.

Broadway producer Emmett Rogers has optioned Robert Presnell Jr.'s play, "Fair Thee Well," for presentation this fall. He is seeking Lynn Fontanne and Alfred Lunt as stars.

Asides and Ad-Libs

"I'm afraid I'm not much at reminiscence. There's too much ahead." —Author-director George Abbott, as quoted by Robert Taylor in the Boston Globe.

"I go to more parties than I used to. I find I start talking and other people shut up. And that's terrible. I've met more people this past year than I ever met in the past 30. It's interesting and valuable to meet accomplished people. It's instructive. You can always learn from your elders and betters."—Edward Albee, author of the off-Broadway dramas, "The Zoo Story," "The American Dream" and "The Death of Bessie Smith," as quoted in the Talk of the Town section of the New Yorker.

"The American theatre is something that is expected to operate on a high level, with no help from anybody. Perhaps that's what's wrong with the American theatre. I don't know. In Europe there are many major cities where you have at least four or five theatres, and in the smaller cities one is either wholly or partially subsidized by the city." —Producer-director Carmen Capalbo, in an unsigned interview in Gentlemen's Quarterly magazine.

"I believe I fell in love twice. But I felt too old for romance at 27, and knew that marriage would mean leaving the theatre. So I did have a choice, and I made the only possible decision for me. I still don't believe that I could have made a success of marriage and the theatre at once. Perhaps if we had two lives I would insist that my second life was devoted to a good marriage, but it is not always possible to have what you want."—British actress Flora Robson, in an article "Why I Never Married," in the London Daily Express.

"I am a very moral person. I have remarkably few villains in my plays. I show the blackness because there is so much about. I spent a night in a Florida jail once. It was stifling and unpleasant and I was there because I had been driving without a tail light on my car and I had no license with me. Then, in the middle of the night they raided a Negro house of prostitution and they brought the poor girls in, kicking them and beating them. It was horrible and I did not have my hip flask with me. I cannot bear elevators or any confined space. If we go out to a coral reef in a boat, be sure it is a big one because otherwise I cannot take it."—Playwright Tennessee Williams, as quoted by David Lewin in the N. Y. World-Telegram.

"I feel so terribly foreign in New York. Language difficulties. No one understands me. They call me a limey. I've even tried Americanizing my speech—'I guess' and 'I reckon.' But then, I don't like English people putting on an American accent. When you go home it sounds terrible."—British singer-dancer Elizabeth Seal, star of "Irma La Douce," as quoted by Joseph Wershba in the N. Y. Post.

Sir Alec Guinness complains of the bad manners of today's audiences. "People nowadays are used to eat, knit and chat while looking at tv and they do not refrain from this habit therefore in the theatre." He mentioned that during a performance of his in Terrance Rattigan's "Ross" one couple seated in the first row did not stop discussing their personal affairs up to the point where the wife declared that she would have preferred to see another play.

"It is casually supposed that the theatre, because it is generally liked and attended, must generate spontaneously from the people. Nothing could be further from the truth. The theatre has always been the child of intense patronage, first by the church, then by kings and princes, and then by the state. And even when popular entertainment consisted mainly of wild beasts tearing people apart and the attendance far exceeded that of any arena we can fill today, the gate receipts did not begin to cover the costs. There were large items on the imperial household accounts for catching and shipping the stars and for rounding up the straight men.

"The costumes, machines, and effects which graced the later theatre were paid for either by the nobility, the wealthy guilds, or the Church, and given to the public as a free gift. The people supported these shows with delight and that is the only way they supported them."—Choreographer-director Agnes de Mille, in an article titled "Boxoffice Is Not Enough," in the Atlantic Monthly.

London Legit Bits

Lndon, April 25.

Frank Hauser is paging Susannah York for Ophelia in the Oxford Playhouse's "Hamlet."

Sybil Thorndike unveiled a memorial to the late Ivor Novello at St. Paul's, Covent Garden, "the actors' church."

Tom Courtenay will succeed Albert Finney in "Billy Liar," in June. Finney will play the title part in John Osborne's "Luther."

Sarah Churchill is to play Rosalind in the Pembroke Theatre's in-the-round "As You Like It."

Beryl Reid, George Rose and Joan Heal will be the leads in "On The Avenue," new Tennent revue set for the Queen's Theatre in a few weeks.

The Irving Theatre is to drop the club angle and be open to the general public.

"Settled Out of Court" folds April 29 at the Strand to enable Nigel Patrick to do a film in Spain.

The new Wolf Mankowitz-Monty Norman musical, "Belle—or the Ballad of Dr. Crippen," is due May 4 at the Strand Theatre, with George Benson as the murderer.

Mary Hayley Bell's new play, "The Man With the Round Haircut," will have its world premiere by the cast of an East Grinstead amateur dramatic society. Miss Bell's husband, actor John Mills, is the group's president.

Joss Ackland has taken over from Douglas Campbell as Falstaff in "Henry IV—Part One" at the Old Vic. Campbell's due for rehearsals at Stratford, Ontario.

Irene Dawkins, senior casting director of BBC-TV, has joined the Walter Jokel legit management as a director and personal assistant to Jokel.

Alyn Ainsworth will be musical director for "Bye Bye Birdie," which opens May 25 in Manchester before coming to Her Majesty's Theatre, London.

Philip King, author of Pool's Paradise," took over from Henry Kendall in the play at Liverpool when Kendall was ill.

"The Commentator," Hollywood publicist Ben Irwin's prize-winning play, will world preem May 25 at Town Theatre of Columbia, S.C., which sponsored annual contest.

Erotic Temple Sculpture Ignored, But Embrace Poster Upsets India

By NAN JOSEPH

New Delhi.

Among India's numerous problems—not counting the goals of the third five-year plan—are how best to bring the arts to its 450,000,000 inhabitants from the Himalayas in the north to the Gulf of Mannar in the south. It is a prodigious undertaking, but one of the most successful of the country's recent projects was the launching of the Rabindranath Tagore Centenary both in India and around the globe. Moreover, India appears determined to grow stronger in its film production and is anxious to increase its cinema exports, especially to the United States which to date has seen but few Indian films notable among them those of Satyagit Ray. Ray is director of such outstanding works as "Pather Panchali," "Aparajito" and "The World of Appu" released in the States through the stalwart efforts of Edward Harrison.

India exports its film to the Soviet Union, Japan, United Kingdom, Thailand, Indo-China, Ceylon, the British East and West Africa, the British West Indies, Afghanistan, Burma, Lebanon and many other countries but her foreign exchange earnings from film shipped to the United States are insignificant.

In India today, particularly in the cities, there is an absorbing up-to-the-minute, almost avant-garde approach to contemporary arts. The daily press does its utcost to cover the art shows, dance recitals, the dramas on the stage and the happenings on the screen. The Indian press devotes considerable space to what is happening in motion picture production centers in Madras, Bombay, Calcutta and other film centers since film making is the eighth largest industry in the land. Considerable revenue is derived by the press from theatrical display space.

There are some 3,500 motion picture theatres and more than 1,000 tent theatres in the country. About 300 films are made every year in India and they are made in at least 11 languages including Hindi-Urdu, Tamil, Telugu, Kanarese and Bengali. Some are indeed what we would label shoestring productions but on the whole the Indian product now bears a reasonably professional stamp. Approximately 2,000,000 Indians see films every day in a land where the double feature is on the verboten list.

Dancers in India occupy a notable niche in the cultural arts. When Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip went on their recent journey to India, it was the dance that proved the No. 1 attraction. The film makers are now using celebrated dancers in many of their top productions.

Currently, Indians are dhoti-deep in Tagore observances. Tagore exhibitions of paintings, and Tagore poems and dramas are being presented on many a maharaja and Nizam palace ground, at university centers, in theatres and on Air India Radio. India is cooperating with many countries in promoting Tagore's works. Tagore's "The King of the Dark Chamber," for example, is a hit in an off-Broadway production.

Norman Cousins, editor of the Saturday Review, was in New Delhi recently. He's chairman of the Tagore Centennary Committee in America and is lining up a number of Tagore dramatic programs for American production. All this and other cultural pursuits make it obvious that India isn't concerned only with agriculture, mining, transport and other industrial problems. India's concern for the social and cultural betterment of her the constantly improving mass communications methods via broadcasting and the economic and moral support of the other art forms of the land.

India is staging her international film festival in October and November of this year under the aegis of the Festival Directorate in the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting. Open to all nations, the festival will be non-competitive. As presently set up, each nation will be permitted to submit two feature films and two shorts in English or Hindi. The Festival will get under way in New Delhi Oct. 27-Nov. 2), Madras (Nov. 6-12) and Bombay (Nov. 11-17).

On the whole, Indian exhibitors tend toward relative conservatism in their newspaper display space, if one is to judge by American standards. In fact, most American film product in India gets jazzier newspaper treatment than does Indian product. A recently-made Indian film, "Cupid," is plugged in Indian dailies as a "rollicking romance of unforgettable charm,"—indeed a sedate piece of advertising copy. Another Indian film, "Ganga," is headlined: "Acclaimed by Everyone" and "Jaali-Note" is streamered "More you see, More you like." Still another locally-made product, "Mitti Men Sona" is advertised as "The Best Family Picture in Town." It all adds up to almost Puritan copy.

But the movie poster, on the other hand, is another story indeed in the outraged eyes of Acharya Vinoba Bhave, a disciple of Gandhi who walks through the villages of India seeking land for the destitute. Bhave is currently spearheading a crusade to clean up cinematic posters. He has been exhorting his countless followers to extirpate what he terms "the indecent cinema posters." As in the United States, film producers and exhibitors suffer the constant lash of self-appointed censors. Both the Indian press and the public are badgering the film industry to sapolio its material. The drive appears to be directed against "obscene" movie posters adorning the crumbling walls of city buildings, semi-rural structures and the facades of movie theatres.

For example, in Indore, the summer capital of Madhya Bharat and a big cotton-milling center, Bhave was incensed when he came upon posters displayed by the local exhibitors. He was struck with "deep horror and indignation." He told his followers that the posters must be removed "and if the law of the land is incapable of effecting their removal, religion should take the lead." The Hindu leader maintained that the law of religion was far superior to civil laws. "The law which cannot protect religion should be mended by its breach," Bhave declared.

He continued to rail against Indore exhibitors until the latter agreed to meet with Bhave's followers. At the meeting the exhibitors agreed to remove the offending posters but subsequently welched on their promise. This so infuriated Bhave's followers that an uprising resulted. A large part of the population, including women, rose up and in fury tore down the posters and burnt them to the accompaniment of Vedic hymns.

This demonstration, according to Bhave, brought appeals from other sectors of India for similar assistance to destroy their offending placards. Bhave made it plain that he would give all his support in launching "Satyagraha" against the billposting of indecent movie paper throughout India. He urged that committees of women be formed in each town with the object of obliterating such offending posters. Bhave indicated he wasn't so much concerned with the film product as with the posters on the walls. He was pleased, on the other [illegible] with some of the film producers and their final screen products, notably those made of the life of Tulsidas, a 16th century mystical poet and follower of Bhakti Yogi, and the life of Tukaram, another distinguished leader. "I simply want that the eyes of the citizens should not be attacked by indecent posters and my present crusade is against such posters alone," Bhave said.

To offset demonstrations staged by Bhave's adherents, the Supreme Council of Producers is attempting self-regulation of its publicity matter. Its objective is to cut down excesses before the government steps in and calls a halt to improper industry practices. But the general feeling is that the masses will ultimately influence lawmakers to introduce more drastic regulations. Bhave's followers believe that the film industry's self-regulatory behavior isn't sufficient to eliminate all the excesses rampant in poster displays. Bhave is convinced that the poster displays are a grave evil and constitute an encroachment on citizen's rights.

Although a film poster is frequently a panic button that sets off a demonstration of moral outrage, Indians oddly enough, are accustomed to seeing no end of earthy and ungirdled sculpture—and this calls forth no alarm. Much of the highly realistic erotic sculpture integrated into the Hindu temples (at Konarak and Ellora, for example, and the goings-on at Khajuraho) is not regarded as obscene by the worshipper.

The superabundance of male and female figures seen in twos and threes and even intertwined in groups of fours, disporting themselves in intimate juxtaposition are to the pious simply symbolic of the omnipresent reproductive forces in nature. Others, however, maintain that these figures depict the gods at play after ministering to the needs of their devotees. And in Conjeeveram, one of the seven holy cities of India, no less than 10,000 lingams attesting to the boundless procreative powers of the god Shiva causes nary a ripple of indignation.

Though far more erotic than any poster, India's temple sculpture is accepted with composure by the teeming millions. But a film poster barely illustrating a fond embrace is cause enough for the masses to invoke their gods to perform the frenzied Tandava dance of destruction.

Bill Fields

acteristics as a pressagent. One was his interest in and extensive knowledge of the road. He maintained professional relationships and in many instances personal friendships with an extraordinary number of newspaper people throughout the country, including editors and executives in general departments as well as on the drama desks. Because of that, he served as a voluntary agent for arranging press seats and in some cases hotel reservations for out-of-town newspaper men visiting New York.

Another of Fields' special flairs was his development of publicity assistants, a number of whom went on to successful pressagent careers on their own. They include Arthur Cantor, Francis Robinson, Harry Forwood, Beverly Kelly and his associates at the time of his death, Walter Alford, Reginald Denenholz and Mae Lyons.

Fields also had the unusual pressagent attitude of preferring newspaper men to producers. He believed in strict accuracy in publicity releases, and used dignified methods rather than stunts and gimmicks.

Fields was born in Hillsboro, Texas, and at the age of 16 joined the Army to serve in the campaign against the forces of the Mexican bandit, Villa. He served in the American Expeditionary Forces in World War I, being wounded in the battle of the Mouse-Argonne. He attempted to rejoin the Army during World War II, but was turned down because of his age, as entered the Canadian Army and did public relations work, rising to the rank of Major.

After serving in World War I, Fields attended the Univ. of Texas, but transferred to the Columbia Univ. School of Journalism with the intention of a newspaper career. He was unable to get a job as a reporter, but took a publicity assignment with the idea of meeting editors and thereby getting on a newspaper. He was partnered in the production of several Broadway shows over the years.

Fields was one of the founders of the Assn. of Theatrical Press-agents & Managers and was elected vice-president last year, moving up to presidency several months ago, succeeding Harold Goldberg, who died. Despite his devotion to the union, however, he engaged in several bitter disputes with the organization, in one instance over new membership limitations and in another because of restrictions on his circus employment. Thomas Kilpatrick, who recently became ATPAM vice-president is a special election, will succeed Fields as president.

Fields resided in Sheffield, Mass., but also maintained an apartment in New York. Surviving are his wife, Camilla, and an adopted daughter and son. Funeral services will be held this morning (Wed.) at the Campbell Funeral Home, N. Y.

British ABC In Ambitious Legit Detour; Springboard For TV Talent

London, Aril 25.

ABC Television is spreading its wings and moving into legit and the longhaired field.

Its legit enterprise is to be a commercial undertaking but its other ventures, such as ballet, will be heavily subsidized by the commercial tv programming company, probably to the tune of more than $50,000 a year.

Its first legit undertaking will be a West End presentation in partnership with impresario Harold Fielding of Alun Owen's "Progress to the Park," which was first presented as a Sunday night attraction at the Royal Court and has more latterly been seen at the Theatre Workshop in Stratford East London.

It will be a new production of "Progress" and the play has been substantially revised by the author. It has been staged by William T. Kotcheff, with designs by Timothy O'Brien and stars Billie Whitelaw and Tom Bell.

The production is currently on an out-of-town tryout and is due in at the Saville Theatre on May 3. Its engagement there is limited to five weeks because of prior commitments at the theatre, but it is confidently hoped that it will subsequently transfer to an indefinite run.

At a press conference last week at which the deal was announced, ABC-TV managing director said that both Syndey Newman, producer of the network's "Armchair Theatre" series, and he, hoped that "Progress" would be the first of a series of projects in which writers, directors, designers and actors who have made their names in the program will have opportunities to make an equal impact in other media.

Harold Fielding described the venture as an exciting development in cooperation between the theatre and tv. It was not new for tv companies to invest in the theatre, but this was the first time a theatre managament had drawn on the vital young talents of tv for a writer-director-designer team. He believed that the two worlds of theatre and tv could and should nourish each other.

At the same conference Thomas gave details of a ballet festival to be staged in Coventry for five days starting on July 11. The program is being staged by Anton Dolin who had formed a group of internationally known dancers for the show including, in addition to himself, Carla Fracci, John Gilpin, Rosella Hightower, Natalie Krassovska, Colette Marchand, Kjeld Noack and Margarethe Schanne, and Andre Prokovski. The ballet will be a full two and a half hours program, but a 60-minute tv show is to be made under the supervision of Brian Tesler. Anatole Fistoulari will conduct the London Philharmonic orch for the Coventry show.

Twain Raps Equity

between $8,500 and $9,000 and $111 over $9,000. The production, incidentally, also contributes 1% of the weekly payroll for Equity members to the union's pension fund.

Twain doesn't object to the $85 minimum for major parts, but he does feel it's impossible to operate profitably at the house when the same minimum is required for those in lesser roles. He contends that the salary situation, which is tough enough in the case of "Roots," with only nine performers, would be murder when applied to some of the other plays he's contemplated producing at the house. One of those, Robert Ardrey's "Shadow of Heros," requires a cast of about 21.

Big Nut

"Roots," part of a trilogy by young British playwright Arnold Wesker, with the other two scripts also earmarked for New York production by Twain, costs around $4,700 a week to operate. The potential capacity at the Mayfair at a $4.90 top evenings, is around $9,500. The production has been grossing an average of $3,900 weekly. The highest take thus far has been around $4,700.

Although business hasn't been good at the Mayfair, it would represent a profit at a regular off-Broadway spot, Twain asserts. The producer is also convinced that the Broadway location of the Mayfair in the Paramount Hotel cellar site formerly occupied by Billy Rose's Diamond Horseshoe is more of a liability than an asset. That's not only because of the salary demands, but also because of the higher advertising expenditure involved and the rental of $1,250 against a percentage of the gross.

The average theatre rental off-Broadway is believed to range from $650 to $800 weekly. As for the ad expenditure, Twain has to pay more because of the show's Broadway location than he would if the production were berthed in a regular off-Broadway house. He figures his weekly ad expense of $800-$900 is more than twice the amount he'd be spending for equivalent space if "Roots" were situated off-Broadway.

Twain has already been refused permission by Equity to move "Roots" out of the Times Square area and switch to an off-Broadway contract. In turning down the request, the union followed the same policy it applies to Broadway productions. Besides the "Roots" cast, which includes a stage manager understudy, who gets a minimum of $111, plus performance pay, the weekly payroll also includes three stagehands at $170 each, a company manager and pressagent at $165 each and a treasurer at $130.

The stagehands and treasurer salaries are standard for Broadway, while the company manager and pressagent salaries are less than the Broadway minimum but higher than the off-Broadway minimum. Twain has no beef with the unions other than Equity. He regards the stagehand setup as particularly fair, since the three men are working a three-set show, which uses about 600 props and has around 40 light cues. Incidentally, the treasurer's union does not exercise jurisdiction off-Broadway, which means the smallseaters, outside the Times Square area, don't have to pay the $130 minimum.

The Paramount Hotel cellar spot is leased by realtor Irving Maidman, who converted the premises into the Mayfair at a reported cost of about $50,000. Maidman, in turn, has leased the spot to Twain, who reveals that about 50% of the patrons for evening performances shows up at the boxoffice to purchase tickets between 7:30 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. This, he claims, is standard at most off-Broadway operations.

Since its opening, "Roots" has had some tough neighborhood competition from the flock of Broadway shows, which have been circulating discount tickets whereby the price of admission for an orchestra seat is sometimes less than the $4.90 top at the Mayfair.

Juliette Greco Pacted By Edinburgh Festival Also Off-B'way Revue

Edinburgh, April 25.

Juliette Greco, French chanteuse and film actress, is pacted to present a program of intimate songs during third week of the International Edinburgh Festival here next September. Her repertoire will cover songs by Francoise Sagan, Kurt Weill, George Brassens, and Leo Ferrer. She will be accompanied by the Henri Patterson ensemble.

Set for second week of the Edinburgh Fest is another late-evening show, a revue 5+1, which is the work of Stephen Vinaver and Carl Davis. Show opened in New York in 1958 as "Diversions," winning the Obie Award as the Best Off-Broadway revue of the year. Vinaver, author and director of the revue, is German-born but emigrated to the U. S. A. at an early age. Carl Davis, New York-born, has been assistant conductor to the New York City Center Opera. He has been invited by the Swiss Radio in Lugano to conduct American music there during March, having composed a new work for the occasion.

Dryfoos Succeeds Sulzberger

Arthur Hays Sulzberger retired yesterday (Tues.) as publisher of the N.Y. Times succeeded by Orvil E Dryfoos, president of the company.

At a meeting of the board, following the annual meeting of stockholders, Sulzberger announced his retirement. He will be 70 on his next birthday and has been publisher since 1935, succeeding to that office on the death of his father-in-law, Adolph S. Ochs. As a trustee of Mr. Ochs' estate, he and Mrs. Sulzberger still vote the controlling stock interest in the N.Y. Times. Sulzberger will continue as chairman of the board of directors.

Dryfoos, 48 is the husband of Mr. and Mrs. Sulzberger's daughter, Marian. He has been with the Times since 1941 and has been president since 1957.

Sulzberger also announced the retirement of Charles Merz as editor in charge of the editorial page, and Dryfoos simultaneously announced the appointment of John B. Oakes to succeed him as editorial page editor. Merz, who joined the Times editorial board in 1931 and had been editor since 1938, becomes editor emeritus.

Dryfoos will be the sixth publisher of the Times since its establishment in 1851, the third since its purchase by Ochs in 1896.

Olavi Linnus' Reissues

Out of print for 15 years, a series of historical novels by VARIETY's Helsinki rep, Olavi Linnus, will return to the bookshops in new editions. The stories deal with the fictional life story of a Delaware settler of Finnish descent who becomes one of the first to explore the Ohio and the Mississippi rivers and who, all his life, fights to bring understanding and peace between the white and the red man.

Six in numbers, the novels will be published with short intervals, under the writer's penname, Gil Dennic. The first is out already.

Michener's Hawaiian Hot Seat

Recent New York interviews in which author James A. Michener blasted Hawaii for racial discrimination has drawn caustic fire from the State Assn. of Hawaiian Civic Clubs. Same group branded his book "Hawaii" as being "seriously harmful to the history of various racial groups" and said its "mixture of fact and fiction has caused irreparable damage to Hawaii."

N. Y. Post reporter Joseph Wersbha, in a phone interview with a Honolulu newspaper, said Michener was disgusted with the "guff" he encountered in Hawaii. The "guff" involved alleged racial discrimination because his wife wasn't what he called a WASP—a white, Anglo-Saxon Protestant—and also political antagonism because of his strong support of the Democratic party.

Yet Michener's most recent written appraisal of Hawaii's racial relations appears in a foreword introduction in Fodor's "Modern Guide to Hawaii," a just-published travel book. Michener wrote: "Here, on the western ramparts of the United States, we have been fortunate in being able to construct a society which gives all of its members, regardless of color or religion, a most remarkably even chance to attain success and happiness, the latter accomplishment being more important than the former."

A "letter to the editor" printed in both dailies lowered the boom on Michener's book. "With shocking bad taste, and a dull literary style, he mixed all the historic platitudes into a massive welter of material which, over and over, reflects his own prejudices," the writer contended. "The wrath and aggression reflected in his present attitude toward Hawaii suggest delusions of grandeur or persecution."

Grolier's Updatings

The Grolier Society, publishers of the Encyclopedia Americana and The Book of Knowledge, is preparing a new encyclopedia which is "basically a short-entry set designed to cover a vast area." Show biz is widely represented in "Project 45," of which Bruce Bohle is associate editor, with individual entries averaging 50 to 200 words. In addition to such classic subjects as the Booths and the Barrymores, "The Black Crook," Astor Place riots and minstrel shows, also covered will be the American Shakespeare Festival and Academy, American Educational Theatre Association, Antoinette Perry Awards, Maurice Chevalier, George Abbott, Harold Edgar Clurman and Ralph Bellamy. Despite brevity of treatment, items will be carefully cross-referenced. Bibliographical sources will be supplied. Compendium will be published in multi-volume set, "planned as a standard reference work for the entire family, useful to high school students as well as to adults.

Importance to performing arts is updating information that has stagnated in older reference works, and inclusion of much fresh material by authoritative writers in all branches of entertainment media.

Van Urk's New Post

J. Blan van Urk has been elected President and chief executive officer of National Association of Schools & Publishers Inc., succeeding James F. Fitzsimmons, who becomes chairman. Van Urk, a pioneer in corporate-policy public relations, was formerly business adviser to a group of the Du Pont family. Previous to establishing himself in Wilmington as a consultant, he spent many years in public relations and advertising in New York City (Young & Rubicam, N. W. Ayer & Son, and Calkins & Holden, where he was executive vicepresident and director).

The National Association of Schools and Publishers is consultants to book publishers and correspondence schools throughout the country.

New Trade Book House

Bold Face Books Inc., a new general trade book publishing house, has been formed by Ben Wattenberg (president and editor) and David A. Boehm (secretary-treasurer and sales manager). Books produced by the new firm will be sold and distributed via Sterling Publishing, of which Boehm is president.

Bold Face will head into different fields from those covered by Sterling, one of the country's leading hardcover "how-to" book publishers. Bold Face books will be directed to young moderns, with particular stress upon international affairs, political activity and social problems, all treated in a popular fashion and all designed as strong backlist properties.

Radcliffe's Seminar

Barney Rosset, president of Grove Press and the Evergreen paperback books, will be the keynote speaker for the 14th session of Radcliffe's Publishing Procedures Course June 21 to Aug. 1.

Rosset's initiative as a publisher led him to such projects as the publishing of the authorized and full version of "Lady Chatterly's Lover."

Some 45 other publishing experts will lecture at the six-week course open to recent college graduates, both men and women. The lecture staff will include Hiram Haydn who left Random House as editor-in-chief to co-found Atheneum Publishers with Alfred Knopf Jr. and Simon Michael Bessie; John Updike, New Yorker contributor, Mrs. Helen Meyer, president of Dell Books.

The course, which prepares college graduates for a publishing career in books and magazines, is limited to 50 students. Tuition is $200, and there are two full scholarships available.

New 'Asia' Mag

Asia magazine, a new English-language weekly supplement to be distributed through Orient as far as India, will launch publication with its Oct. 1 issue.

Mag will be headquartered in Hong Kong and printed by Toppan Printing Co. of Tokyo. Adrian Zecha, formerly with Time, will publish and Norman Soong, formerly with N. Y. Times and founder of PanAsia News Agency, will edit. Soong describes new venture as "first magazine to be created exclusively by Asians, for Asians and about Asia."

New mag also has offices in Frankfurt, London and New York.

Thorpe & Porter Projects

Thorpe & Porter Ltd. of Great Britain, exclusive distributors in the United Kingdom for Pocketbooks, Independent News Co., Hillman Periodicals, Kable News Co., Ace News., Ballantine Books and other leading independent publishers, is launching a new British paperback series called May Fair Books. The publisher of the series, Gordon Landsborough, has been associated with Panther and Foursquare Books, two of Britain's leading paperback lines.

Thorpe Porter has developed a system of distribution for Britain which is unique. In addition to supplying the usual wholesale and retail outlets on a direct basis, it maintains a fleet of more than 150 trucks manned by salesmen-drivers which makes possible on-the-spot deliveries to retailers of all items handled by T&P from supplies carried in the trucks. These are akin to bookmobiles used by American magazine and book wholesalers.

Gutsy Guthman

Washington, April 25.

The new chief of public information for the Justice Dept., Edwin O. Guthman, addressed members of the American Society of Newspaper Editors and gave the editors a jolt when he suggested that the Department's anti-trust division should go after consolidations of newspapers.

Newspapers shouldn't be allowed to own radio and television stations, he added.

After this, he said the opinions expressed were his own and not necessarily those of the Dept.

Prize For 'Guide' Book, Play

"The Guide," R. K. Narayan's novel, is the English-language work chosen for 1960 by the executive board of India's Sahitya Akademi (Academy of Letters) for one of its $1,000 awards for the most outstanding books in each of the major Indian languages originally published between the start of 1957 and the end of 1959. Other award-winners were a historical work in Assamese, a play in Gujarati, a collection of poems in Hindi, a book of two Kanarese poems, a Malayalam novel, a Marathi novel, a study in Telugu, and a collection of poems in Urdu. No awards were made in Bengali, Kashmiri, Oriya, Punjabi, Sanskrit, Sindi, and Tamil as no work in these languages was adjudged of sufficiently outstanding literary merit.

The Narayan novel's stage version, written by Americans Harvey Breit and his wife Patricia, and starring Pakistani actor Zia Mohyeddin (of "A Passage to India" fame), was preemed in Cambridge, England, where it was set for a week's run followed by a fortnight at the Oxford Playhouse, where it got good reviews in the British national press. Impresario Michael Codron has an option on the play for a West End theatre. Another Narayan novel, "The Man-eater of Malgudi," was recently published in the U. S. by Viking.

Bibles & Dictionaries

Recent preoccupation with trade book publishers in extending their operations to textbooks is supported by the sudden blockbuster bestseller, Cambridge Univ. Press' "The New English Bible" (New Testament) ($4.95) which shot up from No. 8 to No. 2 besteller this week, second only to William L. Shirer's "The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich," now in its 23d week of the national bestsellers.

Publishers have long recognized that dictionaries and Bibles are still the alltime bestsellers for book houses.

A Trend?

Possibly indicating a trend, former Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare Arthur S. Flemming has joined Good Housekeeping mag as contributing editor. In a monthly piece he will examine issues affecting the fields with which he's been identified. He'll also participate in editorial planning.

Some weeks ago Henry Cabot Lodge, unsuccessful Republican candidate for the vice-presidency, was named general consultant to Time, Life and Fortune on international relations. Prior to last fall's campaign he was United States representative to the United Nations.

Lester Cohen's Book

Novelist-scenarist Lester Cohen's profile on Horace Liveright in a recent Esquire got him a Bobbs-Merrill assignment to write a book which he calling "The World of Horace Liveright."

Latter was a potent and colorful literary figure of the 1920s.

Disasters Need Brightness

Longmans Green has contracted a new book for fall publication dealing with great disasters in Canada, but don't want the word "disaster" in title. Experience has shown that the words "disaster" or "death" crimp sales with average book prospect. Author of the work is Frank Rasky, editor of Liberty Mag, published in Toronto.

He has another book, "Romance of Canada's Wild West," designed to prove that the Dominion had as many deadeye shots, saddle-sore heroes and heels as the U.S. version.

Mussolini In Depth

Ivone Kirkpatrick, chairman of Britain's Independent Television Authority (ITA), which is comparable to the Federal Communications Commission in the U.S., is writing a book on the rise and fall of Mussolini, with the same "in depth" approach as William L. Shirer's current bestseller, "The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich." Kirkpatrick was a war correspondent and knew the Italian fascist leader well.

Odhams (England) will publish coincidentally with Hawthorn Books in the U.S. It is planned for later this year or '62.

Lynn Carrick's Shift

Lippincott v.p. Lynn Carrick, who was also in charge of the New York editorial office, is moving to London in July from where he will operate as general European representative for the American publishing house. His wife, Virginia, who repped the English firm of Longmans Green & Co. in New York, will also move to the British capital and associate with her husband in representing Lippincott.

He was a director of Lippincott since Carrick & Evans Inc. was merged in 1940 into J. B. Lippincott Co., whose main hq is in Philadelphia.

Purtell's Town Crier

Joseph Purtell, senior editor of Time, has bought control of Fairfield County Publications and its semi-weekly Westport Town Crier from Arthur Pearce, publisher, and Luis Villalon, editor.

The Town Crier has differed from the conventional small town weekly in that it has taken a rather sophisticated suburban stance newswise and editorially. Up to recently it included a separate tab section, County Fair, spotlighting area entertainment and arts; this for economic reasons was switched to the standard columns of the Town Crier.

Frank Gibney To SBI

Playboy mag publisher Hugh Hefner, who's been raiding the slicks to staff his new biweekly Show Business Illustrated (bowing Aug. 23), has plucked Life mag's Frank Gibney to head up the new venture. He's designated assistant publisher and editorial director for SBI, and will base in the Chicago homeoffice.

Gibney had been a Life byliner-editor-editorialist since '57, and before that was features editor for Newsweek (latter also lost some staffers to the new publication). Gibney has also worked for Time and United Press, and has authored five books.

SBI will be consumer-oriented and sell for 50c.

'Oscar' Booms O'Hara

Impact of Elizabeth Taylor's "Oscar" for "Butterfield 8" was felt in the inner sanctum of Bantam Books the following day.

An avalanche of new orders from all over the country for reprints triggered the announcement of prexy Oscar Dystel that 200,000 additional copies of the paperback issue of the John O'Hara novel were rolling off the presses, bringing the total to date of 1,750,000 with bright expectation for an upped record breaking figure.

Selig Adler Succeeds Stiles

Promotion of Selig Adler to managing editor of the N.Y. Daily Mirror was announced last week by Charles B. McCabe, publisher. Adler has served the Mirror in every news capacity from reporter to city editor and assistant managing editor.

He succeeds Hinson Stiles, who is retiring from active news-side work and who will remain as associate editor in charge of the year-'round Mirror Youth Program. Stiles has been 50 years with the Hearst organization and recently returned from a three-month, round-the-world trip aboard the SS Caronia with his wife.

John Cage's Book

Controversial American composer John Cage has written a book titled, "Silence," scheduled for October publication by Wesleyan University Press. Volume of anecdote, poetry and essays by the experimental composer will cover his life interests, such as mushroom hunting, Zen, wild flowers, noise, and, naturally, music.

Wesleyan Press also is prepping the first English translation of a book covering the Bauhaus school, founded by Walter Gropius in Germany after WWI. "The Theatre of the Bauhaus" is a study by Laszlo Moholy-Nagy, Osker Schlemmer and Farkas Molner.

Quite a Cut

William J. Lederer's original manuscript for his new book, "A Nation of Sheep," ran some 400,000 words, pruned to a scant 40,000 words in order to spur one-evening cover-to-cover reading. Lederer admitted the drastic cutting might be interpreted as over-simplification. Several entire chapters were dropped because, as the author told a Honolulu newsman, he "didn't want anything in there that scholars could split hairs on."

The book represents a year's work.

New Pub House

Rolley & Reynolds, new Philadelphia publishing house, will make its official debut with a first novel, "The Challenge," by Arthur C. Mangels and Albert F. Byers.

Mangels is a millionaire Pennsylvania paint manufacturer and New Jersey real estate developer. Byers is a Philadelphia advertising executive.

CHATTER

Al Hine, whose latest novel, "Lord Love a Duck," was just published by Atheneum, plane to Puerto Rico last week to join Peter Brook company shooting the William Goulding novel, "Lord of the Flies." Hine is associate producer of the film.

As "Dragnet" glamorized the Los Angeles Police Dept. so Terrys Olender's candid, factual account of her career as assistant D.A. may serve to throw light on the work in the District Attorney's office when—and if—it reaches the screen. Several indie producers are negotiating for the book, "For The Prosecution" (Chilton). Author is skedded for extensive p.a. tour beginning May 12.

Country Beautiful, national slick magazine, religious in theme, is edited and published by a Roman Catholic priest, Fr. Michael P. Dineen. It is sponsored by non-profit Country Beautiful Foundation Inc. First issue is dated September and the first printing is 100,000 copies.

Ray Russell, on leave-of-absence from Playboy mag to script his novel, "Sardonicus," for indie producer William Castle, nixed offer to return to home office to edit publishing company's upcoming Show Business Illustrated. He remain on Coast to write two more scripts for Castle.

Eddie Sherman, entertainment and gossip columnist, moved from the Honolulu Advertiser to the Honolulu Star-Bulletin some months ago. Now he's revolving-doored himself back to the Advertiser. Return of the prodigal was prompted essentially by an upped salary offer. Star-Bulletin promptly assigned Charles Frankel to fill the back-page two-column spot vacated by Sherman.

Robert Goulet, French-Canadian author of the just published novel, "The Violent Season" (Braziller), is related to the same-name costar of "Camelot," currently on Broadway, through both their paternal grandfathers. Former French tutor, now dittoing at Milford (Conn.) Prep, studied stage directing at Yale Drama School where his classmates included Julie Harris, Leslie Stevens, Delbert Mann, Frank Corsaro, Julia Meade among others.

Lee F. Payne, 60, managing editor of the old Los Angeles Daily News for 18 years, died April 11 in L. A. Since June, 1956, he had been m.e. of the Temple City (Cal.) Times.

William C. Tucker, 63, veteran newspaper editor who worked for the Columbus, Ga., Enquirer and the old Atlanta Georgian, among other papers, died of a heart attack April 13 in Columbus.

Charles A. Shonesy, 58, Atlanta Journal copy editor, died April 11 in that city.

Harry T. Brundidge, 64, war correspondent and magazine writer, died April 19 in Santa Cruz, Cal. Shortly before retiring in 1953 he was with Mercury mag.

John W. Chase, 55, book reviewer and onetime editor with the publishing house of Longmans, Green & Co., died April 18 in Groton, Conn.

atre outside of New York by touring shows. CAMI will be represented in the project by Fox and Wilford The repertory setup is the outgrowth of an exploratory tour made last year of 10 midwestern cities by Norris Houghton, who with T. Edward Hambleton, Dewell and Miss Hersey comprise the board of directors of the National Phoenix.

Houghton, who founded the Phoenix operation in Manhattan with Hambleton, is president of the National Phoenix. He's no longer active in the New York venture. The phys'cal production of the prior "Mary" touring presentation is still intact and will be used for the upcoming road trek, scheduled for 20-25 weeks of playing time in major cities, colleges and secondary towns. The basic set will also be utilized for the Anderson play, but each production will have its own costumes.

According to Dewell, the aim of the project is to build a permanent repertory company for the road. It's possible, he figures, that a third production may be rehearsed while the tour is in progress and added to the repertory in the spring. On top of that, another prospect being considered is a tour of the two or three productions on the strawhat circuit the summer of 1962. The company would then return to the road the following season in different vehicles.

"Elizabeth" will be directed by Jack Sydow, who'll also recreate Tyrone Guthrie's staging of "Mary." Sets for "Elizabeth" will be designed by Bill Roberts, the costumes by Alvin Colt and the lighting by Tharon Musser. The scenery and lighting for "Mary" were designed by Donald Oenslager, and Colt was responsible for the costumes.

The Jubilee Four garnered the most mitt action from first-nighters: the Negro harmonizers are ideal for the show, blending splendidly with some of the songs in Harris' repertoire. The star sings the warm Dixie-types expected of him, plus a few more, all of which scored solidly on an enthusiastic opening night gathering.

Harris narrates "The Persian Kitten" to the feline-costumed terps of Teri Robinson and Nick Covacevich, getting a purring reaction from the diners. The Donn Arden Dancers, 12 extremely young and highly talented terp technicians (10 girls, two boys), give the party a pleasingly refreshing flavor.

Comes a Ritz blitz in the wake of Jimmy Durante's record-shattering fortnighter to keep this refurbished plushery rocking at outset of the brighter warm weather season. It's been long time, no see, since Harry, Jimmy and Al Ritz regaled vaude and nitery audiences in Greater Cincy, and their first date for Beverly Hills chiefs John Croft and Mitch Meyer. But they rate conveniently early returns, judging from the firstnight smash.

Topliners into their 31st year, the Ritz freres retain amazing fast-and-furious pacing over the current flll-hour route. Champs of burlesque, Harry serves as kingpin of the three-way frolic. His mugging and wild-eyed frightening stares are exclusive. Harry's Chinese cook, Italian chief and dance hall gal takeoffs are trademarks. Threesome tandems a softshoe class specialty and a rousing calypso romp for a clinch chaser.

Trude Adams, in supporting spot, also in for her first time, was at a disadvantage in the preem. Near capacity 950 crowd included a majority of stags in for a shoemen's convention. Their hubbub made for difficult reception of songs by Miss Adams, young, personable and of sweet pipes. Rep (sic) include specials "A Man" and "Corn" and, best received, "Whole World In His Hands."

The augmented Moro-Landis ensemble, extraed with the Woodd Trio and Bill Raymond, production singer, repeats its rousing George M. Cohan medley hit routine of the Durante show. Music backing is by the slick Gardner Benedict crew. The Jimmy Wilber Trio supplies intermission dance inspiration and Larry Vincent sings at the celebrity room, 88, Koll.

MCA-Stein $2,500,000 Fund

some time after the actuarial birth date of April 26, it is understood that the fund is already in excess of $2,500,000.

There will be no "birthday party," per se, although MCA associates and a few intimates will hoist a glass this (Wed.) afternoon in the New York hq.

Stein, originally an eye-doctor who founded MCA in 1924, is a graduate of the Univ. of Chicago and Rush Medical College, and did postgraduate work at the U. of Vienna. Ophthalmology has been his specialty and only the show biz fates, cradled via campus band bookings during his undergraduate days in his native Chicago, caused a change of careers. Music Corp. of America's springboard came via those campus band units and Stein and his late brother Billy found themselves catapulted into ever-expanding hotel and night club band bookings.

Stein's pet charity has always been blind prevention research and MCA president Lew Wasserman's personal letter to show biz VIPs and others best tells it:

"No testimonial dinner; no vocal praise or accolades; no costly party expenses; just a simple request for your tax-deductible gift to: Research to Prevent Blindness Inc., in honour of Jules C. Stein on his 65th birthday, April 26, 1961, for his enduring influence on the worlds of medicine, finance and entertainment. Let us help Jules in his campaign to eliminate the need for Seeing-Eye dogs, Braille books, white canes, and the fear and despair of life in a world gone dark. Substantial pledges of financial assistance may be spread over two to five years. Won't you mail your check or pledge in the enclosed envelope today so that it can be presented to Jules on the occasion of his 65th birthday, April 26, 1961."

Wasserman's P.S. reads, "We of MCA have already pledged $1,000,000 which Jules is matching, so we are starting with gifts exceeding $2,000,000."

Stein, still recuperating from a serious siege of hepatitis, came east to petition the Dept. of Health, Welfare & Education for additional funds. Last week (April 17) he went to Washington to address the subcommittee on appropriations of the House of Representatives, Congressman John Fogarty (RI), chairman. The agency, of which Abraham A. Ribicoff is the Cabinet Secretary, allocates funds for heart, cancer, rheumatism & arthritis, and neurology. Blindness is a neurological disease and last year aid-for-the-blind received $8,000,000 of the $56,000,000 neurological appropriation; this year $15,000,000 of the $83,000,000 appropriation.

In petitioning the Congressman Fogarty subcommittee, Stein said, "We do not deem it proper or even advisable to look solely to the Federal Government for such support (special emphasis on glaucoma) . . . Although we are only now getting started on our second year's activities . . . our first year of operations private funds permitted us to make fluid grants in support of ophthalmological research and training to 21 outstanding research institutions concerned with the field of blinding conditions and diseases in a total of $112,500. Obviously, these funds provided slightly more than $5,000 per institution . . . Since we were aware of the uniformly high regard held for research and training activities and for the director and staff of the Wilmer Ophthalmological Institute of Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore, and being cognizant of the inadequate and antiquated quarters available there for their research activities, we arranged to meet and discuss the situation with the President of the University, the Dean of the Medical School, the Director of Wilmer and with other responsible University officials. We proposed that Johns Hopkins make a formal request to secure funds provided under the Health Research Facilities Act to the National Institute of Health for 50% of the $1,160,000 required to construct an adequate research wing to the Wilmer Clinic. Then, in order to obtain the necessary 50% of the matching funds, we of Research to Prevent Blindness have offered to provide the necessary professional fundraising assistance entirely at our expense with the added proviso that gifts made should go directly to Johns Hopkins University for the Wilmer Research Bldg. instead of being channeled through our organizations . . .

Research to Prevent Blindness Inc. has a board of trustees comprising Jules C. Stein, chairman; Robert E. McCormick, president; Mrs. Albert D. Lasker, vicepresident; James S. Adams, treasurer. It is headquartered in the same 598 Madison Ave. building where MCA has its New York headquarters.

William J. Vanden Heuvel, who incidentally is Stein's son-in-law, is secretary and counsel of RPB; Mefford R. Runyon, executive director; Dr. C. J. Van Slyke is scientific director.

'Tropic'

was bringing in the book for "cultural or research" reasons, the ruse by which works deemed "pornographic" by the Customs are sometimes allowed into the U. S.

The Upham suit charges (1) that U. S. Customs authorities have no right to judge a book (or any other artistic work, for that matter), (2) that there is nothing wrong with this specific book, and (3) that this book is about to be published in the United States anyway (Grove Press). Case is expected to come up in court May 9.

It's regarded as something of a coup that the MPAA has agreed to come into this case, especially since the activities of Customs in preventing or holding up the importation of films has never been a problem to MPAA's major company members. After the Times Film case, however, MPAA called for a united front against all censorship. Presumably, they judge Customs activities in this area to be censorship. In their brief they are expected to concentrate on the constitutional right (or lack of it of U. S. to judge any work, without commenting on the contents of the Miller book. MPAA move, however, is seen as "a step in the right direction" since the association heretofore has been extremely skittish about joining cases involving works of a controversial nature.

Also committed to join the case as friend of the court is New York's film importing group, the Independent Film Importers & Distributors of America, which has a more immediate stake than the MPAA in case's outcome.

"Tropic of Cancer," and its companion volume, "Tropic of Capricorn," have long been one of the U. S. tourist's favorite acquisitions on Paris vacations, since, until now anyway, Miller has never allowed their publication in the States. The books, however, are published in English in France, where they enjoy reputation as modern classics. It's understood that Grove Press has agreed to pay Miller $50,000 for U. S. publication rights.

Kennedy Tax

get a tax bill with popular appeal as a "reform" measure through this year. President Kennedy used the word "urgent" in talking about the need for the tax changes.

The sections directly affecting the entertainment industry—overseas tax havens and high living expense accounts—are generally regarded on Capitol Hill as among those most likely to be included if a bill passes. Some of the other sections are expected to be considerably more controversial.

Expense Money

President Kennedy said limits on expense account tax write-offs should bring Uncle Sam about $250,000,000 more a year in income. He said "abuse" of expense accounts has become a national concern. He wants a far more careful accounting of such outlays, with sharp limits on what is allowable. This would presumably kill much theatre and cafe trade.

The President proposed eliminating "tax haven" deferral privileges for corporations in all overseas countries.

He added: "It is no more justifiable to provide tax exemptions for individuals living in the developed countries than it is to provide tax inducements for capital investment there. Nor should we permit totally unjustified tax benefits to be obtained by those Americans whose choice of residence is dictated primarily by their desire to minimize taxes."

Who's Still Favored?

The President then made these recommendations:

—"That the total tax exemption now accorded the earned income of American citizens residing abroad be completely terminated for those residing in economically advanced countries (oil company exemption?);

—"That this exemption for earned income be limited to $20,000 for those residing in less developed countries; and

—"That the exemption of $20,000 of earned income now accorded those citizens who stay (but do not reside) abroad for 17 out of 18 months also be completely terminated for those living or travelling in the economically advanced countries."

It was quickly announced by Rep. Wilbur Mills (D-Ark.), chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, that hearings on the Kennedy recommendations (all of them) will start May 3 with Government witnesses. The parade of non-Government people who want to argue the pros and cons will begin May 8. Mills said. Under the Constitution, all tax bills must originate in the House. Mills explained that an actual bill won't be introduced until after his committee's hearings have been completed. Something favored by a majority of the committee members will then be dropped into the hopper.

The Kennedy message evaded many tax subjects, including the long sought relief for show biz folk with fluctuating incomes. The President said he had directed his Secretary of Treasury, C. Douglas Dillon, to undertake a comprehensive study of various other exhaustive tax studies and recommend other tax changes and new tax policies next year.

Garry Moore

finale was a strain on the endurance.

The g. of h. took note of Peter Lawford's telegram from his b other-in-law, which the actor read, to turn the "honor" from himself to President Kennedy and express full "support" of the Chief of State. Moore gallantly expressed thanks for the signal honor of having received this wire, personally conveyed and read by Lawford, from the President of the United States.

Ed Sullivan set the mood with his salute to "this singularly decent star" after Jackie Mason teed off with a humorous discourse. Toastmaster Leonard was in good form although not without some valleys in between the peaks. Lawford occasioned a Sinatra crack and the observation that "Lawford is in charge of the English Mafia."

Sheila & Gordon MacRae ("Making Whoopee" pa ody) were followed by Johnny Carson who emerged probably the hit of the evening with his "reviews" of Khrushchev and Gagarin as VARIETY, Dorothy Kilgallen, Jack O'Brian and "The Old Sailor" (Nick Kenny) might do them. He made reference to the three top agencies—"GAC, which handles recording stars"; "William Morris agency which handles personalities"; and "MCA which handles GAC and William Morris."

Leonard brushed off Morgan as "the Olympic champ for unpopularity, and now we'll have something pleasant" when he introduced Robert Merrill, accompanied by his wife.

Miss Carroll was followed by Jane Morgan, Morey Amsterdam, Andy Williams, a funny filmed routine of blackouts between Carol Lawrence and Durwood Kirby of the Garry Moore show ("we call this 'The Dirty Hour,'" he ad libbed), Kirby, Al Kelly, Ted Lewis, Gene Wood & Bill Dana, Paul Anka, Alan King (very funny routine on insurance, or rather against insurance companies). Kirby was boffo with a pseudo-saintly reference to St. Joseph and the topper was "I mean St. Joseph, Missouri, the most miserable town in America."

She would have accelerated but for the divers special maestros for the succession of singers which further retarded the proceedings but withal it was a click evening. Especially in light of the stiff competition from Judy Garland's SRO at Carnegie Hall concert and the Mrs. Dorothy (Alfred) Strelsin-Joan Crawford sponsored benefit dinner dance for the N. Y. Shakespeare Festival Fund. Abel.

abled us to reduce certain operating costs. In General Sound and Theatre Equipment Ltd., which is handling a diversified line of sound communication equipment, we have also reduced operating costs quite substantially."

Fiscal Data

At the end of 1960, net current assets amounted to $8,546,524 as compared with $10,354,770 for previous 12-month period. This decrease of $1,808,246 is largely accounted for in that expenditures on fixed assets (including additional investment in Telemeter plant and equipment), together with shareholders' dividends, exceeded the net cash profits for the year.

At 1960's end, shareholders' equity in FPC, represented by capital stock and earned surplus, amounted to $29,600,378 or $17.04 per share of capital stock outstanding. (FPC now operates 340 theatres across Canada).

In addition, Fitzgibbons reported, CKCO-TV, Kic Kitchener, Ontario, had received permission from the Board of Broadcast Governors to increase power to the maximum available of 325,000 watts. CFCM-TV (French) and CKMI-TV (English), Quebec City, has also received permission from the BBG to the maximum allowable to both stations, with this increase to be made in the next few months. (FPC has a 50% interest in all three tv stations). FPC has also been given approval by the BBG to purchase 12½% of the common stock and 25% of the preferred shares of the Vantel Broadcasting Co., Ltd., which operates CHAN-TV, Vancouver.

In further diversification, FPC has also acquired the existing bowling center in Nanaimo, B.C.; built a new bowling center in North Battleford, Sask., in association with C. V. Marshall, FPC partner; and, in Ontario, has a 50% interest in two Toronto bowling centers and one in Guelph.

Fitzgibbons, however, reported no progress had been made in amusement taxes levied by the Provincial legislatures—except in Alberta where these have been removed. He said that, while the industry does not object to paying its fair share of taxes, amusement levies are "unjustifiably discriminatory" in the light of their complete elimination in Britain and their almost complete elimination in the United States.

day. The Israeli radio is devoting about five hours daily to the trial.

A full time documentary pic under the title "Adolf Eichmann and the Third Reich" is under preparation here by Ervin Leiser, director of "Mein Kampf." Leiser is cooperating with Kibbutz Lochamei Hagettaot, the Kibbutz of the Ghetto Fighters. This kibbutz has a museum and an archive devoted wholly to Nazi atrocities and Jewish suffering in Hitler's time. Leiser will use some of the material provided by the kibbutz, some material collected in Europe and intends to buy from Capital tapes of the trial. The picture will be finally produced by a Swiss company on a non-profit basis. Profit will be divided between the kibbutz and Jewish welfare organizations. The picture will be probably distributed by Columbia.

While Capital has exclusive access to the courtroom, dozens of foreign tv and radio people have arrived from all over the world to cover the trial. The tv people are shooting around the courtroom, in the streets of Jerusalem, interviewing witnesses, etc. The radio people have their tape-recorders in the pressroom, directly connected with the mikes in the courtroom, so that they can tape every word. They are sending mostly three-six minute tapes by air and some are using radio-telephones. The technical arrangements made here for the press are of the highest standard.

tial ingredients, so there will be sex. Dingwall said "an electronic device is no substitute for a beautiful woman."

He added that "some of the world's loveliest women will be shown off at the fair." Just how much they will be shown off is up to Expo officials to decide.

Entertainment will be presented in the 3,100-seat Opera House (former Civic Aud), the adjacent 5,500-seat Arena, a new little theatre, the 800-seat Playhouse, and the 12,000-seat High School Memorial stadium, all on the Exposition grounds. Work is underway on a complete remodeling of the Civic Aud and Arena, plus construction of the Playhouse and a new Exhibition Hall.

Expo officials say about $80,000,000 will be spent for buildings and displays, exclusive of expenditures by exhibitors, with about $22,000,000 already encumbered. Two chief identifying structures will be the 600-foot Space Needle, with revolving restaurant atop and a mile-long, high speed monorail from the Westlake Mall in downtown Seattle. Construction has begun on both.

George K. Whitney, president of Whitney's-at-the-Beach and the Cliff House, San Francisco, is director of concessions and amusements, including the Gayway, which will feature 16 rides. His responsibility includes food sales, souvenirs and guidebooks. The National Guard Armory will be renovated and used for a Food Fair, with continuous entertainment.

Already set in addition to the Food Fair and Space Needle restaurant (a privately financed and operated project) is an European garden-type cafe, to be operated by Andy Nagy, who is also building a motel and restaurant on a downtown waterfront pier, scheduled for opening before the Exposition.

Basic layout of the Exposition utilizes five "worlds"—Science, Century 21, Commerce & Industry, Art & Entertainment, linked together by Boulevards of the World.

The United States Science Pavilion, a $9,000,000 Dept. of Commerce project, will feature a simulated rocket journey into space along with other science exhibits.

The Century 21 "world" will be in the four-acre, 11-story Coliseum, a $10,500,000 project of Washington State. Here will be a "floating city" showing how man might live 100 years from next year. Designed by Donald Deskey Associates Inc., New York, the display will be housed in cubed structures of translucent, transparent and opaque structures in a rainbow of colors. Visitors will enter through underpasses and be lifted in elevators and automatic ramps to the three-dimensional exhibit. Working closely with Deskey are Gilbert Seldes, dean of the U. of Pennsylvania School of Communications, and Robert Snyder, Academy Award-winning film documentarian.

National Public Relations Inc., New York, is working with the Expo p.r. and publicity staff on a national-international basis and big publicity and promotion push is now getting underway.

With this program, BBC-TV was able to beat its commercial rivals who had planned the first ever live program from the Soviet Union for transmission next month. It was a fortunate coincidence for the BBC that one of its reps happened to be in Moscow finalizing arrangements for the May Day program when the conquest of space was announced and the hookup was accomplished in less than 48 hours.

JAMES MELTON

James Melton, 57, former Metropolitan Opera tenor, who during the 1920s was a quartet member and pop singer on radio, died April 21 in New York of lobar pneumonia. He entered the Roosevelt Hospital two weeks ago. Complications developed and he was in a coma for two days prior to his death.

Melton started as a singer to help defray his expenses at the U. of Florida, where he studied law. The university's president urged him to switch to vocal work. He did so by transferring to the U. of Georgia where he enrolled in the school of music.

Melton went to New York in 1927 for further musical study where he engaged the attention of Samuel (Roxy) Rothafel, head of the now razed Roxy Theatre, and became a member of Roxy's Gang. He later was in a radio quartet, The Revelers, and after that was a top name as a single. Included in his credits as a solo singer in radio was the Firestone show, the "Family Theatre," "Song Shop," "Sunday Night Party" and "Telephone Hour," among others.

He graduated to grand opera by studying various roles and waiting for an opportunity. This came when he portrayed Lieut. Pinkerton in "Mme. Butterfly" at the Zoo Opera, Cincinnati. He repeated the performance at the now defunct Center Theatre, N. Y., with the San Carlo Opera Co. He bowed with the Metropolitan Opera in 1942 in "Magic Flute."

Upon his retirement from opera, Melton played various hotel and nitery dates. He also appeared in several films including "Stars Over Broadway," "Sing Me a Love Song," "Melody for Two," and others. Last year, he did a long road tour with "The Student Prince" which taxed his health.

Melton's hobby for years was old cars, and maintained a museum at Norwalk, Conn. He sold most of his ancient cars some time ago to William F. Harrah, operator of Harrah's, in Lake Tahoe and Reno.

Survived by his wife, a daughter, brother, and two sisters.

KENYON BROWN

Kenyon Brown, 47, prominent in radio and television industry far more than 16 years, died April 19 from unknown causes, his body being found at the poolside of his Hollywood home.

In August, 1959, NAFI Corp. purchased the station for approximately $6,000,000, which involved stock transfers and assumption of KCOP obligations. At this time, NAFI set up a broadcast division, naming Brown as president.

He resigned as president, broadcast division, NAFI, in Dec., 1960, to devote more time to his other interests. Earlier this month he had filed with FCC to obtain license for the fourth tv channel in Honolulu. Alvin Flanagan, longtime associate of Brown's, assumed the prexy post of KCOP upon Brown's resignation from both KCOP and NAFI.

Other broadcast interests of Brown included ownership of KITO, San Bernardino; KSON, San Diego; KGLC, Miami, Okla., and KANS, Kansas City, Kan. Additionally he owned KFOX, Long Beach. He served on board of National Association of Broadcasters (as chairman in 1953), plus chairmanship of CBS affiliates board.

Related projects of Brown's included Vitapix Corp., of which he was president, and Vitapix-Guild Programs, Inc., and Quality Films, Ltd., all of which he owned.

Other interests in which Brown actively participated included sports, his favorite being baseball, and he was a v.p. and director of the Detroit Tigers and reportedly owned an interest in the Los Angeles Angels. His diversification of interests also delved into the pharmaceutical field, being owner of Caltex, Ltd.

THE LAST POLITE WAR

Sixty years ago in South Africa, the British regular army was fighting the last war in which glamour and glory were still the keynote, and the combatants for the most part fought with good manners.
The Boer War in 1899 was fought "to teach the farmers a lesson" but it took many months before peace came—months which sowed seeds of lasting bitterness. The story of these months was told in a special fifty minute programme over the entire Independent Television Network. It was produced in the studios of
